Colette: “Omega-chan, these people are…?”

Omega: “Aptitude likely plays a part, but it seems more a problem of how the power’s been poured in. The depth at which they’re held in the dream world differs between those important to the caster and those who aren’t. That said, it’s hard to think the sole aim is to lull everyone only lightly… let’s see.”

While Colette fretted beside her, Omega’s interest did not flag in the least. Since it had come to this, Colette decided to keep quiet and watch until Omega finished doing what she wanted to do—only for that to develop into something outrageous.

Looking around at the townspeople, Omega apparently didn’t find anyone promising, and suddenly she raised her slender arms toward the sky.

As Colette blinked at the sight of Omega with both hands lifted to the sky—

Omega: “—Al Shario.”

It was right after Omega murmured that in a quiet, beautiful voice.

Colette: “—Eh?”

Feeling a tingling sensation at the nape of her neck, Colette pressed the back of her neck. But the reason her nape tingled wasn’t because something had been done to it directly—it was something much bigger.

Her nape tingled first to tell her that something outrageous was happening. And that outrageous thing soon became visible to Colette's eyes too.

—Overhead, from the lightly snowing sky, a light far, far larger than snow was falling.

Back when she'd been driven from the forest near her home village and living alone before she met Omega, she had seen shooting stars several times in the starry night sky. For some reason, the scene from that time flashed across Colette's mind.

She thought it: perhaps the onrushing light was that shooting star.

Colette: "Omega-cha—"

Omega: "There's no need to be afraid."

Squinting at the glare of the white light, Colette felt Omega quietly take her hand. The sudden feel of that hand made her body tense for a moment, but she immediately relaxed when she realized Omega had moved close to her.

Recalling Omega's words—there's no need to be afraid—Colette nodded.

Above the two, their hands linked, above the heads of the townsfolk, the white light drew nearer and nearer and—

Omega: "—I told you, Colette. This is a dream world—a place created by a caster who wields arts that interfere with dreams. Which is to say, the initiative in this place lies with the user of dream arts. I myself prepared a similar dream world under the pretext of a tea party… but this scale is the difference in talent, I suppose."

Omega's smoothly flowing words sounded far away. With her ears ringing, Colette forced down a swallow into her dry throat and accepted what had happened right before her eyes—that the large shooting star that had been bearing down on them only seconds earlier had vanished with a pop.

And—

Omega: “I’m deeply impressed. This is precisely the true display of one who manipulates the laws of dreams. I wonder if this title still remains today—“Dream Illusionist,”-kun.”

Still holding Colette’s hand, an amused Omega turned to look behind them. Naturally, Colette, made to toddle along in a semicircle to match Omega’s movement, looked that way as well.

Among the townspeople, who were indifferent to the falling star and moved right and left past one another, there stood a single person rooted in the bustle.

It was a beautiful woman. Her dark purple hair reached down to her back, and the eyes of the same color were striking—but her gaze was very severe. And there was one feature that drew the eye.

Her ears were a little pointed and long.

Omega: “I see. You’re an elven Dream Illusionist.”

Woman: “—And what are you?”

Noticing the same point as Colette and murmuring thus, Omega was answered by the woman. With a voice as harsh as her gaze, Colette flusteredly looked between Omega and the woman.

At Colette’s manner, Omega faintly smiled, lifted their joined hands, and—

Omega: “There’s no need to worry, Colette. Certainly, to face a Dream Illusionist this powerful is a rare thing, and it seems my magic has also been forbidden in this dream world, but…”

Colette: “Eh?”

Omega: “But it’s fine. I too have found myself in dire straits many times before…”

Saying that, Omega kept smiling as she looked at the woman she had called a “Dream Illusionist,” and said:

Omega: “—I’ve only died once.”

Colette: “I don’t really get it, but even once is plenty too many, Omega-chan!”

7

Palmyra: “Stop! Stop, Colette!”

Buffeted all over by the cold wind, clinging on for dear life, Palmyra pleaded.

Fortunately, her plea seemed to reach her, and Colette, who had been holding Palmyra tightly, stopped springing off rooftops and came to a halt. Set down there, Palmyra dropped Omega from her arms onto the piled snow, and—

Palmyra: “U-Ugh, I feel sick…”

Colette: “Grrrrr—”

Palmyra: “I-It’s fine. It’s not your fault, so behave yourself.”

After being tossed around to no end, Palmyra pressed her woozy head. Colette, growling low beside her, had no consciousness, but since she seemed to be worried, Palmyra spoke to her.

In this state, Colette rampaged as a beast to protect Colette herself by the power of the bracelet called the “Beast Protection Bracelet.” Still, if it looked a little different from that premise—perhaps that was just the partiality of a friend.

At the very least, for now, Colette had helped by carrying Palmyra and Omega in their escape.

Palmyra: “Maybe you’re growing too. …If so, then what about me—”

Self-reproach welled up belatedly after the relief. However, it dissipated as she went “Wah” and caught Colette the moment the strength left her body.

Just as if the previous moment had been a lie, Colette now wore a calm sleeping face. The bracelet must have judged that they had escaped the critical situation, and entrusted her body to sleep.

Even so, Palmyra understood that did not mean the situation had improved.

Palmyra: “Colette and the others are still asleep, and we got separated from Noelle.”

Given the situation, it couldn’t be helped, but leaving Noelle there was also Palmyra’s failing.

Noelle was, after all, a person of the Gusteko Holy Church, and Palmyra thought she should be in a position to speak with Zank of the same Church. Even so, since Palmyra had withdrawn out of fear of Zank’s precarious air, she couldn’t deny the impression that, in the end, she had abandoned Noelle.

Palmyra: “Why was it me who stayed… If not me—Omega, if it had been you—”

Noelle had said that the difference in whose back one was on had decided who slept and who stayed awake.

If their positions had been reversed, it would have been Omega who was awake; she would have handled the so-called Temple Knight, and might even have thought up countermeasures against the “heretic” who makes people sleep.

And yet, it was useless me who remained—what am I supposed to—

Unknown Voice: “Uh—excuse meee. If you like, would you like to use a handkerchief?”

Palmyra: “—!”

At the very moment her swelling helplessness was about to become tears and wet her cheeks. Suddenly addressed from the side, Palmyra started and stepped back while holding Colette—only to step on Omega lying there and topple over with a grand “Kyaa.”

On the snow-laden rooftop of a building, three girl-shaped holes opened in the white. The one who had watched Palmyra’s disgrace from head to rump appeared upside-down in the skyward view.

Girl: “Um, sorry for startling you. I was trying to find the right timing to speak, but… I thought I’d just go ba-baan and do it.”

Palmyra: “…”

Girl: “Umm?”

She was upside down, but in a sense the cheeriness of her voice was out of place; the one calling out was so distinctive that the details fixed themselves in Palmyra’s senses.

She was a beautiful girl with bright green hair gathered up to her back and round orange eyes. But the sense of incongruity her beauty couldn’t hide lay in her pointed, long ears.

As for the demihuman race with that trait—

Palmyra: “—An elf.”

Elf Girl: “Ah… you noticed after all, huh. But I weighed whether to hide it and get friendly then reveal it, versus showing the bare me from the start, and this is the result, okay?”

Palmyra: “…”

Elf Girl: “I-I get how you feel! No, I don’t, but I can imagine! It’s just that me being an elf and me talking to you like this are a bit different as topics, so if you could separate those in your mind…”

Palmyra: “—You.”

The elf girl prattled rapidly like that; when Palmyra cut in with a low voice midstream, the other straightened her back with a crisp:

Elf Girl: “Yes!”

She certainly was an elf, and running into one in the circumstances of this snowy town was suspicious to the utmost, but—

Palmyra: “Can we take it that you don’t bear hostility toward us?”

Elf Girl: “Yes, none! No hostility at all! Not a bit! If anything, I even feel like we could get along!”

Palmyra: “Hah?”

Elf Girl: “Sorry! I got carried away! Just leaving it at “it holds that potential” is more than enough!”

Even with that concession to “enough,” the reply still faintly felt greedy. Feeling a slight loss of strength at that, Palmyra raised her snow-buried body right there.

Then she faced the other—formerly upside down—with the up and down the right way. Looking anew, the features of the girl bundled up in cold-weather gear were pure elf.

That said, in terms of unknowability, Omega, buried in the snow, was far above.

Therefore—

Palmyra: “Are you someone of this town? Don’t tell me you’re a Temple Knight or anything.”

Elf Girl: “No, no, not at all! I’m not, but… um, are you okay?”

Palmyra: “With what?”

Elf Girl: “It’s odd to say it myself, but it’s rare to meet people who, even after realizing I’m an elf, will still talk with me like this.”

Despite leaving her most distinctive ears out, the elf girl said such a thing. Finding detailed explanations a hassle, Palmyra only shrugged at her question.

At once, the elf girl’s eyes went round, and her face lit up.

Elf Girl: “Amazing! I’m so happy! Um, may I ask your name?”

Palmyra: “…Palmyra.”

Elf Girl: “Palmyra-san! That’s a lovely name. I’m Shion! The two with you—they’re your friends, right?”

Palmyra: “Whether you’d call them friends or not— they’re family.”

As for Colette that’s one thing, but even Palmyra herself wasn’t clear on what she was with Omega. “Traveling companion” was probably the most apt expression.

As Palmyra thought that, the elf—Shion—kept her bright smile and clapped her hands strongly before her chest with a “I knew it!”

With that dry sound ringing in Sylphoa’s cold sky, Shion, grinning in a way that made it unclear what she was so delighted about, approached Palmyra and continued.

It was—

Shion: “Then by all means, will you cooperate with me, Palmyra-san? —So that we can somehow take back your sleeping friends and the people of this town of Sylphoa from Lilac!”

And so, to Palmyra, who had just been crushed by helplessness, she blithely made a request far too enormous, without ill intent.

8

«Sylphoa». That was the name of a town within the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko where the snow fell.

In peacetime, Sylphoa had been nothing more than an ordinary, unremarkable country town in the snow.

Now, however, it had become a demonic land that lulled the town’s residents and outside visitors into slumber, and centered on that place, all sorts of parties with all sorts of designs were mingling in a vortex of chaos.

Honestly, as someone who came to the town without a purpose and got caught up in the situation, this was a colossal nuisance and then some.

But—

Palmyra: “I’ve never heard of a case where whining and grumbling made the situation any better…”

Shion: “Yes! I think being positive is a very good thing. It really helps me a lot to have someone listen to me, too, so it’s a real win-win, isn’t it?”

Palmyra: “W…in…?”

Shion: “Ah, it apparently means both sides are happy. Am I using it right?”

Palmyra: “I wouldn’t know. It’s the first time I’ve heard the word.”

At the words of the girl—Shion—who asked her with a blank look, Palmyra knit her brows.

She gave off a decidedly airheaded impression, but there was no mistaking that this girl held the key to the situation. After all, she seemed to have an idea why Colette and Omega had fallen asleep.

No sooner had they arrived in Sylphoa than the two had dozed off, and no matter how much they called or shook them, they would not wake. Noelle, who had been with them, had said it was caused by some kind of interference, but…

Palmyra: “So, is it fair to say that you know the answer?”

Shion: “The answer… yes. I know why your friends, Palmyra-san, and everyone in town have fallen asleep.”

Palmyra: “Then tell me. Who is putting Colette and the others to sleep, and for what purpose?”

Shion: “Naturally, I’d love to go ba-baaan and make a big announcement~ but…”

Bringing the tips of both index fingers together in front of her chest, Shion suddenly grew evasive. Seeing that, Palmyra drew her brows together and prompted her, “What?”

Palmyra: “You came out here planning to talk, didn’t you. Why are you suddenly getting all fidgety?”

Shion: “No, um… right! It’s no good to be all suggestive, so I’ll be blunt. This situation was engineered by Lilac, and the objective is for my sake!”

Palmyra: “…Hah?”

Shion: “It was engineered by Lilac, and the objective is for my sake!”

To Palmyra, who let out a dumbfounded sound, Shion repeated the same thing twice with a crisp look.

Palmyra: “…”

Putting a hand to her own forehead, Palmyra weighed Shion’s statement.

Smart people tended to skip the process and jump straight to the conclusion, but unlike the thing Omega did all the time, Shion’s story simply felt poorly explained and lacking in gist.

From the way she kept glancing over here, her anxiety and earnestness did come through, but…

Palmyra: “Let me ask one thing: who is this Lilac?”

Shion: “Yes, Lilac is another me who resides inside me… my other personality. She’s the type to speak up, blunt and to the point, and while she comes off sharp with people, she is not a villain. Right now, using the power of the “Dream Illusionist,” she is holding the townsfolk and your friends, Palmyra-san, as hostages.”

Palmyra: “A-A second Shion? Another personality?”

Rather than resolving the mountain of questions, Shion’s added explanation only made it grow taller.

Another self, another personality—Palmyra had not the slightest clue what she was talking about. For a moment, she even suspected the possibility of a joke or a prank, but Shion's expression as she spoke was dead serious.

It was an outlandish tale, but at the very least, on the face of it she believed it—the same sort of face as Colette's when Colette believed something.

What was certain was that Shion's being bad at explaining had moved from suspicion to conviction, and as a result, the information they needed to verify had unexpectedly multiplied.

Palmyra: "Let me try to sort this out and say it back… So, your other personality, Lilac, is using some kind of technique to put Colette and the townsfolk to sleep. And it's for your sake, and the people who are asleep are being held as hostages, but Lilac isn't a villain… Is that right?"

Shion: "Ooh~, amazing comprehension, Palmyra-san! Exactly right, clap clap clap~"

Palmyra: "She's definitely a villain! Is there any world where someone other than a villain takes hostages?!"

Shion: "Hyah?!"

Shion started clapping in a carefree way, and at Palmyra's raised-voice retort, she let out a little shriek. Ignoring that reaction, Palmyra brought her face so close to Shion's that their breaths almost mingled, and—

Palmyra: "And what do you mean it's for your sake? Tell Lilac this from you! Say, "I don't want anyone taking hostages!"“

Shion: "Y-You're absolutely right to be angry, Palmyra-san, but the truth is, I'm in a no-contact situation with Lilac; she won't listen to me at all right now…"

Palmyra: "Even so—"

Shion: "—Also, I'm not completely opposed to everything Lilac did."

At that sudden reply from Shion, Palmyra's movement stopped dead.

Right in front of her, Shion's eyes, set in a face framed by long lashes, fixed on her, and Palmyra, in a split second, was made to realize the difference in years between herself and the girl—no, the elf—she was facing.

Shion had seen a world too different from the one Palmyra had seen; the depth in Shion's eyes, having borne witness to that world, overwhelmed Palmyra, and the banner of her anger fluttered weakly, thinly.

Palmyra: "…"

Shion: "As I said a moment ago, Lilac did something outrageous for my sake. Of course, if my life were to be in danger, Lilac would be in the same danger as well, so it was also to protect herself."

With an apologetic, faint bitter smile, Shion said as much, and Palmyra faltered. And hearing her out that far, she belatedly remembered.

The man with the dangerous air who had been the reason they split up from Noelle—Zank.

Calling himself a Temple Knight of the Gusteko Holy Church, Zank had said he had been dispatched to Sylphoa to hunt «heresy».

Palmyra: "So basically, you and Lilac are the heresy being chased by the Church?"

Shion: "Yes, that is correct."

Palmyra: "…Is it because you're an elf?"

Seeing Shion's pointed ears as she nodded, Palmyra, feeling abashed, asked that.

The discrimination and prejudice visited upon the elf race was common knowledge even to Palmyra, who had had no occasion to actually deal with an elf. Prejudices that had seeped even into a corner of the Kingdom of Lugunica might well have spread across the border onto the Holy Kingdom's white land.

However, to Palmyra's concern, Shion tilted her head and said, "Who can say."

Shion: "At most, that's one of the reasons for being disliked. I suspect the real cause that makes the Church folks shun us is the type of arts we can use."

Palmyra: "Arts… Is that what's putting Colette and the others to sleep?"

Shion: "Yes.—Lilac put the townsfolk to sleep and delayed the Gusteko Holy Church believers chasing us. That is the true meaning of what I said earlier."

Shion's smooth answers did not contradict what Zank had said. It made sense that Shion and the others, who were being antagonized and pursued by a Temple Knight, had had no choice but to rely on their power.

Even so, it was hard to accept that they had taken the townspeople as hostages.

Shion: "May I at least offer an excuse? The reason Lilac resorted to hardline measures."

Apparently her feelings had shown on her face; seeing Palmyra fall silent, Shion gestured toward the townscape of Sylphoa and said, "That."

Looking that way, Palmyra noticed an anomaly within the town.

The Time Tower in the center of Sylphoa that told the flow of time—that white tower had been sliced diagonally and collapsed, strewing debris around it.

Palmyra: "That's…"

Shion: “Branded heresy by the Church’s believers, we fled into Sylphoa. We thought that in a crowded place, they would not carelessly make a move… but we were naive.”

Palmyra: “Then that was done by the Church’s people? If they run amok in town like that…”

Shion: “Yes. Which is why Lilac put the woman chasing us to sleep. We had no margin to narrow the target, so townsfolk who were within range were drawn into the dream as well… so your friends, Palmyra-san, are complete collateral damage. I am sorry…”

With a grave face, Shion apologized; her explanation was consistent.

It was hard to believe that people of the Gusteko Holy Church would rampage in a town where believers lived, but Palmyra had actually spoken with Zank, a Temple Knight. Thinking of his hardline stance and overreaction toward «heresy», it would not be strange if he ran wild in town under cover of doctrine.

In fact, the reason Zank was not recklessly barging into the town was that he was wary of the situation Shion and Lilac had created, and a standoff had arisen.

Shion: “Well… what do you think? I tried to be as honest as I could…”

Timidly, Shion peered into Palmyra’s face.

Gone was the air of a tragic woman who had overcome much hardship that had just made Palmyra flinch; in its place was a single girl, anxious whether her sincerity had reached the other person.

And Palmyra was weak to the gaze of a girl in whom anxiety and a faint hope were intermingled.

Palmyra: “…So then, what do you want me to do?”

Shion: “—! Th-That, does that perhaps, perhaps mean…”

Palmyra: “Don’t make me say it. …I’ll believe you this far, so tell me what you have in mind going forward. Just so you know, I don't have any skills that would be useful. The only thing I could boast about was the size of my house, and I even left behind my hometown where that house was."

Shion: "No! Just having you be you, Palmyra-san, has tremendous meaning! A special citation, a giant-killing, a super-important, super-important key person! Ah, am I using key person right?"

Palmyra: "…I told you I don't know."

Having her hand clasped by a bright-eyed Shion, Palmyra began to regret that she might have jumped the gun. But paying no mind to Palmyra's frame of mind, Shion raised her right index finger straight and, with a cheerful face, declared:

It was—

Shion: "No need to worry! I won't ask anything difficult. As I said earlier, Lilac and I are in a no-contact situation right now, and I can't even meet her face-to-face because she won't let me into the dream. So—"

Palmyra: "So?"

Shion: "—I was hoping, Palmyra-san, that you would be my messenger!"

9

—And at the same time that Palmyra and Shion were going back and forth in the real Sylphoa.

Omega: "I meant to help you relax, but… it is not going very well."

Shrugging her slender shoulders, Omega's long white hair swayed, and Colette was at a loss.

All of a sudden, Omega had taken on a form different from usual—according to her, this was actually her true form—and just when Colette thought that, they were told they were inside a dream.

Certainly, there was no sign of Palmyra or Noelle, and everyone they saw in the snow-laden town was responding in a spaced-out, dream-dazed way.

But if that was true, then what were they supposed to do?

The one who seemed to have the answer to Colette's anxiety was a beautiful woman who appeared before them.

However—

Woman: "Answer me. What are you? New Temple Knights?"

With her long, narrow eyes sharpened, the woman glared their way, looking very, very displeased.

Stepping smoothly in front of Colette as if to shield her from the woman's gaze, Omega moved forward.

Omega: "We bear you no ill will. Could you not make such a scary face?"

Woman: "After trying to drop a star on my head? For your information, if I had not intervened, many minds would have been torn apart. You do have knowledge of dream arts, do you not?"

Omega: "More than that—I can even use them in practice. Of course, I lack your level of talent, so it is no more than the tiniest of tea parties."

Woman: "If you had the knowledge and still did that, I can only take it as malicious intent."

Omega: "Hm."

Colette could do nothing but watch nervously as Omega and the woman exchanged words.

Right in front of Colette, Omega touched a hand to her own chin and smiled faintly.

Omega: "No good. It seems our first meeting went poorly."

Colette: “Eeh, you are giving up that easily? No, that will not do, Omega-chan.”

Omega: “In my experience, relationships that stumble at the start almost never go well thereafter. If you insist regardless, would you like to try speaking?”

Colette: “Me? …Okay, got it. I will try talking.”

Being relied on by Omega, Colette was a little surprised, but she accepted.

She had no idea whether she could be of use where the clever Omega had failed. But simply hiding behind someone without doing anything felt no different than before she left her hometown.

Thinking that, Colette stepped forward with a resolute expression, and the woman’s shoulders tensed with nervousness. Seeing that, Colette stopped her feet and called out from a little distance.

Colette: “Um, sorry for startling you. I am sure Omega-chan did not mean any harm at all. But trying to drop a star—that was overdoing it. I was scared, too.”

Woman: “…And you are?”

Colette: “Ah, right! I am Colette, and that girl is Omega-chan. We are also with Palmyra and Noelle-san, but it seems the two of them are not here. Omega-chan and I are sleepyheads… How about you, big sis? Are you a sleepyhead?”

Woman: “…Hearing that, what do you want to do?”

Colette: “Eh? Oh my… right… Omega-chan, what was it again?”

Omega: “Talk it out. A discussion.”

So eager to make a conversation happen that she let every other objective slip, Colette had dropped the ball; Omega backed her up from behind in a small voice.

Yes—talk it out. They had to make the woman understand that they were not enemies.

Colette: “See, we are in the middle of a journey. It is not a journey we are in a hurry for, but we cannot stay asleep for too long. So—”

Woman: ““Release you.” That is what you mean?”

Colette: “Um, us too, but… if possible, everyone else as well?”

Pressing a hand to her chest, Colette tried making a slightly bold request. At once, the woman’s expression, which had been tilting toward leniency, regained its harshness, and her gaze grew all the more severe.

As if to show her intent to refuse, she hugged her own arms and glared at Colette.

Woman: “Why do you want to free the other people as well? That has nothing to do with travelers.”

Colette: “Th-That is true, they are people whose faces and names I do not even know. But, you know, leaving them with those vacant expressions might be dangerous, and… they just look so pitiful.”

Woman: “Pitiful? Do not tell me that is your reason?”

Colette: “Hmm? Is it strange if that is my reason?”

Tilting her head, Colette drew a look from the woman like she was seeing something hard to believe.

Thinking she had spoken as honestly as she could, Colette drooped her shoulders at the woman’s reaction. She had always been bad at getting people to grant her requests. Aside from her parents, she had no memory of being able to rely on anyone other than Palmyra—and even that was not Colette’s merit, but because Palmyra was kind.

Now she had Omega and Noelle with her, but it was still far from her area of strength.

While Colette was hanging her head and reflecting, the woman seemed to be hesitating over what to say next. But before that hesitation could clear, a voice cut in with a “Now then.”

Omega: “Thanks to Colette, it is about the right time for our mutual wariness to have loosened, would you not say?”

Naturally, the one who cut in was Omega, who had been quietly observing the situation. Though Colette had been entrusted with the role of negotiator, she was dejected over producing no results; Omega patted her shoulder gently.

Omega: “No worries. I am sure your sincerity has gotten across sufficiently. Look at her face. That is the face peculiar to humans who cannot cut themselves free of sentiment. I saw the same sort many times four hundred years ago.”

Colette: “Um, even if you think that, maybe do not say it out loud…”

Omega: “Oh? My aim was to strongly appeal to her that I am your understanding ally.”

It was very Omega-like, and also the kind of thing that often soured relations with the other party; Colette added her own two cents to that effect.

That said, she had spoken loudly enough for the woman to hear, so it was already too late—

Woman: “…appeal”

Omega: “Hm?”

Woman: “Where did you hear that word? No… where did you learn that word?”

Narrowing her eyes, the question the woman voiced was a puzzle Colette did not understand.

What the woman had picked up on was one of those words Omega sometimes used that Colette did not know. Since Omega was very clever, Colette assumed it was knowledge from books or lands she did not know, but for some reason it really bothered the woman.

Omega, too, let her black eyes ripple at the woman's question.

Omega: "An interesting question. Unlike Palmyra, who would dismiss it as meaningless, or Colette, who would smile and let it pass, your attitude is different… However, the answer to that question is relatively important to me as well. It is not something I can divulge so easily—"

Woman: "I can release every man in town whom I drew into the dream."

Omega: "That would make me want to answer—so I would like to say, but human society stalls if only the men return. No, I have never tested it, but functionally speaking, so long as the men retain consciousness, even if the women do not, is the community's reproduction still possible? If so—"

Colette: "Omega-chan! I feel like you are saying something you should not!"

Omega was more expressive in this larger body than in her smaller one. So, even as she spoke, the smirking grin on her face was plain to see.

Colette did not really understand the content, but she felt that letting Omega keep talking with that face was wrong, so she scolded her in place of Palmyra and Noelle. At that warning, Omega hunched her slender shoulders with a "Sorry, sorry," then faced the woman anew.

The woman had grown sullen again from that last exchange; Omega smiled into those eyes.

Omega: "Fortunately, we have gleaned some information by this point. From the look of it, you are not the aura of a simple evil "Dream Illusionist." There are circumstances behind putting the townsfolk to sleep. Those circumstances involve your pointed elven ears and your dream-arts power, and the fact that this is the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko. My basis for this supposition is the barrier that surrounded the city… that is a kind of "Blessing" of the Holy Kingdom, yes? Only certain roles within the Holy Church can use it, and they are your pursuers. You are quite fixated on the terms I have used, it seems, but the reason for that does not go beyond conjecture. Even so, you wanted information so badly you decided without hesitation to let the men go from the dream. The ones you wish to hold back are the women. —How about it?"

Woman: "…Ah."

At the close of Omega's long discourse, the woman fell silent—no, she was struck dumb.

Her large eyes went wide, her lips trembled, and no voice came out. Listening at her side, Colette, too, was drowning in the wave of information Omega had strung together, left floundering.

Without waiting for either of their reactions or interjections, Omega went on.

Omega: "I surmise you are an elven "Dream Illusionist" branded heresy and pursued by Temple Knights of the Gusteko Holy Church. The pursuer is a woman, whom you have put to sleep and drawn into this dream. The townspeople in the same predicament are collateral damage—or hostages to deter further pursuers."

Woman: "W… What are you… why do you rattle on like that…?"

Omega: "Oh? Not exactly wrong, then? In that case, I shall answer thus: "Elementary, my dear (a basic matter, my friend).""

Placing a hand to her chest, Omega made an elegant bow. In contrast to her smug demeanor, the shaken woman blanched and it was clear she was afraid of Omega.

Colette understood the feeling. That just now had been very creepy Omega.

Colette: "Hey, we do not want to fight with you, big sis. If we can talk, let us talk, okay? I do not even know your name yet."

Standing in for the off-putting Omega, Colette addressed the silent woman. Timidly, the woman's gaze turned back toward Colette.

In the depths of those eyes, Colette could see the color of anxiety that her displeasure had concealed, and she let out a white puff of breath.

Colette: "If we can get along, then maybe Omega-chan will feel like talking about the thing you wanted to know. Right, Omega-chan?"

Omega: "Well? Even so, there are things that cannot be revealed so easily, no matter what I am told—"

Colette: "Omega-chan."

Omega: "I suppose I might change my mind."

Fixed by Colette's gaze, Omega softened her stance ever so slightly. At Omega's reply, Colette smiled and nodded, and the woman blinked at their exchange.

After thinking for a while, she slowly averted her eyes.

Woman: "Lilac."

Bluntly stating her own name, she took a step forward in her relationship with Colette and the others.

10

Zank: "The one we've gotta take down is the elf "Dream Illusionist." Sis, how much do you know about "Dream Illusionists"?"

Noelle: "…I have heard a little of them, but this would be my first time facing one in person."

Zank: "Hah. Same here on that count. An elf who's a "Dream Illusionist" is like a bundle of elements that betray the Holy Will—a mass of "heresy." The sinfulness makes my spine run cold."

At Zank, who actually shivered as if seized by fear, Noelle narrowed her eyes quietly.

After Colette had unleashed the power of the Beast Protection Bracelet and carried off Palmyra and the sleeping Omega, Noelle had chosen to act together with Zank, whose objective was hunting down “heresy.”

By the nature of her position as an Itinerant Preacher, she could not refuse a Temple Knight’s request to subjugate heretics. That obligation as a person of the Holy Church was one factor, but the main reason was another.

Namely—

Zank: “This is the sort of “heresy” we absolutely cannot let slip away. In the worst case, we have to consider wiping out the whole town of Sylphoa along with it.”

Noelle: “…”

As if it were only natural, Zank voiced the idea of abandoning the town along with its residents.

A Temple Knight’s primary role was to follow the Holy Will issued by the Holy King and subjugate “heresy”—and the survival of a single “heretic” was deemed a graver defect than the death of a thousand believers.

Thus Noelle was accompanying Zank to prevent him from taking such hard-line measures.

If he tried to rush into rash methods in obedience to the Holy Will, she would gently propose a change of course, and if he still refused, then by force if need be—

Noelle: “…What am I even thinking.”

Finding herself naturally entertaining the idea of overpowering Zank, Noelle felt a pang of bewilderment at her own heart.

Noelle had entered the Holy Church for the sake of revenge and had been granted the power she needed. Though that objective had been half-crushed along the way, she still owed a great debt—and a small measure of faith—to the Holy Church of Gusteko. In spite of that, to be laying plans that would harm Zank was nothing less than a betrayal of the Holy Will.

Besides, to make an enemy of a Temple Knight here in Gusteko, the Holy King's very domain, would be to throw mud at the Holy Church of Gusteko, which nine tenths of the Holy Kingdom's people revere. No matter how reckless one might be, no one could carry out such a foolish thought.

—Even Omega, who exuded that bottomless presence, should be no exception. Or so it should be.

Zank: "Hey, sis? You listening?"

Noelle: "…But of course."

Peered at while she was lost in thought, Noelle drew in a faint breath.

Fortunately, thanks to a constitution that did not easily show agitation on her face, her attempt at composure did not seem to be seen through at once. Just then, beyond her field of vision, she noticed a simple snow-shelter tent erected on the snowy plain.

They were supposed to have been led out of town and told they'd be taken to a base, but—

Zank: "Ah? That look—you're scoffing that it's a shabby tent, aren't you."

Following Noelle's gaze, Zank made a sour face and scratched at his short hair. Most likely, what Noelle had missed just before was a conversation to do with that tent.

With a disgruntled mutter of "Couldn't be helped," Zank went on:

Zank: "Never thought we wouldn't be able to get into the town. We had to set up a Blessing of People-Warding. Staying light on our feet was the smartest play all around."

Noelle: "I have not said anything. Though I suppose it truly is a little unsightly… Are you alone, Zank-sama?"

As Zank offered what sounded like excuse-tinged grumbling, Noelle answered him while casting her gaze this way and that, tilting her head.

It was fine if this lone tent was the base, but the absence of any other Holy Church believers struck her as odd. Of course, it was rare for multiple Temple Knights to be dispatched; if there were others, they would be attendants assigned to Zank's rear support.

But neither to Noelle's eyes nor to her other senses did any such presence make itself felt—

Zank: "Ah. If you mean attendants, I turned them down. When the "heretic" we're up against is that skilled, tagalongs just mean the number of precious believers goes down. Pointless, right?"

Noelle: "If I recall, I was requested to make up for a shortage, was I not…?"

Zank: "Sis, you're an Itinerant Preacher—same rank as a Temple Knight aside from the Blessing! Treating you the same as an attendant would be way stranger!"

Noelle: "…That is true as well."

At Zank's raised-voice assertion, Noelle nodded sedately in agreement.

His point was fair. In practice, there was a gulf between an Itinerant Preacher and an attendant that could not be bridged. That said, there was a similar gulf between an Itinerant Preacher and a Temple Knight—no, if anything, precisely because both could be called strong, the effect of that hard-to-bridge gap was all the more blatant.

For that reason, Zank's thinking came as a mild surprise to Noelle.

Noelle: "I am surprised."

Zank: "Hm? By what?"

Noelle: "Not to speak of ordinary believers of the Holy Church, but you yourself, Zank-sama, as one who holds the office of Temple Knight, expressed that we Itinerant Preachers are of the same rank.”

The difference between a Temple Knight and an Itinerant Preacher was not merely in role and duties. More fundamentally, how the two were distinguished lay in whether one was granted a “Blessing.”

Those who were granted a “Blessing” by the Holy King—who was both the head of the Holy Church of Gusteko and the pinnacle of the Holy Kingdom—were the few who could become Temple Knights, and thus Temple Knights strongly tended toward elitism.

Noelle knew Temple Knights in a number fewer than she had fingers on both hands, and all of them, when compared with Noelle the Itinerant Preacher, never let go of the recognition that they outranked her. Even to call them equal in form could be taken as an insult to the Holy King, who bestowed the Blessing.

Noelle: “Thus Zank-sama’s attitude struck me as unusual.”

Zank: “Ahh, I might be like that. Not something I can say too loudly, though. I hate “heretics” and heathens. But believers are different. We’re all under the same Holy Church umbrella.”

Noelle: “…”

Zank: “Hey, as a Temple Knight, heretic-hunting is top priority, yeah? If it looks like the best way, I won’t balk at an annihilation plan. But that’s a last resort, for the time being.”

As he said that, Zank lifted his hand lightly, and red light leaked from his fingertips.

That light wavered eerily, as if it had a will of its own—or rather, not “as if.” It did have a will. A definite will, a “Blessing” that obeyed Zank.

To survive a harsh environment, a faith had naturally taken root within the Holy Church of Gusteko—reverence and awe toward spirits—and the “Blessing” that Temple Knights received from the Holy King was precisely that.

Those who were granted a spirit by the Holy King, who formed a contract with it and gained a power beyond the ordinary—those were Temple Knights.

Noelle: “All the same, I do think Zank-sama’s way of thinking is unusual.”

Zank: “Could be. But it’s not my idea; I picked it up from someone. An old friend of mine’s also a devout believer in the Holy Church of Gusteko. I’m here thanks to that person.”

Zank’s lips softened just a touch, and his attitude grew gentler. No doubt, as he spoke, the person in question—this old friend—rose up in his mind, called forth by memory.

If he had someone like that to speak of, perhaps the worst possibility Noelle feared was needless worry. Perhaps Zank would not approve of doing something as extreme as destroying Sylphoa.

Noelle: “Then, for the Holy King’s Holy Will and for the sake of that friend, let us secure the best resolution.”

To subdue the “heretic” without involving the residents of Sylphoa. A conclusion that kept damage to a minimum—that was the ideal, and Noelle sought to share that course with Zank.

However—

Zank: “…Yeah. We will take down the “heretic,” no question.”

Noelle: “…”

In that instant, the gentle air of a moment before vanished, and a cruel hue dyed Zank’s expression.

At that sudden transformation, Noelle could not help but feel disconcerted. The way the color in his eyes changed swelled a fear of the worst that she could not wipe away.

Ignoring Noelle’s inner turmoil, Zank lifted the flap of the narrow tent’s entrance with his hand.

Zank: “Come in. I want to share what we’ve got on the “heretic.” It ain’t much, but we’ll squash our uncertainties one by one and make it solid.”

Jutting his chin, Zank beckoned Noelle into the tent.

Holding both his unstable way of speaking and her own indelible anxiety within her ample chest, Noelle nonetheless did not let any of it show on her face; she followed quietly and stepped inside the tent.

Feeling keenly that this matter of subjugating a “heretic” would not be the end of it.

11

Omega: “Huh, a split personality! So you divide the roles between reality and the dream realm, and while the body stays awake you slip into the dream! I see, I see… truly fascinating!”

Eyes widening at the first real example she had ever heard, Omega voiced heartfelt admiration.

Lilac, the “Dream Illusionist” they had encountered in the dream realm—having yielded to the carrot-and-stick negotiating tactic Omega and Colette used in tandem—began to pop-pop and speak to them about her own circumstances.

What especially piqued Omega’s interest among that was the separate personality that shared a body with Lilac—a personality named Shion—and the “Dream Illusionist” advantage of employing multiple personalities.

Colette: “Hey hey, Omega-chan, I don’t feel “wow” about that at all. Um, what does it even mean to have another you inside yourself?”

Omega: “It is literal, but if that is hard to picture, forget the “another you” part and just think of it as someone else in your head. Suppose you share your body with Palmyra. How do you think your life would change?”

Colette: “Eh? Umm, umm… I guess it would be fun, since I could always be together with Palmyra…?”

Lilac: “—It is not so nice a thing.”

Blinking and thinking hard, Colette had arrived at an endearingly innocent conclusion. But it seemed that answer did not please Lilac, who actually was a split personality.

Lilac went right on, saying:

Lilac: “I do not know this Palmyra girl, but imagine the one who moved into your head was not her—imagine it was that Omega girl over there.”

Colette: “Eeh, Omega-chan inside my head…?”

Omega: “Hm. Though I may look this way, I am poor at gauging the feelings of others, but I can tell from Colette’s reaction just now that she is not happy.”

Lilac: ““Though you may look this way”? You are exactly as I imagined, are you not.”

Harsh as it sounded, Lilac’s sharp words were largely sincere.

Colette’s answer was endearing. But in truth, whether the other personality that is born is truly someone you like is another matter. Considering the backgrounds that lead to a split personality, it is entirely possible one ends up sharing a body with a personality one does not get along with.

All the more so for a “Dream Illusionist” of elven origin—whatever circumstances she grew up in, if you packed every imaginable malice into a box, that would be the days she had lived.

Omega: “And yet, if the result of that was a split personality and a dramatic growth as a “Dream Illusionist,” it is an ironic tale. However, it greatly affirms my view in life that every time a human overcomes a “trial,” they undergo dramatic growth.”

Lilac: “It sounds rather like you are welcoming the splitting of one’s personality, does it not?”

Omega: “It is an exceedingly rare case, after all. If there is someone who dealt the decisive blow to crack your personalities, I would very much like to offer them my thanks—”

At that point—

Lilac’s hand, her expression gone taut, walloped Omega hard across the face.

Her white cheek struck, Omega plopped down on her rear where she was. It was the dream realm, but the cold of the piled snow chilled her backside all the same, while heat rose in the cheek that had been slapped, in contrast.

Lilac: “Do not say such things… without permission.”

Looking down at Omega, Lilac let those words spill out, her eyes severe and her lips pressed tight.

The trembling voice and her gaze, like a lament, looked like proof that Lilac felt a pain even greater than that of the slapped Omega.

In fact—

Colette: “I think Omega-chan was in the wrong just now, too.”

Omega: “…Good grief. If even Colette says so, it must be quite bad. It is a bad habit of mine. I am sorry for making you feel unpleasant.”

If even the kindhearted Colette would not take Omega’s side, then there was no excusing it. Though she did not grasp the essence of what she had done, Omega apologized to Lilac.

Some might say there is no meaning in an apology when you do not know what you are apologizing for.

Omega: “In my case, if I start saying that, the very raison d’être of the words of apology disappears.”

Lilac: “…It is not something to say so loftily.”

Averting her eyes, Lilac gave that short mutter as her response to Omega’s apology.

She neither said she forgave, nor that she had forgiven, but taking no clean break could be taken as her own form of sincerity.

At any rate, if she spoke the rest aloud, it was plain she would incur anger yet again, so Omega decided to keep her amazement at the great miracle of this coincidence to herself.

—A “Dream Illusionist” who manipulates dream arts is a tremendously powerful being. Entering another’s dream is tantamount to touching the target’s unguarded heart and soul directly. If they choose, they are a practitioner who can easily shatter another’s heart—however, that does not mean they have no weaknesses.

Omega: “The foremost is that while they are employing dream arts, the practitioner themselves is asleep.”

Since they are entering a dream, it is only natural that the “Dream Illusionist” themselves must also be sleeping. At such times the practitioner is just as defenseless—and Lilac had completely compensated for that weakness.

One personality handles the dream, and the other handles reality. By doing that, what you get is a “Dream Illusionist” who can dive into dreams while awake. An outrageous thing.

Omega: “And you are an elf… able to continue honing yourself near-permanently in an unaging body… Much as it may be odd for me to say, you have enough potential to be called a “Witch”—oh?”

Lilac: “Let go, Colette. I am going to slap the other cheek of that woman, too.”

Colette: “Wait, wait, wait, Lilac-san! I think Omega-chan does not even mean to be saying it out loud. She has no ill will. Omega-chan is empty inside!”

By the time Omega noticed, her robust imagination having heated up, Colette was desperately pinning Lilac from behind right in front of her.

Looking between Lilac, her face reddening with anger again, and Colette doing her utmost, Omega put a hand to her own mouth.

Omega: “I apologize again for my unseemly conduct. As Colette says, I meant no ill will.”

Lilac: “…At least, I beg you, be of use to us.”

Omega: “I shall strive earnestly. So then, is the problem the Temple Knight inside? Or the Temple Knight outside?”

Lilac: “…”

At Omega’s question, Lilac opened her eyes wide in astonishment.

Such an overreaction was something to see, but it was not anything to be impressed by every time.

Omega: “You and your other personality, Shion, have fallen into a standoff in this town. The basis for my surmise that the opponent is a Temple Knight is as I said a moment ago. Considering the reason for developing the dream realm, it is clear you find the Temple Knights troublesome in both dream and waking.”

Lilac: “…For now, the one I want to prioritize is the Temple Knight inside.”

Omega: “I see—inside.”

To Lilac’s low-voiced reply, Omega looked around at the Sylphoa in the dream. Pulled by her, Colette also glanced about here and there, trying to spot an anomaly.

However, she could not find anything that seemed like one. There were only the people of the town passing by.

Colette: “Hmm, I do not get it… What kind of people are these Temple Knights?”

Omega: “They are the version of Noelle that is contracted with a spirit. The only visible commonality, if any, would probably be the Holy Church of Gusteko’s vestments. I have not seen a modern Temple Knight with my own eyes, so that is only if the customs from four hundred years ago have continued.”

Colette: “V-Version…”

Omega: “The townsfolk you have drawn in have hazy selves; that is a question of how you are allocating resources, is it not? So long as they are held in the dream, they suffice. In other words, where the leftover power is being poured is—”

Lilac: “—That Time Tower.”

Cutting off Omega’s words, Lilac jerked her chin toward the center of town. Looking, amid the otherwise featureless townscape there was a slightly conspicuous tower. That, too, was a tower whose entrance had been blocked by an unnatural statue—a strange creature that looked neither like a cat nor a dog.

Colette: “Wow, it is very cute. I wonder what animal it is.”

Omega: “Beauty and ugliness are matters that vary by person, but it is certainly an unnatural article. Are you the one blocking the tower entrance?”

Lilac: “Not blocked physically. It only appears that way conceptually. I am devoting most of the power—the resources—to sealing the Temple Knight.”

Omega: “I see. Sounds like a formidable foe.”

That Lilac had gone out of her way to restate the word was probably to show that she knew the meaning of the terms Omega used and could command them. On Omega’s side, she was deliberately increasing her use of foreign terms in a provocative way, so it was all the better that Lilac was being stimulated.

As for how Lilac had picked up these foreign-to-this-world words, that did interest her.

Omega: “For us to talk with our hearts on our sleeves, progress in our relationship is indispensable. So I will help remove your worries. How about it?”

Lilac: “…If I lift the ban on arts, can you guarantee you will not target me?”

Colette: “Lilac-san, that is too cruel, no matter what…”

At Omega’s proposal, Lilac asked that from a natural caution. When Colette’s eyes moistened at that, even Lilac’s cheeks grew slightly stiff before the gaze of the good-hearted girl.

Even so, she did not fold at once and retract what she had said.

Weighing that stance and the requirements being asked for, Omega shrugged.

Omega: “It is fine—keep the arts sealed. If I silence the Temple Knight like that, surely even you will have no choice but to change your attitude toward me, will you?”

Lilac: “Even if so, the way you say it makes me not want to change… What are you going to do?”

Omega: “A secret.”

Pressing an index finger to her lips and winking one eye, Omega answered.

While Lilac pursed her lips in dissatisfaction at the evasiveness, Omega smiled at Colette beside her.

Omega: “Colette, this will be a little dangerous, so…”

Colette: “Umm, should I step back?”

Omega: “No—when it is no good, it is no good even if you step back. Do not let go of the “Beast Protection Bracelet.”“

The “Meteia” that had been brought even into the dream realm—whether it would become a mere flimsy sham, or prove effective even here, was unknown, but it would serve as a comfort for Colette.

Then, as if to shield that Colette, Lilac shifted where she stood and set her expression.

If the “Dream Illusionist” who constructed this world was there, Colette should be safe for the time being.

Omega: “All right, whenever you are ready. Open the lid of the Time Tower.”

Lilac: “…If it looks bad, say so at once.”

Colette: “O-Omega-chan! Do your best!”

Buoyed by the encouragement from Lilac and from Colette respectively, Omega stepped forward.

In the next instant, in time with Lilac’s single breath, the stillness of the Time Tower was shattered.

The statue of the strange animal at the tower entrance—the one Colette had praised—blew to pieces, and at the same time the tower’s entrance exploded—no, it was not the entrance that exploded, but the entire tower.

As if someone had pumped more water than its capacity into a living thing, cracks ran across the whole structure, unable to withstand the internal pressure, and just after water gushed from the cracks, the whole thing burst apart at once.

And—

Woman: “—I was caught off guard.”

Riding the surging torrent as she flew out was a tall woman with sky-colored hair flowing down to her waist. Pale skin and a slender frame, clad in silver armor and pure white vestments—the uniform of a Temple Knight, permitted only to the chosen.

Woman: “But you underestimated me, heretic. As with the other believers in town, you could have finished it if you had made me like an empty husk of a soul.”

Omega: “No, that is difficult. As it is, Temple Knights carve and implant various things into their bodies in what you call “Blessings,” do they not? It is a struggle both to keep them under the dream’s control and to maintain a being of power in an ambiguous state. Rather, they might flee outside the dream. That would defeat the purpose.”

Woman: “…And you are?”

Dropping from a height of more than ten meters together with the muddy flood, the woman landed on the street and drew her brows together.

While she had been shut in inside the tower, it seemed she had been cut off from outside information. Omega’s thoughts drifted down a bypath, thinking there was yet another use for Lilac’s dream arts there, but she reined them in.

Facing a Temple Knight was not an experience one could easily have even if one tried.

Omega: “In short, you are yourself squarely an object of my curiosity.”

Woman: “—!”

Omega: “Oh? You grew wary of me at first sight. For the record, Lilac holds the initiative in this dream realm, so any ominous aura and the like should be being suppressed to the utmost… but very well.”

Staring straight at Omega, the woman instantly took a battle stance.

For all that she had a fair bit of experience trading blows four hundred years ago, Omega was unfortunately far removed from the keen eye of a strong one who could gauge an opponent’s ability at a glance. If someone held a weapon and struck a crisp pose, anyone looked strong.

Omega: “Therefore, I will not pull my punches. Right—may I ask your name, Temple Knight?”

Woman: “A name to announce to “heretics” is—”

Omega: “But you are the agents of the Holy King’s Holy Will, are you not? Is it a name you would be ashamed to speak? That would be the same as shaming the Holy King’s name.”

Woman: “—Mikli Yulitô.”

Swept along by Omega’s one-eyed wink of a provocation, the Temple Knight—who gave her name as Mikli—gritted her teeth and leveled two slim rapiers, one in each hand.

She then went still, holding her posture, and Omega thought a moment before nodding with an “Ah.”

Omega: “I am Omega. Following where my curiosity leads, I will kill your soul.”

Mikli: “—How abominable!”

With the introduction and the declaration, Mikli’s cool beauty was dyed in anger.

In the next moment, Mikli’s body sped across the snow at high speed—no, she was not running; she was launched. It was high-speed movement using water pressure, the same as what had pulverized the tower.

Apparently, the true nature of the “Blessing” granted to her as a Temple Knight was a water spirit.

Mikli’s skill, trained to a considerable degree, made full use of the “Blessing” for both attack and movement. It could be called a solid ability befitting her earnest appearance.

Without toying with her prey, Mikli seemed to have decided to pierce Omega’s forehead head-on.

An unerring, single thrust, and an instant before it churned Omega’s skull—

Omega: “Unfortunately, my arts have been sealed. So I will send out a proxy.”

—In that split second, Mikli, who had been upon Omega, was smashed down by an impact from overhead.

A tremendous impact boomed out, and a too-realistic shaking and rumble assaulted the dreamland.

Shielding Colette—who involuntarily let out a “Kyaa!”—behind her, Lilac went cold with fear that the damage from that shock might shatter the dream realm.

Fortunately, the formation of Sylphoa in the dream was sturdy in proportion to the large number of townsfolk drawn into it.

Lilac was the type who preferred to craft the dream realm by quality over quantity, but driven into a corner in an unfamiliar town, this time she had exceptionally chosen to make up in numbers for quality.

That choice paid off, and the collapse of the dream Sylphoa was averted—however,

Lilac: “…What did you do?”

Lilac could not perceive the true nature of what had just happened.

She was sure she herself was the one sealing Omega’s arts. If Omega tried to force the seal open, it would be broken—but Lilac felt no such sensation on her end.

In other words, it was not arts. Yet it was not as if Omega had suddenly moved nimbly, either.

Colette: “Huh…? It looked to me like that woman got smacked from above all of a sudden.”

Letting her bewilderment bleed into her voice, Colette spoke, and Lilac agreed with her impression.

The Temple Knight who gave her name as Mikli had ridden the water and rushed Omega. But she had been shot down. With Omega standing there stock-still, it remained unknown what she had done.

Mikli: "—N-Not yet!"

Even while confused by the bizarre development, Mikli, who had slammed into the ground, sprang to her feet at once. She had probably used a cushion of water at the moment of impact to keep the damage to a minimum.

Exerting her excellent combat technique to the full, the great water swirling at Mikli's back rose up.

Taking on the aspect of a giant serpent made of water, it turned the vast quantity of water that made it up into a weapon and fiercely unleashed tremendous destruction all around.

Its aim was not Omega alone. Its force would sweep up Lilac, Colette, and the townsfolk as well—

Lilac: "You are not choosing your means…!"

Grinding her teeth, Lilac labored to interfere with the dream realm and keep the damage to the town in check. But between maintaining the world and binding Mikli in the dream, she had little power to spare.

If the townsfolk she had drawn in collapsed within the dream realm, their minds in reality would suffer grave wounds.

Seeing that could not be avoided, Lilac's eyes went wide.

Then—

Green-haired girl: "Sin can't get past my judgment."

The instant a quiet, childish voice rang out, a chain of sounds like shattering glass echoed.

It was the sound of Mikli's water strike—which should have rained down on Omega, on Lilac, on Colette—on the whole town—suddenly crystallizing and then, frail as glass, breaking apart.

Mikli: "Why… has my "Blessing"…?"

Struck dumb, Mikli saw her blow, which should have crushed the "heretic," itself be crushed—and then the way her eyes flew wide in astonishment ultimately became the complete cause of her defeat.

Mikli: "—Ah."

Unable to accept what had happened to her, Mikli started to glare at Omega—only for her eyes to catch, not Omega, but another being that had appeared without anyone noticing. Lilac and, apparently, Colette as well traced the same line of sight and beheld the same being—a pale-skinned girl with pink hair.

At once, the scenery around Lilac, her sense of urgency, all manner of idle thoughts vanished from her head.

All she could do was desperately tilt everything—even the last fiber of her optic nerves and brain cells—toward the girl. The strength left her legs and she crumpled to the spot. Even so, her gaze went to the girl, and only to the girl—

Omega: "Sorry—the effect was too strong."

Lilac: "Ah."

A tap on her shoulder, and a white-haired woman stepped in to block Lilac's view. Omega. At Omega's arrival, a violent anger welled up at having her appreciation interrupted.

But that was immediately drowned out by a suffocating shortness of breath rising within her.

Lilac: "Cough, cough."

She had forgotten to breathe. Literally, she had been so enthralled she had forgotten to breathe.

By what? By the girl who had appeared out of nowhere—of course. She could not forget how in that instant, it felt like everything inside her head was being sucked up, and beyond that fear, an even greater euphoria seized her brain.

Lilac: “Th… that…”

Omega: “Keep calm and steady your breathing for now. It is already settled.”

Lilac: ““Settled,” you say?”

Gathering up her thoughts, scattered in a thousand directions, Lilac let her gaze roam.

Then, the great water serpent that had risen in the town center—the pitiful monster whose unleashed attack had been turned into shards of glass—was meeting an even more pitiful end.

Gray-haired girl: “After all that, the meal has no flavor. How disappointing~.”

Squirming bashfully and letting out a somewhat feverish sigh was a gray-haired girl.

With both eyes covered by eyepatches, her whole body wrapped in a straitjacket, she had—some sort of joke—fixed her body into a moving coffin. And despite being fixed in that coffin, literally unable to move her hands or feet, she had devoured whole the spirit called a “Blessing” that Mikli commanded.

And so, Mikli, whose “Blessing” was also her proof of being a Temple Knight—

Blonde woman: “—Don’t you go dying on your own!!”

Right after that shout rang out, an unbelievable crash struck the dream Sylphoa once more.

It was the force of a punch brought down onto the chest of Mikli, who was lying flat on the ground. That one great blow, thrown with her whole body, was a heartfelt strike delivered by a blonde, blue-eyed woman.

For Mikli—who had fallen for likely the same reason as Lilac—that would, without doubt, have been the final shove that shattered her life. Or so it seemed, but—

Mikli: “Gahh.”

A feeble cough sounded, and Mikli, sprawled out like a big letter X, resumed a thin, fragile breathing.

Lilac could do nothing but stand in a daze, wondering what was happening—when,

Colette: “O-Omega-chan… the girls around us, are they all your friends?”

Timidly, Colette posed to Omega the same question Lilac harbored.

Unlike Lilac, it seemed Colette had not forgotten how to breathe, but even so she could not hide her agitation and confusion. To that question from her ally, Omega nodded casually with an “Mm.”

Omega: “I cannot use arts. So I made use of my popularity.”

Purple-haired woman: “You, popular? Hah. Do not say things that do not suit you, sigh.”

Lilac: “…”

At the sound of a woman’s voice she did not recognize, Lilac’s throat hitched and she hastily looked that way. There, by a building a little apart from Lilac and the others, she found a purple-haired woman lying on the ground.

Green-haired girl: “Ooh, haha, found you—. Isn’t it cold, sleeping on the snow—?”

Purple-haired woman: “’Course it’s cold, hah. But the feeling that getting up is more trouble than being cold wins out, phew.”

Green-haired girl: “Then Typhon’ll drag you, okay—? Mila, wanna help—?”

Pink-haired girl: “Euh… i-it’s f-fine. B-Because it’s Typhon-chan’s… request…”

A small green-haired girl and the pink-haired girl from earlier walked up to the sprawled woman. On impulse, Lilac managed to wrench her eyes away from that sight.

Besides those girls, there was also the girl in the coffin, and the blonde, blue-eyed woman—

Lilac: “You… just what did you bring here?”

Omega: “That is the wrong way to see it. From the beginning, you were the one who brought us into the dream.”

So said, Omega stretched her lips sideways in a spine-chilling smile.

At Omega’s answer, Lilac realized, late though it was— not only the women around them who had overwhelmed Mikli, but Omega right before her was a monster beyond the norm as well.

She had dragged in an unexpectedly mighty existence and turned the dream realm into a nightmare—

Lilac: “—What is this, what on earth is going on.”

Just then, yet another unfamiliar voice sounded, and Lilac’s heart was on the verge of bursting its banks.

However, when Lilac turned, what entered her vision was a slender girl with deep navy hair—and at a glance, she shared no visible traits with Omega and her fearsome companions.

Colette: “Palmyra!”

Palmyra: “Ukyaa!”

The instant she thought so, Colette’s face lit up and she leapt at the girl. Unable to arrest her momentum, the girls clung to each other and toppled onto the snow as they were.

Even so, Colette did not care, and clung to the other girl's chest as she said,

Colette: "Thank goodness, thank goodness, Palmyra. I was so uneasy with just Omega-chan and me. No, it is not that Omega-chan is bad— it is only that I am a scaredy-cat."

Palmyra: "Hey, get off first— …and there is no way you are a scaredy-cat."

Raising her body on the snow, the girl—called Palmyra—petted Colette's hair. At once, relief spread across Colette's face, and the confusion from just before seemed to leave her.

While stroking Colette's head, Palmyra cast a severe gaze around her.

And then—

Palmyra: "There are, like, an awful lot of people here… Which one of you is Lilac? I brought a message from your other half, Shion."

Thus she declared the reason she had boldly dived into the dream.

Training as a Dream Illusionist was truly, truly harsh.

First of all, if you do not have talent, you cannot master the dream arts essential to a Dream Illusionist.

Second, even if you do have talent, the mastery of the dream arts comes paired with extremely, extremely painful and grueling training, which makes it unbelievably hard.

A Dream Illusionist is a specialist who dives into another person's deep psyche—their "dream." To dive into someone's dream, you must be able to synchronize with that person's core, their Od.

To do that, you stand at the pillow of someone you have put to sleep with a drug or poison, and without sleeping or resting you search out the feel of their Od—that is the first stage of training. If you can synchronize before the person weakens to death in their sleep, good. If you are too late, you change to the next practice partner and repeat the same training.

The synchronization is, after all, something sensory, but if, not wanting to let the other person die, you lie that you have done it when you have not, you will be found out at once. The supervising instructor is also a Dream Illusionist, and by synchronizing with the liar on this side, they see through it.

If you do not wish to let people die because of your own inadequacy, you have no choice but to improve your dream arts.

And once you stop botching the synchronization with the other party, next comes shortening the time it takes to synchronize, and pressing on toward the very depths of dream arts that actually let you board the dream—and—

Shion: “Ultimately, what you end up with is a Dream Illusionist who’s become an expert in the dream arts—whose sense of self is vague, but who properly carries out what they’re told. Amazing, isn’t it!”

Palmyra: “I feel like I’m being made to listen to an insanely scary story, though…”

Shion: “Yes. I tried telling an insanely scary story.”

Even if she talked in as bright a tone as possible, her life was still one of heavy hardship—or so; Shion gave a wry smile as she smiled at Palmyra before her.

In the middle of the grave matter surrounding Sylphoa, this was the girl who had been dragged along into her and Lilac’s escape. The girl with strong-willed eyes listened even to Shion’s story, which might be thought fairly far-fetched, and did not flatly deny it.

Honestly, she was a very hard-to-come-by person. Perhaps Shion’s luck had improved.

Shion: “Perhaps the reason I’ve had nothing but misfortune in my life until now was so that I could meet, here, the helping hand called Palmyra-san.”

Palmyra: “Don’t dump that heavy an expectation on a mere passerby… To begin with, if that “making of a Dream Illusionist” is true—”

Shion: “If it’s true?”

Palmyra: “In what way is your sense of self blurry? Your strength of self is no less than that “Witch” sleeping over there.”

With a dubious look, Palmyra pointed at the pink-haired girl laid down on the snow. At Palmyra’s remark, Shion blinked, then raised her index finger and said,

Shion: “You mustn’t—no matter how close you are, you mustn’t rashly say “Witch” like that. It’s quite an insult. It’ll sour relationships, like with me and Lilac.”

Palmyra: “It’s fine; that’s what she calls herself. More importantly, answer me.”

Shion: “I’m not aware of being strong-willed, but Lilac and I are a little special. The fact there were two of us inside one self was probably a big factor. The downside of that is showing right now!”

Palmyra: “How is that funny!”

Palmyra’s way of reacting—like a bell that rang when struck—was pleasant to Shion. Even so, this somehow heart-warming back-and-forth should not have continued long, considering the urgency of the situation.

The reason Shion had given Palmyra a light explanation of Dream Illusionists was not to have her shed tears listening to Shion’s sad reflections.

Shion: “Anyway, I’ve received that kind of professional training and have long served as a Dream Illusionist; I’m a veteran and a professional. So please, relax and take on the challenge!”

Palmyra: “Are you actually trying to reassure me? If you just line up a bunch of technical terms I don’t know, I only get more confused!”

Shion: “They aren’t technical terms. —Though, that is our problem…”

Shion gave a faint, bitter smile; she kept the latter half of that to a murmur in her mouth. Then she took Palmyra by the hand and sat her down between the two little girls drawn into the dream—Omega and Colette, as she had heard their names.

Shion: “As I said a moment ago, from here I’d like you, Palmyra-san, to act as a messenger to Lilac, who’s inside the dream. Put simply, a relay for messages.”

Palmyra: “You should have said that from the start…”

Shion: “Yes, but this is also a matter of stylized form… something like a stock pattern.”

Palmyra: “…”

Not understanding what she meant—so Palmyra seemed about to say; Shion put on a serious face and nodded back. She had no particular words of persuasion, but she intended to make her face alone carry some persuasive power.

At any rate, Palmyra seemed to give up and exhaled deeply,

Palmyra: “Being the go-between is fine, but will your other half actually listen to me?”

Shion: “Yes! Of course! Probably! I think it will be fine! De-finitely!”

Palmyra: “Stop losing confidence little by little!”

At Palmyra’s loudly raised shout, Shion stuck her tongue out just a little and fobbed it off.

Lilac had resorted to hardline measures to drive off the pursuing Temple Knights, but even so, surely she would not do anything outrageous to a messenger sent into the dream. So Shion believed.

Shion: “Well then, Palmyra-san, I’m counting on you. —Please look at the very tip of the finger I’m holding up. It will sway left and right, and your consciousness will gradually grow distant.”

Not wanting to undermine Palmyra’s trust any further, Shion swung the finger she had raised left and right. When Palmyra began seriously following that finger with her eyes, with her other hand she cast the dream arts upon her.

It was a hypnotic spell Dream Illusionists excelled at: dam up, for an instant, the Mana flowing toward the target’s Od, and sever the consciousness from reality. Against someone who could use magic to some extent it was a childish trick, but if you diverted their attention, it was also a technique that worked on anyone.

Shion: “Ah—oh dear, I used it again. It just kind of slips off my tongue, you know.”

Swiftly supporting Palmyra’s shoulders as her consciousness receded and laying her down the same way as her friends, Shion knit her brows at the word she had just used in her heart.

By their nature, Dream Illusionists who synchronize with others are easily affected by the other party’s Memories. Unwittingly their verbal tics can be transferred, and mistaken recollections can arise as well.

However—

Shion: “—This one… I wonder who I picked it up from. It’s a mystery.”

Letting the ends of her brows droop, as if groping for a piece of knowledge inside her with no firm place to stand, Shion murmured that in a thin voice.

14

Palmyra: “So that’s how it is—I was asked by Shion outside the dream to come deliver a message.”

Omega: “I see. It seems the situation on the surface is roughly as we had expected here. I'm concerned we don't know Noelle's safety, but well, if she puts her mind to it, she can overpower most opponents, so I'm not that worried… What's wrong, Palmyra?"

Palmyra: "It's your look—I never wanted to see you like that again, it's scary…"

With a hand to her brow and a heavy voice, Palmyra said this; Omega looked down at herself with a blank face and went "ah," grasping what she meant.

In this dream world, Omega's appearance has reverted to the original form closer to the essence of her soul.

Colette had been taken aback by it too, but her interest in Lilac's dream arts came first, and she'd ended up forgetting.

Omega: "That said, as things stand, the way my body is isn't very important. If this were the road of our travels, the clone body's childlike look would tickle people's protective urges, but this original body too will, if the other party is the opposite sex, generally be treated favorably. Pros and cons."

Palmyra: "I'm not talking about usefulness—I'm saying you, looking like that, are scary, okay?"

Colette: "No, Palmyra! If you say it that bluntly you'll hurt Omega-chan!"

Face flushed, Colette grabbed Palmyra from behind in a full nelson as Palmyra bit out her words. Nodding at that routine exchange between the two, Omega shifted her gaze and then—

Omega: "Now then, thanks to the recklessness of Palmyra, who doesn't know how scary Dream Illusionists are, your other half's words have been delivered from outside. What are you going to do, Lilac?"

Lilac: "…"

Addressed by Omega, Lilac fell silent, wearing a difficult expression.

As the creator of this dream world and the Dream Illusionist who holds the fates of the people of Sylphoa, including Omega and the others, in her hands, she was intent on examining the message Palmyra had brought.

At length, she let out a small breath and—

Lilac: “May I hear what you think? Your opinion.”

Omega: “My, that’s unexpected. You, who won’t even lend an ear to your other half’s words, asking me for an opinion here… I suppose proving my strength loomed large?”

Lilac: “I’m just placing hope in a way of thinking different from my own. First off, “proving strength” is… “ Clicking her tongue bitterly, Lilac turned her gaze around the surroundings.

This dream world that reproduces real Sylphoa—the townscape wrapped in white snow—was laid bare in a state of tremendous ruin, destroyed in a way hard to believe as the result of a mere dozen-odd seconds.

The collapsed tower and the multiple craters gouged into the ground told of the ferocity of the fight, giving Lilac a shock that would not allow her to dismiss it as just something inside a dream.

If that made the negotiation go smoothly, it would be exactly the development Omega had hoped for—but—

Lilac: “The fact you’re an unfathomable monster may serve as material for threats, but it won’t be what wins you trust.”

Omega: “Nonsense.”

Palmyra: “Why are you surprised! How many times do you have to go through this before you learn, you!”

Colette: “Omega-chan, I have to admit, I feel the same way about that one.”

Not only Lilac; Colette, their companion on the journey, and Palmyra also took sides against Omega.

Bewildered by this unexpected turn, Omega looked over the surrounding devastation—at the work of the five “witches” she had summoned with a great flourish, since it was a dream world.

Typhon, Carmilla, Daphne, Sekhmet, and Minerva—each had done their job and helped defeat the Temple Knights whom Lilac had shut in. After that, only Omega, who alone had not lifted a hand, remained there, thereby staging a contrast between herself and those who had run wild as they pleased; she had anticipated that would become the trigger to remove the walls in the hearts of Lilac and the others.

Omega: “Nonsense.”

Lilac: “Feels like we went full circle back to the same conclusion… Our impression of you hasn’t changed either. More than that, answer the question from earlier.”

Omega: “The earlier… ah, your other half Shion’s message. Right. If the Temple Knights put their minds to it, they’ll carry out an annihilation operation to wipe out the heretics along with the sleeping residents.”

Lilac: “—!”

Omega: “Granted the premise that what I know of the era and the way of the Temple Knights hasn’t changed—but judging from the air about the woman who called herself Mikli, it doesn’t seem to have changed much. Therefore, what you’re doing is very interesting as a Dream Illusionist, but it doesn’t mean much.”

When she submitted the opinion asked of her, Lilac stiffened her cheek in dismay.

She had seen this sort of reaction many times even in life. People ask the more knowledgeable for their views, but when the answer they wanted doesn’t come back, they immediately make this face.

—If you’re serious about your wish, you ought to have another fallback plan ready to switch to at once.

Palmyra: “It’s not just Omega—Shion’s thinking the same thing. That, “annihilation operation,” was it? We don’t even know if that’s going to happen—so hurry up and release us.”

Lilac: “That’s… “

Colette: “We understand that things have been hard for you, Lilac-san. But but, how about this? —We’ll help you escape from the people chasing you. If we do that, it’ll be okay to wake up the townspeople, right?”

Right in front of the hesitating Lilac, Palmyra and Colette pressed her, each in different words, to lift the dream arts and set themselves and the residents free.

But Lilac lowered her head after clenching her teeth hard and—

Lilac: “That wouldn’t guarantee anything. We’ll just keep… holding the Temple Knights hostage, and—”

Palmyra: ““You want to say ‘continue the barricade,’ but even for those holed up there are limits. Even if you endure until the residents die of weakness, the other side won’t give up.”“

Lilac: “…What is the meaning of this?”

With a glare, Lilac looked at Palmyra, who had cut her off. Under that sharp gaze, Palmyra flinched a little, saying,

Palmyra: “I told you, I’m the messenger. That Shion brat told me Lilac would talk back like this. She told me to say it exactly as is, so I did…”

Lilac: “Tch… What are you saying? That I’m so simple Shion can read me that easily?”

Palmyra: ““Glaring in anger won’t move the situation forward. We have very little time. We have to use the limited cards we have to break through the situation.”“

Lilac: “Stop that!”

Palmyra: ““Getting mad at Palmyra-san is a waste too,” —see? Up to here it’s all spot-on!”

Growing severe in tone, Lilac was countered by Palmyra with the entrusted words.

As one would expect of someone sharing the same body, the yet-unseen Shion whom Omega had not met seemed to know Lilac’s character through and through.

At Palmyra’s handling of the entrusted words to keep the conversation properly going, Colette blinked wide-eyed, as if impressed.

Colette: “W-Wow, it’s amazing. Talking with someone you haven’t seen like that—I’m very impressed.”

Omega: “The one who’s reading her other half’s thoughts in advance is something, and Palmyra, who remembers it properly and can put it into practice, is something as well. Her self-evaluation is low, but she’s got a good head. Her decisiveness that doesn’t let us take useless detours is also a virtue… but let’s set that aside for the moment.”

Colette: “Omega-chan?”

With a slender finger at her chin, Omega had one eye closed in thought; Colette asked her.

This girl had good intuition, and instantly sensed that a thought had begun to move inside Omega. Thinking that both Colette and Palmyra had discernible virtues—

Omega: “Could you pause that barren discussion for a bit?”

Lilac & Palmyra: “The way you say that—”

As Omega lifted a hand and cut in, Lilac and Palmyra shouted in unison. Right after, leaving the two looking sour-faced and Colette wide-eyed, Omega raised one finger on her lifted hand.

Omega: “As for breaking through the situation, I have two ideas from me. One makes maximum use of the Dream Illusionist’s ability, so personally I’d like to proceed with that one.”

Palmyra: “Your preference… I’ve got a bad feeling.”

Lilac: “…For now, let’s hear it.”

Omega: “It’s not that complicated. Look, there’s Mikli Yulitô—lying there. She is at present the greatest obstacle to dissolving the dream world. In other words, if we can neutralize her, there won’t be any major hindrance to breaking the dream. So—how about this. Using the dream arts, we plant the false idea that she’s on our side and have her dispose of the Holy Church pursuers—”

Colette: “Omega-chan!”

A proposal that would make full use of the potential of the dream arts—before she could speak it through to the conclusion, Omega was thwarted by Colette hugging her arm.

With her round eyes brimming with tears, Colette pleaded moistly, and Omega sighed.

Omega: “I had a feeling you’d say that, but… as expected, no good, huh.”

Palmyra: “If you thought we’d oppose it, don’t say it!”

Palmyra spat angry words at the dejected, slumped-shouldered Omega (even if Omega did understand that Palmyra and Colette hated this kind of stratagem)—

Omega: “Even leaving aside my interests and concerns, I’m confident it’s the best plan. To accept or reject something just because it does or doesn’t suit your tastes—doesn’t that strike you as a bit unfaithful to life?”

Colette: “Unfaithful… but but, the way you said to do it is far crueler, Omega-chan.”

Omega: “Isn’t it unfaithful to “your own life”?”

Colette, still holding Omega's arm, looked up from close by and clammed up.

If she was going to stick to being tolerant toward others—that too was, in its way, one choice. But being unaware that she was endangering her own life on grounds of like or dislike—that wouldn't do.

What's more, there was a fear that both Colette and Palmyra were under a misapprehension.

Omega: "Even if I'm with you, that doesn't mean your safety and your lives are guaranteed. The world won't grant anyone a promise that they won't die."

Colette & Palmyra: "…"

As Colette and Palmyra fell silent, Omega narrowed her black eyes.

It was a fact. Even she, before she began calling herself Omega, had, once, certainly lost her life. Her witch friends, who possessed overwhelming power, each met a gruesome end in the last.

You can't obtain a guarantee that no one will die. —With just one exception: that boy.

Lilac: "—And the other one."

Omega: "Hm?"

Lilac: "You have another idea, right?"

In place of the two who had shut their mouths at Omega's words, Lilac asked that question.

To her question, Omega closed one eye and said, "Hmm," and—

Omega: "I could guess these two's opinions, but I didn't think you would pass on the first idea as well. I said up front—this is the best move that makes use of a Dream Illusionist's potential. With skill like yours—I won't hear you say you've never warped a person's heart, will I?"

Lilac: “…I won’t. As you say, this is my… mine and Shion’s very best field.”

Omega: “Then—”

Lilac: “—But I’ve stopped.”

Clearly cutting Omega off, Lilac spoke in a strong tone.

It wasn’t that her voice was loud, nor that she put anger or sorrow into it.

It wasn’t, like Colette and Palmyra, a boldly spoken line using their own goodness as a shield; it had backbone.

It was a strong line she had bolstered with backbone in her heart many times: we won’t do that.

Having spoken it, Lilac looked at Omega, her eyes trembling, and continued.

Lilac: “I’ve already stopped. I used to do that. But I don’t want to anymore. So we will never break a person’s heart again…”

Omega: “I see. Understood. Then this idea is scrapped. A pity, but so be it.”

Lilac: “…Eh?”

Her voice trembling, Lilac’s face went blank at Omega’s answer. At that reaction, Omega, too, tilted her head in puzzlement with a “hm?”

Omega: “You said you didn’t like it and gave your reason, so I withdrew the plan. I don’t see why that reaction…”

Lilac: “Y-You give up rather easily, don’t you?”

Omega: “I don’t dislike clinging to a non-starter plan and continuing to persuade—but time is the scarcer thing right now. I’d like us both to remain faithful to life, you know?”

Lilac: "…"

Flexibly accepting the other side's opinion, Omega made a show of having good sense. Even so, for some reason, Lilac's expression still looked somewhat dissatisfied.

Perhaps the final bit of wit, tying back to what they'd just been talking about, had misfired.

Colette: "Um, um, Omega-chan doesn't mean any harm, and…"

Lilac: "—It's fine. You don't have to say it so many times; I'm finally starting to get it."

Still holding Omega's arm, Colette spoke; at her words, Lilac shook her head. Then, fixing a strangely forceful gaze on Omega, she said,

Lilac: "All right then—tell me. That second "idea" of yours."

Omega: "Ah, I don't mind. That said, this one is less an idea and more something I'd like to expand on because it's been catching on my mind…"

Saying this, Omega quietly raised the fingers of the hand opposite the one Colette was clinging to.

Omega: "Right now, Sylphoa is surrounded by the Holy Church led by the Temple Knights, on the brink of whether the annihilation operation will be carried out. What's holding it back should be that you, Lilac, have put the townspeople to sleep with dream arts—but… don't you think it's odd?"

Lilac: "…What's odd?"

Omega: "For the Temple Knights, obeying Holy Will and hunting heresy takes precedence over protecting the lives of the faithful, does it not? Why haven't they gone ahead and carried out the annihilation operation already?"

Palmyra: "…You know, with you, the reason is obvious."

With a voice mixing exasperation and fatigue, Palmyra answered

Omega, who had tilted her head.

She, who along with Colette had fallen silent at Omega's earlier words, pointed toward Mikli, who was lying a little way off.

Palmyra: "They have a comrade there; they can't attack recklessly. If they did something like that and got her caught up in it…"

Omega: "—Yes. That's what's strange."

Palmyra: "Hah?"

Cutting off Palmyra's words, which seemed like she was about to give a patient explanation, Omega said that. As Palmyra looked remorseful at being interrupted—no, to them, Omega smiled wryly.

It might be a sensibility those who aren't devout believers of the Gusteko Holy Church wouldn't understand, but—

Omega: "Originally, hostages don't work on them. And yet—how did this span of time we should call a grace period come about? I think the key to a breakthrough lies there."

An heretical "Dream Illusionist" entered the town of Sylphoa and took all the residents hostage.

That was the information Noelle had heard from Zank, and that in itself seemed not to contradict the situation that was unfolding. The out-of-spec danger posed by the dream arts a Dream Illusionist possesses was also shared, and she grasped how bad the position Omega and Colette had been put in was.

She felt a sense of mission that she had to find the heretical magus as quickly as possible.

Therefore, Noelle herself took the lead in offering to help search for the heretic and proposed a cordon operation combined with Zank's specialty, barrier arts.

Noelle: "The method is almost the same as driving fish in a river."

Drive fishing is done by setting nets in a river or lake and making a racket to herd the fish so they flee toward the nets. In this case, the "net" would be Zank's barriers, and the one loudly advertising her presence as the drive hand would be Noelle.

If Zank could wrap the whole area around Sylphoa in a crowd-warding barrier, it should likewise be easy for him to, while maintaining that state, lay a barrier in the town that detected any presence it touched.

Noelle: "If only you had not refused attendants, Zank-sama, I believe this is a measure we could have taken earlier."

Zank: "That's not fair, sis. You don't know what you'll need till you're actually on the scene. Second-guessing with after-the-fact blah blah is a bit much, ain't it?"

Noelle: "Quite so. In any case, what matters is what can be put into practice."

After such an exchange, Noelle began the drive-fishing plan in cooperation with Zank.

Naturally, it was also to prevent Zank—who had decided there were no effective means—from applying to the Holy Church for authorization for an annihilation operation.

For that reason, Noelle intended to leave no gaps and throw herself fully into the search for the heretic—but—

Noelle: "…Frankly, this is a letdown."

Sorceress: "Um, I understand how you feel, but I actually have circumstances that keep me from moving as I please right now…"

Having bravely entered the town to fight for the fates of the girls with her, Noelle narrowed her blue eyes, perplexed at encountering her target not even ten minutes after she'd begun searching.

Sheltering from the snowfall beneath the eaves of a building amid the snow was a beautiful girl with her green hair gathered up—her slightly pointed ears marked her as the heretical magus.

She was under those eaves, beside the unconscious Omega, Colette, and Palmyra.

Staring fixedly at the magus standing in the middle of the girls, Noelle heightened the tension in her heart.

If Noelle made any suspicious move, the girl was within one breath of laying hands on any one of the three. That Palmyra and the others would be caught by the magus after parting from Noelle was something she had anticipated—but it was also the worst-case scenario.

As it was, Omega and the others were trapped in a dream and their minds taken hostage. If their bodies were also taken hostage on top of that, it would be doubly difficult to take action.

Noelle: "I should like to confirm… If I crush your head in an instant, will the spells upon everyone be safely undone?"

Sorceress: "That's a really scary thing to say! Um, I don't really recommend that. If I die, the "Recollection Realm" I made will break and the people inside will go into a huge panic!"

Noelle: "As I thought… it would be a gamble."

Sorceress: "Yes, it would be a gamble! …Are you perhaps a gambler?"

Watching Noelle re-clench her fist, the magus girl wore an anxious face.

In this case, the object of Noelle's gamble would be Omega. If it was that girl with the strange force of presence and brilliance, even if trapped in a dream, there was a high possibility she'd contrive some countermeasure.

She only hoped that possibility would not clash with slaying the magus here and now.

Sorceress: "W-Wait, stop stop! Please wait! Give me just a little more time—!"

Noelle: "If I were to grant it, what would happen? I prioritize those who've been put to sleep over you, a passerby."

Sorceress: "Right! I think so too. But there is actually a chance for a dramatic reversal, a miracle!"

Noelle: "—Ten, nine, eight, seven."

Sorceress: "Eh? Eh? Eh? What is this countdown?!"

At the magus thrusting both hands out toward her and speaking, Noelle announced the seconds remaining until her strike.

If the girl could say words that would persuade her, good. If this was only stalling to try to drag Noelle into the dream as well, she had unilaterally set the time limit on this side.

Therefore—

Noelle: "Six, five, four…"

Sorceress: "Right now, inside the dream, these kids here are negotiating with the other me, and they might be able to wake the entire town—that's what I'm saying, and also…"

Noelle: "Three, two, one…"

Sorceress: "If you're together with a short-haired, brown-haired man, he's a friendly-killer, so be careful—"

Noelle: "…"

She said everything on her mind. At those words fired off with that resolve, Noelle's hand-spear stopped as it was about to pierce the girl's chest.

Noelle halted her hand just a few centimeters from the magus's chest; the girl went ashen in a rush and plopped down weakly on the spot.

Looking down at the magus who had just escaped death, Noelle lifted her chin slightly.

Noelle: “I understand that Omega-sama and the others are in negotiations to be released… but what is that business afterward, about something so violent?”

Sorceress: “Y-Yes yes… Eh? Wh-What was it again?”

Noelle: “The matter of a man with short brown hair being a comrade-killer.”

Digging into the magus’s statement that could not be ignored as she rolled her eyes in confusion, the girl took a few breaths to steady herself, then gently placed a hand on her chest.

Sorceress: “It’s a fact. A Temple Knight appeared in pursuit of us, and putting the townsfolk to sleep in a way that involved him, we… And then, the ones who came as reinforcement for that Temple Knight were a team headed by the short-haired man I mentioned…”

Noelle: ““Team”—meaning?”

Sorceress: “A group. I think there were about five of them…”

After answering, the magus tightened what had been a timid expression and stared at Noelle.

Sorceress: “I synced wavelengths with one of them and was trying to lead them into the dream. That suddenly got cut off, and the others too… The only one left was him alone.”

Of course, Noelle had the option of laughing it off as something made up on the spot.

However, Zank’s laying a crowd-warding barrier and keeping others away, his decision to refuse attendants, the empty tent—various things that had snagged at her were also present within Noelle.

Those doubtful points made it hard for Noelle to dismiss the magus’s words out of hand.

If there was an issue, it was whether Zank would go so far as to kill other Church personnel he had brought with him, just to cling to this holy duty and his own way of doing things—but—

Noelle: “It seems the fastest way to get that answer is to ask the person himself.”

Sorceress: “Fueh?”

At once, Noelle grabbed the magus by the scruff of the neck, then scooped up the fallen girls together and, with one bound, sprang back from that spot.

In the next instant, down upon the point where Noelle and the others had been, an invisible attack—an unseen boxlike thing—fell from overhead, and that space, snow-covered ground and all, was magnificently crushed.

Sorceress: “Pugyah!”

In the face of that outrageous destruction, the magus thrown to the ground by Noelle screamed. Without even the leeway to glance that way, Noelle calmly fixed her gaze upon the one responsible for the destruction.

Naturally, there was only one user who would intervene here.

Noelle: “Zank-sama, that was an attack that could have killed even me.”

Zank: “…For the realization of Holy Will, isn’t it the model of a believer to spare not even one’s own life?”

Noelle: “If that truly accorded with Holy Will, I would gladly do the same myself.”

Wearing a bitter expression at Noelle’s words was the short-haired man in question—Zank Metley.

A Temple Knight bearing the role of, in cooperation with Noelle, subjugating the heretical Dream Illusionist—and for some reason, the man who had tried to make the magus and Noelle both into dead men.

An appointed enforcer clad in silver armor—yet his deed was nothing if not utterly baffling.

Noelle: “At this point, I cannot help but take her words as fact.”

Zank: “Incidentally, what did that heretic say?”

Noelle: “That Zank-sama was involved in the killing of the attendants you yourself brought.”

Zank: “…”

At Noelle’s accusation, Zank fell silent. The air about him clearly changed.

That change alone was tantamount to acknowledging the suspicion on this side. In other words, the magus girl’s statement was fact, and Zank was—one should say—a traitor to the Church.

His purpose, however, was far too unclear.

Noelle: “Whether my deed accords with Holy Will or not, leaving you loose here is out of the question.”

Zank: “You going to fight? You really think an Itinerant Preacher can beat a Temple Knight who’s received a “Blessing”?”

Noelle: “…On my own, I think it would be difficult.”

So saying, Noelle flicked her gaze for just an instant toward the magus at her side.

She couldn’t be sure the stunned girl had noticed that glance, but in this situation she, too, should realize Zank was a common enemy.

All that remained was for Noelle not to die before the girl did something.

Noelle: “Here I go.”

Reaching to the small of her back, Noelle fitted on the steel gauntlets kept there, then kicked off with force that made the snow explode and, with one bound, rushed Zank.

Most of the strength of Temple Knights endowed with “Blessings” is displayed at either mid- or long range.

It’s not something to be assumed often, but if you have to fight a Temple Knight, close combat is preferable. And that range was also Noelle’s specialty.

Drawing her arm back, Noelle drove a thrusting punch into Zank, who stood there motionless.

Perhaps striking first paid off; his reaction was slow—so slow that her fist, aimed for his face—

Zank: “That won’t do.”

—didn’t land.

Blocked by a hard barrier, Noelle’s iron arm was stopped before it could reach Zank.

Between Zank and her fist, there existed an invisible wall only a few centimeters thick—a barrier.

At the same time, Noelle understood that this was what it meant for him to truly be good at barrier arts.

Zank: “I can wrap a whole town in a barrier like a thin film. If you gathered that in one place—how thick and heavy d’you think it’d get?”

Noelle: “Even thin paper, layered and layered, can stop the cut of a famed blade… correct?”

Zank: “That’s right!”

The trick that had stopped Noelle’s punch was revealed, and next it was turned into an attack.

With a roar, the thick barrier that had stopped Noelle’s fist shoved forward right in front of Zank, and Noelle, who was there, was blown away by a fierce strike. She flew as if struck by a wall itself, tumbled violently across the snow, and let out a pained groan.

Earlier, what had targeted Noelle and the others from directly above—that had been the impact of this thing dropping.

Naturally, assuming Zank would use the same technique for the coup de grâce, Noelle, still lying down, kicked both legs up toward the sky. —The weight came an instant later.

Noelle: “Ghh—uuuuuh…!”

With the sound of all the bones in her body creaking, Noelle was nearly crushed beneath the tremendous weight.

Supporting a weight like an entire house had been dropped on her, Noelle flushed red as she desperately endured it.

Of course, merely enduring was not enough. Zank’s follow-up would come immediately.

Before that came—

Noelle: “—Colette! Do it!”

Colette: “Urrrrrrrrgh!!”

At the same moment as the brave girl’s voice rang out, a deep, valiant growl crawled through the snowy town.

At the edge of Noelle’s vision as she strained to withstand the crushing, a figure kicking up snow leaped at Zank—hands and feet on the ground, the ferocious Colette.

Zank: “Tch!”

Clicking his tongue at that fierce assault, Zank pulled part of the barrier back to his hands for defense. Instantly the pressure lightened, and Noelle quickly rolled free of the weight and sprang to her feet.

She saw the magus girl had hauled Palmyra up; by the shaking girl’s side she gave Noelle a nod.

On the spur of the moment, she had gotten Palmyra up, activated Colette's "Beast Protection Bracelet," and thrown in her support. Not to waste that aid, Noelle also lunged at Zank and drove in a punch.

From front, back, and sides, the attacks of Noelle and the beast-state Colette savagely assaulted Zank. But with him turning his barriers back to defense, the two's strikes did not reach.

Zank: "Pointless! No matter how long you two hang on, your blows will never reach me!"

Palmyra: "—They aren't pointless."

The one who said that was neither Noelle nor Colette nor the magus, but the girl who had awakened.

Palmyra, pressing a hand to her brow, fixed her gaze on Zank shut up in his barrier; though only a powerless girl, she glared at the Temple Knight and did not retreat a single step.

Then, gripping the magus's shoulder by her side—

Palmyra: "I'll rattle that guy's heart—do it right."

Sorceress: "Eh?"

Palmyra: "—Mikli Yulitô is alive!"

Drawing in a big breath, Palmyra said that and pointed toward the center of town.

Noelle did not understand the meaning of that shout—but Zank did.

His eyes went wide; involuntarily, he turned his attention in the direction Palmyra pointed.

In the midst of this battle, his focus strayed for a moment. —She did not miss it.

Sorceress: "Ta-daa—welcome to the Recollection Realm!"

Right beside Palmyra, the magus thrust her finger at Zank and shouted with gusto. Noelle could not see what sort of rule-defying working took place then.

However, right after she felt powerful mana turbulence arise, the change was obvious.

Zank’s consciousness wavered, and the barrier protecting his body vanished.

Catching sight of that, Noelle managed to halt her own strike at once—but—

Colette: “Rurururuaagh!”

Noelle: “Ah—indeed.”

Colette’s double-legs, which could not be stopped, blasted the dazed Zank violently away and slammed him into a nearby house with tremendous force.

He was a Temple Knight. That alone likely wouldn’t kill him, but she hadn’t pulled her punches.

At any rate—

Palmyra: “The rest, that Omega brat will handle from inside just fine, I bet…”

Zank fallen and Colette flopping down onto the spot with a plop, Palmyra murmured so behind the panting Noelle—while supporting the unconscious magus girl in her arms.

Zank Metley and Mikli Yulitô were engaged.

Far away, in their long-ago childhood, the two had spent their time in the same hometown. Together they passed through the gateway of the Holy Church of Gusteko and, overcoming harsh training and ordeals, won their places as Temple Knights.

The fact that they were from the same hometown, were of the same intake, and at the same time had become Temple Knights spread widely both as a great achievement and as a heartwarming tale, and within the Church, hopes were placed upon the relationship between Zank and Mikli.

People wished for a future in which devout, excellent believers were joined and gave birth to the next generation of the faithful.

Even if, at that point, Zank and Mikli had hardly any points of contact, and even if there was neither the kind of mutually improving relationship nor the beautiful exchange of hearts that those around them wished for, it did not matter.

That the two were from the same hometown, had become believers in the same period, and had passed the Temple Knight selection—none of it was the result of any particular arrangement. —But neither was it entirely unrelated.

Zank had liked Mikli since long ago.

A beautiful and brilliant girl—so outstanding as to be out of place in a snow-heavy rural backwater. Everyone in the village whispered that she would one day become valuable personnel for the Holy Church of Gusteko, without a doubt.

Mikli herself did not doubt that future and worked hard; when the time came, she knocked at the Church's gate. Zank, too, aimed for that same moment and knocked at the gate.

Of course, things begun from base motives would not last long. Zank thought that himself—but by fortune or fate, Zank had talent, and the feelings he had for Mikli were greater than he had imagined.

The days he strove so as not to be left behind by her became real strength, and though Mikli's rank rose at a pace rarely seen even in the Church, Zank managed to keep up.

When they became Temple Knights, the rumor spread that the two were of the same intake and hometown; when that reached the Holy King's ears, the result was a proposal of marriage with Mikli—a literal miracle.

Mikli, being a devout believer of the Holy Church, had no objection to a decree from the Holy King, and accepted the proposal with Zank. Zank, too, kept up appearances by obeying the Church, and accepted it.

He felt as if he could soar to the heavens. He was so moved that he counted the days to the wedding on his fingers.

—On a holy duty of hunting heresy, Mikli cut off contact right before the ceremony.

As a matter of course, Zank volunteered as reinforcements to rescue Mikli, took multiple attendants with him, and headed for Sylphoa—and there he learned the actual nature of a “Dream Illusionist”’s power.

Mikli was trapped in a dream, and the heretical magus was holed up with the people of the town taken hostage wholesale.

At once, from among the attendants came a proposed operation to annihilate the heretics together with every last resident of Sylphoa, including Mikli; an atmosphere of “this is the right thing to do” spread.

That heretic-hunting was Holy Will, and that there was no reason to hesitate to put it first.

Despite knowing Zank and Mikli were engaged, Zank’s attendants made the proposal without a shred of consideration, and Zank decided. —He would save Mikli, no matter what.

To do so, he would kill the attendants to the last, silence the mouth of every reinforcement sent in, and do the same to anyone approaching Sylphoa.

All of it was to rescue Mikli and arrive at the day of their marriage.

White-haired woman: “—With you drawn into the dream, the piece I wanted has fallen into place.”

Zank had steeled himself to trade anything—and everything—for that.

As if to mock Zank's resolve and determination, the white-haired woman standing before him disrupted his heart into a thousand shreds with nothing but a smile, and tried to paint it over.

The place was a mimicry of the town of Sylphoa, but though its shape was the same, it was hell.

Behind the white-haired woman stood five more women— a green-haired little child; a beautiful girl with pink hair; a gray-haired girl bound and restrained; a purple-haired beauty lying upon the snow; and a blonde girl with her arms crossed, eyes wet with tears as she glared his way.

Each and every one of them crushed Zank's heart with the truth that appearances were no guide at all—they were monsters.

White-haired woman: "What do you say? It would be easy for us to crush your heart to pieces just like this, but doing that could be called an act without thought for what comes after. Even if we were to kill you here, the next assassin would be sent, and we might lose a valuable user of dream arts. Therefore—"

Zank: "Ah—"

White-haired woman: "Report it to the Church, from your own mouth. That you succeeded in eliminating the heresy in question. That there is no need to send any more pursuers. And then—you should resign as a Temple Knight."

With her hands joined before her chest, the white-haired woman, in an even tone, led Zank's heart along.

Had he been calm, he could have raised his voice and refuted how foolish a proposal that was. But facing these women, Zank could not do it.

White-haired woman: "Of course, I am not saying it would be for free."

Smiling at Zank as she said so, the white-haired woman gently turned a hand toward a spot a little ways away. Naturally drawn in, his eyes followed that motion—and Zank's pupils froze.

Laid there sleeping was the one he had searched for—Mikli.

White-haired woman: "Take her back with you. Sadly, the "Blessing" she was granted was eaten by a friend of mine, so I cannot return it—but would that not rather be convenient for you?"

Zank: "…"

White-haired woman: "Go—just the two of you and your beloved—leave the Church and return to your homeland. It will mean deceiving the Holy King's Holy Will, but it would be better to prioritize the one person you love over the many millions of the Church's faithful."

So saying, the white-haired woman brought her lips to Zank's ear and whispered.

That was—

White-haired woman: "You cannot choose it all. To protect your beloved's convictions, her work, even her life, and also fulfill your role and pride as a Temple Knight of the Holy Church—that path cannot be chosen. —You are not a man who can do so."

It was a single line from a Witch, more than sufficient to shatter and make him give up the small faith in the Holy Church of Gusteko that Zank Metley, Temple Knight, knew he possessed.

That day, the people of Sylphoa who woke with the glow of dawn tasted something uncanny.

First, there was an unusual sense of hunger and thirst. They suffered greatly from the feeling as if they had gone without water and meals for days, and then they were pressed to shovel the town's snow that had piled and piled up.

The timekeeping tower in the middle of town was, for some reason, terribly damaged; people said it was a miracle that no one had been injured, and they each said:

"—It was as if they'd been having a bad dream for days."

Shion: "Calling it a "bad dream" is a terrible way to put it, you know. To curb even a little of the Temple Knights' high-handedness—do you know how much we struggled?"

Colette: "That's right, that's right. Shion-san really did her best."

Arms folded, Shion puffed and protested; Colette, eyebrows lowered, nodded along.

Colette had been the first trapped in the dream, and after that she had been in the dream the whole time, together with Lilac; when she finally got to meet Lilac's sister, she was a very bright, energetic, easy-to-talk-to woman.

Even now, Colette didn't really understand the constitution Shion and Lilac had where "two people" were within one person—but there were things she did understand.

Colette: "I think both Shion-san and Lilac-san are hard workers and admirable."

Shion: "M-Ms. Colette…! I'm so happy to hear you say that~!"

Colette: "Mugyu!"

Wrapped up in that embrace, Colette stroked her chest in relief that the series of incidents had been settled.

The town of Sylphoa was safely released from sleep, and it seemed the scary people who had been chasing Shion and the others agreed—after talking with Omega—to back off.

Colette hadn't been able to attend the crucial discussion, having been told not to get in the way.

Palmyra: "You and your friends ganged up to threaten him, right?

Honestly, I feel sorry for that man they call a Temple Knight. No wonder he withered like that.”

Omega: “I think it was the most peaceable means. It takes courage to face a Temple Knight alone, and they say it’s a girls’ rule to bring a friend along when conversing with a man.”

Palmyra: “What rule is that supposed to be…?”

Palmyra drooped her shoulders at Omega’s shrug and muttered that. It was the same interaction as always between the two, but somehow awkward. There was no change on Omega’s side, so the reason for the awkwardness lay with Palmyra.

And Colette understood well the reason Palmyra was awkward.

Palmyra was thinking about it, too—about what Omega had said to her in the dream.

Noelle (quietly): “…What will become of those two, I wonder.”

Suddenly, Noelle, walking at the very back of the group, voiced that question.

The “two” she spoke of were probably the pursuers of Shion and the others who had let them go. Since the two were engaged, Colette thought it was good that things had been settled by discussion.

Omega: “Roughly speaking, I suppose they’ll proceed according to what we discussed here. Since Lilac opposed it, I haven’t changed that woman’s thinking, but… losing the “Blessing” is reason enough to have one’s Temple Knight qualifications revoked. My plan should go through.”

Noelle: “If they leave the Church, will the engagement be nullified?”

Omega: “Who knows?”

Omega’s answer to Noelle’s follow-up question was far too offhand.

Not only Noelle, but Colette and Palmyra too ended up staring in surprise.

Laila: “That’s a rather cold way to talk.”

Colette: “Huh, Lilac-san?”

In a puff, the mood of the person hugging her changed, and Colette was startled. Looking, the woman just in front of her changed in the blink of an eye from green hair to purple hair, and her atmosphere altered completely.

In one breath, her outward appearance had changed from Shion to Lilac. That said, her clothes and tied-up hairstyle did not change the way they had in the dream.

Just like that, Lilac glared sidelong at Omega’s profile.

Lilac: “If your ties with someone are cut, you don’t care what happens to them after that—is that what you’re saying?”

Omega: “I’m not thinking in a way that cruel. Or rather, I’m very interested in the fate of those two as well. I’m interested in every kind of thing in the whole world. Only—”

Cutting off her words once there, Omega looked at Lilac not in profile but head on.

Omega: “—Only the nature and whereabouts of love—I don’t understand them at all.”

Therefore, regarding the love of the two who had gone off, she could say nothing—so Omega said.

The attitude with which Omega said that seemed to Colette to be, in some way, different from her usual—there was a mixture of something earnest, not her usual breezy tone.

Omega was someone who didn’t hide her curiosity, wanting to see and know anything and everything—but if there were priorities even within that curiosity, then perhaps this lay in a very important place.

Therefore—

Colette: “I’ll go together with you, Omega-chan.”

Palmyra: “Colette?”

At that declaration that slipped out before she knew it, Palmyra’s eyes went wide in surprise.

But the others were taken aback by those words as well. In particular, Omega, who had stopped in her tracks, looked at Colette with interest, closed one eye, and—

Omega: “Is that an answer to what I said in the dream world?”

Colette: “…Yeah, I guess so. It is. Just as you said, Omega-chan, maybe this is a very dangerous journey. But—but, I thought of something.”

Palmyra: “Wh-What did you think of?”

Colette, urged on by the flustered Palmyra, put the feelings that had sprouted into words.

Colette: “—That I want to help find what you’re searching for, Omega-chan.”

This had come up before, but now it had taken a clearer shape within her—a goal: to help along the path to obtaining the answer Omega most wanted—the answer for the one who always wanted to know everything.

And when that could be achieved—

Colette: “I want to see together what kind of face you’ll make, Omega-chan.”

Omega: “—I see. If “curiosity” is your reason, then I can’t say anything to that.”

Relaxing her lips with a soft smile, Omega answered so.

At that, Colette let out a sigh of relief and then looked Palmyra's way.

Colette: "Um, Palmyra. I decided on my own, but I'd be so happy if you came along with us. Um, um, what do you think?"

Palmyra: "…Even after I had terrible things happen to me not just while awake but even while sleeping, still this?"

Colette: "I-Is that… no good?"

Palmyra: "—. —. With just you two, I'd be worried."

Turning her face away with a huff as she said that, Palmyra made Colette's eyes fly open; Colette leaped at her with a smile. Catching Colette, Palmyra shouted, "Heavy!" the same as always.

Even after passing through the town of Sylphoa, she would still be able to continue the journey with Omega and Palmyra.

Noelle: "Though it's not particularly worthy of mention, I shall accompany you as well."

Omega: "There may be times, like this time, when we'll come into conflict with the Church, you know?"

Noelle: "I understand. It is only—this surprises even me a little—but while I was acting together with Zank-sama, I found myself terribly worried about you all."

Even though Noelle spoke evenly, without mixing emotion into her tone, the content was full of warmth. Narrowing her blue eyes, she pinched a strand of her own braided blonde hair between her fingers.

Noelle: "It seems you are all more important to me than I thought."

Palmyra: "H-How embarrassing…!"

Omega: "Is it? Isn't it a general way of thinking that it's important to tell important people that they're important?"

Noelle: “When Omega-sama says it, it starts to feel like it’s wrong.”

Omega: “Nonsense.”

Not just Palmyra, but even Noelle said such a thing, and Omega was aghast.

At that exchange, Colette laughed while clinging to Palmyra’s arm—and with the same gentle chuckle, there was a laugh; she realized that Lilac’s figure had changed back to Shion.

Then Shion, laughing with a hand over her mouth, took a breath with a “phew,” and—

Shion: “You really are all such good friends—I’m jealous. We’ll also close the distance step by step so we can fit in quickly, so please look forward to good communication! Ah, am I using communication right?”

Palmyra: “I don’t know… I mean, what? You two are coming with us?”

Shion: “Eh?! We’re comrades who’ve passed through the valley of death together, aren’t we! And—”

Taking over the end of Shion’s words, her figure changed to Lilac; changing her expression and tone of voice, she looked Omega’s way.

Though her gaze could even be called stern, as far as Colette could tell, that was Lilac’s true self. With those frankly stern eyes, Lilac fixed Omega in her sights.

Lilac: “You seem to know what we want to know.”

Omega: “Good grief, I have no idea what you could be talking about.”

Lilac: “Don’t play dumb…!”

When Omega said that and shrugged, Lilac sharpened her tone and curled her lips.

Colette didn’t know what it was that Lilac and Shion wanted to know—but she could tell at a glance who was the one lying.

Colette: “Omega-chan, if you play mean, I think Lilac-san and Shion-san will be pitiful.”

Omega: “My, that’s an unfounded accusation. To call it “mean” is outrageous. My glass heart will get hurt.”

Lilac: “That fake-innocent act!”

Clenching her teeth, Lilac leaned forward and looked down at Omega.

Removed from the dream and back to her familiar girlish form, Omega was brazenly playing dumb—“That?”

Lilac: “Shion and I have something we’re searching for. That thing you’re ostentatiously talking about—that’s a hint to finding it. So—”

Omega: “You want me to tell you. —Hm. What you two are searching for, is it.”

Noelle: “Omega-sama?”

With a hand to her mouth, Noelle addressed the thinking Omega. But Omega did not answer, and after a short silence—

Omega: “I’ll be frank. I don’t know what it is you’re searching for, but I do have an idea about a fairly decisive clue to it.”

Shion: “—! Then—”

Omega: “However, I have various complicated debits and credits concerning that lead. It’s not something I can simply disclose —“here you go”—to people I just met.”

Shion: “What… then what are we supposed to do?”

Palmyra: “These two are awfully busy…!”

At Omega’s headshake, Lilac’s figure, flustered, changed to Shion.

At Shion's troubled face, however, Omega raised a finger and said, "Simple."

Gathering Shion's gaze on the upraised finger and making her cross-eyed, she told her—

Omega: "The answer is in my head. Use you Dream Illusionists' specialty to lay it bare. If you do that, I won't be able to resist."

Shion: "…But, those friends of yours are inside you, aren't they, Omega-san?"

Omega: "That's right. If you can slip past them, no objections. Take whatever you like."

In this much, she was surely being mean—Omega said so with a smile on her lips.

At that, Shion went "mm-hmm," then—

Shion: "Understood! A fight that's been picked—we buy it at the asking price. That's mine and Lilac's pride, so let's go ba-baan and buy it here!"

Lilac: "Don't say whatever you like! That's the first I've heard of that pride!"

Palmyra: "Sh-She's finally started arguing with herself."

Lilac bit into Shion's resolve—but to a bystander's eye, Shion's figure switched to Lilac in an instant, and it was an absurdly bizarre sight of her yelling at someone who had disappeared.

Still, Colette, though overwhelmed by the flow of the conversation —

Colette: "So then, Shion-san and Lilac-san will come with us too?"

Shion: "Yes! We'll be in your care!"

Lilac: "…Can't be helped—so for a while, we'll come along."

At Shion and Lilac’s answer, Colette clapped her hands with shining eyes. Palmyra looked complicated, and Noelle, expressionless, had the corners of her eyes lowered just a little.

And at gaining new companions, Omega, a mass of curiosity, also smiled—

Omega: “It seems certain these two traced his Recollection Realm, but it should also be true that doing so can be fatal. Now then—why, and how, did things end up with this present we have? The fruit of curiosity never runs out of sweetness.”

—saying things Colette didn’t really understand while looking satisfied.

In any case, there were five sets of footprints of girls treading white snow—but it was the beginning of a new journey for six.

The Three Idiots Set Out!
The Great Manhunt for the Missing Child Battalion Episode
(LQ AI Translation)

1

Subaru: “Heeey, where are you—? Answer meee!!”

Pushing through the forest undergrowth with a rustle, Subaru raised his voice and kept his eyes peeled around him.

Even when he shouted himself hoarse, only the echo of his own voice came back, hollow and futile. In fact, he had been yelling for more than an hour already, and not once had the reply he wanted come.

Even so, he kept calling out because there was no other way—at least, not for Subaru.

Subaru: “Playing a dead-serious game of hide-and-seek with someone who won’t even give a hint is this rough, huh…? At this rate, I’m gonna end up with a complex about hide-and-seek and tag.”

Otto: “I can somewhat understand “hide-and-seek,” but why “tag”? If Ram-san were to overhear you by accident, she would be terribly displeased.”

Subaru: “I didn’t coin the term, and I ain’t making fun of Ram! Sure, if it turned into a whole chasing-and-being-chased thing with Ram, it’d be crazy rough… It actually was rough! I was already being chased!”

Wiping the sweat running down his jaw with his sleeve, Subaru grimaced as a memory from before surfaced.

Among memories painful even to recall, what came back to him with striking clarity was Ram's enraged expression as she cornered Subaru, trying to learn the reason Rem had lost her life. Of all his many experiences with Return by Death, that had been one of the roughest.

Subaru: "If that's what you'd call a true game of tag, then yeah, you're right—this doesn't even come close. Good grief, never thought I'd be the one getting lectured by you."

Otto: "I was not saying anything so grand! I merely pointed it out because, when it involves Ram-san, it feels like the fallout would unjustly reach me as well…"

Shaking his head loosely, Otto, who was likewise parting the brush, grumbled. Then, cutting into that grumbling with a rough "Oi," a voice barged in.

Garfiel: "If you two're gonna keep jawin' on 'n on, ya ain't showin' near 'nough seriousness, are ya? Compared ta the Captain who's actually hollerin', that side… Ottobro in particular, ya hear?"

The one who clicked his fangs together in ill humor was Garfiel, eyes keen as, if not keener than, Subaru's. Wrinkling his nose and wearing a scowl born of anger and irritation, he drove the emerald gleam of his gaze past Subaru and straight into Otto across from him.

At Garfiel's glare and words, Otto shut one eye and said,

Otto: "If I appeared unserious, then I apologize. However, asserting that the one raising his voice is the more serious is a somewhat rash opinion. After all, it is a foregone conclusion that the other party will not respond."

Garfiel: "Hah? Ya mockin' the Captain who's callin' out even though there ain't gonna be a reply? Don't go gettin' cocky just 'cause yer Shatranj board's a lil' hazy, ya got that?"

Subaru: "Hey, knock it off, you two! Also, I object to being stuck in the relatively dumbest position here!"

Pinned between Otto and Garfiel sniping across him with a prickly mood, Subaru pushed both of them apart with his hands as if to separate their faces. Feeling the two of them simultaneously turn their faces away in response to his mediation, he couldn’t help but sigh.

Subaru: “We’re already scrambling as it is, so spare me the extra hassle of you two getting all tangled up…”

With Subaru in the middle, there was an air of discord flowing between Garfiel and Otto. Though “discord” was how it looked, that was not, in essence, correct.

After all—

Casting glances at Otto off and on, Garfiel’s true feelings—Subaru knew he wanted to stop snapping with that bad attitude and start meeting Otto halfway already. As far as Subaru was concerned, all he could do was hope he mustered the courage sooner rather than later.

And just as Subaru was thinking that—

???: “…”

Subaru: “Ah?! There she is?!”

Between gaps in the forest trees, he locked eyes with a shadow peeking their way, and Subaru shouted. The instant he did, he saw the other party whip around and take off running, and he hurried to give chase.

Garfiel: “We’re boxin’ ’em in! Captain, ’n O— Ottobro, ya two come in from that side!”

Otto: “Ottobro?! Why did you suddenly address me that way?!”

Garfiel: “Shaddup!”

Subaru: “Argh! This is no time to bicker—don’t let her get away, don’t let her get away, don’t let her get away!”

Leaving behind the two who were fumbling with needless back-and-forth, Subaru dashed after the figure darting nimbly through the forest. It was a girl with pink hair in twin tails—

Subaru: “Twin tails, so it’s Ipsy! Wait, Ipsy!”

Even as Subaru called out desperately, the girl he called Ipsy did not stop. If anything, he felt like she sped up.

While playing out this merciless game of chase with the girl, Subaru looked up at the sky.

How had things ended up like this?—To tell that story, one needed to roll the clock back a few hours, to when Subaru, Otto, and Garfiel had started searching for a “lost child.”

2

Garfiel: “—Y’know, I been thinkin’ it might be ’bout time I sorta, kinda start recognizin’ that bro a little, ya know?”

It was when Subaru opened the window to air out the room that Garfiel, putting on a brazen act, came to “consult” him.

He tried to make it look like he’d just happened to bring it up in passing at a random moment, but he’d been hanging from a tree branch outside the window waiting for him; there was no way to play it off as a coincidence.

Starting from that entrance full of things to retort to, Subaru corralled Garfiel into the room like herding in a stray cat, saying—

Subaru: “For now, get in.”

Subaru: “So? This “bro” you’re talking about—do you mean Otto?”

Garfiel: “Aahh, guess that was his name, Otto, huh. That’s it. It’s such a common kinda name I can’t rightly remember it, but maybe that’s right? Dunno?”

Subaru: “I get that you feel awkward and end up saying stuff like that this late in the game, but it’s way too forced; you’re just turning it into a dark chapter in your history, so cut it out, cut it out.”

Garfiel: “Gao…!”

Trying hard to play dumb, Garfiel slumped his shoulders at Subaru’s advice.

This sort of adolescent behavior was exactly the kind of thing chuunibyou across the country would do at least once. Garfiel was a textbook chuunibyou, and Subaru had plenty of similar experiences himself, so for the sake of both their wounds, it was best left unsaid.

Subaru: “I’ve walked that road too. I’d like to avoid tripping over the same stone as much as possible… Wait, hang on? People repeat their mistakes, so maybe it’s better for Garfiel himself if he trips the same way? I mean, leaving me as the only one stuck carrying a cringey past is kinda unfair, isn’t it…?”

Garfiel: “Yer makin’ a real nasty face there, Captain! Like “Benzo right before he betrays” kinda face!”

Subaru: “Dammit! Endure, me! I’m not gonna become Benzo! Whoever that even is!”

To stop the chain of mistakes, Subaru sealed the Benzo in his heart away. Then, leading the war between good and evil within to a cease-fire, he turned back to Garfiel with a fresh, “So?”

Subaru: “Putting my inner struggle aside, it’s good news you finally made up your mind. Honestly, it was frustrating to watch—you had me and everyone else all fidgety.”

Garfiel: ““Everyone”? Not just you, Captain?”

Subaru: “’Course! I’m sick of the faction being all prickly on the inside. We should band together as one and keep Roswaal in check, then throw everything we’ve got into the Royal Selection.”

Garfiel: “Feels like that bastard Roswaal’s got all sorts o’ stray thoughts mixed in… Ahh, but I legit don’t care about that bastard. You’re right, Captain!”

For a moment, Garfiel was about to stumble over the stone named Roswaal, but in the end he agreed with Subaru's thinking. In truth, most of the faction's internal squabbles had been caused by Roswaal, so uniting to prevent a repeat performance was the consensus among Subaru and the others.

And at present, the biggest obstacle to that was the relationship between Garfiel and Otto.

Subaru: "Well, since the whole earth-spider incident, I do think things have visibly improved, though."

What Subaru recalled as he muttered was the "Earth Spider Uproar," in which he and Garfiel had accompanied Otto on a homecoming and gone through hell. Alarmingly, in his hometown, it seemed assassins were after Otto's life. The trip had been to inform his family back home that he'd joined Emilia's camp. In the end, Otto didn't return home; they stopped by the village where his younger brother worked as a vet and asked him to pass along the message. At the heart of the trouble there was that very earth spider.

Subaru: "Back then, I was basically captured most of the time, but that just meant you two worked together all the harder, right? After that, you two often play on the Shatranj board together, don't you?"

Garfiel: ""Playin'" ain't the right word—I'm the one gettin' played with. Even though he only humors me in between work, that bastard is crazy strong…"

Subaru: "But you're the type who gets pissed when someone goes easy on you, right?"

Garfiel: "'Course I am! We're havin' a match—gettin' sandbagged is a friggin' joke!"

Subaru: "…What a handful you are. I get it, though."

Clenching his fist, Garfiel showed a competitive streak Subaru could sympathize with, and Subaru gave a wry smile.

Losing in competition is naturally frustrating, but getting someone to hold back so you can win feels even worse. Truly, it's a troublesome disposition.

Still, the fact that Otto didn't treat him with that kind of superficial kindness seemed to be part of why Garfiel rated him highly.

Subaru: "So after stacking up those days, you've finally gotten to where you want to acknowledge Otto, huh. …Looks like you beat me to the punch."

Garfiel: "Oi, oi—don't tell me you ain't acknowledged him yet, Captain?"

Subaru: "On one hand, I do think Otto's a reliable guy, but… a very important part of my heart just won't quite accept admitting it… Even now, the debate among the different me's is raging on."

In the conference hall inside Subaru's head, various Subarus debated passionately, and the discussion about how to handle Otto was one of those that refused to reach a conclusion. There were several other hotly debated chambers too, like future approaches to Emilia and educational policy for Beatrice.

Be that as it may, setting Subaru aside, Garfiel swallowing his feelings and choosing to acknowledge Otto was truly admirable. One had to applaud that honesty and flexibility—ah, youth.

Subaru: "But if you've come that far, there's no need for me or any little schemes anymore, right? Just say, "Sorry I've had a bad attitude—let's get along from here on," and make up?"

Garfiel: "Like hell I'm doin' somethin' that pathetic! 'Sides, even if I apologized like that, it wouldn't put him in a good mood either, would it?"

Subaru: "…You think so?"

Mumbling and hemming, Garfiel made Subaru cock his head hard. Basically, the reason Garfiel and Otto's relationship was strained was largely because Garfiel kept up a pointless stubborn front. Subaru, at least for now, didn't get the impression Otto harbored any particular aversion or "never forgive him" mindset toward Garfiel.

Which is why, if Garfiel stuck out his hand, Otto would probably take it.

Subaru: “I wanna help however I can too, but what do you want to do?”

Garfiel: “Lemme see… If possible, I wanna just naturally hit it off without it feelin’ forced or fake. So like, how ’bout I save the bastard when he’s gettin’ jumped by some dangerous thug or somethin’?”

Subaru: “That proposal actually got shot down by Ram a little while ago…”

Impatient with the state of Garfiel and Otto, Subaru on the sidelines had suggested a plan to move things along, but it had been unpopular not just with Ram; Emilia and the others also disapproved, and it was scrapped.

Ram had cut it down with, “Leave things between the two to the two. Also, it’s simply distasteful.”

Garfiel: “Tch. If Ram says no, then it’s no, huh…”

Subaru: “I gave up for the same reason—our lady’s word carries weight.”

Clicking his tongue at the backstory, Garfiel reminded Subaru how formidable her accumulated influence was. Still, given Garfiel’s spirit, both in Subaru’s view and the faction’s, this was the time to ride the big wave.

Thinking that, Subaru smiled at Garfiel and tapped his own head with a fingertip.

Subaru: “Don’t worry—consider yourself in good hands. I’ve got a mountain of ideas sleeping up here to mend tangled relationships. Gotta be ready for the coming day with Emilia-tan—for romance.”

Garfiel: “Oooh, awesome! So are ya confident about yer relationship with Emilia-sama or not—I ain't got the foggiest—but you're reliable, Captain!"

Subaru: "Hahaha, right? Right?—Oh, crap, the window!"

His voice had gotten louder without him realizing, and if that carried outside it'd be a catastrophe. Subaru hurried to close the window he'd left open—and then something in the courtyard caught his eye.

There—

Emilia: "Ah, Subaru, you were in your room?"

Waving up at Subaru standing by the window was Emilia, who was down in the garden.

Even from this downward-looking angle, Emilia's flawless beauty showed; but she was not alone at the moment—far from "not alone," in fact.

Subaru: "And you, Emilia-tan—you're with Picos?"

Emilia: "Yeah, that's right. We all came to look at the flowers in the flower bed. Right?"

Girls: "…"

At Emilia's call, came a chorus of replies—nods and breaths all different from one another.

Answering were more than twenty—more precisely, twenty-four—little girls lined up in a row around Emilia.

They were all identical in appearance, those little girls; as you could see, they weren't twenty-four-tuplets, but rather the clones of Ryuzu Meyer, born under unique circumstances.

Though they had a firm sense of self and, like the Ryuzu who was adored as a grandmother by Garfiel and Frederica, shared her looks, these ones here were blank like newborns; right now, their self-establishment and emotional education were being pushed ahead at a rapid pace.

“Pico” was what Subaru called one of the twenty-four, the one with a braid matching Emilia’s woven into her hair so she could be told apart from the others.

They were in the middle of giving the other girls “individuality” with hairstyles and accessories too, but tangible results were still hard to come by.

Subaru: “You can’t just imitate the personality and relationships Ryuzu-san built up over four hundred years. …But it’s especially spectacular today. I didn’t know Picos liked flowers.”

Emilia: “Do they like flowers, I wonder? At first it was just Pico-chan, but while I was walking her around, everyone gathered up.”

Subaru: “I see. The phenomenon where the ducklings and grand-ducklings follow behind the mother duck.”

In fact, whenever Emilia moved, the Picos scurried along the same way. To an onlooker, it was a heartwarming sight, but handling twenty-four of them looked rough on Emilia. If possible, Subaru wanted to switch roles or at least take half of them off her hands.

Subaru: “Thanks to Echidna’s spite, the Picos won’t listen to me, though.”

Emilia: “That’s right. Of course I don’t mind spending time with Pico-chan and the others at all, but it makes me super busy.”

With her brows drooping, it was clear Emilia was overwhelmed by the Picos’ offensive.

The parent of the Pico clones was Echidna, the Witch of Greed who created the Sanctuary. Echidna had conditioned the Picos to obey the orders of her own Apostles. The only ones qualified to be Apostles were those recognized by Echidna in the Tomb or those who overcame the “Trials.”

The former was Garfiel, the latter was Emilia—there were only two.

Subaru: “They’ll listen to Ryuzu-san too, I guess, since she’s treated like the coordinator… maybe, but…”

Garfiel: “Huh? I was wonderin’ what kinda mumblin’ you were doin’—Emilia-sama, huh.”

From beside Subaru—who still hadn’t closed the window—Garfiel stuck his face out, looked down at Emilia and the others in the garden, and scratched his head vigorously.

Garfiel: “Keep handlin’ ’em like that and the sun’ll set on ya, Emilia-sama. Make sure you do it right so you don’t end up like “Busybody Mitte is always all about other people,” yeah?”

Emilia: “Do it right—like, for example, what should I do?”

Garfiel: “Tell ’em to behave themselves over there, or to go take a nap in their room—somethin’ like that’s fine.”

At Garfiel’s rough suggestion, Emilia blinked round-eyed. Sighing at how he put it, Subaru called out, “Emilia-tan,” and—

Subaru: “For now, how about you just ask them to step back a bit?”

Emilia: “Really? Okay—everyone, could you move away a little?”

Right after Emilia obediently followed the advice Subaru had chewed up for her—

Girls: “…”

The Picos exchanged silent glances at Emilia’s instruction, then all at once whooshed away from around her. At the instant resolution, Emilia let out a little “Wow,” and Subaru, impressed, whistled and looked at Garfiel.

Subaru: “As expected—chalk it up to your long history of handling the Picos at will.”

Garfiel: “Don’t say it in a way that sounds so lousy. I was just havin’ ’em take turns doin’ forest watchin’, that’s all.”

Emilia: “Even so, thank you. You really helped me out, Garfiel. Because I was looking after those girls, my morning studies actually haven’t progressed at all.”

Subaru: “That’s a big problem. If only the Picos would listen to people other than you two a bit more.”

At the major disruption to Emilia’s schedule, Subaru touched his chin and pondered.

It was time he’d sadly lost to “Return by Death,” but there had been a point when Subaru, temporarily an Apostle of Greed, had interacted with the Picos. It wouldn’t be the same as that, but at least he wanted to improve things so the burden didn’t fall solely on Emilia and Garfiel.

Emilia: “Huh? Hey, Subaru.”

Mulling this over, Subaru was suddenly called by Emilia and brought his awareness back to reality. When he looked to see what it was, Emilia’s violet eyes wavered as she said—

Emilia: “…Do you know how far Pico-chan and the others went off to?”

Subaru: “Eh?” Garfiel: “Huh?”

At Emilia’s question, Subaru and Garfiel’s dumbfounded voices overlapped. Then they hastily strained their eyes, searching the garden scenery for the twenty-four girls.

—Without exception, the girls had vanished from sight in order to “move a little away” from Emilia.

3

Ram: “Is this mess the result of your careless advice? Die.”

Subaru: “I have nothing to say in my defense…!”

After hearing the sequence of events, Ram thus scolded him, and Subaru could do nothing but apologize profusely.

The place was the entrance hall of the New Roswaal Manor. Everyone in the mansion had been gathered there, they had just finished sharing what had happened, and then gotten an earful.

It was the height of carelessness and there was no excuse to be made, so he could only bow his head low—

Garfiel: “Don’t go chewin’ out the Captain like that, Ram. Couldn’t be helped, yeah? Ain’t nobody coulda known it’d turn out like that, ya hear.”

Ram: “Indeed. Even Garf, who had for years been using the Picos as he pleased, failed to foresee this development. It cannot be helped that Barusu blundered. That is what you are saying, yes?”

Garfiel: “Scary scary scary— yer eyes’re scary!”

Sliced up by her merciless light-crimson gaze, Garfiel withdrew in meekness.

In truth, Emilia’s instruction had not been anything special. If there had been a problem in the instruction itself, Garfiel would have pointed it out. Nevertheless, there was a reason why the Picos had so excessively obeyed Emilia’s command.

Beatrice: “It is probably the difference in standing as those qualified to command the copies, I suppose. Emilia cleared the Tomb’s “Trials”, and Garfiel did not, in fact. Betty sees it as that difference having shown itself, in fact.”

Petra: “So that means Emilia-nee-sama is above Garf-san? That much is true, but…”

Garfiel: “Even if it’s true, the way ya put it sticks in my craw!”

Otto: “Now, now, making a commotion helps nothing. Let us, first of all, discuss matters calmly.”

When Garfiel bit at Beatrice and Petra’s analysis, Otto admonished him. However, at Otto, Garfiel reflexively bared his fangs with an “Hah?”

Garfiel: “Yer lookin’ awfully relaxed for someone in this, ain’t ya. Is it somebody else’s problem to ya?”

Otto: ““Somebody else’s problem” and “an objective view” are similar yet different. If everyone is depressed like Emilia-sama and Natsuki-san, or angry like Ram-san and Garfiel, we shall make no progress. A perspective like Beatrice-chan’s, Petra-chan’s, and mine is necessary as well.”

Beatrice: “Betty agrees with Otto, I suppose. It is frankly a grave situation, in fact.”

Emilia: “That’s right. …If we do not find them quickly, it will turn into something reaaally bad.”

With a dejected face, Emilia looked so fidgety she might dash out this instant.

He understood how she felt, fretting that it was her fault, but making a blind search would only heighten the possibility of a secondary missing incident. That said, they could not spend time at leisure on a strategy meeting either.

Even now, the Picos’ great escape in obedience to Emilia’s order was ongoing, and the twenty-four little girls had, each and every one, scattered in different directions.

Subaru: “If you tell them to return, Emilia-tan, they’ll probably come back, but—”

Ram: “That would likely be limited to the range your voice reaches. Unlike the coordinator, Ryuzu-sama, it is also troublesome that the Picos can all move nimbly.”

Subaru: “Practically speaking, how does that work, though? Not to be rude, but Ryuzu-sama and the Picos are built exactly the same physically, besides humanity and human relationships, right?”

Beatrice: “…That humanity has likely influenced the qualities of their souls, I suppose. That Ryuzu continued to perform the role of Garfiel and Frederica’s grandmother, and to stand as the representative of the “Sanctuary”. Imprinting her own qualities into her soul in that set shape over and over, the result is that she has grown frail and elderly, in fact.”

Subaru: “In short, she got a little too deep into the role…?”

At Beatrice’s lecture, Subaru settled on an understanding in terms of an overdone method-acting approach.

While she had taken on the role of the Sanctuary’s eldest, her body and heart had settled into an age befitting that—that was apparently how Ryuzu’s body worked. In other words, the ones manifesting the original Ryuzu’s physical potential were the Picos.

Otto: “And, making full use of that capability, they are currently in flight. We have, in fact, ended up with a troublesome situation. The instruction Emilia-sama gave them was: you would like them to step away a little, correct?”

Emilia: “Yes. I asked, “Could you move away a little?” If the Pico-chans had only moved away a little for real, that would’ve been fine, but…”

Otto: “We do not know whether they stopped after separating from Emilia-sama to some extent, or whether they are continuing to separate endlessly. …It would have been desirable to borrow the Margrave’s power.”

Saying that, Otto’s gaze went to the ceiling of the hall—to Roswaal’s office beyond it. But unfortunately, the master of that room was not presently in the manor, and there was no hope of the role Otto had counted on, covering the surroundings from the air.

Those absent from the manor now were Roswaal and Frederica, who was accompanying him—

Subaru: “Given her sense of smell and her range of movement, Frederica being away hurts too. Besides, she dotes on the Picos quite a bit; if this gets found out, that’s super scary.”

Garfiel: “D-don’t go freakin’ me out. Long as we get it done ’fore Sis comes back, it’ll be fine.”

Ram: “Leaving aside how much of a scaredy-cat Garf is, I concur with that line of thought. We shall resolve this disgrace before Roswaal-sama returns.”

Petra: “Mm, that’s right. Just like Ram-nee-sama says, if we do not do something before the Master comes back, we’ll make Frederica-nee-sama worry, and the Master will laugh at us…!”

Subaru: “Mm, three different people, three different ways of brimming with motivation.”

Garfiel, Ram, and Petra were all fired up to search for the Picos. Of course, in terms of motivation, Subaru and Emilia were not a step behind those three.

As for the remainder, Beatrice and Otto, now left behind from the “calm team” by Petra—

Beatrice: “For the moment, we should halt all our current work and throw ourselves fully into searching for the Picos, I suppose. As for giving orders to the copies, it shall be limited to Emilia and Garfiel, the two of them, in fact.”

Otto: “Then one of the two should be distributed to a separate group. For searching, I believe my Divine Protection will be of use as well… May I factor in Ram-san’s “Clairvoyance”?”

Ram: “You are impudent for an Otto. Very well. Factor it in.”

Otto: “My apologies for being impudent, but I shall do so. Now then, in that case—”

With everyone’s strengths laid out, Otto glanced over at Subaru. The rough analysis was finished; it was likely an order to divide up the teams.

Receiving that, Subaru looked over everyone’s faces.—First, Emilia and Garfiel being separate was a certainty, and Ram and Otto, who had searching abilities, should each be separated. The question was how to place Subaru, Beatrice, and Petra.

Subaru: “Alright, here’s how we’ll do it. We split into two groups: a boys’ team and a girls’ team, and we search.”

Beatrice: “Wha?! B-Betty and Subaru will be torn apart, I suppose?! What is the meaning of this, in fact?”

Subaru: “Calm down, be reasonable, Beako. It tears me up inside to act separately from you too, but this is the best division with the current situation.”

He told the wide-eyed, earth-shattering Beatrice thus.

As Subaru, he wanted to hold Beatrice’s hand and support the flustered Emilia. But putting that personal wish aside and distributing each person’s unique skills and abilities evenly, this division was the self-evident conclusion.

Subaru: “To keep execution ability from dropping, splitting by boys and girls is the wise move. While we’re searching, the only ones who can mediate between Otto and Garfiel are either me or Petra, and in that case, since I’m the one who understands the problem, I think I’m the right person. In exchange, I want you girls to look after Emilia-tan.”

Petra: “Emilia-nee-sama is feeling responsible and flapping around, after all. …Mm, leave it to me.”

Beatrice: “Uu~, Betty demands a refill of Subarium once this is over, in fact…!”

At Beatrice’s half-teary plea, Petra also turned a covetous look toward Subaru with a “Subarium…”. Naturally, since he was entrusting them with a hard task, Subaru felt he ought to provide a reward commensurate with it.

Petra: “Then, one date, okay!”

Subaru: “Got it. I’ll plan an escort that won’t bore you or make you tired. So I’m counting on you.”

Petra: “You got it. Right, Beatrice-chan?”

Beatrice: “Rogered, I suppose. But remember, Betty is far from convinced, in fact.”

Patting Beatrice’s adorably pouting head, Subaru looked to Emilia. Meeting his gaze, Emilia clenched her small fist in front of her chest and said,

Emilia: “Understood. Since it’s the pairing Subaru thinks is best, right? I’ll strive amain—so you do the same.”

Subaru: ““Amain” is something I don’t hear these days. …Anyway, that settles it. Let’s go with that!”

When Subaru clapped his hands, he received words of assent all around, and the team formation was complete.

While they were doing this, there remained the suspicion that the Picos were speeding toward the edge of the world. As soon as preparations were complete, they ought to begin the search immediately.

And so—

Subaru: “It’s the first team split since Otto’s homecoming, but let’s get fired up!”

Otto: “It is a familiar combination, but I would prefer no trouble. First, let us head for the forest, where I seem to have more reliable contacts…”

Garfiel: “Hah? The proper tactic’d be to rely on my nose first, yeah. I’m the one who knows those runts the longest. Don’t you go buttin’ in.”

Otto: “Gyafun.”

At the very first step out of the manor, Garfiel chomped down on Otto.

Subaru put a hand to his forehead at the all-too-swift arrival of the dreaded development, but it seemed Garfiel felt he had messed up as well, his face already looking awkward.

If he was going to make that face, he ought not do it in the first place—that kind of sound logic could only be cast by those who had never once, in a fleeting moment, snapped off a snide remark.

Naturally, Subaru's follow-up seemed needed quickly—

Otto: "I see, very well. Since Garfiel is the main force necessary for bringing the Pico-san group back this time, let us go with your plan."

Garfiel: "Ha—h?!"

Otto: "Hm? What is the matter?"

Garfiel: "N-nothin'! Oi, let's get movin' already— keep up, ya hear!"

Having the wind taken out of his sails, Garfiel ground down his nowhere-to-go gratitude and stomped ahead. Following that back, Otto tilted his head, "What was that?"

Subaru: "Garfiel, that way looks like the forest, though."

Garfiel: "We gotta search a different direction from Emilia-sama's group or it's pointless— it just happened ta be the forest, that's all! Ain't doin' it for yer sake!"

Otto: "Haa."

Watching the two, so out of sync, from behind, Subaru let out a long, deep sigh.

The main issue was, after all, searching for the missing Picos. So, while he hoped for improvement in Otto and Garfiel's relationship, at the very least, he begged they would spare him any further souring of it.

4

And so, with all that, the search for the "lost ones" began—

Subaru: "Uoooooh! Touchdown!!"

Ipsy: "—!"

From the front, Subaru dove at the waist of the girl running away, trying to stop her.

But the small girl—Ipsy—twisted her body with Subaru clinging to her waist, and with unbelievable power she swung him around.

Subaru: "Uo—waaah?!"

At this rate he was either going to be flung off or smashed into a nearby tree and sent straight to the infirmary—that was the very moment—

Otto: "Little bird, if you please!"

With a cue like a fairy-tale princess, a small bird flew in through the gaps between the trees. The bird had a yellow fruit clutched in its feet, and a moment later a spray of juice struck both the girl and Subaru.

Subaru: "Gyaaaaah! My eyyyyes!!"

Catching the misted juice full in the eyes, Subaru screamed as both eyes burned. And it wasn't just the noisy Subaru; Ipsy seemed to have taken the same hit.

Covering her face with her hands, Ipsy started to rub at the juice-scorched eyes—

Garfiel: "Quit it. Rubbin' it'll only make it worse."

At Garfiel's words as he caught her hand, Ipsy stiffened. Even so, looking down at the girl with tears spilling down, Garfiel clicked his tongue and—

Garfiel: "There's a river right nearby. Wash yer face there 'n it'll be a bit better. C'mon, follow me."

He set a hand with a little pat on Ipsy's head and, to get the tearful girl to wash her face, led the way toward the river.

Subaru: “Curse you, Otto… I won’t forget this grudge even after a hundred years…!”

Otto: “Yes yes, hold a grudge if you like. Here, gimme your face. I’ll wipe it.”

Subaru: “Ugo-go-go-go…!”

Groaning like an old-school final boss, Subaru had his face wiped with a wet handkerchief, and his vision, fouled by the juice, began to come back.

As it did, Otto’s face swam into the blurry view—

Subaru: “Don’t you grin while I’m suffering! Are you a demon?!”

Otto: “If it were Ram-san, she’d squeeze the juice and then leave you as-is. Besides, we went over the plan—why did you run into the juice’s range? You brought that on yourself.”

Subaru: “How am I supposed to know the juice’s effective range in meters! And I was too focused on stopping Ipsy and the plan flew right outta my head—my bad, I’m sorrrry!”

Snatching the handkerchief from Otto’s wicked grin, Subaru carefully wiped the face he’d rubbed and did his best to get rid of the juice’s effects.

It still stung a little, but once he’d calmed down quite a bit—

Garfiel: “Yo, Captain, ya back on yer feet? Things’re settled over here.”

Saying that, Garfiel came back from the river with Ipsy in tow.

The twin-tailed girl had water dripping from her damp bangs, but like Subaru, she seemed to have escaped the worst of the juice’s onslaught.

Subaru: “She got her face washed, great, but take one more half-step toward being a gentleman. Her hair’s all wet.”

Garfiel: “Hah? Leave it be ’n it’ll dry, yeah?”

Subaru: “Try saying that same thing to Ram and she’ll give you the cold shoulder for a while.”

Saying so, Subaru used his own handkerchief to wipe Ipsy’s wet hair. While he was at it, he tidied up the hair mussed from all the running around, then gave her slender shoulder a pat.

Subaru: “You’re okay now. Garfiel, take her back to the manor.”

Garfiel: “’Kay. Like I said, head back ’n behave yerself at the manor. We’re meetin’ up in the garden.”

Ipsy: “…”

At Garfiel’s instruction, Ipsy gave a small nod and, light on her feet, headed out of the forest. Quite something, finding her way back toward the manor without even a compass.

Otto: “For safety, I’ll have the earlier little bird accompany her, so if she tries to detour we’ll know.”

Subaru: “Got it, that helps. How’d you get the cooperation, anyway?”

Otto: “For the cold season—they gather more nuts than they can eat. Collecting them is hard, but I get the forest animals to help gather them. Next, I owe those animals a favor in return, though…”

Subaru: “Kinda feels like laundering gratitude…”

The exchange, which brought to mind a system where debts spiral till you’re underwater, made Subaru earnestly hope there wasn’t a future where Otto got mobbed by angry animals.

Then Garfiel cut in on Subaru and Otto with a “hey”—

Garfiel: “Thanks, Captain. Sorry for makin’ ya pull a risky stunt.”

Subaru: “If it’s just that much, it’s no big—well, can’t quite say that. Getting swung around by a kid the Picos’ age took it outta me.

Maybe I should bulk up? Weight is power.”

Otto: “I won’t stop you if you do, but then it wouldn’t square with being swung around by Ipsy-chan, would it? Compared to her, Natsuki-san is heavier, after all.”

Garfiel: “No doubt. …Ah—’n, uh, that.”

As Otto shrugged at the pondering Subaru, Garfiel fumbled and stumbled over his words, drawing a suspicious, “What is it?” from Otto.

Under that look, Garfiel ground his fangs together and—

Garfiel: “Ain’t sayin’ ya did bad, but if ya moved faster, the Captain wouldn’t’ve got his eyes done in. Keep a sharper watch, yeah.”

Otto: “…Right. I’ll try to do so next time.”

Once again Garfiel spoke on impulse, and once again Otto handled it calmly. As Otto smoothly turned his back, behind him Garfiel clutched his head and drooped.

As Subaru, he couldn’t help but go “ahhh,” but in Buddha’s rulebook, three swings and you’re out. Would Buddha give him a fourth-chance at-bat…?

Subaru: “Buddha’s rules aside… hey, Otto, got a sec?”

Falling in step beside Otto as he briskly resumed walking through the woods, Subaru called out.

Frankly, it was plain as day that Garfiel was in the wrong, but at this rate Subaru’s secondhand embarrassment was about to break the limit. He’d boasted to Beatrice and Petra about mediating well—embarrassing, but better a moment’s shame than a lifetime’s.

Subaru: “It’s about Garfiel. Uh, y’know, in his own way he’s… well…”

Otto: “—Roughly, that he’s all tied up in knots over his relationship with me, right?”

Unsure how to broach it, Subaru found his hesitation sliced clean through by that one line and lost his breath. When he goggled at Otto, the latter gave a wry smile.

Otto: “Don’t ask “how,” please. Looking at Garfiel’s behavior lately—well, today—it’s obvious he’s got thoughts about me.”

Subaru: “That… yeah, fair. Then no point hiding it—the truth is, he wants to make up with you. But, as you can see, he’s clumsy about it.”

Otto: “It’s painful to watch.”

Garfiel had been moping and reflecting just out of Otto’s line of sight, but to Otto Suwen, the man who converses with all things, it was all obvious.

Still, if Otto understood the situation, that made things fast.

Subaru: “In that case, uh, could you take the lead and say something to him? That’ll solve the problem…”

Otto: “Ah, I don’t like that, so I decline.”

Subaru: “Eh?!”

Raising a hand smoothly as he refused the request, Otto left Subaru stunned. To Subaru’s shocked face, Otto held up one finger and continued, “Here’s the thing.”

Otto: “Sure, if I reach out here, the problem would be solved, I think. But is that really the way we want to solve it?”

Subaru: ““Really the way” meaning…?”

Otto: “Meaning, is it fine to keep leaving solutions to others all the time? Going forward, Garfiel will have more chances to deal with outsiders as a member of our camp. We can’t have him causing fender-benders in human relations every time, and neither I nor Natsuki-san can keep cleaning up after him forever.”

Subaru: “…”

Otto: “If you rub outsiders the wrong way, you don’t get many chances to recover. Wanting help only when you can fail as much as you like because it’s with family—what a spoiled child.”

From head to tail, Subaru couldn’t get a peep out against the perfect, gapless argument.

True, limited to just the two of them, Otto reaching out would solve it quickly. But Otto’s eyes were on what came after—on Garfiel’s future.

Otto: “Also, since we started playing on the Shatranj board, I’ve come to see this… If I’m the one to reach out, he’ll feel relieved in the moment, but later on, not having solved it under his own power will eat at Garfiel something awful.”

Subaru: “Honestly… I get that.”

Otto: “Well, I got roughed up plenty in the “Sanctuary,” and I can’t say I have no feelings about how hard he’s been on me up to today, so there’s a bit of payback in it too.”

Subaru: “Mm… yeah, even I can’t call you childish over that.”

Normally he’d nitpick from any angle and try to catch him out, but in this matter the problem lay with Garfiel, and there was no medicine Subaru could apply.

Still, there was some good news he could be sure of from Otto’s tone.

Subaru: “So, if Garfiel’s the one who reaches out, you’re willing to make up, right?”

Otto: “Make up or not, I don’t recognize that we’ve had a falling out. If someone says they want to get along, there’s nothing better than getting along with all parties you can communicate with.”

Subaru: “When you say “all parties you can communicate with,” the scope’s so stupidly wide I can’t tell if you’re serious.”

As Otto gave him a wink with one eye closed, Subaru heaved a big sigh.

Be that as it may, it was good to confirm Otto’s stance. In truth, he’d already confirmed Garfiel’s stance as well, so you could say a truly fruitless standoff had arisen.

Subaru could go tell Garfiel what they’d just discussed and end that fruitless standoff—but there was merit in Otto’s opinion that it was better not to.

At least, he wanted to guide things so Garfiel would find it easy to make the first move—

Otto: “—Natsuki-san, Garfiel.”

Subaru: “—! You got something?”

Called by Otto, whose mood had suddenly shifted, Subaru asked back. With Garfiel coming over at the call as well, Otto set a small animal like a squirrel on his shoulder, nodded “Yes” as the little creature whispered in his ear, and said—

Otto: “They say they found another one downstream from that river just now. However—”

Garfiel: “That’s right under our noses, but what is it?”

Otto: “…Seems it’s a bit of a bad situation.”

5

—And that wasn’t just a “bit of a bad situation.”

Subaru: “Ohhhhhh, you gotta be kidding me—!”

Led by the squirrel-like creature cooperating with Otto, Subaru, having reached the river in question, couldn’t help but shout when he saw the sight before him.

Downstream, where the river widened, the force of the water had increased, creating a sort of rapids. In those rapids were a few stepping stones, and on one of those stones lay the girl they were after—except the girl was sprawled out on the stone, limp and unmoving.

Subaru: “No way, is she sleeping? Up to here, there was Jita running away at full tilt, Omi up in a tree, and Ipsy pushing back against us—but sleeping is way too new. And in a place where you could never settle down like that!”

Garfiel: “She ain’t doin’ that on purpose! She ain’t sleepin’, she’s passed out. The problem’s why she’s passed out…”

Otto: “The cause is in the river.”

At Otto’s words, Subaru and Garfiel both dropped their eyes to the torrent with a “the river?”

It was a fast flow, the gravel and mud constantly stirred so it looked murky, but if you stared hard, you could finally make out what Otto meant.

—Fish-shapes, several of them, gliding through the water.

Subaru: “Big fish? Looks like there’s quite a few, but it’s not like she got scared of fish…”

Garfiel: “She didn’t get scared. She got bzzzt’d. Tch, lightningfish, huh.”

Subaru: “Lightningfish?”

Otto: “Water-dwelling witchbeasts. They’re charged, and they electrocute birds and small animals that come to drink from the river, then eat them. Most likely, that child got shocked by them.”

Subaru: “That’s insanely bad! We gotta save her right away!”

With the threat to life far closer than he’d imagined, Subaru immediately proposed a rescue. But once again Otto held him back.

Otto: “I’m dying to do that, but lightningfish are troublesome witchbeasts by nature. Like that, they knock her out and leave her there to make the friends who come to save her their next prey. If we approach carelessly, we’ll end up just like her.”

Subaru: “A sniper’s M.O.…!”

Garfiel: “’N on top o’ that, they’re ridiculously cautious ’n timid. The second they think it’s bad, they snatch the decoy prey ’n dive under the water. …What do we do?”

Garfiel’s estimate was: spring out with a burst, grab the girl, and instantly retreat—but that would put a lot on luck. Of course, Subaru and Otto couldn’t endure a shock; the role of the one to charge in was best left to Garfiel.

Subaru: “We should raise the certainty. —They’re fish but witchbeasts, right? Then I’ll draw their attention.”

Otto: “To be honest, that’s what I was banking on. A situation to make use of Natsuki-san’s incomprehensible constitution.”

Subaru: “Alright, you jerk, I’ll remember that, damn it.”

Glaring at Otto, who nodded without a beat to the proposal, Subaru volunteered to be the decoy. Hearing the plan, Garfiel nodded with an “’kay.”

Garfiel: “Sorry, but I’m handin’ that role to the Captain. In that gap I’ll—”

Otto: “No, Garfiel, please stick with Natsuki-san. I’ll—”

Garfiel: “Hah? Why’s that. I can move better.”

Otto: “Exactly. We don’t know how fast the witchbeasts in the river will launch at Natsuki-san. I’m asking you to guard him.”

At Otto’s peremptory instruction, Garfiel, taken aback, ground his fangs. Subaru worried that would stir up Garfiel’s bad habit again, but—

Garfiel: “…F-fine. I’ll go with that.”

At the very edge, Garfiel held himself back, and the hair-trigger was avoided.

And then—

Subaru: “No telling when the fish’ll lose patience. Otto, don’t mess this up.”

Otto: “No need to tell me. Garfiel, I’m counting on you.”

Garfiel: “Yeah. You two… get yer heads in the game.”

Returning a nod to Garfiel, who couldn’t just bull through, Otto looked to Subaru. Meeting that gaze with a set jaw, Subaru moved to the riverbank.

The lightningfish, which sent the water roiling with splash-splash, were about the size of big koi, and there were twenty, thirty of them—a hideously creepy sight. Aiming straight at that—

Subaru: “I—Return by Death—”

A confession to the fish so that Otto and Garfiel behind him wouldn’t hear. The instant it was about to be made, a fresh and infuriating penalty aimed straight at Subaru’s heart.

Subaru: “—gh!”

He tasted the stilling of time and pain; an instant that felt eternal passed, and he was released. He resumed the breath he’d halted and lifted his face—did it work? —Right before him, a fish with its reason gone had its all-fanged maw open, lunging in.

Subaru: “Uwoooooaah?!”

Garfiel: “Close one!”

Seizing Subaru by the scruff, Garfiel narrowly made the witchbeast’s fangs miss. But, just as Otto had feared, the school of lightningfish kept right on after Subaru and even heaved themselves up onto land.

With the crackle-crackle of bursting air, violet lightning streaked out and chased after Subaru and the others.

Garfiel: “Don’t bite yer tongue—!”

Subaru: “Too late! I bit it—agh!”

To escape the violet bolts snapping at their heels, Garfiel carried Subaru and pulled away. Knowing that a careless leap would make it impossible to evade the lightning, Garfiel, still gripping Subaru, kicked right and left, moving to draw the witchbeasts downstream, stacking evasive maneuvers.

And when they’d opened up enough distance—

Garfiel: “—Do it!”

Otto: “No need to say it!”

At Garfiel’s cue, Otto, one hand on his hat, skipped across the stepping stones to the girl. He lifted the collapsed girl up; from the hairstyle, they could tell it was Pico.

Holding Pico in his arms, Otto turned to go back along the stones he’d come. —In that moment.

Subaru: “Otto!”

Forgetting even the pain in his bitten tongue, Subaru shouted—just as, right beside Otto carrying Pico across the stones, something appeared that was on a whole different scale from the lightningfish thus far.

The thing one might call a giant lightningfish had its great maw open, lunging to swallow Otto and Pico whole—

Garfiel: “—Ottobro!!”

At the instant the two were about to be swallowed, Garfiel shouted and stomped the ground hard. Force ran through the soles of his feet, and the next moment the earth heaved with tremendous force. The stepping stone Otto and Pico were on was kicked straight up from beneath, slamming into the giant lightningfish’s gut.

Lightningfish: "—ッッ"

Writhing under unbearable force, the witchbeast spewed out the almost-swallowed Otto and Pico.

Thrown riverward for a moment, Otto—who had, however briefly, experienced the inside of the lightningfish's mouth—was flung toward the bank. But it didn't end there. The giant lightningfish crackled with discharge; violet lightning ran back up to turn Otto and Pico, who had fled its maw, into grilled morsels.

Just before that bolt of wrath was unleashed—an hourglass-red magic stone struck the lightningfish's snout.

Otto: "Just in case, I make a habit of carrying them."

Otto bared his teeth, pointing finger-guns at the stone he'd thrown. In the blink of an eye, before the violet lightning could be loosed, the magic stone ignited, and an explosion blew apart the face of the lightningfish, lord of the river.

Lightningfish: "Gyan!"

Tossed by the blast wind, Otto tumbled and rolled along the riverbank with momentum. After rolling for a bit, he checked the limp Pico he held and let out a sigh of relief.

Garfiel hurried over to where Otto lay on his back on the ground.

Garfiel: "Ottobro! Ya in one piece?!"

Otto: "…Yes. I'm fine. Fortunately, Pico-chan seems to be only unconscious."

Garfiel: "That ain't the point! Well, it is, but it ain't just that—what the hell was that crazy stunt…!"

Otto: "Ahh, it was certainly pretty dangerous. If we hadn't gotten that one hit in first and made it spit us out, I would've had to settle for a mutual kill… man, we got lucky."

Garfiel: "Listen here…!"

As Otto sat up with a dopey grin, Garfiel shouted, veins bulging.

Even though he'd snatched life from the jaws of death by the slimmest of margins, he had this attitude. No one could deny now why Otto was called the "Military Internal Affairs Officer" both inside and outside the camp.

Be that as it may—

Garfiel: "If we ain't got enough time to set up a plan, the crazy stuff's on me—"

Otto: "—Ottobro."

Garfiel: "Huh?"

Otto: "Yes, you called me. You've gotten awfully casual, haven't you. A change of heart?"

At Otto's sly grin and question, Garfiel's eyes widened with an "ah." It seemed completely unconscious; he opened and shut his mouth, then flushed red to his neck and ears.

Garfiel: "Wh-What's it to ya. I, uh, I—!"

Otto: "No, nothing wrong with it. I just wanted to get a little more friendly with you, Garfiel. "Friends and lifespan can't be bought with money," as Hoshin says."

Garfiel: "…Tch. That so. Then Ottobro it is."

Otto: "I said, that's fine."

At Garfiel's averted-eyes murmur, Otto went on with a wry smile. Garfiel rubbed the tip of his nose and gave a bashful "heh."

It was a really good vibe. That was delightful. Delightful, but—

Subaru: "Aaand, you two, sorry to butt in when you're wrapping things up nicely, but—"

Thinking it rude to interrupt, Subaru nonetheless called out to Otto and Garfiel. The two turned to his voice, looked Subaru's way, and their mouths opened with an "ah."

Because—

Subaru: "The fishies whose boss you took out are comiiing…"

With a wall of violet lightning-charged water surging up onto the land as the school of lightningfish gathered downstream reversed the flow all at once, Subaru ran full tilt toward the two.

Told not to come, he ran flat out anyway. Because it was a problem the three of them had to overcome together.

6

Emilia: "I see. So that's how Otto-kun and Garfiel became friendly."

Beatrice: "Honestly, those two are such handfuls, I suppose. And Subaru also splendidly fulfilled his role—how admirable, in fact. Betty and Emilia shall praise you, I suppose."

Emilia: "That's right. Subaru, thank you for working so hard. You did great."

Subaru: "Ohhh, your kindness really sinks in…—"

Getting his head patted on both sides by Emilia and Beatrice, Subaru felt something well up warm in his chest and finally had the sense that the whole messy faction problem had been resolved without incident.

There had, after all, been the payoff of being chased by a school of lightningfish and nearly dying of electrocution in the forest.

Subaru: "Well, in the end, both of them wanted to make up. All they needed was a trigger, so Otto almost dying ended up being all right in the end."

Emilia: "Ah, don't get carried away. Say things like that and the three of you will do something reckless again."

Subaru: “Kyann—ow ow, don’t pull my ear! I repent!”

With Emilia puffing her cheeks and tugging his ear, Subaru raised the white flag at once and surrendered. Admittedly, the way he said it was bad. That said, given the situation they’d had no choice but to be reckless. If Subaru and the others hadn’t fought there, who knows what would have happened to Pico.

Beatrice: “But it is good that everyone came back safe, in fact. … Though, if there is anything humiliating, it is only that in the end we borrowed Roswaal’s power, I suppose.”

Emilia: “Beatrice, you’re so huffy.”

Subaru: ““Huffy”—that’s not something you hear these days.”

Beatrice, adorably disgruntled, was right: when it came to the search for the missing Picos—or rather, the most effective way to bring them home—the one who proposed it, after returning from his trip, was Roswaal.

Split into two groups, a boys’ team and a girls’ team, they had managed to bring back eleven—about half—but Roswaal got the remaining half to return in no time at all.

Beatrice: “Riding Emilia’s voice on the wind and scattering it across the whole area—that never occurred to Betty…!”

Subaru: “Before, Otto used a spell to send just footsteps to another spot; it’s the same sort of application. Given the scale, it’s only natural Beako and Otto didn’t think of it.”

Beatrice: “There is nothing “only natural” about it, I suppose! For Roswaal to think of something and Betty not to—that is an intolerable disgrace, in fact…!”

Emilia: “Fufu, Beatrice, you’re really stubborn when it comes to Roswaal.”

Beatrice: “It is that smug face of his that is unforgivable, I suppose!”

At Beatrice’s puffed-up, indignant pout, Subaru and Emilia exchanged looks and laughed. Then Subaru glanced at the magical time crystal on the wall and went, “Whoops,” rising from his chair.

As tempting as it was to just have a little tea party right here in Emilia’s room with Beatrice—

Subaru: “I happen to have an appointment with the two in question. So, though it pains me, and though I’m sure Emilia-tan will be lonely too, I’m off.”

Emilia: “Ah, I’m totally fine. And Subaru, you look super excited.”

Subaru: ““Totally fine” stings a little, but yeah. I’m in the middle of a pretty interesting bit of scheming. I’ll borrow the open spot in the woods behind the manor—look forward to it.”

Emilia: “Okay, got it. I’ll look forward to it.”

Subaru: “I’ll leave Beako with you instead, so you two get along.”

Seeing him off with little waves, Emilia and Beatrice watched as Subaru departed the tea party room. He then set off toward Otto’s office, when—

Garfiel: “Yo, Captain. Just came t’ fetch ya.”

Otto: “Good thing we didn’t miss each other. Would’ve been double the trouble.”

By chance in the corridor he ran into the two in question, Garfiel and Otto. Narrowing his eyes at how naturally they were walking side by side, Subaru made the two cock their heads.

Subaru: “Nah, it’s nothing. Let’s talk on the way, then—about the construction plan for my grand, secret training ground!”

Garfiel: “S-secret training ground…! Awesome! No matter how many times I hear it, I can’t stop gettin’ pumped!”

Otto: “You can keep it secret at the planning stage, but once we break ground it’ll be found out right away.”

Subaru: “That’s fine! With this sort of thing, the proposer ought to be the one having the most fun first!”

Garfiel: “That’s right, Ottobro! Don’t be sayin’ such killjoy stuff!”

Nipped at by Subaru and Garfiel, Otto brushed it off with a “yes yes.”

At that unflappable attitude, Garfiel pressed in further, but there was neither anger nor reserve there. Which is why Subaru, without holding back either, slipped between the two and slung an arm over each of their shoulders.

Subaru: “Man, it’s nice—being able to shoot the breeze like this with three guys.”

Otto: “Natsuki-san, you said something similar during my homecoming.”

Subaru: “Back then we were kinda prickly! Now that’s cleared up and I’m feeling good!”

Garfiel: “Uoooo… the me back then was real damn unpleasant, yeah.”

Hand to his head, Garfiel looked back on his past behavior and deeply reflected. That was precisely the awareness of a dark history, the first step toward graduating from his green, immature self.

Even after getting past some of that, the walls called adolescence were many and high.

Subaru: “Well, we’ll stumble and fall, and then we’ll all overcome it together again like this.”

At Subaru’s laugh and words, Otto and Garfiel exchanged looks and laughed.

That too was one of the countless ordinary scenes to come for the boys’ team of Emilia’s camp.

The Witch's After Tea Party: Witch Trials (LQ AI Translation)

1

—That night, the town blanketed in a light fall of snow was enveloped in a strange atmosphere.

The square at the town's center seethed with a wave of people, and yet it was filled with a baffling silence, with no voices heard from anywhere. Those gathered furtively watched one another with bulging eyes, and when their gazes met, they turned away, their presences pregnant with loathing and fear. —Such was the situation.

Crowd: "…"

This silent crowd of several hundred was proof that almost all of the town's residents had gathered; it was proof of just how much the townsfolk's attention was fixed upon this.

Presently, as if parting the human tide, a single person was brought out before the crowd. —It was an old woman, with skin mapped by wrinkles, thin, frizzy hair, and a gaunt frame.

At a glance she seemed feeble, a lone old woman who gave off little sense of vitality—and yet the looks the crowd leveled at her, as her bound hands were hauled by a rope, were terribly cruel and steeped in hostility.

Anger, disgust, rejection—in the end, all those negative feelings could be summed up in a single word: hatred. That was everything directed at the old woman, and it could be said to be what made her hang her head.

Head bowed, the old woman, with dragging steps, was brought to the very center of those assembled at the town's heart, raised up onto the showpiece dais prepared there—the scaffold.

Crowd: “…”

The moment someone in the crowd lit the fuse with a vile curse, abuse and invective were hurled at the old woman one after another.

Those words brimming with malice so pummeled the gaunt old woman that, if words could take a life, it was plain that they would have been lethal weapons.

However, curses and slurs do not in themselves take a person’s life. No matter how cruel, no matter how sharp-edged the words that could make one bleed, they never directly steal a life.

—Therefore, what took the life of the old woman upon the scaffold was not any blade of words.

Woman: “—hk!”

A tremendous, hellish blaze rose up, and it swathed the old woman in fire, scaffold and all.

A heat with no concept of moderation leapt to every part of her body; as her skin, her flesh, her organs, and above all her life were burned, the old woman’s scream rose higher and higher, longer and longer, trailing a tail across the sky of the snowy town.

At that scream, that death rattle, the surrounding crowd went into a frenzy and raised their voices. Yet it was by no means a cry brought forth by a tasteless desire to make a spectacle of an execution.

What was in those voices was a small measure of relief, and the joy of being freed from something that bound them.

Amid those voiceless cries of joy, someone murmured,

???: “—Witch.”

Yes—spurred by that single word, those around began to speak it one after another.

The words repeated—“Witch, Witch, Witch”—told of the indelible sin of a being swallowed by the flames, her life purified by scorching heat. On this night, in the town of thin snow, one “Witch” was burned to death. —That it was the true beginning of Witch Trials, on which the town’s very survival hinged, was something no one had any room to realize at the time.

—On this night, a single witch burned to death in the snowy town.

2

Watching as flakes of snow fluttered down across her field of view, Omega pulled her half-buried feet free from the fresh snow and advanced with steady steps—one, then another.

That surefooted tread could truly be called a remarkable leap forward.

At first, back when she knew the terrors of snowy lands as nothing more than knowledge, Omega’s way of walking snowy paths had been far too clumsy. Yet now, it was no exaggeration to say she was so well-versed in snow that she could pass for someone born in a snowy country.

Omega: “If it were before, even I wouldn’t have believed this leap forward of mine. When it came to moving my body, there was some part of me that gave up, thinking it was impossible. However, accumulation surprisingly doesn’t lie. You can’t get by on reckless fieldwork alone, nor on knowledge without practice. What you need is an environment where you can actually try out the knowledge—in other words.”

Looking back to check the footprints she had left in the snow path, Omega nodded in satisfaction.

The angle of the toes, the stride length, the way the snow sank underfoot—everything formed a beautiful set of prints just as calculated. If anything, she wanted to cut out the whole stretch of snowfield with the footprints, freeze it, store it away in a subspace created with Yin Magic so it wouldn’t be in the way, and rub it in the faces of those who had once mocked Omega’s athletic ability.

Omega: “Cut out the snowfield along with the ground, freeze it, store it in a subspace made with Yin Magic…? With how accustomed my Gate is right now, if I tried to handle that much mana, I might accidentally disappear myself, but… is it worth it…?”

Shion: “Um, Omega-san? You’re muttering something kinda horror-ish—are you tired?”

Omega: “Hm, Shion?”

Shion: “Yup, whoosh—Shion at your service! I turned around and you weren’t there, so I panicked and dash-dash-dashed back.”

Smiling, and striking a crisp salute-like pose, was the girl Shion, with bright green hair, well-formed features, round, inquisitive eyes, and ears just a little longer than a human’s.

Shion, one of Omega’s companions on the journey, tilted her head and said,

Shion: “Maybe our pace was a bit quick. Since the snowfall had lightened for the first time in a while, that “let’s stomp-stomp make progress while we can” feeling might’ve shown up in everyone’s stride.”

Omega: “And you’re saying I got left behind because of that? I appreciate your consideration, but the reason I stopped wasn’t a feeling of fatigue. Rather the opposite. A sense of accomplishment.”

Shion: “A sense of accomplishment?”

Omega: “That’s right. Feast your eyes.”

Before the head-tilting Shion, Omega indicated with her hand the footprints she had left in the snow path.

Omega: “How is it? Quite something, isn’t it?”

Shion: “Aha, I see! …I see? Um, I’m sorry, but could you tell me a teensy bit more about the reason for your smug face?”

Omega: “You can’t tell just by looking?”

Shion: “If I had to say… they’re teeny-tiny, cute little footprints!”

Staring intently at Shion, who had clenched her fist and answered thus, Omega realized she wasn’t playing dumb, much less teasing. Put simply—and regrettably—Shion genuinely didn’t understand the value of these magnificent footprints.

Omega: “No, that one’s on me.”

However, Omega immediately reflected that her disappointment in Shion had been immature.

It couldn’t be helped. After all, it had only been about two weeks since Shion had started traveling with Omega like this. The value of the footprints now left in the fresh snow could be called the very accumulation of the days since Omega had begun walking snowy paths. Telling Shion, who didn’t know those days, to grasp the value of these footprints was an unreasonable ask.

Those who could understand this value were—

Omega: “—only you all, who’ve kept traveling with me this far.”

Palmira: “…Got no clue what you’re on about again, but I do get that you once again ran ahead with the story in your head and then went and satisfied yourself somewhere that’s got nothing to do with us.”

Colette: “Now, that’s not how you should put it, Palmira. Omega-chan’s hoping we’ll understand—so we’ve got to live up to that, don’t we?”

Noelle: “I would very much like to live up to Omega-sama’s expectations, but whether we can be of help is making me a little nervous.”

Before Omega, who had spread her hands wide, the three girls lined up and each made a comment in her own way.

Those three—Palmira, Colette, and Noelle in the order they spoke—were also oddballs traveling with Omega. She had spent several months together with Palmira and Colette, and nearly two months with Noelle—a trio who could be called Omega experts.

They were, indeed, living witnesses who knew how Omega had struggled on snowy paths, and at the same time, people who could correctly gauge the value of the now-improved Omega's footprints.

Therefore, just as she had done with Shion earlier, Omega gestured with her hand to the snow path for the three and—

Omega: "How is it? Quite something, isn't it?"

—posed exactly the same question she had to Shion, intending to share the emotion.

But the three did not offer moving comments about Omega's footprints. Before that could happen, the three widened their eyes and went "Ah," and a tremendous bellow reverberated across the snowfield.

Witchbeast: "—!!"

What echoed across the snowfield was the deep, rough war cry of a ferocious beast.

What shook the still, freezing air with its roar was a witchbeast whose whole body was covered in white fur like snow, yet whose snow could not conceal its savage, hulking frame, complete with horns—the "Snow Blight." This witchbeast, which resembled a giant ape in form, was, as its name suggested, a menace that lived only in snowy regions.

One such Snow Blight fixed upon the five girls standing in a row as its prey and, puffing out white breaths in excitement, came stomping toward them——trampling the fresh snow to bits.

And of course, that rampage dragged Omega's precious footprints into its wake as well.

Palmira: “J-Just—! A-A witchbeast! And it’s hu… huge! It’s coming this way!”

Colette: “Th-This is b-big trouble! Palmira, everyone, hide behind me!”

Shion: “Yeah, no, we’re not doing that! Colette-san, you’re tiny!”

Noelle: “Everyone, please be calm. I shall… Omega-sama?”

Before the rudely approaching Snow Blight, confusion spread among the girls, but Noelle, who was about to step forward to shield them, saw Omega step out even before her. Hearing Noelle call out, the other three likewise looked at Omega’s back.

—at the space around the small-bodied Omega, which had begun to distort unnaturally.

Omega: “I don’t bear ill will just because it’s a witchbeast. Moreover, we’re the ones who entered its living area, its territory—that’s our blunder. This is rather the sort of situation where we should apologize politely and leave.”

Snow Blight: “—!!”

Omega: “However, if you’re going to sully my pride, that’s another story. —Minya.”

To the Snow Blight that roared and paid no heed to her words, Omega likewise judged mercy unnecessary, and she let a deep-violet radiance burst forth from the spatial distortion.

It became a straight, glittering cone, and, without any contrivance, it met the charging witchbeast head-on, striking five points—both shoulders, the torso, and both ankles—and from those points, it began to crystallize.

With a sound like the air creaking, the witchbeast, invaded by the deep-violet shimmer, writhed and let out a pained cry. But it was too late to regret it. The crystallization steadily advanced, and when at last it covered the witchbeast’s entire body—there stood nothing but a statue of a Snow Blight clad in deep-violet radiance.

Omega: “Honestly, how boorish can you get.”

Narrowing her eyes at the statue, Omega shrugged with a weary air.

Sadly, the snowfield had been thoroughly churned by the witchbeast’s massive soles, and Omega’s footprints were unrecognizable. There was no way she could possibly expect thunderous applause from the girls now.

And as Omega turned back, dejected—

Everyone: “Wow—”

—the girls, sounding impressed with her handiwork, clapped for Omega.

Finding it different from what she’d thought and what she’d hoped for, Omega received that applause with a dissatisfied air.

3

—The lightly snowed town of ‘Limbus’ lay not far from the spot where they had encountered the Snow Blight.

Blanketed in perennial snow, a townscape washed in white is the universal sight of the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, but Limbus leaves quite a different impression from other towns. The snowfall in the area is light, and one reason is that buildings and facilities designed against snow damage aren’t very noticeable.

Noelle: “It seems this area is surrounded by mountains on three sides and has long suffered little snow damage. It’s not quite the “Holy Land,” but I hear you can sometimes catch a glimpse of clear skies.”

Colette: “My! Clear skies sound lovely. Come to think of it, I feel like I haven’t properly basked in the sun’s rays for a while. The snow is very beautiful too, but I’m starting to miss the sun.”

As the party approached the town’s entrance, Noelle—who was carrying a large furoshiki bundle—shared a tidbit befitting a Itinerant Preacher of the Gusteko Holy Church, tailored to the locale. While Colette's eyes sparkled at the lecture, Palmira cast a sidelong glance at Omega with a "Heh," and said,

Palmira: "No wonder Omega managed to keep walking the snowy road without folding. Compared to before, there's way less snow. Makes sense, makes sense."

Omega: "My, my, you do have things to say, Palmira. Unfortunately for you, don't forget that realization and that sarcasm bounce right back at you as-is. When I fall on a harsh snowy road, the next to fall is none other than you."

Shion: "Time-out, time-out, you two! No poking each other like that! That's a red card! …Am I using "red card" right?"

Omega: "More or less correctly."

Omega shrugged and nodded back at Shion, who had halted the "weakest-war" with Palmira.

From time to time Shion tosses in "otherworld words"—knowledge whose source is unknown. Watching her scheme this way and that to probe where that knowledge comes from is endearing, yet also a cause for concern.

As the newest companion on their journey, Shion and her counterpart—who, thanks to a somewhat special origin and ability, have acquired knowledge that doesn't exist in this world—are irregularities of the world, for better or worse.

Shion and her other self don't seem aware that they've touched something beyond reason, but even speaking of that is careless. If they talked, Omega herself wouldn't know what backlash might descend upon the world.

However—

Omega: "The "I-want-to-teach" bug inside me is writhing, wanting to see what happens to the world as a result of my teaching…"

Lilac: "…Are you entertaining something frightening? Don't take what Shion says too literally. My wish is, first and foremost, ensuring safety."

Palmira: "Uwah, you scared me! Don't just switch all of a sudden!"

What startled Palmira was that someone different appeared where Shion should have been.

The person there wore the same outfit as Shion, but with different hair color and features: Lilac. A multiple-personality bearer, Shion and Lilac share a single body as two-in-one; depending on which personality is at the fore, their outward appearance switches drastically, like a dream or an illusion.

Omega: "In this world, the body is deeply influenced by the state of the soul. The body, as the vessel that contains the soul, changes its form to suit the soul however it may—but watching you two strongly corroborates the truth of that theory, and it's a great feast for the eyes."

Lilac: "Viewed like that, it feels like we're being looked at as lab animals, which doesn't feel great. Besides, you don't need to verify it with us—wouldn't it be more appropriate for you to look in a mirror?"

Omega: "A mirror… ah, you mean my hair and my eyes."

At Lilac's furrow-browed point, Omega ran her fingers through her own hair.

Omega's hair had originally been pink, but now that the pigment had drained, it was closer to gray. Where it would arrive was white—the soul of the Witch of Greed that had settled into this vessel; it should draw nearer to that. In fact, the color of her eyes was also shifting from blue to a blue-tinged black, and before long even her height and facial features—her appearance—would be remade to match the soul.

It was, precisely as Lilac said, a fine example of the body being pulled along by the soul.

Omega: "When that change fully progresses, I'm curious how you'll treat me. Given the relationships we've built so far, I'd like to hope you won't vomit on me."

Lilac: "What you're anxious about is whether we'll puke on you…? I'd like to say, "Really?" but in your case it might not be a baseless fear, so your concern is understandable."

Palmira: "Lilac's made "Recollection Realm"? It was a lot better when I saw it in that dream, but—"

Recalling the events in "Sylphoa" the other day, Palmira hugged her own shoulders.

Even if she put it delicately as "a lot better," the truth was that it had taken a toll. Not just Omega's soul—standing before a "Witch" puts that much strain on mind and body.

Omega: "Judging from Palmira's condition, though, it might be possible to gradually acclimate to the load?"

If so, Omega wouldn't be averse to regularly manifesting as the Witch of Greed, to build up Colette's and Palmira's tolerance for facing a "Witch."

Colette: "But but, if it's a town not troubled by snow, then we really should tell them about that witchbeast earlier, right? I think everyone would be terribly shocked."

Noelle: "Indeed, my lady. In heavy-snow regions, damage from witchbeasts is actually rarer, but with this degree of snowfall, the threat from beasts should be the greater fear. I believe they will be pleased to hear of the witchbeast Omega-sama felled."

While Omega and the others exchanged views about "Witches" and the nature of the soul, Colette and Noelle's conversation—minding the safety of people's lives—was grounded.

In fact, their opinions hit the mark. Even in Gusteko, in certain areas not threatened by snow damage, the harm from witchbeasts is taken far more seriously. All the more so since the Snow Blight's territory had been right around the town.

Sooner or later, it would have been inevitable that there be human casualties—and—

Omega: “Or perhaps there already have been. Behold.”

Palmira: “Behold what… ah.”

Prompted by the jerk of Omega’s chin, Palmira looked that way and widened her eyes.

At the base of the welcome gate bearing the town’s name, “Limbus,” several placards had been set up. On them were numerous cautions—“No going out after midnight,” “No going out alone,” “Observe the Oath of the Holy Church.” That in itself wasn’t unusual, but—

Omega: “There are rather a lot of placards. Many of the letters look scrawled, and they used plenty of red ink. To put it bluntly, isn’t it ghastly?”

Palmira: “F-For once, I agree with Omega. It’s kind of creepy—should we just skip stopping by…?”

Noelle: “Regrettably, our water and provisions are not reassuring.”

Sensing the town’s foreboding air, Palmira slumped at Noelle’s reply.

It was unfortunate for Palmira, but following the well-traveled Noelle’s opinion was best here.

Among the Four Great Nations, each has its own traits that make journeys difficult: Kararagi with its many deserts; the subtropical Vollachia with its changeable weather; Lugunica with its many witchbeasts. Covered in permafrost, Gusteko is particularly high in difficulty. Thorough preparations are essential.

Colette: “It’s okay, Palmira, don’t be disheartened! Maybe it’s just a lot of worrywarts. And, and, we took down such a rough-and-tumble witchbeast. When they hear that, I’m sure everyone will be happy!”

Palmira: “Y-Yeah, you’re right. There’s no way we’d just keep getting dragged into disaster everywhere we go! What kind of rotten luck would that be? We deserve something good once in a while!”

Colette: “Yes, yes! I think so too! That’s the spirit!”

Forced cheer is still cheer; hand in hand, Colette and Palmira spoke of a positive outlook. That said, Omega also nodded deeply, conceding there was reason in their words.

As a matter of fact, ever since Omega left the “Sanctuary,” there had been no end of trouble on the road.

Extremely speaking, meeting Colette and Palmira had itself been due to trouble, and Noelle’s joining them had begun with a certain murder case. As for Shion and Lilac, they were bona fide dream-terrorists with a history of trapping an entire town in a castle of dreams.

Even for Omega and company, beset by one trouble after another, it should be time for a peaceful spell.

Omega: “On that point, we’re even bringing a gift to show a friendly stance toward the town. And the sky—clear weather rare for Gusteko—surely that’s a good omen.”

4

—And then, only a dozen-odd minutes after speaking to the girls of a rosy outlook.

In the square at the town’s center, Omega and the others were surrounded by residents with bloodshot eyes, clutching farm tools.

Omega: “Good grief. Visit a town without incident, leave a town without incident… is that asking too much?”

Palmira: “When you say it, it really starts to feel like it is asking too much, so shut up!”

Colette: “Wait, wait, no making a scene, you two! You’ll scare everyone!”

Shaking her head loosely side to side, Omega was clung to from left and right by Palmira and Colette. Meanwhile, the older pair, Noelle and Lilac, took a stance facing the surroundings while shielding the three.

Biting her nail with a bitter look as she quietly swept her gaze around, Lilac said,

Lilac: “I missed my chance to switch with Shion… can’t you do something?”

Noelle: “If you mean by force, it is not impossible… but unless we can silence the townsfolk, there is a risk the Holy Church will brand us heretics. If that happens, the end of it would be flight abroad.”

Lilac: “Silencing the whole town… ugh, you’re so noisy! I’m not doing it! I only thought of it! Stop squealing in my head!”

She probably hadn’t seriously considered Noelle’s proposal, but it seemed a brain-internal meeting with Shion had started inside Lilac’s head. To onlookers it was an amusing one-person play, but at that rate there would be no hope of holding a grand memory-rewriting festival by means of large-scale dream arts.

For Omega, who was intensely interested in the potential of dream arts, that was very vexing.

Omega: “Well now, it doesn’t look like we’ve been surrounded by the town guard. Their weapons are farm tools, their stances are amateurish, and what’s foremost in them is fear and dread rather than a sense of duty. It’s a development I’m fairly used to, but what are they aiming for, I wonder?”

Noelle: “I can well imagine how much Omega-sama has suffered up to now, but please leave this to me. —If you would, we would like you to hear us out.”

Speaking gently to those around them, Noelle gave a mild, calm smile. Faced with Noelle’s smile, Omega could see the vigilance of the encircling townspeople ease a little.

As expected, among this group Noelle had the second-gentlest appearance after Colette. If it were Omega or Lilac, their long ears stood out; Palmira's distrust of the world gave her a hard look. Wanting to make a good first impression now, Noelle was the optimal choice.

In fact, the townspeople were, at heart, a gathering of non-aggressive commoners. Some form of mistrust and caution had given rise to a misunderstanding, but once that cleared, they would put down their weapons and, instead, offer handshakes.

Noelle: "We bear no hostility toward you. Rather, we would like to be on friendly terms. Allow us to show you proof of that."

Saying this, Noelle knelt on the spot and set down the large furoshiki bundle she had been carrying.

It was larger than an adult's arms could encircle and had a solid heft; among Omega's party, the only one able to carry this gift was Noelle.

While the townspeople watched, Noelle slowly untied the furoshiki and—

Crowd: "—?!"

Noelle: "It is a large, fearsome witchbeast that was right near your town."

What rolled out, asserting its presence to the fullest, was the head of a large witchbeast taken from the Snow Blight whose entire body had been crystallized.

Because the cause of death was crystallization, the severed head lacked the raw vividness of a corpse and had a made thing's feel to it, but a careful look would show that the expression at the end and the shaping of the fur were inhabited by the real thing.

Of course, they could have reported the subjugation without a corpse, but they had thought having the actual article would be more convincing, and since it happened to have come off cleanly, they had brought it along like this.

Noelle: “I trust this makes it clear. We are your allies who slew a witchbeast that threatened to harm the town, and—”

???: “—Witch.”

Suddenly, as if to cut off Noelle’s words, it struck Omega’s earlobes unerringly.

That word was unmistakable, a word in this world whispered from anyone’s lips with a sound mixed of fear and loathing, like a curse. All hesitate to utter it, and yet once it tumbles out, they cannot help but speak it, like a flood once a dam is breached—

Crowd: “Doing something that cruel to a witchbeast… a witch.” “Has to be a witch.” “Then they’re a coven of witches?” “Good grief, what do we do?” “If it’s a witch, there’s only one thing.” “Witches…” “Witch.” “Witch.” “Witch.”

Palmira: “H-Hey, Omega? This is, this is, you know, that, right?!”

Omega: “I don’t understand what they’re saying, but I do somehow get what they mean.”

As Palmira clung to her in a panic, squeezing her arms hard enough to creak, Omega divined the reason the air felt heavy and even murky in a town blessed with clear skies.

To be honest, this was not Omega’s first time in such an atmosphere. If anything, in the era when the soul within Omega—the Witch of Greed—lived, this had been a relatively common development.

The townspeople were excessively afraid of witches. —Conversely, that meant there was a reason.

Omega: “Colette, do not use the bracelet. Lilac, no switching with Shion for a while.”

Colette: “Huh? Okay, I got it, Omega-chan.”

Lilac: “…Even without being told, I wouldn’t switch in a place with this many eyes on us.”

With brief words, Colette and Lilac nodded to Omega's instructions. Pleased with their response, Omega pondered for a moment whether to leave things to Noelle as-is. There was a means to move the situation along quickly, but should she really do it—

Woman: "—Everyone, stand back. I have arrived."

Fortunately, for better or worse, that voice came from outside the circle before Omega did anything.

On a hair trigger, the townspeople opened a path to let the owner of the voice through.

What came out of the circle was a woman with dark-navy hair cut short. Baby-faced and short of stature, at first glance she looked about fourteen or fifteen, though she was surely older in years.

For—

Colette: "Look, look. Her outfit is the same uniform Noelle-san is wearing."

Just as wide-eyed Colette pointed out, the newcomer's attire was that of a formal believer of the Gusteko Holy Church, indicating, like Noelle's, the position of an Itinerant Preacher.

Moreover, the woman's relationship with Noelle was not merely that they were of the same order.

Noelle: "Nananna? Is that you, Nananna?"

Nananna: "Ah, as this one thought, that voice was Noelle's, it is."

Recognizing Noelle, who stood before her with a look of surprise, the Itinerant Preacher addressed as Nananna gave a quiet nod.

Then Nananna glanced at the Snow Blight's head lying at Noelle's feet and said,

Nananna: "—. This one has grasped the general course of events, it is."

With that, Nananna stepped to shield Omega and the others at her back and turned to face the townspeople.

And—

Nananna: “These people are not witches. This one has guaranteed it. In particular, this Noelle here is an Itinerant Preacher like this one… a believer who spreads the Holy Church’s teachings.”

???: “The same as Nananna-sama…! That was an outrageous discourtesy—”

At Nananna’s words, the townspeople hastily lowered their weapons and bowed their heads to them.

Seeing this, Palmira also finally released Omega’s arms, and Omega was relieved.

Nananna: “This one apologizes as well for frightening you, it is.”

Omega: “No, you stepping in helped. If things had gone on like that, in the worst case this town might have been erased from the map of Gusteko. Hahaha.”

Palmira: “Don’t say something so violent when things were finally coming together!”

Lilac: “That’s not a joke one can laugh at…”

It had been meant as a message not to take it too much to heart, but met with two rapid-fire rebukes from Palmira and Lilac, Omega made a note to herself that there was room to improve her thoughtfulness.

At any rate, that they were saved was a fact, and that things had been dangerous before that was also a fact.

Noelle: “Nananna, meeting like this was a very happy coincidence… but the reaction of everyone just now was not normal. It seemed they put more weight on something other than the witchbeast being slain…”

Nananna: “Perceptive, Noelle. …Right now, Limbus is facing a bit of a problem. This one was dispatched by the Holy Church’s instruction to deal with it, it is.”

Omega: “A problem, hm.”

A glance showed that the townspeople who had been holding farm tools and pokers were in a dispersing mood, though they wore an awkwardness toward Omega and the others. However, the expressions from which hostility had drained bore not relief, but something like an indelible anxiety or sense of crisis stuck upon them.

And that was not unrelated to the word they had all spoken a short while ago.

Lilac: “They said “witch,” didn’t they.”

Nananna: “Right now in Limbus, strange mysterious-death cases have been occurring one after another. And it is being whispered to everyone that the culprit behind those deaths is a witch, it is.”

5

Palmira: “Haah—somehow, somehow, I finally feel human again—!”

Saying so in an exaggerated voice, Palmira dove sprawled-out onto the bed. As she lay back without changing out of her traveling clothes, Noelle cautioned her, “You will soil it.”

At Noelle’s warning, Palmira shifted atop the bed and said,

Palmira: “I know, I know, but a little bit’s fine, isn’t it? I mean, I thought trouble was going to break out again the moment we entered town, and I could barely breathe.”

Noelle: “Indeed. Judging from Nananna’s demeanor, the townsfolk too seemed to be under much mental strain, so I understand what you are saying, Palmira-sama.”

Palmira: “Right? And if you’re going to talk about manners, it’s not just me…”

As she spoke, Palmira cast a glance at the bed next to the one she was sprawled on—at the figure who had flopped there before Palmira did: Shion.

She was clinging to the bed with her arms even more exuberantly than Palmira, and—

Shion: “Ahh, I blew it big time. Because I messed up the timing to switch with Lilac, I can’t come out to the front for a while. …I shouldn’t come out, right?”

Noelle: “Er, that would be, well…”

Omega: “Noelle, clumsy consolation would only be cruel. Better to say it plainly. Shion’s suspicion is correct. You should avoid being seen in this town.”

Shion: “Aw man, I figured as much. I really did it this time. So bummed.”

Hearing that and letting her head loll, Shion left Palmira with question marks over her head. She probably didn’t grasp the meaning of the exchange. Understandable, if you’re not from Gusteko.

Omega wasn’t from Gusteko either, but she knew the age of the witches instead.

Noelle: “Colette-sama? You don’t look well—are you all right?”

Noticing Colette standing by the entrance with her head lowered, Noelle—who had set down the luggage at the edge of the room and was taking off her coat—called out to her.

Normally, when they came to a new town, inn, or general store, Colette would take the lead in looking around everywhere, but this time there wasn’t a trace of that liveliness.

The reason was easy enough to guess—indeed, it was the same factor roiling this town.

Omega: “Colette was treated as a witch in her hometown. That’s weighing on her chest, I imagine.”

Colette: “Ah, Omega-chan…”

Omega: “Well, I figured it’d be hard to say from your own mouth. It’s better for someone who knows the circumstances to explain, to avoid misunderstandings. It’s my way of being considerate… Hm? You’re making a rather expressive face. What’s the matter?”

Palmira: “Your thoughtfulness isn’t considerate enough! Ugh, honestly!”

Scolding the head-tilting Omega, Palmira hopped down from the bed, pattered over to Colette, and squeezed her hand tight. Colette blinked at her friend’s concern, then let her lips soften.

Colette: “No, Omega-chan isn’t wrong. It’s true. I was called a witch in my village too, so what we heard just now made my heart feel heavy.”

Palmira: “You don’t need to apologize. If anything, I’m sorry for not noticing. I knew your circumstances—and I should have known what was in your heart.”

Omega: “—Somehow, the way that sounded makes it seem like I’m the one who doesn’t understand people’s hearts, doesn’t it?”

Noelle: “Omega-sama, this is an important moment for the two of them.”

Feeling somehow unconvinced, Omega nevertheless backed off obediently at Noelle’s words.

For the moment, leaving care of the younger ones’ hearts to the younger ones, Omega and the others in the older group decided to talk among themselves. The agenda, of course, was—

Noelle: “—The witch hunts, yes.”

Shion: “Mm, just hearing the words makes my back prickle. On that front, do you have any comments from the perspective of Omega-san, who has a whole lot to say about witches?”

Omega: “Well, witches being hounded is the same in any era. I don’t think it’s anything particularly rare. You and Lilac, as elves considered ill-omened because of the Witch of Envy, should be especially careful about your surroundings in this town.”

Shion: “Right. It’s a problem that, basically, Lilac has to be the one out front. She’s surprisingly clumsy at times so—waaah, don’t yell at me!”

Omega: “That in-head conference of yours is as amusing as ever.”

It seemed Lilac had lodged a vehement protest at Shion’s needless remark, though the details were unknown.

At any rate, what they knew was this: right now in the town of Limbus there were these so-called mysterious deaths; at present the culprit was considered to be a witch, and a witch-hunt was underway.

Omega: “And we’re a veritable treasure trove of people who, if someone wanted to force it, could easily be tied to “witches.” Myself goes without saying; Shion and Lilac are elves and heretical Dream Arts Users; Colette’s Beast Protection Bracelet is a “Meteor” detested by the Holy Church; and Palmira has an evil look in her eyes.”

Noelle: “Palmira-sama aside, I agree regarding Shion-sama, Lilac-sama, and Colette-sama. Please all mind your conduct in this town… including you as well, Omega-sama.”

Omega: “Ah, no need to worry. I’ve done plenty of hiding my identity and going to ground in the past.”

Of course, even if she was exposed as a witch and pursued, she had enough ability to cut down her pursuers; but there was no advantage in needless trouble, so as a rule she acted with her true identity concealed. The other witches as well—she would like to say—but for Carmilla, simply appearing in public was enough to trigger a calamity; Daphne and Typhon lacked that sort of consideration; and if you count the shut-in Sekhmet and the never-stopping Minerva as out of the question, that left only herself as the sensible one.

Shion: “Huh? Omega-san, it looks like your necklace is blinking?”

Omega: “It’s something like the Lilac in your head. Protests from my friends. Unfortunately, I can’t carelessly answer them in this town.”

After all, the whole populace was pouring their hearts into witch hunts in that frame of mind. Make any careless, suspicious move and you could be denounced as a “witch” and hauled before a trial.

Omega: “In that sense, is Nananna playing a role like a judge in the witch trials? Noelle, do you Itinerant Preachers ever take on such roles?”

Noelle: “…Given how unusual situations like witch hunts and witch trials are, I cannot readily say yes, but we are at times appointed to a role of offering opinions from a neutral stance to resolve disputes.”

At Noelle’s answer, delivered with a hand to her chin, Omega nodded, satisfied.

By position, an Itinerant Preacher does not stay long in any one municipality, but travels to preach the Holy Church’s teachings. In short, to the town they are fundamentally trustworthy outsiders, and are often entrusted with roles that tout fairness from a third-party standpoint. In that sense, a judge in a witch trial is indeed a good fit.

Omega: “What remains is whether Nananna herself is capable. What’s your impression?”

Noelle: “To the best of my knowledge, Nananna is an excellent Itinerant Preacher. She excels more in wisdom and stratagem than in force of arms, and as we were apprentices at the same time, she taught me reading and writing and we often spoke about interpretations of the holy scriptures.”

Shion: “I see—so “same-bloom stalwarts,” then. Isn’t that a fine relationship!”

Noelle: ““same-bloom stalwarts,” you say…?”

At Shion’s “otherworld word,” spoken with a clenched fist, Noelle wore a puzzled look. Omega deliberately refrained from commenting and set her thoughts to the state of the town.

If Noelle’s words were to be trusted, then as an excellent Itinerant Preacher Nananna was in a position to control the witch hunt in order to resolve the mysterious deaths occurring in the town. However, there was no outlook on solving the crucial cases, and the townspeople’s anxiety was only mounting.

Omega: “And then we sauntered in, carrying a witchbeast’s head. It’s only natural they’d think we provoked them as much as possible. I’m sorry for you, Noelle, after meeting an acquaintance for the first time in a while, but once we’ve made our preparations it seems best to depart quickly.”

Shion: “Right—super big yes from me! …Is what I’d like to say, but is that all right with you, Noelle-san?”

Noelle: “Me?”

Called on by name, Noelle pointed to herself in surprise. Shion answered “Yes” with a nod, and, from atop the bed, turned her gaze out the room’s window to the streets of Limbus.

The color of the sky, gradually nearing dusk—the town there was ruled by a heavy air at odds with that brightness.

Shion: “It’s just a feeling, but I kind of think Nananna-san is someone important to you, Noelle-san. Not just “same-bloom stalwarts,” but, like, a bestie…”

Omega: “Shion seems to suspect you’re especially close. How is it?”

Omega hadn’t thought of it at all, but was Shion’s intuition right? After a short silence, Noelle nodded. “Yes.”

Noelle: “I do not know if one could say “close,” but I owe Nananna a great debt… concerning my homeland.”

Shion: “Your homeland, Noelle-san?”

Omega: “…Ah, I see. I have a general idea.”

Shion tilted her head at Noelle’s troubled expression, but Omega nodded in understanding.

—Originally, behind Noelle becoming an Itinerant Preacher lay the loss of her home and family to an avalanche, and a goal of revenge against those who caused that avalanche.

However, her target for revenge spread money around to cover up the truth and ingratiated themselves with those in power. Though she had a will for revenge, Noelle should not have known where to point it.

In regard to that revenge, Nananna must have lent her strength in some form.

Omega: “Perhaps by procuring records, helping to parse the facts, or obtaining credible information… something along those lines.”

Noelle: “…Omega-sama, you truly see through everything, do you not.”

Omega: “Please don’t. It’s merely conjecture and inference. Being called all-seeing is, for someone who prides herself on her curiosity, the most frightening evaluation.”

Shion: “For the record, the thing I fear most is steamed buns! Followed by really hot tea!”

As if she had been waiting for her cue, Shion tossed out a joke that only Omega would understand, so Omega added, “Looks like that’s our cue,” as a tag.

While Shion rejoiced at that, Omega shrugged at Noelle’s troubled face and said, Omega: “As I said, my opinion is that we should leave town promptly. But if you wish to repay your debt to Nananna, I won’t press you.”

Noelle: “…Is that acceptable? Matters between Nananna and me are of no concern to you, Omega-sama and the others.”

Omega: “That is—”

Colette: “—Please don’t say something so sad, Noelle-san!”

It was Colette who cut in, saying so over Omega’s reply to the timidly inquiring Noelle.

Perhaps having settled the ragged feelings raised in her and Palmira by the word “witch,” Colette wore her usual meddlesomeness on her cute face and—

Colette: “You want to help your friend, don’t you, Noelle-san? Yes, yes—then we want to help too. If she’s your friend, she’s our friend!”

Palmira: “…Well, I, for one, think that’s not quite right.”

Colette: “She’s our friend! And not just that. If the townspeople are anxious about witches, I can’t help wanting to do something for them. Is that strange?”

Tilting her head, Colette looked around at those in the room and asked.

Probably, judged by common sense, Colette’s thinking was the opinion of an oddball. The world teaches that “witches,” real or fake, top the list of things one should not get involved with.

And yet, the reason Colette clenched her fist and tried to press on without avoiding it was—

Omega: “Hm, perhaps it’s her innate recklessness. Colette’s surprisingly fearless.”

Palmira: “No, it’s your influence! Don’t play dumb, “witch”!”

Omega: “…Palmira, have you forgotten the town’s situation? I’d prefer you not go calling me a “witch” so carelessly. You never know what might prove fatal.”

Palmira: “Grr—!”

Shion: “Now, now, now! Please calm down, Palmira-san! I think I’m on the side that understands what you want to say! Probably—maybe! Am I using “maybe” right?”

Omega: “Correct.”

Setting aside Palmira, who was stamping her feet with a red face, they had Colette’s opinion. Omega had already stated her own; that left Shion & Lilac and Palmira.

Shion: “I’m fine with whatever everyone decides, I guess. No matter how I try, this time the approach has to be left to Lilac, and I feel keenly that I’m in a position without much say.”

Omega: “I see. And Lilac?”

Lilac: “—It galls me, but I’m of the same opinion as Shion. For now, being with you all takes priority.”

After answering as Shion, she dutifully switched to Lilac and properly answered Omega’s question. She promptly switched back to Shion with a “That’s what she says”, but they had confirmed her intent.

Colette: “Um, um, and Palmira—how about you?”

Palmira: “…I don’t want anything to do with “witches.” Ugh, I don’t want to get any more involved! And stop giving me those meaningful looks every single time!”

Omega: “I’d like to plead not guilty, but never mind. Go on.”

Palmira: “Guh… Anyway, truthfully, I want to leave town right away. But I don’t want to drag Noelle along when her heart’s still here. If we’re going to help… then I’ll help.”

Noelle: “Palmira-sama…! Everyone…”

Noelle looked moved by the not-so-honest Palmira, who tried to put on a reluctant air.

From Omega’s perspective, once Colette was in favor it was mostly a foregone conclusion. Palmira couldn’t go against Colette, and Omega wanted to see the results of their choice. Shion and Lilac couldn’t leave Omega and the others, so the helm was in Colette’s hands.

Omega: “Well then, since that’s settled, we should hear the details from Nananna. The specifics of the cases and the profile of the wanted culprit… though as for the latter, given how they acted even toward us outsiders, I doubt they’ve narrowed it down.”

Noelle: “No, I am sure Nananna will also find you reassuring. I can proudly guarantee that you are all dependable people.”

Thumping her ample chest, Noelle nodded with a forward-looking face. Then she reached for the coat she had just taken off, and as she slipped her arms into it—

Noelle: “Then I shall go and fetch Nananna.”

Colette: “Mm-Mm, we can’t just leave it to you, Noelle-san. I think Nananna-san would be happier if we told her we all want to help.”

Palmira: “Eh? B-But I only just took off my boots that had gone cold at the inn… Fine, fine.”

Wilting under their looks mid-conversation, Palmira tearfully began putting back on the boots she’d taken off. In that vein, everyone moved to don once more the traveling clothes they had already shed.

Watching that, Omega gave a small “hm” of breath and looked out the window.

And then—

Omega: “Noelle, it seems we’ve been spared the trouble of going to look for Nananna.”

Noelle: “Eh…?”

Omega: “Because it looks like she’s come to visit us from the other side.”

At the spot Omega pointed to as she spoke—hurrying up to the inn’s entrance—was Nananna herself, whom they had only just parted from in the square.

6

—Because Limbus was not covered by thick snow clouds, even at night it was faintly lit by starlight, and they could make out one another’s faces without torches.

Omega: “That said, there’s no point in not carrying a torch or lagmite ore when walking around at night, so I suppose that was a rather pointlessly sentimental thought.”

Palmira: “…You really can keep running your mouth even at a time like this… ah, forget it. Saying it’s pointless, and saying it anyway just makes me feel like an idiot.”

Omega: “I don’t know if it’s any comfort, but by the standard of your age, you’re quite a clever girl.”

Palmira: “Yeah yeah yeah yeah.”

Brushed off despite the honest praise, Omega shrugged with a weary air. —Omega and the others were now moving as a group through Limbus’s night streets toward their destination.

The party numbered nearly fifty, a large group; the great majority were townsmen of Limbus, and the few women—Omega’s party aside—were limited to Nananna at the front.

Omega: “Me, on a witch hunt. How ironic.”

As that under-the-breath remark implied, the group’s objective was a witch hunt—ostensibly the apprehension and questioning of a townsman who had been denounced as a “witch.”

Right after hearing at the inn about Noelle’s relationship with Nananna and deciding to help resolve the “witch” problem menacing the town, Nananna came to visit and asked for cooperation on the witch hunt. Strictly speaking, only Noelle was asked—and that was because the strength behind the Snow Blight they had brought as a gift had been recognized. However—

Noelle: “It was not I who slew the witchbeast. This Omega-sama did it by herself, without any danger… She is not only powerful, but very quick-witted, and dependable!”

Nananna: “…This one is doubtful. Where would such an urchin have obtained such power and wisdom, it is?”

Omega: “An old skill I picked up back in the day, perhaps.”

—there had been some exchanges that walked a fine and dangerous line.

Fortunately, the trust between Noelle and Nananna was not one-way from Noelle; it seemed Nananna, too, placed considerable trust in her. Thanks to that, Nananna shelved her doubts about Omega for the time being and permitted them to accompany the witch hunt.

To be frank, Omega had thought Palmira and Colette—who was forbidden to use her “Meteor”—could stay behind, but they said they would be more uneasy being left, so everyone came.

Lilac: “Why do I have to do this…? A witch hunt is no joke.”

And so, naturally, Lilac—recognized by the townsfolk as one of Omega’s group—was with them as well. Perhaps out of habit, she was biting her nails; like Omega, she seemed to have mixed feelings. If you’re an elf, you’ve probably been treated as a “witch” once or twice.

Omega felt that, if she said “Then put that experience to use,” it would not be taken as advice, so she swallowed the urge to say it.

Nananna: “This time, the one denounced as a witch is a general store merchant named Piditz, it is.”

While Omega wrestled with that, the leading Nananna began her explanation.

It was only natural that the outsider Omega’s group had no idea who he was, but the other townsfolk participating in the witch hunt were not the same. Perhaps because everyone knew the named Piditz, whispers of anger, abuse, and grievances against him rose on all sides.

Colette: “Uu, everyone’s faces are so scary…”

Sensing the mood around them, Colette looked about anxiously.

For the gentle and guileless girl, it was a harsh situation, but considering the state of mind of townsfolk driven to carry out a witch hunt, one could say they were still quite composed.

Omega knew all too well, and up close, just how terrifying and frenzied people could become when they lost their wits over “witches.”

Most likely, what kept their hearts from reaching a decisive breaking point was Nananna’s presence—the trust that someone of the Gusteko Holy Church was striving to resolve the situation. That it seemed to be something won not simply by borrowing the name and prestige of the Gusteko Holy Church, but by Nananna’s actions and bearing, was proof of the excellence Noelle had spoken of.

Nananna: “Our goal is, after all, to secure Piditz’s person, it is. The questioning will be conducted by this one, it is. For that reason, refrain from reckless acts, it is.”

Reining the townsfolk in so they would not run wild, Nananna halted. The witch hunt party arrived before the general store—the building that combined shop and residence.

???: “…”

When Nananna quietly raised a hand and glanced around, the townsfolk began, without the need for words, to slowly surround the building. From the look of things, this was not most townsfolk's first witch hunt. They acted like people who knew the drill.

Omega: "Which also means they haven't drawn the correct answer."

If they had already conducted the witch hunt several times and the real "witch" had not been caught, then what had happened to those who weren't—and why had they been denounced?

There seemed to be no time now to dig deeply into those matters.

Omega: "Colette and Palmira, stay with Lilac. You've got quick eyes, don't you?"

Lilac: "…Noelle is up front, but your hands are free."

Omega: "You three are the ones who can't move carelessly. It's easier to handle things if you stick together. As for me, it seems I'm being counted on as fighting strength."

Since Noelle had explained to Nananna that Omega had slain the Snow Blight, offering to help and then doing no work could easily win them ill will.

Lilac sighed; taking that as consent, Omega fluttered her hand and started forward to link up with Noelle and Nananna—and just then—

Palmira: "—Huh, is that…?"

The faintly foolish-sounding voice came from Palmira, who had turned her eyes down a side street.

At the very rear of the group surrounding the general store, scanning the world on the bias as always, she had spotted a figure peering at them from the depths of an alley and spoke up.

At once, someone who had looked down the alley at her voice cried out.

???: "It's Piditz!!"

With the name of the man in question—the man denounced as a "witch"—shouted, agitation ran through the group in an instant. Had the man sensed the witch hunt's movements in advance and abandoned his workplace? Faced with a kind of trouble they had likely not encountered before, the townsfolk looked hurriedly at one another—but—

Nananna: "Chase at once, it is! Noelle, with this one, it is."

Noelle: "Of course!"

Kicking up snow, the first to move were the two Itinerant Preachers, veterans of rough affairs.

Roused by their shout that struck their eardrums, the townsfolk who had started to falter quickly pulled themselves together. Chasing after Noelle and the others at the lead, they surged into the alley with a roar.

Omega: "Wait. It's pointless for everyone to chase the same way. Better to head them off down the alleys. Prioritize cutting off the escape routes."

Before everyone plunged into the alley, Omega called out; about half the townsfolk agreed that made sense and scattered to get ahead.

Colette: "Omega-chan!"

Omega: "You stay right there. I'll be right back."

Answering Colette's call thus, Omega thought a moment and then hurried to join the heading-off team.

Even so, she likely would not have a turn to act. She knew nothing about this Piditz, but being chased by Noelle, a powerful Itinerant Preacher, and her colleague Nananna—there was no way he could get away. Nor could he slip past nearly fifty men's eyes. And Omega, slow as she was—by the time she arrived, it would all be over. She said it herself.

In fact, Omega lost sight not only of Noelle and those who had followed them, but even of the trailing group that had set out to get ahead and block the escape routes; she tr—walked alone down the dark street at night—no, she was running.

Omega: “Haa, haa… well, I’ll praise myself just for not slipping on the snow…”

She was not slacking. She had tried her utmost. Once she met up with Noelle, the plan was to have the sweat on her brow as proof and have her contribution recognized—and——immediately after, there was a tremendous sound of something falling, right behind Omega.

Omega: “…”

She halted and looked back, narrowing her eyes. In the dim street, she saw that “something” had appeared on the road she had just passed—something that had not been there a moment before. Keeping the motionless thing in her sight, Omega closed the distance step by step.

Then, the starlight made clear what that “something” was—it was the corpse of a man, limbs twisted into grotesque shapes, blood spattered everywhere.

And just as she confirmed that—

???: “—A-A witch appeared! A witch has appeared!!”

A townsman who had heard the same sound and rushed to the scene cried out.

Noticing that the man’s gaze was fixed on Omega, who was beside the corpse, she looked up at the sky.

Omega: “Good grief… I’ve already been caught once when I was alive; it’s an experience I’d rather not repeat.”

—Ironically, before being seized in a witch hunt as a “witch,” Omega had grumbled thus.

7

—The cold, damp air gives the lungs an unpleasant feeling.

Rusty iron bars, and a floor dirtied with dust on which old straw had been spread. The unsanitary air leaves a gritty sensation on the tongue, making it a place that evokes a physiological disgust that makes one hesitate to linger. All the same, considering the purpose of the place, it’s probably correct that it gives such an impression.

After all, it is a prison where those who have committed sins are confined.

Witch: “In my experience, a jail isn’t there to lock people up; it’s there for the peace of mind of the people outside. “The criminal’s already been caught, so it’s fine”… In this case, you could say it’s to make them think, “The ‘witch’ has already been caught, so we can relax.”“

In that dim space, the “witch’s” voice was spun out dispassionately, and yet fluently. From inside the iron bars, despite being the one confined, there was nothing in her tone that let one feel it.

What kept her from seeming weak was not just the “witch’s” manner of speaking, but perhaps her choice of topic as well. In the way she gave her impressions about cells, there was not a trace of pathos or a pessimistic hue.

Witch: “Incidentally, the reason straw is spread on a cell’s floor isn’t for warmth or for bedding; it’s to soak up blood, vomit, and excreta. So a cell that doesn’t get its straw replaced quickly turns into a sick ward, and the prisoners inside die off in droves.”

???: “…”

Witch: “Oh? Did that not strike your fancy? It’s far too out of the blue to bring up in everyday conversation, so I figured now that I’m in a cell is exactly when I ought to trot out this trivia.”

???: “…Trivia or whatever, I don’t know, but you really never change, do you.”

At that nonchalant “witch’s” manner of speaking, a response of exasperation slipped out through the bars.

Inside, there was a part of her that felt a bit saved by the “witch’s” business-as-usual, but Palmira decided she’d never say that aloud, not even over her dead body. In any case, the situation was far from reassuring. The fact that the “witch” wasn’t more dejected than expected was the lowest of the low even among good news.

Colette: “Omega-chan, it’s okay. It’s just a misunderstanding. I’m sure, I’m sure you’ll be out right away!”

Omega: ““Just a misunderstanding,” huh. I’m not sure you can state that so definitively. After all, what the townsfolk are searching for is a “witch.” It’s true that, in the sense of the “witch” who caused this uproar, it wouldn’t be accurate, but if you narrow it down to only the single point of being a “witch,” then I also…”

Palmira: “You don’t have to say any more than that. Ah, seriously, my head hurts…”

To Colette, clinging to the bars with worry, the pitiless “witch’s” reply was circuitous and off the mark. To prevent that extra fact from spreading, she shut her up before she could go on, and Palmira let out a deep sigh.

In truth, the “witch’s” concern lay there as a great worry, but an issue prior to that had been casting a deep shadow over their journey again and again.

Because—

Omega: “…”The witch” has been caught by a witch hunt. Now then, how shall we talk our way out of this? Should be quite a sight, no?”

Palmira: “Why are you, the very person in question, acting like it’s someone else’s problem!”

And there, in such a desperate predicament, the captive “witch”—Omega—was wearing a faint smile.

—The town of Limbus, where they stopped over in the midst of their journey.

That Omega and company were caught up in the swirl of serial mysterious-death cases occurring in that town is something that, by now, can only be explained by suspecting some kind of curse or conspiracy.

After all, despite being asked to help resolve the incidents, before they knew it Omega had been nabbed as the "witch," a candidate for the culprit. Unless it was someone's ill will, it doesn't add up.

Colette: "But we only came to this town by chance. And yet someone doing something nasty to Omega-chan is weird—just weird."

Lilac: "There's a saying in the world: "one's everyday conduct." She brazenly talks about her bad tastes all the time. Isn't it only natural that one or two bolts of divine punishment would strike her?"

Shion: "L-Lilac-san, saying it like that is… um, Omega-chan is, uh, um…"

Noelle: "Lilac-sama, please go a little easier… Colette-sama is on the verge of tears…"

At Lilac's opinion, merciless even toward one of their own, Colette tried to chide her and failed. Even Colette, it seems, can't fully defend Omega's usual words and deeds. Well, small wonder.

Be that as it may—

Palmira: "It's too late to harp on how bad Omega's everyday conduct is. But that doesn't mean Omega did it. We're all in agreement on that, right?"

At Palmira's confirmation, though the strength varied, all their companions nodded back.

Frankly, even among her own, Omega's character doesn't have favorable standing, but Palmira and the others have no intention of accepting that as a reason to let her be saddled with a false charge.

—Last night, a witch hunt to secure the person who had been informed upon as a “witch” was carried out in Limbus, and Omega and the others were roped in to help. In the midst of that, one of the hunters was found as a bizarre corpse killed by a power beyond human ken, and, as ill luck would have it, Omega was discovered right beside the body and came under suspicion as a “witch.”

Of course, as Colette said, since the witch uproar itself had been happening since before Omega and the others arrived in Limbus, the suspicion that Omega was the “witch” at the root of the chaos should have been cleared up immediately. —It should have been, but.

Secretary: “—Well then, regarding the “witch” apprehended last night, shall we proceed? Let us carry out the execution at the Hour of Fire tomorrow.”

At that outrageous proposition thrown out at the very start of the town council, Palmira gaped.

The place was Limbus’s assembly hall, the people gathered were the town’s leading figures, the purpose was a discussion, the topic was the mysterious-death cases disturbing the town—in more detail, the disposition of the “witch” captured last night, namely Omega in her cell.

Naturally, Palmira and the others, Omega’s companions, were also seated at the end of the hall, prepared to insist on Omega’s release and exoneration, but their start was grandly tripped up.

This was strange. It was supposed to begin as a discussion, and yet this was nothing but a notice of a decided matter.

???: “Yeah, well, right. From the sound of it she’s pretty? Suspicious? Or something? I think that’s fine. Everyone’s fine with that too, yeah?”

What’s more, as if to press them further, the person seated in the middle of the council addressed those around him like that. His way of speaking, while ostensibly seeking agreement, somehow brooked no dissent, and carried a coerciveness that forced others to follow his line.

She understood it intuitively: if they kept silent like this, it would be bad.

Palmira: “W-Wait, wait! Objection! Objection! No matter how you slice it, that’s pushing it way too hard!”

???: “Oh? “Pushing it”—you mean me? If so, I’m offended, yeah. It’s not “pushing”; it’s what responsibility demands. Uncle here is, after all, the council’s representative. Yeah?”

Palmira: “That doesn’t mean you get to spout nonsense! Don’t just say whatever you want!”

Leaping up on the momentum and glaring at the man who called himself the representative, Palmira fixed him with her eyes.

The man who called himself “uncle” was in his late thirties, a dandy with neatly groomed facial hair around his mouth, but he gave the impression of someone draped in a vaguely damp air.

Edmon Quail—that’s what he had introduced himself as at first, if she remembered right.

Secretary: ““Nonsense,” you say? I cannot let that pass. Would you enlighten us? About the “nonsense” this delightful uncle has supposedly uttered?”

Standing in for Edmon, the one who answered Palmira’s fury was a cool-headed-looking woman—the long blue-haired secretary who had first pronounced Omega’s execution.

Wilting a bit under her emotionless gaze, Palmira let out an “Uh,” and then Colette, seated beside her, gently took Palmira’s hand.

Colette: “It’s okay, it’s okay, Palmira. Don’t let them beat you.”

Encouraged thus, Palmira shut her eyes and took a deep breath. Then she opened them and, fixing the secretary, Edmon, and the others straight on, said, Palmira: “Explain it? You need me to spell it out? Listen. We’re travelers, okay? We just happened to stop by this town. And we only arrived yesterday, when the incidents here were already well underway… There’s no way we’re involved!”

Secretary: “There is some logic there, I see. And what say you, amusing uncle?”

Arguing logically—though with irritation mixed in—that Omega’s capture was unjust, Palmira made her case. The secretary, surprisingly reasonable, nodded, but Edmon did not.

With a sticky “Right, right,” he gave his preface and then said,

Edmon: ““Amusing” is a bit much, yeah? Besides, witches are a crafty breed. Just look at how they’ve kept Limbus in an uproar to this very day. Which means it wouldn’t be strange if they were scheming all sorts of things from outside the town, yeah?”

Palmira: “Wh—…”

Edmon: “And also, yeah? You say you came to Limbus yesterday, but that’s just your own claim. Maybe you’ve been lurking outside the town all along, snickering from afar at the chaos here. You can’t deny that possibility, can you? Yeah?”

Palmira: “If you’re going to start saying stuff like that, then anything goes!”

Rather than an outrageous argument, by this point it was already nothing but an accusation. But Edmon, at Palmira’s outburst, raised both hands and, as if brazening it out, cocked an eyebrow with a “Yeah?”

Edmon: ““Anything goes” is overstating it; I’m saying the possibility remains. And if the possibility doesn’t go away, then as someone important, uncle has to do what must be done. Which, in short, means an execution. You get it, yeah?”

Palmira: “We’re talking about our companion! Of course I don’t “get it”!”

Edmon: “So that’s a confession that you’re “witch” buddies too? One could take it that way, yeah?”

Palmira: “Ggh—!”

He kept to nothing but nitpicking, and Palmira’s face flushed scarlet as she gnashed her teeth. Omega often did the “if you say this, I’ll say that” to her, but Edmon’s way was even more infuriating than Omega’s.

That’s because Omega’s rhetoric had no malice, while Edmon’s had nothing but.

In this man’s attitude there was nothing but the evil of trying to smooth-talk an ignorant child.

Noelle: “—Nananna, will you truly remain silent and watch this?”

Nananna: “…”

Drawn into the spotlight, Nananna had been seated beside Edmon in the hall. That was proof she was recognized as having equal speaking power to the council’s representative. Like Palmira and the others, she was an outsider to the town, but the position of an Itinerant Preacher dispatched from the Holy Church of Gusteko was that strong.

Despite being in that position, she did not move proactively, so Noelle prodded her. One reason for that was surely that Noelle and Nananna had known each other from before.

Nananna: “…This one was dispatched with the aim of settling the situation. If the “witch” that threatens the town is gone, that is for the best… it is.”

Noelle: “I understand what you say, but is this truly “for the best”? Even to your eyes, is executing Omega-samaa a situation that accords with the Holy Church’s teachings?”

At Noelle, who would not accept it and pressed her, Nananna quietly averted her eyes.

Honestly, Palmira didn't know the nature of the two's relationship, but at the very least it seemed certain Nananna wasn't someone they could rely on here.

If so—

Palmira: "—Fine. All right."

Secretary: "You are satisfied, then? That means the half-lidded young lady is also in agreement?"

Palmira: "I don't like that way of addressing me, and I'm not "satisfied," either. That's not it."

Edmon: ""That's not it," huh? I'd like an explanation even us old men can understand. Yeah?"

With the secretary, Edmon, and the other councilors all watching her, Palmira held her breath. If she said what came next, there would be no turning back. The only choice would be to press on.

But if she was going to say it, Palmira and the others had long since had no retreat. —From the day they decided to leave their hometown together with a "witch."

Palmira: "—I demand that a Witch Trial be convened!"

Eyes flaring wide, Palmira shook off her hesitation and proclaimed it loud.

In an instant, silence ruled the hall, followed by a murmur of surprise. That murmur was not the doubt of those facing the unknown, but a disquiet born of knowing. It was the agitation of all Limbus at the ring of the words "Witch Trial" that Palmira demanded.

Nananna: "This one asks whether you understand what the convening of a Witch Trial means."

At Nananna's question, Palmira nodded deeply: "Of course."

A Witch Trial, as the characters suggest, is a trial to question the defendant’s witchhood—in other words, to contest whether Omega is a “witch” deserving of execution. That in itself is the same as Palmira and the others insisting on Omega’s innocence here. Then what makes it different from a normal trial? That its verdict, under the name of the Holy Church of Gusteko, can never be overturned, and—and—

Nananna: “—Those who defend a “witch,” that is to say, are themselves also “witches.” If you were to contest the trial and lose, this one says you too would be judged as a “witch.”“

Palmira: “…”

Nananna: “Even so, do you still wish for the trial to be convened? Yes—this one is questioning your resolve.”

Pressing her again on her resolve was, in a sense, Nananna’s compassion. Perhaps her preacher’s benevolent heart was advising them that they could still turn back now.

But to Palmira, whose resolve was already made, it was nothing but noisy.

Palmira: “Fine. If Omega is a “witch,” then in that case—…”

Pausing partway through words she was about to declare with her chest thrust out, she tilted her head once to the people in the hall and then said,

Palmira: “If Omega is the “witch” who caused this town’s uproar, then I’ll be burned at the stake with her or whatever else right alongside her!”

—A declaration that, to defend the “witch” among her own, clearly set out the conditions in writing.

9

Palmira: “Ahh~ I might’ve jumped the gun. In the end, it turned out just like Omega said…”

Flopping bonelessly onto the inn bed, Palmira clawed at her own head.

It was right after she had cut loose at the assembly hall and demanded that a Witch Trial be convened. The moment they made it back to the inn for a strategy meeting, a fierce wave of regret crashed over Palmira.

Declaring she was ready to go down with Omega—where had she taken a wrong turn?

Colette: “But, but, you were so cool, Palmira! Sitting next to you, I was all on edge, and I squeezed your hand thinking, say more, say more—!”

Palmira: “Yeah, thanks to that I’ve lost all feeling in my right hand. You’ve gotten strong…”

Colette: “Ah, oh, s-sorry, I’m sorry! Palmira, is your hand okay?!”

Flustered, Colette took Palmira’s outstretched hand and gently kneaded it. Letting Colette have her way with her right hand, Palmira sat up.

Then she looked over at Noelle and Lilac, whom she’d dragged into sharing her resolve,

Palmira: “Sorry for speaking for everyone. I dragged the two of you into it as well.”

Noelle: “No, there is no need to apologize. I too would not have abided a situation where Omega-sama ended up being executed as things stood.”

Lilac: “Indeed. It feels odd to praise it, but your words were refreshing. —Shion says she’d also like you to pass along good job, good job.”

Palmira: “Hearing that takes a load off. I don’t know what good job is, though.”

At any rate, it was a blessing that they’d avoided fighting over the move to demand a trial—even counting Shion inside Lilac’s head.

Though all of it had the feel of being in the palm of Omega's hand.

After all, the demand for a trial had been the suggestion of Omega herself, from her cell.

Omega: "If we probably do nothing, I think my execution will be decided just like that. It's always been that way: once a witch hunt has certified you as a "witch," there's no escaping it. No matter how sound the argument, it can't be traded for the peace of the majority. Hahaha, absolutely hopeless."

So said the captive "witch," with not a shred of seriousness or urgency, but in fact the town council had nearly proceeded exactly as she said, and one could only tip one's hat at the accuracy of her assessment.

That said, the reason Palmira and the others could swallow Omega's reckless proposal lay in the fact that, for them, the worst-case scenario simply couldn't come to pass to begin with.

Palmira: "Because even if, say, it came to Omega being executed, there's no way that girl would meekly let herself be executed."

Colette: "Right, right. If it comes down to it, I'll go all out for Omega-chan too."

Clenching the hand opposite the one she was massaging, Colette had, for caution's sake, removed the "Beast Protection Bracelet," but if it came to it she would not hesitate to use its power.

Even without that, there was no way Omega would just sit there and be executed.

Palmira: "Unless the person herself says something like, "I wanted to try being executed once, purely out of curiosity," that is."

Colette: "That's not impossible, so don't say scary things… But that's really, truly the last resort. We have to assume last time with Lilac and Shion was a fluke."

Lilac: "…Right."

Lilac answered briefly—what she and her counterpart Shion had pulled off had been a fairly large-scale magical disaster that put an entire town to sleep and sent it into dysfunction. At the time, Omega had threatened the Itinerant Preacher who happened to be present and settled it by preventing the facts from being reported.

But that sort of method can't be repeated often. If Omega rampaged in this town, this time it would surely be impossible to avoid drawing the Holy Church of Gusteko's ire.

Colette: "If we become wanted by the Holy Church, living in Gusteko would be totally impossible, right?"

Noelle: "Indeed. Almost all citizens of the Holy Kingdom are believers of the Holy Church, so you would be hunted wherever you went… To go further, even if you fled to another nation, there is the possibility you would be found and handed over to the Holy Kingdom."

Palmira: "In other words, it's a battle we absolutely cannot lose…!"

Buoyed by the persuasiveness of Noelle—herself an Itinerant Preacher who knew the Holy Church of Gusteko inside and out—Palmira's determination toward the trial only hardened.

However, into Palmira's zeal Lilac interjected with, "But,"

Lilac: "In the end, it doesn't change that the odds are against us. A Witch Trial, whatever you call it, is an Inquisition by another name."

Colette: "Um, um? If it's an Inquisition, is there some problem?"

Lilac: "A big one. Because there isn't a single person who underwent an Inquisition and escaped suspicion."

Palmira & Colette: "Eh."

At Lilac's words, arms crossed and wearing a stern expression, Palmira and Colette's voices overlapped. At their reaction, Lilac turned to Noelle with a "Right?"

At Lilac’s prompt, Noelle let her brows droop weakly and said,

Noelle: “Yes, that is so. However, that is because in all those cases they were unquestionably judged heretical; in Nananna’s hands, with her fair eye, Omega-sama’s false charge will surely—”

Lilac: “Unfortunately, what I want isn’t reckless optimism but a realistic answer. There’s nothing so troublesome as hope shown irresponsibly.”

Noelle: “…”

At Lilac’s merciless words, delivered with a crisp snap, Noelle’s expression tightened in pain.

But the fact that a rebuttal didn’t come right away was proof that Noelle too had doubts or thoughts about Nananna’s attitude in the hall. Even to Palmira’s eyes, Lilac’s argument carried more weight.

Colette: “But if that’s the case, Omega will be found guilty, and Limbus will vanish from the map…”

Colette: “Then what we have to do is super, super simple.”

Palmira: “Colette…?”

Colette: “We absolutely, absolutely have to win tomorrow’s trial. Because otherwise neither Omega-chan nor the people of this town can be happy.”

Colette’s conclusion was terribly simple, yet easy to grasp. One could say it was obvious, but even so, Palmira nodded, “You’re right.”

She’d thought it in the hall from the start. Palmira and the others had no way out. Which meant that if the only paths were victory or defeat, they could choose only the path of victory.

Palmira: “We’ve got no choice. Tomorrow’s trial, no matter what… Tomorrow—tomorrow, right. Way too little time… Maybe it really is impossible…”

Colette: “C-Calm down, Palmira! Yes, that’s it, let’s take deep breaths together! And if we look back on our fun memories with Omega-chan, won’t that get you fired up?”

Palmira: “Fun memories with that one…? Did we? Did we, really? Calmly thinking about it, why am I even traveling with such a basket case…?”

Colette: “D-Deep breaths! Deep breaths! Here—inhale, exhale, inhale, exhale!”

Prompted by Colette, who clung to her desperately, Palmira went along with the deep breathing. Whether or not it calmed her feelings, oxygen reached her brain and her room to think and motivation returned.

Whether the suspicion was unjust or not aside, it was certain it was a false charge.

Palmira: “So, what we can do before tomorrow’s trial… First off, we should learn more detail about the incidents causing all the commotion.”

Colette: “Yes, yes, that’s right. Other than that there’s a “witch,” we hardly know anything.”

Noelle: “Aside from that, when it comes to helping Lady Omega, the most effective thing would be…”

Lilac: “—Securing the real “witch,” I’d say.”

At Lilac’s words, the three—Palmira and the others—nodded deeply.

In this case, “witch” did not mean a dyed-in-the-wool evil “witch” like Omega, but the “witch” in the sense of the prime mover causing the present turmoil in Limbus.

Since Omega was suspected of being that “witch,” if they simply caught that other “witch,” it would prove that Omega was a different kind of “witch.”

Palmira: “The person chased in yesterday’s witch hunt hasn’t been caught, right? And the one Omega is said to have killed was a townsman who took part in the witch hunt.”

Noelle: “Indeed. The witch hunt was originally to secure that man. The fact that there was an anonymous tip means there are points of suspicion.”

Palmira: “If we find him, this will go quickly. …Unrelated, but it’s odd that he’s treated as a “witch” even though he’s a man. Do they not call them “warlocks” or something?”

Colette: “If we’re not distinguishing, calling them “magic folk” sounds more natural. Omega-chan would probably know that kind of story in detail, right?”

Palmira: “Ah, that reminds me, we have to tell that Omega pest we’re holding a trial… Ugh, I can already see the smug face she’ll make about how it ended up just like she said…!”

Frustrating as it was, when it came to holding a Witch Trial, advice from Omega would be no bad thing. Not that she was worried Omega would be lonely in her cell, of course.

At any rate, they had their provisional plan.

Palmira: “Someone to gather information on the town, and someone to hunt the “witch” who’s been on the run since yesterday. I’ll stop by Omega’s place for the moment, but…”

Noelle: “Given stamina and all, I am the most suitable to search for the “witch.”“

Lilac: “…Then I’ll be the one to gather the town’s information.”

Palmira: “Right. Let’s go with that. What about you, Colette?”

Colette: “I… if it’s all right, could I go with Lilac-san?”

Lilac: “With us?”

Round-eyed, Lilac pointed to herself in surprise. At her reaction, Colette tilted her head: “Is that not okay?”

Colette: “Right now I just really want to learn anything I can about the town… It’s not that I’m not worried about Omega-chan, but I’m not all that worried about her being in a cell.”

Lilac: “Well, it’s Omega; she’s probably enjoying herself. I’m more worried about the jailer.”

There was a chance the jailer had been worn out by Omega’s long-windedness. Or, having reached the end of their patience, that a fatal rift had opened between them.

Palmira: “Uh, now I feel even less like we can leave it be. W-We’d better hurry.”

Colette: “Right? Um, um, how about it, Lilac-san?”

Lilac: “…I don’t particularly mind. Shion says she’s giving a big welcome—welcome, too.”

At Lilac, who dutifully spoke for the Shion in her head as well, Colette pressed her hands to her chest with a “Great!” and her eyes sparkled.

Softening at the corners of her eyes at the sight, Palmira turned to Noelle with a “Sorry,” and said,

Palmira: “One way or another, we always end up making you take the exhausting role.”

Noelle: “Not at all; this is division of roles. We always ask Palmira-sama and Colette-sama to take on roles I cannot, besides. And this time…”

Palmira: “This time?”

Noelle: “Lilac-sama and Shion-sama’s efforts will prove very important, I believe.”

Noelle cast a sidelong glance at Lilac. At that look, Lilac shrugged.

Lilac: “…I suppose so. Whether we can live up to expectations or not, we’ll do what we can.”

Noelle: “—Yes. I humbly ask it of you.”

Noelle bowed deeply, and the division of roles among the four—no, five—was complete. The trial was tomorrow; it was the crossroads of Limbus’s fate, entrusted to a “witch”—

Palmira: “Let’s do this so no one can say the town perished because of us!”

Colette: “Yeah!”

Noelle: “Yes, indeed.”

Lilac: “Right.”

And with their replies, preparations for the Witch Trial began.

10

Shion: “Well—the situation is what it is, but this kind of thing is nice, isn’t it? You know, like, One for all! All for one! Doesn’t it feel like that?”

Lilac: “Everyone for one. One for everyone?”

Shion: “Yes, yes! And—ba-bam—it looks like Lilac’s fired up too.”

Lilac: “Who knows.”

She did think that, if one had to say whether she was motivated or not, she fell on the “motivated” side.

Lilac: “Only, I wouldn’t call it forward-looking. When all’s said and done, I don’t much think we have a chance of winning a Witch Trial… the Gusteko Inquisition.”

Shion: “I wouldn’t call it backward-looking either. Given where we are.”

Dropping her tone just a little, Shion paused her reckless positivity.

Though the reaction threw her off-kilter, Lilac appreciated that she didn't offer empty comfort.

For all that, Lilac and Shion were elves and counted among the older members of the party—indeed, among the far older group—and they had been through all kinds of experiences. The sort of experiences they wouldn't want the younger ones, like Colette or Palmira, to hear.

As for the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, they had many thoughts where the Holy Church was concerned. The Inquisition, in which there was no escape once suspected—that was the prime example.

Shion: "All the more so because it's actually true that Omega-san is a "witch.""

Lilac: "That's the trickiest part."

There were no magics or magic tools that could measure whether someone was a "witch," which, paradoxically, meant there were no means to deny it either. In that case, any method of questioning the target's witchhood at trial could only be called a war of impressions devolving into a fruitless back-and-forth.

Lilac: "By the time you're put on trial, it's as good as having lost the battle of impressions."

Shion: "Of course, since it takes the form of a trial, I want to believe they won't do anything rude like "no questions asked," but with Limbus shaping the trial's atmosphere, the whole town is basically the enemy. They say Noelle-san's friend Nananna will strive for fairness, though."

Lilac: "I wonder how far we can trust someone whose very position is the Holy Church."

She was Noelle's acquaintance, perhaps even friend. Lilac didn't want to speak ill of her out of hand, but she wasn't someone you'd bend your principles to cover for.

Shion's wry smile at Lilac's stance was plain to see.

Colette: “—Have you finished lining up your opinions with Shion, Lilac-san?”

Right as their literal in-head conference reached a stopping point, Colette addressed her.

Colette had been considerate enough to wait before speaking to her. Appreciating the thoughtfulness, Lilac nodded with an “Yes.”

Lilac: “Sorry to keep you. Shion also heard the talk back at the inn, so I wasn’t re-explaining it from scratch.”

Colette: “No, it’s totally fine, really. Lilac-san and Shion-san are in each other’s heads, but talking still takes the same time as it does for us outside, right?”

Lilac: “Yes—though it’s inconvenient. I’m Shion’s alternate personality, but as a soul I’m already a separate being… our hearts aren’t shared. So we have to talk to understand each other.”

Shion: “Even if it’s inconvenient, I think this setup is the best for our relationship!”

At the vision of Shion giving a thumbs-up with a smile, Lilac only shrugged and didn’t answer.

Originally, Lilac and Shion’s relationship hadn’t been like this. They had been far more cutthroat: the main personality Shion and the alternate personality Lilac were in a relationship of wrestling for control over the body.

And then one day, it stopped being that way. —Neither Lilac nor Shion remembered the decisive reason. They only concluded that they had slipped into someone’s dream, and the experience there had changed them for good.

The many unknown words and bits of knowledge they possessed backed that up, and to fill the blank in their hearts that had been created before they knew it, they kept searching for an answer.

And—

Lilac: “—Omega has the answer we want.”

Shion: “Which is why if Omega-san disappeared on us, or got slammed with pinch after pinch with no time to breathe, we’d be in deep trouble.”

That was why Lilac and company would do their utmost to see Omega acquitted.

Lilac: “So, our role is to gather information on the town. For now, the details of the “witch” uproar.”

Colette: “Yes, yes, right—let’s do our best! …But it seems the townspeople aren’t very willing to talk with us. Because we came with Omega-chan.”

Lilac: “So they think the rest of us might be “witches” too. …Maybe we should use the last resort.”

Colette: “A-Already?! I’m super, super happy you’re reliable, Lilac-san, but is it okay to use it this soon?”

Lilac: “If we’re going for certainty, I don’t think it’s a question of soon or late.”

Shion: “If there’s any problem, it’s the guilt that we might leave Colette-san with nothing to do… no, maybe it’d be wiser to bring her along?”

If she went with Shion’s suggestion, they’d be steering toward exhausting even their last resort plus a workaround—but Lilac didn’t think it was a bad play. In that case, even though they’d gone to the trouble of leaving the inn, they would, for the sake of keeping out of sight, have to turn right back around—

Secretary: “—You two companions, are you? And who should it be but the witch suspect’s—”

Lilac: “You are…”

Colette: “The lady who tried to execute Omega-chan!”

Just as they were drafting plans to turn back, the one who addressed them was the woman who served as secretary to Edmon, the council's representative.

Narrowing her long eyes at Lilac and Colette, who were walking together, she said,

Secretary: "That is an unwarranted assessment. I do not think being described that way is appropriate."

Colette: "Ah… s-sorry. I'm sorry."

Lilac: "Yes, I'll apologize too. I just couldn't forget the impact of your opening."

Shion: "Ooh, nice one, Lilac! Clap clap! Clap clap!"

Lilac answered Shion without remorse: "They're the rude one." Lilac's policy toward first-time acquaintances was straightforward—if they were friendly, be gentle; if they were hostile, be stern and thorough.

Apparently catching the intent, the secretary stared back intently at Lilac and said,

Secretary: "Making arrangements? To flee before the enemy. You think the odds are against you, after all."

Shion: "Sh-She picked a fight! She's picked a fight with us!"

Lilac: "Indeed. Someone this easy to read makes it easy to pick a stance—how helpful."

Well then, if the other side was up for it, she'd just hit back—so Lilac, spurred on by Shion, was thinking aggressively when—

Colette: "Um! This might be presumptuous, but could we hear your account?"

Colette bowed deeply to the secretary as she said it. In the instant Lilac saw that, she was struck by a powerful shame and self-reproach, and chastised herself for her immaturity.

Shion: “…I’ve done it. Me, Shion—forgetting the battle in the middle of the battle.”

The same shock seemed to hit Shion; she drooped her head in dejection. While the older pair were reflecting, the secretary spent a moment gazing at the crown of Colette’s bowed head.

Secretary: “And what is it you wish to hear?”

Colette: “—! Um, um? About the incidents that are disturbing the town. Because that’s where it all started.”

Secretary: “Understood, yes. The incidents are the cause. It is why your companion came to be regarded as a “witch.”“

At the secretary’s response, Colette nodded vigorously to invite her to go on. For her part, Lilac, not wanting to apologize and admit fault, kept silent and maintained the bare minimum of pride.

At all events, the secretary began to speak.

Secretary: “—It began when a certain fever started spreading in the town. That was the origin.”

11

The first to contract the fever was a man, a notable of the town.

A member of the town council as well, he suffered long from a high fever; though he tried various medicines, his condition did not improve at all. It was thought that, as things were, even his life was in danger—but after that, his condition recovered dramatically. —The trigger was that he took a medicine compounded by an old apothecary woman who lived on the edge of town.

Originally known for disliking people, the old woman had been kept at a distance by the townsfolk, but that affair suddenly drew attention to her, and as the fever spread in town, her powers came to be greatly needed.

Day after day people thronged to the old woman for medicine, and she diligently kept compounding it; overturning her prior reputation, she even came to be rumored as a saint. —Yet that reputation was transformed all at once along with a rumor that the cause of the fever lay with the old woman, that the entire matter had been her own staging.

Rumors of unclear origin grew tangled; the old woman's standing plunged from saint who saved the town to arch-villain who spread the fever, and before long even to the label of "Witch."

And then, prompted by the discovery in the old woman's home of poisonous herbs that caused symptoms resembling the fever, anger and hatred toward the "Witch" exploded—

Omega: "—Alas, the old woman was executed. But, strangely, after the old woman's execution, a series of baffling incidents followed. The first to fall victim was the notable who had served as the introduction to the tale. From when he was found writhing in death at his home, a rumor spread in Limbus: that the executed old woman had been made a stand-in for the real "Witch.""

Palmira: "…"

Omega: "As if to corroborate that rumor, cursed-looking bizarre corpses continued to appear one after another in the town, and the victims already number thirteen. This is the detail of the serial mysterious-death cases occurring in Limbus, and the reason the townspeople are excessively afraid of the "Witch." Any questions?"

Palmira: "I do. …How are you so well informed when you were in a cell?"

Pressed up against the other side of the iron bars—in the cramped, unfree space where Omega was shut—Palmira, who had come to get an explanation of the situation and had just heard what Omega said now, curled her lip and asked so.

Omega shouldn't have left this cell; and even if she could have gone out, in this town where the talk of the "Witch" already captured had spread, there shouldn't have been a single person who would tell her what they told her now.

At Palmira's doubt, Omega, a little disappointed, said, "That's all you're curious about?"

Omega: "I simply engaged in close communications with the jailers who took turns visiting. I wanted conversation partners and information; they wanted to snatch even a few words from me, who would keep on talking alone forever. Our interests aligned."

Palmira: "That sounds one-sided just hearing it! I'll have to apologize to the jailers later."

Given the town's circumstances, the fewer people who held a bad impression of Omega, the better. It already felt too late, but goodwill you can buy just by lowering your head is goodwill worth buying.

Setting aside that harassment-like method of obtaining information, the content was useful.

Palmira: "Judging from how Omega's being treated, I figured the victims weren't just one or two, but "more than ten" is more than I imagined…"

Omega: "Indeed. Given the size of the town, thirteen victims is plenty. No wonder they wouldn't lend an ear to my words and crowded in with that ferocity."

Palmira: "You got grabbed by the townsfolk not because of crowd psychology, but because you rubbed against it the wrong way!"

When Omega put on a face as if to say she agreed with Palmira, Palmira shouted back, raising her voice. To begin with, Omega had been caught not only because she was standing right beside the latest victim, but also because of the foolish words and deeds she displayed at the time.

To the townsfolk, shaken by a comrade's death, she said this:

Omega (then): "You may not believe me, but this fellow here just now fell right in front of my eyes. As you can see, his body has been horribly destroyed. There's no way these slender arms of mine could accomplish such a deed… Well, then again, magic exists to make such impossibilities possible, and the fact that I'm good at it was already proven with the Snow Blight matter. Incidentally, at any moment I could have just as easily snuffed you all out, together, while we've been talking. Could you not take the fact that I didn't do so as proof of my innocence? No? Hard? I see. Hahaha, I'm at a loss."

Palmira: "Are you an idiot…?!"

Omega: "It isn't good to speak in terms of results after the fact, Palmira. Now that things have turned out like this, it certainly wasn't a clever excuse, but after the fact you can say anything."

Palmira: "This kind of excuse is a case where the result was obvious even before it came! Why would you needlessly stoke everyone's anxiety and get yourself caught? If you didn't do it, then say you didn't. If you didn't kill, then say you didn't kill. Instead you just meander and meander, saying extra things…!"

At the "Witch's" attitude, which showed neither remorse nor learning, Palmira felt so angry she wanted to throw Omega into a cell again, even though she was already there. If she had given the townsfolk the same anger and dissatisfaction that Palmira felt now, then their impression at tomorrow's trial would be the worst possible.

Omega: "Well, as for impressions, there's no point in worrying about them now. In the first place, at the point where we've managed to get a trial convened, I'm already more than sufficiently blessed."

Palmira: "Blessed—how? You're in a dark, cold cell, being made to lie on dirty straw."

Omega: "Blessed. —Compared to, oh, roughly more than twenty "Witches."“

Palmira: "Huh?"

At Omega, who spread both hands and said so, Palmira knit her brows: she didn't understand what that meant. Were the fingers she held up supposed to be the number of tales she was telling? If so, she was short at least ten.

As Palmira looked at her suspiciously, the “Witch” slightly lowered her voice: “Listen.”

Omega: “Earlier I said there were thirteen victims of the mysterious deaths… but most likely, the victims who were informed upon as “Witches” and executed number close to twice that.”

Palmira: “—What’s that supposed to mean? How do you know something like that? From the jailers too?”

Omega: “No, they were tight-lipped regarding that fact. But you can tell just by looking inside the cell. There are claw marks scratched here and there, and smears of blood at differing heights.”

At Omega’s answer, as if she’d had plenty of time to observe, a chill ran through Palmira and she couldn’t help but stare intently around the inside of the cell. Though it was dim and not clear, there did seem to be scratch marks and caked-on bloodstains.

However, those could not all necessarily be traces of those informed upon as “Witches.”

Omega: “I told you about a sick ward, didn’t I? That way of thinking—of bad things being contagious—isn’t limited to disease. People’s psychology takes curses and other kinds of ill causes to be the same. In other words, from the first time this cell confined a “Witch,” it became a cell dedicated to “Witches.”“

Palmira: “…And the “more than twenty ‘Witches’”? But even so, I can’t accept calling this “blessed.” Or rather—what about the other “Witches”? You mean there weren’t any trials?”

Omega’s words had force, and, as a matter of fact, more than twenty people who had come into this cell had probably been executed as “Witches” and lost their lives. But the thought of being “blessed” in comparison to those victims felt like searching for the least bad among bad things, and Palmira couldn’t accept it.

She hated that way of thinking. Because it had been how she thought back in her hometown, and it was a manifestation of the weakness and compromise built on Colette's sacrifice.

So she could not approve of Omega speaking of being blessed in this situation.

Omega: "You're stubborn and earnest in odd ways. But that very contrariness of yours is interesting to me. So I'll answer as sincerely as I can. —As for my predecessors, the captive "Witches," there were no trials. There was no point in holding them. After all, if you're confined in a cell, you can obtain neither the evidence nor the testimony to challenge a trial. They… ah, though they're called "Witches," it isn't limited to women, so let's say "Witches" in the plural. Compared to those "Witches," that is the point where I am clearly blessed."

Palmira: "S-So, in the end, what part of that is—"

Omega: "—To demand a trial, a captive like me needs someone who believes in my innocence. Someone who will raise their voice, prepared for implicated punishment, to prove I'm not a "Witch.""

Palmira: "…"

Omega: "By the number of existences like you and Colette, Noelle, and Shion and Lilac—I am fortunate."

At the faint smile that crossed Omega's face as she said it, Palmira tasted defeat.

Nothing could be more ill-omened before a trial, but this was a perfect refutation. Beaten down completely, Palmira had to admit that Omega did indeed seem fortunate.

Only, from the standpoint of her pride, she hesitated to put that into words, and so—

Palmira: "…Why is it still called "Witch" even when there are men?"

It was a pointless question that had come up before they split from Colette and the others. When Palmira voiced it, Omega, after looking a bit blank, said,

Omega: “That’s because when the existence first called “Witch” was born into this world, the seven who fit it were all women. If even one man had been mixed among them, they might have been called “magic folk” rather than “Witch.” Conversely, if all seven had been men, perhaps the name “warlock” would have taken hold. I wonder if there’s a world where I called myself “magic folk” or “warlock.” What do you think?”

Palmira: “I know I asked, but I don’t care.”

Be that as it may, she had achieved her purpose of informing Omega that the trial would be held tomorrow, and she had learned detailed information on the connection between the mysterious deaths surrounding Limbus and the “Witch.” —More than anything, infuriatingly, the fact that her zeal for facing the trial had grown far larger and stronger than at first—that felt terribly galling, as if things had gone exactly according to Omega’s design.

For Noelle, the past in which she became an Itinerant Preacher is tangled up with complicated feelings.

A large share of those complicated feelings is the contradiction between gratitude and guilt. Those stem from the fact that Noelle played the part of a devout believer of the Holy Church of Gusteko for the sake of her own revenge.

To obtain both the means to find the enemy who destroyed her homeland and the power to exact retribution, Noelle made use of the Holy Church and wrested for herself the position of Itinerant Preacher. But that was by no means the fruit of Noelle’s efforts alone; it was thanks to a friend who lent her strength.

That friend was none other than Nananna Pezza, her contemporary from their candidate days as preachers, with whom she had lived in the same room at the church.

Noelle: “I truly was helped by Nananna.”

Whether one can be granted the endowment called a “Blessing,” the aptitude for becoming a preacher, depends on talent, but to reach the standard by which that is judged, one’s own striving is indispensable. As an Itinerant Preacher, one must be well versed in the teachings of the scriptures; excellence in book learning is a prerequisite.

In that respect, Noelle was always helped by Nananna’s strength. In return, Noelle supported her in fields that required moving the body, but even then the ratio was, at best, seventy–thirty.

Even after both safely became Itinerant Preachers, Nananna often helped gather information on the one Noelle sought. Noelle never told her the particulars of that matter, but—

Nananna: “It is no matter. This one is very grateful to Noelle, it is.”

—she never tried to pry deeply.

Thanks in part to that, Noelle’s vengeance, while not perfect, achieved results enough to say she had made her best effort, and came to a close.

Now, having lost sight of a life’s goal, she was already in a state like having entered her twilight years early, but she did not want to live in a way that slighted others on the pretext that she had burnt out her reason for living. Though she had thrown herself into the Holy Church of Gusteko because it was necessary for revenge, its teachings were indeed alive within Noelle. Therefore—

Noelle: “There is Omega-sama’s matter as well, but if Nananna bears the office of preacher to settle this town’s disturbance, I must also exert myself.”

For that reason too, Noelle decided on the course by which she could be most useful—devoting herself to searching for the person suspected as a “witch” who had gone to ground since last night.

For the time being, even now that Omega had been captured, the townsfolk were continuing to search for the person who had vanished. Hearing the status of that search, Noelle intended to narrow down the search area in her own way.

For that purpose, she put in an appearance at the assembly hall once—but—

Edmon: "—So that's how it is, Holy Teacher, you listening? Yeah?"

At a voice that drifted to her ears, Noelle drew a small breath and halted outside the assembly hall.

Casting a glance into the room, she saw that in the place where the town council had just been held—where Palmira had delivered such a bracing tongue-lashing—two people were exchanging words. The owner of the characteristic delivery and the memorably viscous voice was Edmon, the council's representative.

And the one speaking with Edmon was Nananna, her expression deliberately frozen.

Edmon: "A Witch Trial—now that's the start of an unexpected bother. But apart from that, the other "witch" problem is big too. How's the progress on that one? Yeah?"

Nananna: "…As for that, volunteers are even now pursuing Piditz with all their might. After this, this one intends to take part in the search as time allows, it is."

Edmon: "Ah, is that so. I hope you find him, young Piditz. But that unimpressive Piditz with no particular strong points—being the real "witch," yeah?"

Nananna: "…"

To Edmon's loaded question, Nananna answered with silence. Only, she was the sort to answer "different" plainly if it were different. The fact that she did not do so meant that she, too, like Edmon, likely judged that the possibility that this vanished man, Piditz, was a "witch" was low.

To be frank, that was not a welcome thing for Noelle, who wanted to help Omega.

But more than that, what weighed on her was Nananna and Edmon's relationship. How Edmon dealt with her could be chalked up to his character, but the reverse could not be explained by character.

Edmon: "Well, I'll ask it of you in any case. We can't have the "witch" doing whatever they please any further. That's the same for uncle and for you, Holy Teacher, isn't it. Yeah?"

Leaving Noelle with that inexplicable sense of wrongness, the two's meaningful conversation ended. Edmon familiarly clapped Nananna's shoulder, then headed out of the assembly hall. On impulse, Noelle hid herself to let Edmon pass, and saw him off as he went.

Nananna: "…Noelle, this one knows you are there, it is."

Thus addressed by the solitary Nananna in the assembly hall after Edmon was gone, Noelle, feeling a peculiar awkwardness, bowed her head and then entered the room.

Nananna: "Eavesdropping is most ill-mannered, it is. If this one were to say "the Noelle that this one knows would never"… one would like to say so, but Noelle has always had such a side from long ago."

Noelle: "I shall take that as a reproach that my bad habit is as ever. …I had no intention of eavesdropping, but that is only an excuse."

Even if she hadn't meant to, if that was the result, there was no point in patching it over. Rather, if the other party knew she had been eavesdropping, she could turn it to her advantage.

Noelle: "Edmon-sama seemed to be saying something to you."

Nananna: "…While bearing the role of punishing the heretical "witch," this one received a scolding for lack of results born of inadequate strength, it is. This one, for her part, bitterly curses her own lack of ability, it is."

Noelle: "That is a stance unlike you, Nananna."

To Noelle's probing, Nananna's reply was a safe, contentless statement. At Noelle's crisp retort, Nananna tilted her head: "Unlike this one?"

Noelle: "The Nananna I know—if she received a damp, heavy scolding like Edmon-sama's, she would reply with ten or twenty times the drive and substance, calmly and logically. To sit so meekly with eyes downcast and make your small body seem even smaller—that is not like you."

Nananna: "This one's smallness is a manifestation of this one's lack of talent in matters of making her height grow; it is not something to speak of openly, it is. And… it is not the same as when this one was an apprentice."

Noelle: "Nananna…"

At Nananna, who dropped her gaze slightly and said so, Noelle felt a knot forming deep in her chest.

However, Nananna did not allow Noelle to press further; instead she switched the topic with, "And so," and said,

Nananna: "Noelle should be busy preparing for tomorrow's trial, it is. For what did you come?"

Noelle: "—. As to that, I believe the way I can be of most use in helping Omega-sama is to exercise the power granted to me as an Itinerant Preacher."

Nananna: "…Noelle, you must have been eavesdropping on the talk from earlier, it is."

Noelle: "Indeed. It is highly likely this is not unrelated. At the very least, rather than thrusting our hands blindly into an unfamiliar darkness when time is short, it is far better."

At Noelle, who stated her unwavering decision quietly, Nananna was silent for a time and let out a small breath.

She had known Nananna a long while, and Nananna was, above all, keen-witted. From what Noelle had said now and from her visit here, Nananna divined her purpose, and she walked over to the town map posted on the wall of the assembly hall.

Nananna: “Here and here, and then this area—those were last night. For now, after a shallow sweep of the same area, the search is extending to the west side of town, it is.”

Noelle: “From sunrise to sunset, you are chasing the sun?”

Nananna: “It is a method unique to this town with little snow, it is.”

Naturally, for a search, bright light is better, and the longer the time you can devote to it, the better. A search procedure that chases the sun reflects that soundly and is apt.

On that basis, Noelle judged that the fugitive, being a native of the town, would think the same thing, and considered the way to make the utmost use of the “Blessing” she had received.

And—

Noelle: “—I will head southeast.”

Nananna: “…This one would hear your reason, it is.”

Noelle: “If the other side tries to outflank us, I thought they might move opposite the sun… and it is a back-calculation from yesterday’s events.”

Nananna: “Yesterday’s—what, it is?”

Noelle: “Needless to say, our arrival.”

In Noelle’s breast, there was always the concern that it might be a wide-of-the-mark overreading. However, if the target were within the normal search range, hunters other than Noelle should find them. Being otherwise, Noelle wanted first of all to eliminate the possibility that had flashed through her mind.

Nananna: “Noelle—about tomorrow…”

Noelle: “I understand. Nananna will not show favor just because Omega-sama is my companion. And that is as it should be.”

She had no intention of using her relationship with Nananna to win Omega’s release by foul means. She only asked that it be fair, so that an unjust judgment would not be passed on Omega.

Noelle: “If Nananna remains Nananna, that is sufficient.”

Nananna: “…”

Noelle: “Then I too will go to the search. I will strive not to be in anyone’s way.”

With a bow and no time to spare, Noelle turned her back on Nananna. Since yesterday the timing had been bad, and there was no time to leisurely warm old ties, but everything would be after they got through the trial before them.

Fixing that in her heart, Noelle dashed out of the assembly hall—,

Noelle: “—!”

Struck in the back of the head by the impact, Noelle, with the illusion of sparks scattering across her vision, pitched forward and, with no way to stop herself, fell into the hole before her.

What awaited Noelle at the bottom of the hole was not the welcome of hard, cold rock. Whether that should be called fortunate is debatable, however.

The soft, watery sound that greeted her came with a stench of rot that roused an instinctive aversion. And no wonder—the thing that caught Noelle was a human corpse that had been dropped to the bottom of the hole. Not just one or two, but a much larger heap of bodies.

That such an abnormal secret had been hidden in this place was, as expected. On the other hand, the secret that had been hidden itself betrayed Noelle’s expectations and was far more abhorrent.

And more than anything, what shocked Noelle was that the person who had struck her down from behind was—

Nananna: “—This one will not beg forgiveness, it is.”

—that it was Nananna Pezza, who should have been her benefactor and friend.

14

Shion: “—Th-Th-Th-This is bad, bad, bad! We’re in big trouble, Lilac!!”

Lilac: “—!”

At that sudden plea, Lilac nearly let out a scream, but swallowed it down at the last instant.

From the outside she’d look like a weirdo suddenly shouting at nothing, and in reality she’d still be a weirdo, genuinely startled by the voice in her own head.

Colette: “—? Lilac-san, is something wrong?”

Having narrowly avoided that ignominy, Lilac drew Colette’s tilted head. She hadn’t screamed, but since she’d suddenly stopped walking, it was only natural she’d arouse suspicion.

They had just been talking over how to untangle the “witch” grudge that, as they’d learned from the secretary, was rooted far more deeply than they’d thought—when Shion’s plea came in.

Lilac had assumed Shion had behaved herself during the secretary’s account, but—

Lilac: “What is it all of a sudden?”

Shion: “Uh, please listen while keeping “don’t be surprised and don’t get mad” firmly in mind, but I was actually, um, secretly diving into dreams on the side.”

Lilac: “—. I’ll set aside being surprised and being angry for the moment.”

Dream Arts was heretical in terms of the Holy Church of Gusteko, so the plan had been not to use it in Limbus; but since Lilac herself intended to use it later, she let it slide for now.

The problem was: Shion had used dream arts without consulting her—what had she panicked over?

Shion: “To help solve the mysterious-death case, I was trying to pick up that “basic stuff, my friend” kind of atmosphere—like maybe someone’s sheltering the “witch,” or the victims share some common point—and, well, I hit on a pretty shocking fact!”

Lilac: “So what is it. Don’t be coy—say it.”

Shion: “—About the “witch,” she’s there and she isn’t.”

Obeying Lilac’s request, Shion had avoided a roundabout answer—in her own way. But now it was so blunt that the point failed to get across.

What did it mean to be there and not there?

As Lilac’s thoughts twisted in frustration, Shion cleared her throat with an “ahem,” and—

Shion: “There is no “witch.” What exists is a wicked system that exploits the threat called “witch” to eliminate those hostile to oneself. It’s all a conspiracy of the town council.”

Which is to say—

Shion: “—Our odds look terrible!”

At last, with an explanation that was concise and easy to grasp, Lilac gaped. Peeking in from the side at Lilac, stunned in their in-head conference, Colette widened her eyes.

Then she gently drew close to the wide-eyed Lilac and said,

Colette: “The Shion in your head must be super, super worried about Omega-chan too, huh."

With that innocent concern—precisely because she still knew none of the circumstances—she lowered her brows.

15

Nananna: "—Then, this one hereby declares the opening of the Witch Trial, it is."

In the assembly hall of Limbus, the one who spoke those words from the rearmost seat was the small Itinerant Preacher with short dark-navy hair—Nananna Pezza.

Having taken on the role of judge presiding over this Witch Trial, Nananna looked down at the assembly hall from a seat raised one step to indicate her position, her drowsy eyes reflecting the faces that had gathered.

Spectators from all over town had assembled in the hall to witness this Witch Trial; those who could not fit inside pressed up against the windows, fixing their attention on the fate of the "witch."

And in the very midst of this highly watched trial, Palmira, appointed as defense for the "witch" whose witchhood was to be questioned, was beset by a feeling as if she might collapse at any moment. That, however, was not merely due to the mental pressure of the great responsibility about to fall upon her.

The gravity of the matter had grown beyond the fact that one of their own was being put to a Witch Trial.

Omega: "Palmira, calm yourself a little. Yes—how about taking a deep breath? Or I hear it's effective to write the character for "person" in your palm three times and swallow it. They say it means to "swallow people." Haha, I can't understand it and that makes me tingle with excitement, doesn't it?"

Palmira: "How about you show a little solemnity for once…! Rather than swallowing people, you've had a smug, people-eating attitude on and on and—"

Nananna: "—Defense counsel, this one has not permitted conversation with the "witch" suspect, it is. Refrain, it is."

With clenched fists and a trembling voice, Palmira was thus admonished by a frowning Nananna.

Though she felt it unreasonable to be made out the villain unilaterally, Palmira said, "Sorry," and instead fixed a hard glare on Omega's profile, bound at the center of the hall.

As described above, the room was laid out with Nananna at the very back, Omega in the center, and, with the "witch" between them, Palmira and the defense on one side and, facing them, the Limbus Town Council—its representative, Edmon Quail, and his secretary and others—lined up on the other. The spectators, so as to command a full view of the main figures in the trial, watched with bated breath from the rear of the hall and from the surrounding windows.

Feeling the pressure of those countless imploring eyes, Palmira nevertheless, from the bottom of her stomach, felt that they were the ones who ought to be helping them.

For—what this Witch Trial would come to was—

Lilac: "—What you'd call a rigged match."

Those were the first words Lilac flung out the moment everyone, who had gone out to seek information to save the imprisoned Omega with the trial opening the next day, had reconvened at the inn.

At those words, Palmira and Colette both tilted their heads: "Rigged match?"

Lilac: "A fix, cheating, a prearranged negotiation… meaning the outcome has been set up."

Palmira: "Wha—?!"

Colette: "But, but, why would they do something like that? If they can't find a proper "witch," the ones who'll be in trouble are the townspeople, aren't they?"

Lilac: "That premise is wrong to begin with."

With Palmira and Colette aghast, Lilac knit her brows in displeasure and said, "Listen, okay?"

Lilac: "This is information Shion dove into people's dreams to obtain with dream art… The true nature of the "witch" uproar in this town is an ugly power struggle engineered by the town council. The apothecary who quelled the fever that spread in town was the first victim of that scheme."

Colette: "Does that mean—there isn't any "witch"?"

Lilac: "…There are people for whom it's convenient if there is a "witch," and they keep getting rid of obstacles by calling them "witches." That's the truth of the witch uproar in this town."

Told that hopeless truth, Palmira did not know what to say. Hence, what followed was not something she thought out with her head, but Palmira's honest, heartfelt feeling.

Palmira: "—All the parties involved can just go and die."

Colette: "Palmira, you can't say that…"

Palmira: "I said it. And what if I did? Of course I'd want to say it! Over a story this damn ridiculous we've been tormented up and—!"

Even Colette's sorrowful tug on her sleeve did nothing to restrain Palmira.

From what Omega had said from her cell, more than twenty people had been executed as "witches"—and since there was no real "witch," they were victims labeled obstacles by the town council. And now they were about to add Omega to that number.

Palmira: "That's it, we're done. Holding a trial is a waste of time. If they're all in on it, there's no chance of winning, and Omega will go on a rampage, the town will be wiped off the map, and that's the end!"

Lilac: “And then we’ll be branded heretics by the Holy Church of Gusteko and be on the run… But yes. It would mean stopping by this town was the mistake in the first place.”

With both hands covering her face, Palmira lamented; with a sigh, Lilac concurred.

And that was only natural. There was simply nothing to be done. There was no “witch,” the true culprit to be accused, anywhere, and the town council would pull out all the stops to crush the fact from getting out. In a Witch Trial the other side ran, how were they supposed to properly prove not guilty?

However, between thoroughly dispirited Palmira and Lilac, there came a high voice—“No!”—as Colette took both their hands in hers.

Colette: “Lilac-san’s story and the story Shion-san found are very surprising, and I understand that they’re terrible things. I do. But, but, just like Palmira says, it’s not like the whole town’s in on it—there are people who are truly afraid too!”

Palmira: “That… might be so, but…”

Colette: “And the one who decides whether we win or lose the trial isn’t the townspeople, it’s Nananna-san. She’s Noelle-san’s friend. She won’t do anything underhanded; she’ll look properly.”

Colette’s earnest plea had a point.

But only a point. The fact remained that the greater part of Limbus was rotten; even if they weren’t party to the town council’s plot, it was also a fact that the townsfolk had let many executions of “witches” pass unchallenged.

Palmira: “Even so—do you want to save them?”

Colette: “—. Yes, yes, I do. And I’m sure you’ll regret it.”

Palmira: “If we don’t save them, you mean you’ll regret it?”

Colette: “No, no, not me. Palmira will—surely you will regret it.”

Breathing out a little “Hah,” Palmira looked up at the ceiling.

Annoyingly enough, just as Colette said, she could plainly see herself, later on, brooding over the decision made here, regretting it, and dragging it along.

The powerless, irresponsible people of Limbus who, in their passivity, abetted the persecution of “witches”—they were the same as the Palmira of old who had not saved Colette when she was treated as a “witch” in their hometown.

Even if they died, she could see all too well that it would not make her feel the least bit better.

Lilac: “…I don’t think we’re completely without a shot.”

So saying, Lilac abruptly interjected into Palmira and Colette’s exchange.

She glanced down, a touch awkward, at the hand Colette was holding.

Lilac: “As Colette says, it isn’t as if everyone in town is party to the plot. If the facts come to light, there will be those who turn their backs on the town council. If we fan those divisions in the town—”

Shion: “—Lilac says slightly extreme things sometimes, but I think that approach is on the table!”

Colette: “Kya! Lilac-san turned into Shion-san!”

Switching mid-sentence from Lilac to Shion, she squeezed Colette’s hand back; with a tiny yelp, Colette raised her voice. Displaying her human-wonder act, Shion gave a light cough: “Ahem.”

Shion: “Lilac’s mad, so she’ll be right back, but—the ringleader is the man in the middle of the town council… Edmon-san. He’s the one who set up the “witch” uproar.”

Palmira: “Ugh, a guy who did exactly what my bad impression predicted… Are you serious about the “division” thing?”

Shion: “I don’t want to parade Lilac’s extreme ideology, but… if the townspeople together demanded a recall, I don’t think Edmon-san could refuse.”

Palmira: “So in other words, we just need to make the townsfolk flip their palms. If that’s the case, then about that story we—”

Colette: “But, but, that story is something you pulled out of people’s dreams, right, Shion-san? Wouldn’t we be in trouble if they ask us where we heard it?”

At Colette’s reasonable doubt, Palmira faltered with an “Ugh.”

Indeed, since Shion and Lilac were dream illusionists, information obtained using dream art had to be handled with care. If, in trying to clear the “witch” suspicion, they only deepened it, it would be putting the cart before the horse.

In short—

Palmira: “We’ll blur the source while steering the focus of the “witch” suspicion away from Omega toward exposing the scheme of these rotten people in the town—yes, that’s the direction we take!”

Shion: “Ooh! Palmira-san’s all fired up with a “ba-bam”! That’s the spirit!”

Colette: “It sounds like it’s going to be very, very hard, but I’m sure Palmira can do it!”

Palmira: “Thanks for the support with no basis! All right, if that’s settled, once Noelle gets back, strategy meeting for tomorrow’s trial! I also need to ask about the strategy for dealing with that Itinerant Preacher.”

Lilac: “…Well, having motivation is a good thing.”

Driven into a corner, Palmira instead firmed her resolve; Shion and Colette cheered her on, and Lilac, having taken back the lead, let out an ambiguous sigh that was unclear whether it was encouragement or not.

At any rate, with their direction decided, they waited for Noelle to return—but—

Colette: "…I wonder what's happened to Noelle-san. I'm very, very worried."

So murmured Colette, standing beside Palmira, looking anxiously toward the hall's entrance. Just as her anxiety indicated, no matter how long they waited, Noelle did not return to the inn.

In the end, even after a night had passed, with Noelle still not back, they conducted a strategy meeting that could not be called perfect, and Palmira and the others found themselves facing the Witch Trial.

Lilac: "Noelle was pursuing the man who was supposedly informed upon as a "witch." He was only denounced to begin with—a victim—but if he saw something inconvenient, he may have been made to disappear."

Palmira: "Don't say something so terrifying! And if that's the case, it really is better to toss the whole trial out and let that "witch" run wild—!"

Clutching her elbows, Lilac voiced a prognosis that was less pessimistic than outright despair. When Palmira ground her teeth at her words and pointed, the "witch" at the center of the hall fluttered her hand back in a wave.

To be honest, in simple combat strength, among Palmira's group Noelle was the strongest. Omega could use magic, and Shion and Lilac's prowess in diving into dreams was, if one had to say, unknowns—but it was Noelle who could beat a large witchbeast to death bare-handed from the front. It was hard to imagine that Noelle had fallen into the enemy's hands easily, and as for losing her life, that was out of the question.

Therefore—

Palmira: "She didn't come back, but Noelle's alive. We proceed with the trial on that premise. …I've at least stayed up all night and put the story together, so I'll do this."

Clenching her fist tight, Palmira put into practice the iron rule she had learned for the first time on the journey with Omega—when something is beyond your own hands, leave it to the one who can handle it.

If Noelle faced an opponent whose strength she could not match, there was nothing Palmira could do.

Instead, in Noelle's place—who had neither prepared for nor appeared at the trial—Palmira would do this.

To that end, Palmira lifted her face and glared head-on at the bearded visage of the hateful ringleader of the witch uproar—Edmon Quail—

Palmira: "First, this is something I said yesterday as well, but we arrived in this town the day before yesterday at the Hour of Fire. The people who welcomed us and the inn register both attest to that. The mysterious-death case has nothing to do with us. —We assert that, categorically!"

—and thus she began to unfold an argument that directly denied the "witch" suspicion.

Colette watched with bated breath as Palmira, dashing and composed, spoke out at the Witch Trial.

To protect Omega, she would prove that the "witch" suspicion placed on her—strictly speaking, not a suspicion, for Omega truly was a "witch"—was of a different kind than the "witch" who had done evil in this town.

Honestly, Colette could barely keep up with the argument Palmira had assembled together with Shion and Lilac, who kept switching places—but—

Edmon: "We were outside the town. Therefore, we couldn't have been involved in the witch uproar happening here. …I heard that argument yesterday. So as for that, the discussion should already be over, yeah?"

Palmira: “No, we did not reach a conclusion. We demanded the opening of the Witch Trial and it ended in a haze. We’re not satisfied—no one is. Things like, ‘If she’s a “witch,” she might have been outside town the whole time,’ or, ‘She might have been stirring things up from outside’—we won’t accept such outrageous arguments.”

Nananna: “What shall be done, then, it is. Are we to ignore this town’s anxieties? Simply because you are travelers, it is?”

Palmira: “Ignore them? The ones ignoring the townsfolk’s anxieties aren’t us. It’s you.”

Arms folded, Palmira flung those words out with imposing dignity, and Colette felt her chest grow hot.

Palmira was clever and good with words, but there was a slight tendency for her to speak on momentum, and not rarely she would put up a brave front. Even so, she never ran away.

Even now, while turning the adults into her enemies, with a face like a villain she could still properly smile. Wearing that expression, Palmira spread her arms wide and said, “Listen, okay?”

Palmira: “This is a matter of lives. In that case, we ought to think properly without begrudging the effort. A traveler from outside, who looks like she happened to slip up, is the ‘witch’ who’s been troubling the town all along, so even though they themselves deny it, you’ll execute them without even hearing them out… What do you think will happen?”

Edmon: “This old man thinks the town’s anxieties will be removed, and there’ll be peace, yeah?”

Palmira: “Is that so? My feeling is the opposite. …Ah, ‘The town’s representatives are fools who only push immediate problems off and won’t try to arrive at a fundamental solution’—that makes me feel despair. They’re surely cruel to everyone. Without exception.”

Palmira spoke fluently, as if it had all been prepared in advance; opposite her, Edmon’s cheek stiffened faintly, and wariness etched itself into his eyes.

From the other side's perspective, it was proof that Palmira was not some young lady to be put off with platitudes, but a counterpart in this trial—meant to determine whether Omega was a "witch"—with whom to properly cross arguments.

Lilac: "They're noisy in my head, so I'll pass it along: 'Good job,' they say. Yesterday's acting coaching fit perfectly and they're proud… apparently."

Like Colette, Lilac—relaying Shion's impressions—was greatly impressed as well. Palmira herself, though, seemed to have not even the leeway to cast a glance their way. All Colette and the others could do was keep sending her their warmth so she would not be alone.

Colette: "Besides that, it sounds like Shion-san gave it her all too, but—"

Lilac: "…Yes. Perhaps she overdid it without restraint."

As Colette worried over the growing heat that filled the hall, Lilac quietly bit her nail.

Even before the start of the trial the hall had been packed, but with time both the degree of attention and the number of onlookers swelled further. And behind that was the hard work of Shion, a dream illusionist.

Lilac: "Dive into the other's dream and give a push to the option they're wavering on. As for whether to go to the hall, it's not that hard to strengthen the awareness of someone who's concerned about it. It's hard to make someone who isn't thinking anything become aware of it, though."

Colette: "That means you can help people who can't muster up courage, right? I think it's a very, very wonderful magic."

Lilac: "…Your way of thinking is rather unusual."

Lilac averted her gaze, and Colette tilted her head: "Is it?"

Certainly, there might be more dangerous ways to use it, but the ones using this dream art were either Shion or Lilac. Since both of them were kind, Colette felt it was only natural to think there was no need to worry about dangerous uses.

Palmira: “In fact, I’ve heard there were people suspected as ‘witches’ and executed even before Omega. Yet even with those people being executed one after another, the uproar hasn’t settled at all. Does that mean the suspicion missed? Or is it that a great many ‘witches’ have infiltrated this town?”

Edmon: “Wait, wait. That’s a misunderstanding, yeah? This old man looked into it properly and knows, but the thing called a ‘witch’s’ power—when the ‘witch’ dies, it transfers to someone else. So it isn’t strange if, after an execution, another person becomes a ‘witch,’ yeah?”

Omega: “Heh, you’re well-informed. You sure know your stuff. That’s right.”

Palmira: “Do you actually understand which side you’re on?”

Edmon—and, of all people, Omega—had cut in to obstruct the development of Palmira’s argument. Receiving a stern look from Palmira, Omega pressed both hands over her own mouth in a “I’m keeping quiet” gesture.

However, when it was asserted that a “witch’s” power transferred to others, Colette felt at a loss—

Lilac: “If so, then the town council knows that killing won’t resolve it and still intends to execute Omega? That means continuing the witch hunts until the last townsman remains?”

At that very moment of being at a loss, Lilac’s sharp tongue cut in.

It was a remark that could be called hair-splitting, but a stir suddenly spread among the spectators. It was a confrontation with the difficult question which the townsfolk, while fearing it somewhere in their hearts, had continued to ignore.

How far would the town council's thoroughgoing stance toward "witches" be carried?

Frowning at that point, the one to talk back was the blue-haired secretary. She raised her hand and countered, "That's an objection. Somewhat off the mark."

Blue-Haired Secretary: "We desire resolution—this old man and the town council do. All our efforts to this day have been for the peace of Limbus."

Palmira: "Leaders don't get 'A for effort' awards. What leaders are asked is whether they achieved the manifesto they held aloft—nothing else. In that respect, how about you? Have you achieved your manifesto of removing the 'witch'?"

Blue-Haired Secretary: "It is the town council's view that it will be accomplished by her execution."

Colette: "—But, but, we know that won't work. Surely among the people who've been suspected as 'witches' until now, there were those who knew that too."

On impulse, Colette cut into Lilac and the secretary's exchange and went, "Ah." But with Palmira beside her nodding to her, Colette brought her words out to the end.

To that end, Colette faced not the town council, but the spectators—

Colette: "I don't think what Lilac-san says will happen. Because, because, before that, someone will properly notice that this is wrong. Once you notice, whether you can say it aloud is only a matter of courage. So, so—this is a request."

As she spoke, Colette looked firmly, one by one, at the faces of the spectators.

And—

Colette: “If you’re going to notice somewhere and find the courage, then surely, surely now is the earliest within what you can do now. If any of you have ever regretted something… please, remember it.”

17

Colette’s deep bow and plea clearly changed the air in the assembly hall.

Shion: “If we’d known this beforehand, leaving a charm-like suggestion in everyone’s dreams to bring out their courage would’ve been an option too, but things have been pretty live up to this point, you know.”

Lilac: “Big words from the one who got all fired up and turned this into a live venue. Did you seriously dive into every last townsfolk’s dream? The body and the gate are supposed to be shared with me, remember?”

Shion: “Sorry for the after-the-fact notice. But, I figured the result would be the same whether I told you or not.”

Though she apologized, it was clearly only for form’s sake, and Lilac sighed inwardly at Shion’s pose. Most likely Shion’s assessment was correct, so Lilac preserved face by not talking back.

Anyway—Lilac gave a small nod at the glance Palmira sent their way.

It was time to ride the wave Colette had made and advance the argument to its next step.

From here on—

Palmira: “—Just as Colette said, if you think properly, you can notice it, and if you can make up your mind to say it, you can raise your voice. The town council is supposed to be the gathering for that.”

Lilac: “And yet the town council has continued with ad-hoc measures and let the damage spread. Is this proof of the town council’s incompetence? Or… was there some other design at work?”

When Palmira and Lilac’s words came one after another, Colette’s eyes went round with an “Eh?!” It must have been a statement with a very different intent from what she had just said. Knowing that, they guided the townspeople’s emotions Colette had nurtured.

Edmon: “Scary, scary. “Other design,” huh—you two conspiracists, are you? Yeah? This is a tiny snowswept town. Saying some terrifying great evil is advancing here—you can’t laugh at that, right?”

Lilac: “Even though a “witch” uproar is already happening? That sounds like you’re treating the “witch” as a small matter and leaves a bad impression. It feels like you don’t understand how serious this is.”

Edmon: “It’s all nitpicking and not a conversation. Preacher-sama, what do you think? Yeah.”

Having clearly begun to lose his composure, Edmon turned the discussion toward Nananna, the one serving as judge.

The Itinerant Preacher, who had stayed silent and watched the debate thus far, turned her eyes to Palmira.

Nananna: “The town councillor’s appeal is legitimate, it is. It sounds like fault-finding, it does, but what intent does the defense have in making such statements, it is?”

Palmira: “Of course, I’ve thought it through properly—so we can correct this town’s mistake.”

Responding thus to Nananna’s pressing, Palmira clenched her small fist tight.

From that choice of words, Lilac perceived that Palmira had decided to drop the main bomb. At the same time, a certain conclusion was reached between Lilac and the Shion inside her head.

Shion: “—Nananna-san is a plant for the town council.”

Lilac: “A plant… well, roughly speaking, yes. If it’s between Itinerant Preachers, there are times even Noelle will be outmaneuvered. The suspects were limited from the start.”

Shion: “Exactly… I hope Noelle-san is safe, though.”

The words of worry were surely sincere, but Shion had to know it was a slender hope.

Noelle was someone with the potential to crush this town’s conspiracy through sheer might. It was hard to imagine they would pass up the chance to neutralize that threat. If Nananna was one of them, it would not be difficult to trap Noelle, who trusted her.

Noelle’s survival was bleak—and precisely because of that—

Lilac: “We’ll teach them how terrifying it is to make enemies of dream illusionists.”

Why had Lilac and Shion been hunted by many and continued to be regarded as enemies of the world? They would prove, in this very trial, the magnitude of the reason beyond them being elves.

With Palmira about to light the fuse at this very moment—

Palmira: “—What I’m saying is that the town council may have taken advantage of the “witch” uproar to erase parties inconvenient to themselves.”

Nananna: “…Oh?”

At that point, a shock ran not only through Nananna, but through the town council including Edmon, and more than anything, through the townsfolk who were spectators at this Witch Trial. Amid that shock, the reaction of interest from Omega was as slight as a leaf stirred by the wind.

That was how much Palmira’s statement had stepped into the forbidden.

Edmon: “Baseless conjecture! This is too much, no matter what! Right, yeah?!”

He slammed the desk and sprang to his feet in fury. But that reaction was not unnatural for someone whose decisions as the town council were being questioned. Hence, what mattered was what came next. With his next behavior, it would be easy to know which way Edmon's true intent lay—no, it would become known.

Palmira: ""Baseless?" Is it? This is something I heard from one of the councillors, but the cause of the fever that first set off the uproar was apparently foodstuffs cheaply bought in from outside, wasn't it? The existence of a "witch" made a convenient scapegoat to hide that fact—didn't it?"

Edmon: "…"

At the instant Palmira's well-coached villainess face hit like a hammer, Edmon's expression twisted fiercely at the surprise attack, and his gaze swung toward the councillors on his own side.

It was a look for hunting down an informer in their midst, for harsh interrogation—but showing that here was without doubt a mistake.

Edmon Quail's agitation was laid bare to the gathered spectators.

Shion: "We expected this, but… it's not exactly exhilarating. As usual."

Lilac: "Then I'll think it in your stead while you play the good person: serves him right."

In her mind, to Shion's prim, well-behaved comment, Lilac boldly chose the cutting words as the bad girl and roundly abused the opposition.

—The true forte of dream illusionists lay in being able to affect others without their awareness.

By that, dream illusionists could pull information from a target or, conversely, slip information into their unconscious. Of course, resistance to dream art varied by individual, and it did not mean every lawless thing would fly free—but used well, the possibilities were endless.

Only, in this case, that very omnipotence of dream art was tantamount to proving the “witch,” so the information they had gone to the trouble of obtaining being unusable was a snag—

Shion: “—And not giving up at that point is exactly where a dream illusionist shows their chops.”

Ignoring Shion’s finger-snap gesture, Lilac beheld a sight that was practically a demonstration of why dream illusionists were persecuted.

Edmon and the town council—those who had shared a common goal and exploited the existence of the “witch” to suit themselves—had a seed of discord spread among them, and in an instant it grew into a flower of suspicion.

They began to doubt one another, calculating in their hearts who the informer was and to whom they should fawn to protect themselves—but it was pointless.

There was no informer among them. They were bound together by a firm sense of complicity—except that they themselves could not bring themselves to believe that fact.

At the town council’s blatant reaction, a murmur spread among the spectators. Apparently there were those among them who had begun to take Lilac and the others’ argument seriously.

Omega: “—Interesting.”

At the center of the hall where confusion was spreading, almost everyone easily missed the words with which the “witch” savored the chaos—so small was her voice.

Palmira: “How about it? Is this just my baseless conjecture? Or will you insist that I’m so familiar with this town’s internal affairs because I’m one of the “witch’s” cronies—and that that’s more credible than one of the people who did wrong in this town, unable to bear their guilty conscience, telling the truth?”

While Lilac made a wry face at the “witch’s” murmur, Palmira’s voice grew all the hotter.

She herself had lacked confidence all along, but she was quite the actress. Once she got going, she did not drop speed; she kept on speeding up and heating up unbroken.

Even if it was bravado, the assembly hall's air was swallowed by her speaking with full confidence. The spectators' doubts, demanding an explanation, eventually became voices, and the voices turned into a great outcry.

Nananna: "Silence! You will keep silence, it is! In a trial to question the right or wrong of a "witch," those without the right to speak will hold their tongues, it is! You will be removed, it is!"

In the hall that was on the verge of becoming unmanageable, Nananna's voice rang high as she struck the desk. Even so, the murmurs did not subside. Into that situation, still warm with residual mistrust, Palmira thrust further.

Palmira: "In the first place, you toss around "witch," "witch" so lightly, but do you even know what a "witch" is when you say it? Who was it—where did they come from—who first said that what happened in this town was the work of a "witch"? Why would a "witch" do this?"

Edmon: "That is! That's what "witches" do. No one knows the meaning or the reason—"

Palmira: "You don't know? Don't make me repeat myself! If you're going to give up on thinking because you don't know, then the town council lacks seriousness! All of you—you've long since started to realize it!"

They must have grown complacent, deciding that, once they had taken control of the town, somehow won over even an Itinerant Preacher, and let the fear of the "witch" pervade, the victory would not budge. Unlike Palmira, Edmon and the others, who had hardly prepared counterarguments, could not stop her words.

And Palmira declared, so that it roared in the hearts of everyone in the hall—

Palmira: "—There is no such thing as a "witch" in this town! That is this trial's verdict!"

It was a declaration so vivid it should be called a blade of words with a razor's edge.

The town councillors—Edmon and the rest—stared wide-eyed, the spectators voiced support for Palmira's view with something like frenzy, and even Nananna forgot to call for silence, drawing in a breath.

At that point, the verdict would not be overturned, even with the judge in their pocket—or so everyone thought.

Omega: "—No, a "witch" does exist. Here inside this very assembly hall, in fact."

There was a voice that contradicted Palmira's view head-on.

It was the outrageous outburst of the "witch" at the center of the hall, who had just been about to be saved.

18

In an instant, the air in the assembly hall froze, and the time of the world came to a halt.

Omega nodded with deep feeling at the fact that her single word now held everyone present in thrall.

Omega: "As I thought, this is nice. An environment in which everyone is intrigued and lends an ear to my story."

Palmira: "O-O-O… OmegAAAAAA—!!"

Omega: "Oh my, Palmira, what's the matter? Is there something you wished to say to me?"

Palmira: "Y-You—! You—! Just now, just now, I—I—just now…!"

Palmira flushed scarlet and choked on her words; Colette, flustered, rubbed her back. From Palmira's state, even Omega could sense her fierce anger and confusion.

From Palmira's point of view, she must have felt as if the Omega she was trying to protect had stabbed her in the back, so that was only natural. Omega was grateful for her struggle, and she did think it was poor form to spoil it.

However—

Omega: "Letting a mistaken truth be believed would be a bit unpleasant for me."

Palmira: "A mistaken… truth? Are you going to claim there was no town council conspiracy?"

Omega: "No, there was a conspiracy. I can't imagine Lilac and the others would overlook that. —Only, there weren't one but two conspiracies."

Raising one finger on each hand, Omega—though in the position of being judged—said so. Smiling at the sight of her companions' mouths hanging open, she turned her back on them and, facing Nananna on the dais, called out, "Presiding Judge."

Omega: "May I address you so? And furthermore, I would be grateful if I could be given an opportunity to speak."

Nananna: "…The mode of address is as you please, it is. However, as the suspect, your opportunity to speak is—"

Omega: "Even if, by shutting my mouth, the chance to loose the chains that bind you were to be lost forever?"

At Omega's slight tilt of the head, Nananna's eyes flew wide and her cheeks stiffened.

Lilac and Shion had noticed as well, but Nananna was a collaborator of the town council—though Itinerant Preachers cannot be bought with money or position. There was another reason.

Taking into account that reason, and taking Nananna's inability to get a second word out as permission, Omega turned her back completely on Palmira and the others and faced the town council instead.

Edmon, who had risen and put his hands on the desk, looked bewildered at the way events were unfolding, but—

Omega: "You have a tendency to overreach here and there, but a thick skin is not a bad trait in a leader. After you made use of a "witch," what followed must have been one confusion after another for you."

Edmon: "Wh-What are you talking about? Yeah?"

Omega: "The expansion and the running out of control of the situation were outside your expectations, weren't they? Just as Palmira predicted, at first you scapegoated the apothecary to cover up the fever brought on by poor food management. After that, perhaps you continued it a few times, thinking, "This is usable"… but the mysterious-death cases were not at the town council's behest."

Edmon: "…"

Omega: "Among the victims of the mysterious-death cases were councillors and their relatives. In a dictatorship, sacrifices for a reign of terror can happen, but this town is governed by a council. The discretion of an individual is not respected to the extent that purging one's own kin would be allowed indefinitely."

In other words, the town council was not involved in selecting the victims of the mysterious-death cases. Rather, compared to the "witch" conjured up by people's anxiety and fear, the damage from the mysterious deaths was more hostile to the town council. And in those two kinds of sacrifices—the inquisitions and the mysterious deaths—Omega sensed a certain powerful intent.

That was—

Omega: "—A fierce hatred toward the town called Limbus."

A blade of hatred, directed equally at the town council weaving its plots and at the townsfolk who allowed its despotism. That was the true form of the poison flame that scorched Limbus and made neighbor suspect neighbor.

And the guide of that poison flame was the "witch" who presided over the fear of this snowswept town.

Omega: "Now then, this "witch," brimming with hatred toward the town, decided to make use of the town council's conspiracy. I said there were two conspiracies just now, but "front and back" might be more apt. The conspiracy on the front is the inquisitions by the town council, designating nuisances as "witches," and the one on the back is the mysterious-death cases among council-related persons… To carry this out for certain, two elements are required."

Colette: "…What are they, Omega-chan?"

In the hall, which had been swallowed by the atmosphere Omega made, Colette's question reached the back of her head.

Judging her, inwardly, to be a talent who would not be devoured by the "witch's" presence, Omega again raised one finger on each hand.

Omega: "It's simple. One role is to accelerate the town council's runaway use of the "witch," and one role is to smoothly conduct the inquisitions and pile up further sacrifices. —Ideally, those two would appear to have no connection on the surface."

Edmon: "The conductor… of the inquisitions… Don't tell me, yeah?"

At Omega's explanation, Edmon's mouth opened and closed like a fish, and his gaze, having grasped the meaning, shifted. He looked to Nananna on the dais—the Itinerant Preacher, supposedly the town council's collaborator who wished to keep power in hand—who lowered her eyes under Edmon's look.

At the very moment he saw that reaction, Edmon twisted his lips—

Edmon: "You…! We even called back the daughter of that mistress who was banished from the town, and this is what you— What on earth are you playing at?! I don't get it! Yeah?!"

Omega: "I see—that's the relationship. Thank you for the easy-to-understand explanation."

Edmon's furious abuse laid bare, in short order, the relationship between him and Nananna. —By conjecture, Nananna was the illegitimate child of Edmon's father. Having been driven from Limbus in the past because of her birth, Nananna, when the town council set about using the "witch," was in just the right position to be called back as the executioner of the inquisitions.

Given that background, it was no wonder that Nananna harbored a grudge against the town. —Except that, with that, only one of the raised fingers could be folded; it was a touch insufficient for the conclusion.

And therefore—

Noelle: "—The reason for the anger would be the late apothecary, would it not."

So saying, Noelle appeared in the doorway of the assembly hall—battered—and brought the last missing piece to the unfinished puzzle.

19

Shion: "—Found you at last! Noelle-san, please wake up! No—elle—san!"

At that boisterous call, Noelle, whose consciousness had fallen into darkness, stirred awake. No—she did not awaken. Her body remained unconscious; only her awareness had been roused.

It was a vague, nebulous space, belonging to nowhere in this world, with a complex, uncanny air that could be called neither white nor black; and there, facing Noelle was—

Noelle: "…Shion-sama, is it?"

Shion: “It is, it is! I’m really relieved we could meet again! Sorry it took so long to find you. I was basically accessing every sleeping consciousness I could one after another, but I didn’t think you’d be this far out on the town’s outskirts.”

Noelle: “The outskirts of town… No, yes, that is so. I certainly—”

She had gone into the forest to search for the missing townsman who had been informed upon as a “witch,” ahead of the Witch Trial.

In the midst of that search, following a faint stench of rot, she was attacked and dropped into a cavern. And the one who had attacked Noelle was—

Noelle: “—Nananna.”

Shion: “Yes. Regrettably, Nananna-san is a collaborator of the town council. It wasn’t a “witch” who was here in this town, but dirty politicians who exploited the existence of one—”

At Shion’s grave-faced explanation, Noelle grasped the rough outline.

On top of that, what flashed through Noelle’s mind were the stories of her hometown she’d heard from Nananna—her roommate—while learning as a follower of the Holy Church of Gusteko, and the blessing she had received.

Noelle: “When I received my “Blessing,” my fever would not go down, and I thought I might die—but it was Nananna who decocted medicine for me.”

Using magic to help accept the sensation of one’s internal gate rampaging was taboo. For that reason, all Noelle could do was endure the suffering—so Nananna extended to her a decoction she had learned from the apothecary who had looked after her in her hometown.

Nananna: “I do not have many fond memories of my hometown. But the apothecary who lived on the outskirts was good to us strays. In the end, I was driven out of town… yet even now, my gratitude to the apothecary and what I was taught remain within me."

Yes—Nananna, usually spare of expression, had, uncharacteristically, smiled as she spoke of that memory. It was so unexpected, and coupled with having been helped, it was etched deeply into Noelle's memory.

If that hometown Nananna had spoken of was Limbus—

Noelle: "—I, at least, cannot deny Nananna's revenge."

Having crawled out of the pit into which she had fallen and raced back over snowy roads, Noelle now stood facing Nananna squarely upon the dais in the town's assembly hall and said so.

Noelle, too, was a revenger. She understood Nananna's feelings painfully well.

Hence, it was only natural that Nananna had wished to eliminate Noelle, who stood in the way of her plan.

If there were but one dissatisfaction Noelle had with Nananna's deed, it was—

Noelle: "You did not… involve me."

Nananna: "Noelle… this one, this one…"

Noelle: "It is all right. Nananna did not quite finish killing me. On that single point, I shall forgive Nananna. And there was, was there not? An accomplice."

Just before, she had heard what Omega said, and afterward, Edmon's furious voice as well.

This plan of vengeance required two roles: one to conduct the inquisitions, and one to handle the "steering" that manipulated the town council. And in those memories, Nananna had said:

"The apothecary who lived on the outskirts was good to us strays."

Us strays—not "me," but "us." If there was someone who had stayed by the side of Nananna, who had been oppressed for her birth, that someone could be none other than a person of the same circumstances.

In other words, besides Nananna, there was another illegitimate child sired by Edmon's father—

Noelle: "In the hole into which I fell, there lay the remains of Piditz-sama, who was on the run. Besides his, there were the remains of many others there as well. An administrative officer dispatched from the Holy Capital for the purpose of aiding the town's governance— the remains of the genuine administrative officer."

Palmira: "The genuine… which means—"

At Palmira's gasp, Noelle nodded deeply.

The remains bore tattoos indicating the officer's status, prepared so that even after death they would serve as proof of having come from the Holy Capital. For that reason, though he and his companions had all been cast into the cavern, his body alone had been spared decay and retained its original form.

And, in place of the genuine administrative officer—who stole that position wholesale was—

Noelle: "It was you, was it not—Secretary-sama, who kept close by the gentlemen of the town council."

Thus, Noelle quietly put the question to the long blue-haired secretary standing at Edmon's side.

Nananna: "—Mireille."

Palmira heard the hoarse, feeble voice of Nananna on the dais call out to the blue-haired secretary whose very aura had changed in an instant.

To be honest, from the moment Omega's outrageous outburst flew, Palmira had been left almost completely behind by the situation, but she was just barely keeping up with the circumstances, or so she flattered herself. And Palmira's impression of the truth behind Limbus, as she so flattered herself, was—

Palmira: "—Everyone involved can just die."

—that the very conclusion she'd reached before the previous day's strategy meeting came out intact, exactly as it was.

Mireille: "…"

At the sound of her name, the secretary—Mireille—sharpened eyes that had been keeping her emotions restrained, and from her whole body she sent forth unmistakable hostility, hatred. The pressure of that intensity made even Edmon, at her side, cringe backward pathetically.

Still radiating that oppressive presence, Mireille brought her hands together before her chest and let them hear a clap.

Mireille: "I had a bad feeling. Back when I heard the story from Nananna."

Palmira: "…Because Noelle was with her?"

Mireille: "Because she flattered her. Noelle Tuérico did."

Mireille drove that keen gaze into Omega.

Omega, for her part, took the look with a cool face and shrugged.
Omega: "I get that a lot."

Omega: "So you tried to eliminate me before anyone started poking around? That was a bad move. Your best play would have been to overlook our departure."

Mireille: "It didn't turn out that way. As a result, we were about to clean up—the party who saw us kill Piditz. You happened to be there by chance."

Omega: "…Oh?"

At Mireille's bitter face, Omega tilted her head as if her guess had missed the mark.

Come to think of it, Palmira recalled how, on the night of the witch-hunt that led to Omega being imprisoned as a "witch," Omega had moved differently from the other participants. That was partly a matter of stamina, but it had also been the execution of her own idea for driving the fleeing party into a corner—and that had overlapped, badly, with Mireille and the others' designs.

As a result, right near where Mireille and company had silenced a witness, Omega showed up—

Palmira: "You really attract nothing but the nastiest kind of trouble…!"

Omega: "I'd like to say that's unfair, but at this point it's hard to make excuses. Haha, maybe it's the bill for what I did while alive."

At Omega's unrepentant response, Palmira's fist kept trembling with anger.

And then, undeterred, Edmon jabbed a finger at Mireille with a "You!"—

Edmon: "You switched with the administrative officer and deceived me—are you sane? Yeah? And you're another nuisance born of the old man's fooling around, same as Nananna…"

Mireille: "—Coward! Be silent!"

In an instant, blue flame swelled, and in a single breath it swallowed the arm Edmon was pointing with at Mireille.

With a scream of "Gyaaaaah!" Edmon shrieked as his arm burned. Seeing Edmon's scream and what had been done to him, the other councillors scrambled to their feet, and the spectators, thinking they could no longer remain here, panicked and tried to flee—but—

Mireille: "No one escapes. Not a single soul."

That declaration was accompanied by the reappearance of the blue flame that had burned Edmon's arm. Pillars of fire sprang up to encircle the assembly hall, keeping all the gathered townsfolk from escaping wholesale.

It was unmistakably the work of magic.

Lilac: "No—this isn't mere magic. It's spirit arts."

In the hall where fear and confusion had been forcibly condensed into one place, Lilac stepped forward to shield Palmira and Colette and said so. As Noelle ran over to them as well, Lilac stared at the faint blue radiance floating around Mireille, who stood facing them.

Told it was spirit arts, Palmira finally came to understand that Mireille had borrowed the power of spirits to carry out the kind of supernatural mysterious-death cases Omega had mentioned.

She understood—yet the problem was—

Palmira: "What are we supposed to do now—?!"

In Palmira's field of vision as she shouted, Nananna drew up beside Mireille, who was wreathed with spirits; the masterminds who had manipulated Limbus's "witch" uproar from the shadows were now arrayed together.

With his arm burned and everything from the elbow down charred to coal, Edmon foamed at the mouth and fainted, while both councillors and townsfolk, swallowed by confusion, cried out in despair at the blue flames that ringed them round.

It was a scene of utter pandemonium. In the midst of it, Omega, tilting her head with a "Hmm" at Palmira's shout, turned to face the other "witches" besides herself.

Omega: "My companion is shouting like that—what do you intend to do? Now that your identities are out, will you, just as you are, give yourselves to anger and burn Limbus—the town that tormented you—to cinders with flame?"

Nananna: "…This one will not shrink from that, it is."

Mireille: “I wanted to make them suffer. More. To this extent. That too…!”

Omega: “Incidentally, I don’t have any particular reason to interfere with your revenge. So if you don’t drag us into it, I think I can just withdraw. How about that?”

Nananna & Mireille: “—Huh?”

Hearing Omega’s offhand proposal as she raised one finger, everyone was dumbfounded. That went not only for Palmira and the others, but for Mireille and Nananna as well. Probably, even the townsfolk felt the same, though they didn’t voice it.

At the reactions around her, Omega rolled her neck with a “Come on, now.”

Omega: “Isn’t that how it is in fact? Ultimately, this uproar has nothing to do with us. And I find the motives of the principals convincing. Or do we fight for the town?”

Palmira: “No, that is—um… I also think this town is the worst, but…”

Omega: “Then that’s fine, isn’t it. Presiding Judge and Secretary, you two should think calmly as well. —If you square off with us here, your revenge won’t be able to kill anyone else.”

As a pure fact, Omega set to persuasion—no, to threats—of Nananna and the others.

But that was what Palmira had been thinking even before going into the trial. Even if they lost the trial, there was no way Omega would be executed. That was because they knew Omega had that much power, and that had not changed even now that the opponents were Nananna and the others.

This “witch” had the worst personality and was abandoned by luck, but she possessed absolute power.

With her power, Mireille and Nananna could be ground away without a trace. No matter what tragic resolve or determination they had made, it would all be irrelevant.

Then—

Colette: "—Omega-chan, um, um… I—I don't want that."

Omega: "Hmm. I see. You would say that, Colette."

Unable to look the other way, Colette, beside Palmira, made her plea. At Colette's words, Palmira wanted to say, "Stop," and could not.

From the bottom of her heart, Palmira could not care less about what became of Limbus. But, from that same heart, she also selfishly wanted Colette not to accept this.

At Colette's straightforward words, Omega thought for a moment, then—

Omega: "I'm sorry, but circumstances have changed a little. Since my companion says as much, I can't look the other way while you continue to lay hands on people directly."

Nananna: "—If that's so, this one will resist to the end, it is."

Omega: "I wouldn't recommend it. —And you ought to have more faith in your own deeds."

Nananna: "—? I do not understand. The meaning. What do you wish to say, you do?"

Nananna and Mireille turned eyes that saw something unknowable upon Omega. Palmira was in complete agreement with their question, but Omega had decided to respect Colette's will.

Having decided, she burned through the shackles that bound her wrists and ankles with light from her fingertips, and finally obtained the freedom she could have taken at any time—

Omega: "—This pandemonium will never be forgotten. A "witch" will guarantee that."

In the end, she brazenly claimed for herself the title of “witch” they had been supposed to deny, even to the point of fighting it in court, and Palmira let out a sigh of heartfelt futility.

21

Nananna: “—Noelle, cannot say I wish you to forgive me, it is. Only, this one—”

Noelle: “I believe I said it, did I not? That so long as this life remains, I will forgive you on that single point.”

Nananna: “…”

Noelle: “Please go in good health with your sister. May the Mother Snow’s blessing be upon you.”

Nananna: “—The Mother Snow’s blessing, it is.”

A little ways out from Limbus, Noelle and Nananna exchanged a farewell rite.

They were friends and both Itinerant Preachers of the Holy Church of Gusteko; from this point on, their lives would likely never cross again. It was a rite carried out with that knowledge on both sides.

Omega: “As for the spirit clinging to you—drawn forth by negative emotion, it is a wicked spirit. If you continue to borrow its power, it will eat away at you. So I’ll have you let me dispose of that, at least.”

Mireille: “…Do you believe us? That we won’t return to this path?”

Omega: “I don’t think you’re so foolish as that. Live your own lives—the two of you.”

Unlike with Nananna, there was no dampness to Mireille’s send-off.

They had threatened each other’s lives, and respected each other’s lives. That was the sort of relationship it was.

It was nothing to pine over in parting. That said, it was not something for cursing each other's futures, either.

Besides, though Omega had ended up becoming an obstacle to their revenge, she was, in fact, rather highly rating their "witch"-like conduct for what it was.

Omega: "In any case, your target of hatred, Edmon-kun, won't last long. Not because of the wound to his arm, but because he's lost the townspeople's trust. —There are no few among the councillors who wouldn't want him running his mouth any further, after all."

Mireille: "—. You'd foreseen that. You—"

Omega: "This is the part I rate highest about you two… You planted in this town a seed of unending suspicion and doubt. With that terrifying yet sweet-sounding word, "witch.""

Mireille: "…"

Omega: "My guarantee carries a fair bit of persuasive power, doesn't it?"

At Omega's wink with one eye closed, Mireille recoiled a step as if chilled. Finding that reaction a little offensive, Omega received just one sentence from her.

Mireille: "…I was mistaken—about the very thing. A genuine "witch" is—"

—And so, parting from the two, Mireille and Nananna, Omega and the others were free.

Shion: "And with that… ba-bam, it's my entrance!"

Unable to wait, Shion—whose switching had been forbidden in Limbus—raised her voice high. Having handed control of the body over to Lilac for a while, Shion at last could breathe outside air without restriction, and she filled her lungs to the brim with the cold air.

Palmira and Noelle both smiled wryly at the sight—but there was one girl who did not step into that circle—

Omega: "—Colette."

Colette: "Ah, Omega-chan…"

At the call, Colette turned around; what she had been gazing toward was the direction of the town of Limbus.

The thin-snow town that could only silently see off Omega and the others—who had declared they would overlook the masterminds of the uproar, Mireille and Nananna, and had even looked half complicit.

Was it anger at this conclusion that cast a lonely shadow over Colette's expression?

Colette: "No, no, that's not it. I'm not angry. If I were to be angry, it would be at myself. I couldn't do anything, and I couldn't do anything for them."

Omega: "At the opening of the trial, it was your appeal that gave those around you a posture for listening. It's terribly trite to say, but it was a victory that could not have been won if anyone had been missing."

Colette: "…You're very, very clever, Omega-chan, so I'm sure you can see so many things. No, I think everyone—everyone other than me—is like that."

As she murmured, Colette's hand touched her own wrist—there, the "Beast Protection Bracelet" she wore was a special something only Colette possessed, something no one else here had. But Colette was not satisfied with that specialness. She hadn't saved them. She hadn't protected them. She hadn't made her will prevail.

Omega understood well the feeling of wanting something. —That was the origin of a "witch."

A sense of lack, a hunger that cannot reach, an unyielding desire—those are what make a person into a "witch."

Just as it had for Nananna and Mireille—perhaps for Colette, in the same way—

Colette: “—I want to work harder and harder. So, Omega-chan, would it be all right if I asked you to teach me lots of things?”

Omega: “Me?”

Colette: “Yes, yes, that’s right. Up till now, I kind of thought it might be fine if it were whoever among us could do it—but I’m sure, I’m sure that isn’t it. That’s what I felt—very strongly.”

With a smile that, despite its loneliness, had a backbone of strength, Colette asked, “Is that no good?” At the girl’s question, Omega let out a small breath.

Omega: “No, it isn’t no good. As you know, I like to talk and I like to teach.”

At Omega’s answer, Colette’s face bloomed into a smile like a flower. Just like that, she happily took Omega’s hand, and, following after the backs of their companions ahead, she started walking.

Omega: “…”

Led by the hand, Omega felt a most pleasant sensation.

—Before long, the town of Limbus would meet its collapse.

The facts Palmira and the others had exposed would sap the town council’s power, and the townsfolk had already learned the seed of suspicion that Mireille and Nananna had planted—and how quickly to dispel it.

People are weak, fragile, and flow toward the easier side. —Surely, in that town, “witches” would continue to be made, and “witches” would continue to be killed. That would be repeated.

Those two, too, responded to Omega’s demand because they had that expectation and certainty. Having seen in Omega’s behavior and way of being the terror of a “witch,” Limbus would never dare defy her.

Unable to denounce Omega and the others—or the two—thin-snow town would, for reasons of unease and fear, continue killing "witches" who were not terrifying—who could never resist execution.

But—

Omega: "There's no need, is there, to go out of my way to tell her that."

From the hand she was holding came warmth, and ahead of it, there was the brave smile of the girl.

A curiosity did stir in Omega—one that wanted to tell this truth and witness the girl's face be stripped even of that smile. But, when that breaking point awaited afterward, it would likely close off the many opportunities that ought to lie ahead—and the possibilities for Omega to be sated.

Because she loathed that, Omega did not speak of the likely fate awaiting the thin-snow town.

—In the thin-snow town, a "witch" had indeed existed. And from here on as well, she would continue to exist.

For that was certain retribution upon those who, at the Witch Trial, could not properly judge the "witch."

Emilia’s Birthday Specials

Emilia’s Very Happy Birthday

1

“—Lia, did you know? I have a birthday party planned for today.”

“Oh, really? Who for?”

Surprised by the voice coming from inside her silver hair, Emilia widens her eyes.

Moving around in her hair, trying to pull his head through a gap, is an adorable spirit-cat named Pack. Grooming his face from his usual spot on Emilia’s shoulder, he continues:

“Well.”

“I’m not sure I can tell you. I’m not trying to be mean, but it’s a secret.”

“A secret… Why is that? Isn’t it weird?”

“Sarprize.”

After hearing Pack say that word with confidence, Emilia slightly furrows her eyebrows. Bringing a finger to her lips she mutters again, “sarprize.”

“Surprise” seems to be a word that means, “a secret preparation made to surprise someone.”

In the past, Emilia had heard it from the mouth of Subaru, who works at the mansion. Subaru’s hometown seems to have many peculiar expressions, “surprise,” being one of them.

“I understand that ‘sarprize’ thing, but…no matter how you slice it, isn’t not knowing who you are celebrating a bit too much? I think that’s bothersome.”

"Is that so? I think it's really interesting. It's not just the person who's being celebrated, the celebratory side doesn't know either. But the excitement of a celebration is what's important."

"Mm… it's like that, isn't it? Mh, I feel like I understand that a little."

Pack crosses his arms and nods, Emilia believes that's the right way to see it too.

Surely, no matter whose birthday it is, it is a special day that should be celebrated. Even if, for now, it's unclear who is being celebrated—the good wishes are not lost. Whoever's birthday it may be, to direct heartfelt good wishes to that person—that might be the intention behind a surprise.

"I see… that's it, it's great! Then I will help too."

"Mm? I guess I expected Lia to be in high spirits, but… Well, Lia's cute when she's in high spirits so I'll support you. That's the spirit! Lia!"

"Mm, leave it to me! I, whoever's birthday it is, will make this 'sarprize' a success!" Flames lighting up in her eyes, Emilia declares her resolve.

Following that, Puck rocked his tail swiftly and said,

"Best of lucks~"

2

"Say, Subaru. Let's say we were celebrating something, what is something you'd like to receive?"

"Me? Mmh, let's see, I don't need anything special. Emilia-tan's smile is fine."

"Oh, I don't want to hear something like that now right now."

"I was being very serious though?!"

Emilia swiftly dismisses that answer. For the surprise plan, Emilia's motivation is burning.

Although Emilia hasn't had many occasions to go to any, she surprisingly likes festivals. Everyone celebrates together, people chit-chat, and they all enjoy the moment from the bottom of their hearts.

Emilia is actually the second most appreciative of Subaru's various celebratory events, the first most appreciative person probably being Roswaal.

In these circumstances, Emilia wants to be able to celebrate whoever's birthday it is with all her might. To prepare for that, she's going to investigate on what everyone in the mansion would like, so that she can do the appropriate thing for a surprise.

She tried asking Subaru right off the bat, but…

"A smile… Mm, I do think that's great too, but that's not really what I meant."

"It's fine, because Emilia-tan's smile rivals the sparkling starry sky."

"Again with that? How about I promise to give a shoulder massage?"

"That totally gets through to me. In my hometown a shoulder-massage coupon would be a standard gift when you have no idea what to get."

"I see… I'd be happy to give one to Pack once in a while."

"Why did you suddenly start talking about celebrating? Did you perhaps want to thank me for my everyday services and the likes?"

"Of course, I'm thankful to you for everything, but…"

"It's embarrassing if you say it so boldly."

"But that's not what this is about. This is about the sarpr-"

She stops as she realizes what she's about to say. Subaru frowns. "Sarp?"

"Sarp, what is sarp? I didn't say anything like that."

"What a sloppy deception!!"

Looking away from Subaru's reaction, Emilia gently puts her hand to her chest.

The two were only talking nonchalantly, but if it was Subaru's birthday they were going to celebrate, Emilia was being too carefree with her choice of words. The essence of a surprise is that the target should not pick up on it. Just now, Emilia was going against this foundation. Trying to keep her intentions concealed, she slides her pale fingers on the nearby window frame.

"Ahum."

"Look,Subaru."

"Mh, what is it, what is it?"

"Here, that's reaaally dirty, you should clean it more properly, I swear…"

"Where did such a mother-sounding remark come from so suddenly?!"

Subaru laments as he reaches for the towel and starts cleaning up. Watching from behind, having just avoided a problem, Emilia caresses her forehead.

3

"Lady Emilia, there is some strange dust on your forehead."

"Mm? Oh, that's bad, is it perhaps from earlier?"

As she was walking, absorbed in her own thoughts, Emilia blushes upon hearing Ram's remark.

Walking towards Emilia across the mansion's hall, Ram takes out a handkerchief and wipes Emilia's forehead. That dust is probably from the window frame she's touched earlier.

"Done, you look beautiful now. Right behind me and Rem."

"Really? Hehe, thank you."

"…Say, Ram, will you hear out me for a second?"

Finishing to put her handkerchief back, Ram calmly nods.

"Please, go on."

Her consent voiced, Emilia ponders for a moment.

"Alright."

The question asked to Subaru earlier was a failure, so let's change the approach.

"What would you say you want to be treated to the most?"

"Rem's steamed potatoes. Their seasoning is perfect, after all."

That was an immediate reply. Hearing her make such an assertion without a second thought, Emilia stands puzzled.

"Lady Emilia, what has the great spirit told you?"

"Uh?! Nothing really?! Puck hasn't done anything like that, he just played around in my hair being cute as always, just that…"

"…I see. It seems I was mistaken then."

"Th-That's right. I think it was a misunderstanding. But that really doesn't mean you are to blame."

"…"

To Ram, who was narrowing her lightly-pink pupils, Emilia speaks up all the while feeling guilty. Gently sighing, Ram picks up the conversation.

“That being said, right now Rem is working in the kitchen.”

“She is? Umm, is she preparing the cooking-ware?”

Now gazing upon the time-crystal that’s installed at the top of the wall in the hallway, Emilia tilts her neck. It’s already too late for lunch and it’s still too early for supper, so whatever Rem is doing this early must be preparations for later.

“Speaking frankly… she’s preparing a special meal.”

“Special uh… Oh, that must be it!”

Emilia’s eyes suddenly start sparkling, as Ram softly brings her finger to her lips. Hearing these words, joined by that indicative gesture, Emilia hastily nods.

What this means is that this is Rem’s contribution to the surprise. Through Emilia’s behavior, Ram was able to understand what she was hiding and covertly advize her.

In short, Ram and Rem are preparing the surprise too. Meaning neither of them naturally cannot be the ones to have a celebration for. They are in the same position as Emilia.

“Well, I guess I’ll be headed to the kitchen now.”

“Rem will be receiving you. In this instance I believe your help might be very useful.”

“I understand! Thank you! Let’s do our best together!”

Now ahead is the kitchen, where Rem is waiting. There, the essence of what a surprise contains is streaming.

4

“I see, so then my sister sent you here. As expected, Rem’s sister is admirable.”

“That’s right, Ram really is great. I wonder how she found out what I was thinking…”

Greeting Emilia and having her enter the kitchen, Rem extensively praises her one and only big sister. With Rem’s compliments, Emilia agrees and nods many times over.

Then, even though they’re still facing each other in the kitchen, the atmosphere completely changes. It is an aura Emilia knows well. The most significant change being of course, the smell.

“It smells reaally sweet. Say, this couldn’t be…”

“Yes, a confection is cooking for the celebration. Actually, It is the first time I’ve attempted this confection, so I’ve had to go through a few attempts first.”

“Ooh, that’s amazing.”

“So, it seems Beatrice has been enduring all of it over there, huh.”

“Yes! That’s exactly right!”

“This… Don’t say that with such excitement, I suppose!”

In the middle of this kitchen, where a sweet aromas lingers, is a little girl with her characteristically extravagant curly hair—Beatrice.

Around her lies many plates and dishes, and on her cheeks there is some cream. All this can only be evidence that Beatrice strained her body in cooperating with Rem for her many trial and errors.

“Betty… Haven’t you heard what happens when you only eat sugar? This is…”

“But thanks to Miss Beatrice, I was able to quickly improve. By no means was Miss Beatrice’s noble sacrifice wasted!”

“This girl just said sacrifice, I suppose! She said it! You listen here too, I suppose!”

"You can't do that, Beatrice. If you get this angry just after eating, your stomach will start aching…"

"Hmp!"

With the two leading her by the nose, Beatrice stomps her foot!

But for Beatrice to team up with someone is very unusual. That's just evidence of how important this surprise is for everyone.

"So it's not Ram and Rem, and Beatrice is helping… So the only ones remaining are Subaru and Roswaal, right?"

"Rem and Beatrice are full of enthusiasm, so as I thought, it probably is Subaru."

"Wait, I suppose. Why would it matter that I am enthusiastic?

"Certainly, if it is for Subaru's sake it's a given that I would work inexhaustibly. However, I wish to return the many favors of Master Roswaal. So I would try my best too."

"Mm, this is tough. It's as if I'm the one being surprised."

"…"

As Emilia mutters to herself, Rem and Beatrice fall silent. Following that telling silence, Emilia utters—

"Uh?"

Beatrice clears her throat, "Uh, hum… This. You asked me earlier."

"That's right, it's as Miss Beatrice says. This is the result of our efforts, Lady Emilia, would you?"

"Oh, is that alright?"

Rem eagerly presents Emilia with a sample-slice of the confection.

"I want to eat it, but… isn't it wrong for me to eat this?"

"No, please eat up. Miss Beatrice's opinion alone isn't reliable enough…”

“What kind of comment is that?! That man’s bad influence is getting to you, I suppose!”

Rem tries to calm Beatrice who is exploding with anger. Turning their backs during their exchange, Emilia slowly reaches her hand for the sweet and hastily leaves.

5

“Anyhow, I’m still troubled. What should I do?”

“Mh? Lia, what is it?”

Pack, who was laying on the desk, goes to Emilia, who had walked back to her room with the plate in her hands. Seeing the carefree attitude portrayed by the cat-spirit, Emilia gives a sigh in resignation.

“You know, that ‘sarprize’ thing isn’t going too well.”

“I see, that’s bad. But how is the cake?”

“Well, Rem and Beatrice made it to share with everyone. Will you have some?”

“Mm, I’ll pass. After all, watching Lia eat is the best.”

Seeing Pack’s firm refusal upon presenting him with the plate, Emilia draws back the plate and speaks,

“Is that so?”

With a subtle expression of discomfort, Emilia cuts into her slice of dessert with a fork.

The cake softly crumbles and she’s blessed with the sweet fragrance of the cake. With just that, it feels like the surprise will be a huge success.

“Nom… Oh, that’s reaally good. As I thought, Rem really is amazing. That’s so good…”

“That’s a relief, right? Lia. Congratulations.”

“…? Hum, thank you. I guess?”

As she was bringing some cake to her mouth, Pack rises from behind Emilia’s head and stretches his limbs in all directions.

Receiving a congratulatory treatment while eating cake, a lot of question marks start appearing around Emilia’s head. But the lingering sweet taste in her mouth is delicious.

“Starting from now, today will be a very special day…because I’ve decided it as the closest person to you.”

“Sorry, but I don’t really get what you’re saying.”

“Hehee, you’ll get it soon enough.”

For Pack to use such an insinuative tone is unusual, thus Emilia obediently waits for a clarification on Pack’s words.

Finishing her last bite of cake, she hears knocking on the door of her room.

“Emilia-tan, can you come to the dining hall for a bit? There’s something important I want to tell you.”

“That’s exact, there’s something very important we need to discuss. It is of your concern and it’ll certainly be astounding.”

Subaru and Rem had come to meet her, calling her with an unusual tone of voice. As they arrive at the doors of the dining hall, Emilia tilts her head for a bit…

“…I swear, Pack is such an idiot! I swear! I’m really, really mad at you!”

As she finally understands who the surprise is for, Emilia’s voice echoes in the residents’ ears. This is a special day that occurs only once every year, a day that bestowed a blessing.

“Happy Birthday! Emilia!”

Lugunica Newspaper:
Volume 2

● Natsuki Subaru

Happy birthday, Emilia-tan!

I'm seriously grateful for the fact that you were born and met me.

Emilia-tan, you'll always be the brightest star to me!

E.M.T.!!

● Puck

Lia, happy birthday!

Lia, thanks to you I was given the blessing of being a father to the world's cutest girl.

Don't you ever stop being cute, all right?

But you'd better be careful of Subaru, you know?

● Rem

Lady Emilia, happy birthday.

Please excuse Sister's harsh words, deep down she's excited too.

Rem and Sister congratulate you from the bottom of our hearts.

Know that we'll be here supporting you along with Subaru.

● Ram

Happy birthday, Lady Emilia.

Be aware of how old you've become and act like it.

…Serving someone who is too clumsy is quite a pain.

● Beatrice

Why must Betty…?

Agh, I get it, in fact! I get it, I suppose!

I wish you a very happy birthday, is that what you want to hear?

I hope you spend one more year thinking about how lucky you are to have Bubby, I suppose.

● Roswaal

Happy birthday to you, Lady Emilia.

I know that your days have been veeery hectic lately, but I hope that, at least today, things go better.

Please never change, Lady Emilia, I am expecting a lot from you in regard to the Royal Selection.

…I am sure that the choices that you make will also be the best for me, after aaall.

● Felt

Huh, it's your birthday? Congrats then. A birthday is a once-in-a-year chance to do whatever you want, right?

C'mon, go wild, make that guy or your maids do whatever you feel like.

I always make that Reinhard bastard work himself into the ground when it's my birthday, you see!

● Reinhard

Lady Emilia, happy birthday.

Lady Emilia, I hope this new year turns out to be the best for you, and… Lady Felt? "Boring," you say?

Lady Felt, this is a birthday greeting. What matters isn't if it's boring or fun, but…

Where are you going? Lady Felt? Excuse me, I must take my leave. Lady Felt!

● Crusch

Your birthday? That is worth celebrating, indeed. Let me send you a greeting.

Even though we are in opposing positions in the Royal Selection, I do not intend, at all, to use that as an excuse to be boorish towards you on this day.

You are a rather pleasant opponent, and I would like things to continue like that from now on.

May our fight bring pride to our souls. …Farewell, until we meet again.

● Ferris

Lady Emilia, happy birthdaaay.

Ferri's greetings are probably going to sound dull after hearing Lady Crusch's meowrvelous words, but, well, it never hurts to congratulate someone anyway.

Keep doing your best for the Royal Selection.

Though we know Lady Crusch is going to win in the end. ♪

● Anastasia

Oh, Emilia, is it your birthday? We gotta celebrate then.

Don't think I'm not gonna congratulate you just because we're opponents in the Royal Selection, I ain't that shallow.

In fact, I feel obliged to congratulate you Kararagi-style.

Take these flowers and daisukiyaki from me, I'd be happy if you accepted them.

● Julius

Happy birthday to you, Lady Emilia.

Seeing that the events of this year have been making you bloom more sublime and beautiful each day, I am incapable of even beginning to imagine the heights that you will reach during the rest of it.

I humbly ask that you stay firm and keep being yourself, Lady Emilia.

I send my most sincere congratulations to you for this occasion.

● Priscilla

Oh, that half-demon's birthday? Such a laughable event.

I am uninterested. All that thing is useful for is to serve as my stepping stone.

However, I shall allow her, in my generosity, to enjoy that brief entertainment before that time comes.

May she relish her so-called birthday to her heart's content. Before falling to her knees before me, that is.

● Al

You heard the princess, but I'll give you a normal greeting. Congrats.

You see, birthdays don't feel special anymore when you're an old man like me, but, for some reason, seeing others' birthday parties gets me hyped up.

And judging by all that decoration, Bro is pretty hyped up!

You're really loved, aren't you, Miss. …Aaah, seriously. I'm so jealous.

● Old Man Rom

Hm, your birthday? I gotta congratulate you then.

I know things between you and Felt are complicated, but it'd be kinda insensitive to bring that up right now.

Since we'll keep in contact for a long while, I hope you can get along better with Felt.

● Ton, Chin, Kan

Hey, we don't even know her, wouldn't it be weird for us to send a greeting?!

First of all, she's a candidate going against Felt. I'd feel weird congratulating her too.

Who cares, it's her birthday, so I'll do it! I've no idea who you are, but congrats!

…Don't send greetings to someone we don't even know in our stead!

● Wilhelm

Allow me to congratulate you for your birthday.

I am aware that I am not in the most appropriate position to send a greeting to you, but I must take the chance.

My wife once said that I must always offer a sincere message in occasions like this one.

Therefore, I will keep it brief. I hope that you stay in good health.

That is what matters the most.

● Ricardo

Ah, that girl who's rivals with Missy? If it's her birthday, then we gotta celebrate!

Here in Kararagi, the act of celebrating itself brings us enough joy, the details are just a plus!

Missy said it, we ain’t gonna be so petty as to not congratulate you, all right?

Anyway, congratulations! C’mon, bring the alcohol! It’s all on Missy today!

● Mimi, Hetaro, Tivey

Yay! A birthday! Congratulations! A pretty important day! Like Missy said!

S-Sis, don’t raise such a ruckus…

C-Congratulations, Lady Emilia.

Sis, both you and Missy are way too excited over this.

You shouldn’t lower your guard too much before an enemy like… Waaah!

Take that! Tivey lowered his guard! Hahah, this celebration’s so fun!

Let me go, Sis! …Sis, you’re so cute.

Today isn’t my lucky day…

● Otto

I wish you a very happy birthday, Lady Emilia.

Mister Natsuki might be more excited about this than you, Lady Emilia, but if we can get you to enjoy it, then doing all this work will be worth it.

I do have my complaints about being included as a mere joker in the program, though!

● Frederica

Lady Emilia, let me wish you a happy birthday.

It has not been long since I started working for you, but doing so fills me with joy.

I am aware that your duties are too great for me to imagine, but I still want to ask that you please take this chance to give yourself some peace of mind.

● Petra

Hey, Sis… er, Lady Emilia, congratulations.

Lady Emilia, I helped a lot with the preparations for your birthday party, too.

So make sure to enjoy it, Sis… I mean, Lady Emilia. Hehe.

● Garfiel

Your birthday? Congrats then.

Honestly, I've still got a ton of things to tell ya, princess.

But y'know, "the Lion King keeps his silence with a smile." I won't say anything rude.

Ya better have a good time, 'cause this is one of tha few days ya can do that.

● Ryuzu

Lady Emilia, happy birthday.

Celebrating a birthday just doesn't feel the same at my age, but it's fine.

You, Lady Emilia, are still at a stage when growing one year older actually means something.

May you continue following the path you've chosen, for all the years to come, without forgetting this day.

● Kadomon

Uh, don't you think it's weird to include me in this?

Though, I haven't forgotten about the time she helped my Plum when she got lost.

…So, now what? Happy birthday. Keep up the hard work.

By the way, take this. Some delicious appas just for you!

● Liliana

…A flash. Hear me out, "Life is a Huge Seesaw."

…Just kidding! Happy birthday to you!

I really wasn't expecting you all to call me, Liliana, out of all people, for this, thus I can't hide these vivid emotions I'm having, but please ignore that!

So, my wish is that Lady Emilia sets out into every corner of the world, leaving a long, long trail of anecdotes that'll become the seed for my new songs, and also…

Woah, wait. What is it? Why are you taking me away?

Hey, wait! All right, I'll sing already! I'll sing, so please let me goooo!

Memory Snow Prequel: Liar Days

1

“Hmmm, hmmm, this is a real problem.”

“—What’s the matter all of a sudden, Puck?”

The sudden voice she heard from within her hair caused Emilia’s amethyst eyes to widen in surprise.

Emerging from her long, glistening silver hair and perching on her shoulder was a tiny cat spirit small enough to fit in a palm—Puck. Puck crossed his short arms and whispered into Emilia’s ear, “Hey,”

“Between you and me… It looks like my magical release period has arrived.”

“Magical release period… What’s that?”

“Oh dear, you’re a forgetful kid, aren’t you. A magical release period is when beings like myself who possess extremely powerful Ods end up in a pitiful state because we have nothing to use our accumulated mana on.”

“Accumulated mana… Is that like constipation?”

“Hmm, that’s a rather vexing way to put it, but I can’t exactly deny it…”

With a finger against her cheek, Emilia simplified it in her own way which caused Puck to smile wryly.

But even Emilia couldn’t just disregard something that would make Puck suffer.

Puck was always playing around and his pranks were innumerable, he was still a precious member of Emilia’s family. After all, the two of them had always been together back in that snowy land they lived in.

“Now that you mention it, back in the forest there were times when it seemed like you reeeeeally wanted to use magic, could that perhaps have had something to do with this?”

“Well, that’s the gist of it. Back in the forest I could let off some steam one way or another, like helping you hunt for instance, but this mansion hasn’t given me that sort of opportunity in quite a while.”

Puck used the tip of his long tail to indicate Emilia’s room—No, more generally, the whole mansion as he donned a human-like smile.

The two were presently speaking in Emilia’s room which was located in the Roswaal Manor. The room allotted to Emilia who was a royal selection candidate was so spacious and beautifully constructed that she felt it was too much for her.

To begin with, back in the forest she was originally living in she only ever stayed in a wooden house, so things like this stone construction and this massive mansion were completely foregin to her. When her lifestyle suddenly changed, she had her hands full trying to adapt to this change in her environment.

“But to think I never noticed you weren’t feeling well… Looks like I was only thinking about myself. I’ll have to reflect on that.”

“Well now, what a sincere kid my daughter is. While I certainly do feel a sense of accomplishment for having raised you right, let’s set that aside for now…”

“Puck?”

As Emilia regretted her lack of consideration, Puck separated from her shoulder and unsteadily descended to the bed. The gray cat then curled up there and,

“It kind of feels like it’s going to be a real tough one this time. Perhaps it’s because I’m getting on in years.”

“No way… Puck, will you be okay? Is there anything I can do for you?”

“Ehehe, you sure are kind. But now that it’s gotten to this point, there’s probably not much you can do. So… Right. For now, could you keep this secret between the two of us?”

“Secret, you mean the magical release period?”

Emilia tilted her head, not understanding the meaning of Puck’s request.

In response, Puck who was still on the bed started grooming his face with his paw as he smiled bashfully,

“Look, calling it constipation was kind of, y’know, but it really is embarrassing to have others find out about your magical release period. That goes for you too, doesn’t it?”

“Really? I mean, even if people found out I was constipated I wouldn’t really…”

“Y-Yeah… Got it…”

Even though Puck was supposed to be curled up on the bed, he emphasized this right in front of her causing Emilia to be taken aback as she nodded.

This was one of those moments when Puck would instruct her.

In this manner, Puck would often put significant effort into correcting various ideas Emilia had since due to her life in the forest she was not well versed in the ways of the world. He would most commonly work on amending this sort of everyday conduct in particular.

—According to Puck, it seemed like girls were supposed to be cute. Emilia didn’t really get it, though.

“Phew, I’m glad you understand. Lia, from now on, make sure you never mention anything like constipation in front of others again. It’s a promise.”

“Right. But it’s not like I’ve ever even had an upset stomach or anything, so…”

“But even so! Haa, looks like my work here is done.”

Nodding in satisfaction, Puck returned to the bed. When he once again curled up, Emilia quietly sat down next to him and gently stroked his small back.

He tried to hide it with his fatherly act, but Puck was extremely exhausted right now. It was certainly cute how he bravely tried to hide it, but Emilia couldn’t just leave him alone.

He had essentially told her there was nothing she could do, but then at the very least—

“Fufu, thank you, Lia. But it’s not constipation, it’s my magical release period.”

She used her finger to tickle his neck as he smiled, making him purr adorably.

2

And thus, Emilia was burning with the will to keep her promise to Puck.

Anyway, it seemed like Puck was trying to release his mana little by little so he could return to normal. Because of this, the temperature around the mansion had stealthily declined and the air felt just a little colder than before.

“Ah, Subaru! It’s a little cold today, but that’s definitely just your imagination, so you don’t need to think about it too much. Also, this is unrelated, but Puck’s going to be resting in my room today, not that that has anything to do with this, but… Sorry about that.”

In this manner, Emilia proactively tried to hide Puck’s secret as she endeavored to keep her promise.

In truth she could hardly bear to lie like this, but as Puck’s contractor fulfilling his request was the least she could do for him.

She was terribly apologetic towards everyone in the Roswaal Manor, but she wanted them to bear with the cold for just a little bit.

The chilly winds produced by the dropping temperatures avoided Emilia. This was one of the protections afforded to her as a spirit contractor, and as a result of this Emilia was the only one who was not besieged by the cold.

“Uuh, this is no good… Maybe I’m having a tummy ache for the first time or something…”

Emilia stroked her stomach which had a dull, persistent pain running through it, perhaps this was her punishment for trying to deceive others with her inexperienced lies.

If this was what happened when you lied, she could definitely understand why people said lying was bad. In her heart, Emilia resolutely decided that from now on she would avoid lying as much as possible.

As Emilia made this vow to herself—

“—Hold on a minute, girl.”

As Emilia walked through the mansion’s corridors, this voice from behind caused her to stop and turn around.

This call had no subject, but she had an idea as to who this voice belonged to. And she also understood that the owner of this voice wouldn’t simply refer to her by name.

“What’s the matter, Beatrice? It’s rather rare for you to have any business with me… Ah, it’s just a little chilly today, but Puck and I have nothing to do with that, so. Uuh…”

“You were just trying to get rid of me quickly, I suppose… What’s with that face?”

“No, don’t worry about it. My tummy just hurts a bit so…”

Sighing with dissatisfaction at Emilia’s attempt to put on a brave smile was a young girl in a dress—Beatrice. She calmly crossed her arms and glared at Emilia with her lovely eyes full of scorn.

“Wh-What? Um, Puck and I, this cold really…”

“If you want to say you have nothing to do with it, I understand, I suppose. Anyway, how is my brother? He must be suffering in your room, I suppose.”

“Yeah, that’s how it is. He’s all curled up like a real cat.”

As if even moving was too troublesome, Puck was as docile as a domesticated cat as he rested in her room.

Puck would very rarely enter a dormant state as a spirit in which his entire body would go completely still, but to Emilia this looked just as bad as that, or perhaps even worse.

“I’m reeeeally worried. Say, Beatrice, do you know anything about magical release…”

“Magical release?”

“Uhh, do you know of any method to deal with a reeeeally weird kind of constipation?”

“That man is without a doubt a supremely terrible influence on you, in fact!”

Emilia had almost ended up saying it out loud, but she managed to cover it up at the last second. As a bonus, she even managed to continue her question by putting it a different way, perhaps she had a real talent for lying.

As Emilia was surprised by this unexpected possibility, Beatrice angrily stamped her foot. She then placed her palm against her forehead, “Haa”

“This ‘problem’ is one even Betty cannot do anything about, I suppose. But I will hide the effects the solution is having on the surroundings, in fact.”

“Sorry, I don’t really understand what you’re talking about…”

“This is what happens when I go along with your absurd, roundabout way of putting it I suppose! How irritating, in fact!”

Unfortunately, Beatrice’s intentions failed to reach Emilia, leaving her at a loss.

However, when Emilia thought that Beatrice seemed to take offense to this reaction of hers,

“Aah, I don’t care anymore, I suppose. If that’s how you want to play it, Betty will just do things her own way, in fact. Don’t be so full of yourself just because you were the only one my brother revealed this to, I suppose. Hmph, in fact.”

Puffing her red cheeks, Beatrice turned her back on Emilia.

She didn’t really get it, but it seemed she had angered Beatrice somehow. This sort of thing happened rather frequently. Even though Emilia wanted to be friends with her.

But right now, her promise to Puck took priority over these feelings—

“Beatrice, tomorrow might be just as cold as today, but Puck and I have nothing to do with that, so!”

“You, stop running around telling that to everyone, seriously, I suppose!”

—For some reason, Beatrice got even angrier.

“Puck, this is bad… I might have a talent for lying.”

“Ehh, that’s pretty crazy. That’s a talent a ruler ought to have, perhaps this is a good omen.”

“Is that how it is? That somehow seems reeeally weird to me, though.”

Night had fallen, and Emilia reported the results of her all day operation to suppress the truth as she stroked Puck’s back while he lay on her lap. But unable to understand Puck’s appraisal, Emilia knit her brows.

It was true that by participating in the royal selection Emilia was aiming to become the next ruler of Lugunica, but what exactly was the connection between a ruler and lies?

“For now, I think it’s fine if you just stay as adorable as you are. By the way, you’ve been stroking your own stomach as much as you have my back for a while now. Is something the matter?”

“No, it’s nothing. It’s just, my tummy starts hurting when I lie…”

“Then I don’t suppose you really have any sort of talent for lying…”

It didn’t seem like Puck was going to believe her, he didn’t know about the skillful lies she had crafted throughout the day.

Regardless, Emilia herself had sworn to avoid lying as much as possible, so perhaps it would be best if neither of them knew.

“By the way, did anything happen while I was resting?”

“If that’s the case I’ll feel so lonely I could die. Well, the fact that no one has said anything might mean they’re all duller than expected. —Perhaps I could take things a little further.”

“—? Puck?”

Emilia didn’t quite catch the latter part of his statement, but Puck meowed like a cat when she called out to him. He seemed to have a habit of doing this sort of thing when he was trying to deceive her.

“Jeez, come on, Puck, I want you to properly tell me everything.”

“Well, I’ll do that bit by bit. But you really managed to hold out without saying anything, huh. That’s incredible.”

“Fufu, I did promise after all. It was only natural.”

But even those suspicions disappeared in a flash when he complimented her.

Honestly, at this rate it looked like they could get through this without anyone finding out about Puck’s magical release period.

If there were any cause for concern, it would probably be that for some reason, Ram made eye contact with her a lot more frequently than usual today, and her eyes seemed to be suggesting something.

That look of hers, and her silent attitude. Perhaps there was something she wanted to say to Emilia.

“Ram did look like she was pretty cold too, could it be… That she was jealous of my long hair or something? Because if you have long hair, it leaves your neck a little warmer.”

Ram and Rem, the two sisters both had short hair, so perhaps they couldn’t deal with the cold around there quite as well as Emilia. That hairstyle really did suit them, but Emilia ended up feeling somewhat apologetic towards them.

“If this goes okay, I’ll definitely have to repay Ram for this. But Ram’s a girl who can do anything, so I wonder if I’ll ever have the chance to do that…”

“The way you look at others is one of the 108 things about my beloved daughter that make me proud.”

Puck overheard her murmur and responded with these words, making her smile.

108 had to be an exaggeration no matter how she looked at it. Puck was definitely skilled at identifying her good points, but even so.

“So, what about your magical release period? Is it going well?”

“Yeah, thanks to you. But it looks like it’ll take just a little longer for me to return to normal, so… I guess it’s going to be a bother for you and Beatrice.”

“Gosh, Puck. Wouldn’t it be bothersome to everyone in the mansion? And Beatrice hasn’t noticed anything either. —The two of us will have to make this up to everyone later.”

Since they couldn’t tell anyone about his magical release period, it would probably end up being a partial apology, but they still had to apologize properly for the trouble they caused everyone.

After that, she would have to bet it all on her ability to form an excellent lie at the last second.

“Ahh… Somehow, just thinking about lying makes my stomach hurt…”

“Hmm, that’s definitely not what you’d call a talent for lying. How adorable you are, my daughter…”

Puck’s completely carefree words made Emilia pout. She then gently picked him up and placed him by her pillow on her bed.

“Is it really okay for you to not return to your crystal?

“The way I am right now, I’m not sure I wouldn’t just shatter that crystal. I don’t want to worry you by ending up homeless, and sleeping with you would make me happy.”

“Really? I see. But I’m reeeeally happy too when you’re with me.”

Smiling at him, Emilia slipped in next to Puck who was curled up and lay down on the bed.

It was soft, with unusually velvety bedsheets, even this bedding on its own was a kind of happiness she did not have back in the forest.

"That, and Rem's cooking. I was seriously shocked the first time I ate here."

"That's true, isn't it. But there's definitely a whole lot more coming your way that will surprise you."

"Is that so, I wonder?—Yeah, that would be nice."

Puck's words made her feel warm, and she started stroking his neck. Her cheeks relaxed as she watched him purr, and sleepiness slowly overcame her.

Tomorrow was yet another day she would have to give it her all for Puck's sake.

That was another reason she had to get a good night's sleep and build up her willpower.

"I can't just keep burdening you like this either. I'll try to return to my usual self as quickly as I possibly can."

"…Yeah, do your best, Puck. Fuwah."

"Good night, Lia."

From next to her pillow, Puck extended his tail and gently caressed her forehead with its thick fur.

She remembered that Puck used to do this a lot back in the forest. That was a long time ago, but this sensation she hadn't felt in a long time brought her a sense of security that was much greater than she expected.

Slowly, slowly—Emilia's mind, tired from all the lying, descended into the world of dreams so it could rest.

—We're getting a little ahead of ourselves, but Puck's problem with his magical release period ended up getting exposed to everyone in the mansion two days later.

To what extent did Emilia's actions contribute to the failure of their secret mission? Let us save the details for later, but there is one thing that can be said with certainty.

Emilia’s smile when she realized she no longer needed to lie completely captured the heart of the boy living with her in the mansion—That is all.

Frozen Days

"—Lady Emilia, it seems you've been focusing on studying more than usual recently."

"Oh, really? Hehe, it does?"

"Yes. I think that's a very good thing." Rem gave her praise smiling as she poured tea for the now-delighted Emilia.

The place was inside Emilia's private quarters, within Roswaal's mansion.

Rem had been waiting for lunchbreak to bring refreshments to Emilia, who was studying in her room from morning up until dinner time.

After bringing the warm brew to her lips, Emilia murmured, "so good."

Seeing Rem gracefully stand up, she tilted her head. "Don't just disappear like a breeze, won't you have some tea too?"

"Well… As of now, I'm a maid."

"But Ram often drinks tea with me…"

"If my sister does, then there's no way I could refuse."

Emilia chuckles, hearing Rem talk about her sister: Ram.

The two sisters were very close, but Rem often tried to mimic Ram's behavior.

Smiling at the love Rem held for her sister, Emilia looked pleased.

"It seems like you reaally like Ram, Rem. I'm kind of jealous."

“Yes. There is only one Ram: to say she is my sun would be no exaggeration. Based on that, Subaru would probably have to be the whole world to me, I suppose…”

“Sorry, but I don’t really get what you just said…”

Emilia frowns at Rem, who was deeply concerned with the matter.

A black-haired boy who just recently had come to the mansion, by the name of Natsuki Subaru. It was common knowledge that Rem didn’t only hold Ram dear, but also that boy.

Emilia and Rem had only known each other for half a year at most, but that past month, Rem had been smiling a lot. Emilia thought it made her look cuter.

Subaru had been having a great influence on Rem’s behavior, and on the frequency of her smiles.

“Are you maybe, even just a bit, uneasy with Subaru?”

In half a year, Emilia had been unable to close the distance with Rem. Next to that, Subaru, who came later, was easily able to overtake her progress by bringing out Rem’s smile.

Emilia knew she wasn’t good at meeting new people, but that was fairly vexing for her.

“Lady Emilia? Is there something on your mind?”

“No, it’s nothing. It’s just… I was thinking I’d like to bring out your smile too.”

“M-My smile? That’s… Um… Thank you…”

Hearing Emilia’s quiet words, Rem’s voice slowly lowered as well.

That was the exact opposite of what Emilia was trying to achieve, her interpersonal skills really were lacking.

Even though she was still studying, she was aiming to become the Ruler of the Kingdom of Lugunica. Shouldn’t a ruler be able to make at least a single girl smile?

“Since you brought this up, you say you’re jealous of me and my sister… Lady Emilia, do you not have any siblings?”

“Me? No, I’m a single child. But Puck did come to meet me.”

As she poured herself a cup, Emilia invited Rem to sit on her bed.

Hesitant at first, Rem accepted and gracefully lowered herself onto the bed.

“Lady Emilia, you’re really close to the great spirit, aren’t you?”

“Hmhm, yes. Just like Ram is to you, Puck is family to me. Like you said, he surely is the sun to me.”

“The great spirit is your sun, is he? …What might Subaru be to you?”

“Uh? Subaru? Why so suddenly? Hum, to me, Subaru is… What is he? Subaru, Subaru… Ah! A cloud! He’s like a cloud! He takes on a new shape every day and is always so full of energy.”

A boy with a hectic personality who never knows what to say or do, and who you never get tired of watching.

As Emilia boasts her clever analogy, Rem mutters, “A cloud, you say…?”

“I see, understood. I will relay this to Subaru as is.”

“…? Yeah, please do. Now, what were we talking about?”

“About how close you are with the great spirit.”

With a smile, Emilia drew her quill over the white-paper on her desk, picturing Puck’s shape as she did. As she brought her eyelids to a close, she could vividly recall the time they’d spent together as a family.

Looking at the finished drawing, Rem tilted her head.

“That is… what kind of curse is that?”

“A curse, hehe, what an odd joke. As you can see, that’s a drawing of Puck.”

“…As I can, see.”

Witnessing her confidence as Emilia proudly held the drawing, Rem’s expression got gloomier.

Prompting Emilia to furrow her brows.

“Hum…”

Rem averted her gaze from Emilia’s depiction of the great spirit.

“If I remember correctly, you stayed in your hometown in the forest with the great spirit didn’t you? That hometown was…”

“Elior Forest… Did you hear from Roswaal?”

“…Yes. I heard it was a forest covered in ice, where snow never stops falling. And that you left your hometown to participate in the election.”

“That is right. Because I want to release everyone from that ice.”

Emilia took another sip of tea and thought of its warmth… and of the people from her village—frozen in the forest.

These kinds of thoughts would sometimes drift into her mind.

Even though all of them were asleep, deep within that ice-cold forest, why was it she was able to smile?

It would often happen when she felt joy. So it had been happening much more that past month especially.

“Sometimes I think, ‘Is it really ok?’. Although I didn’t really think too much about it when I was living in the forest with Puck…”

“‘It’ being?”

“To laugh, to be happy, even though the others can’t… Isn’t it insensitive?

Wasn’t it cold-hearted? She doubted herself.

Herself, who smiled as she spent time with Subaru and the others at the mansion, forgetting about the forest, wholeheartedly enjoying herself.

“…I believe it is entirely legitimate.”

However, Rem looked straight into her eyes as she asserted this.

“…”

Hearing Rem’s unexpected answer, Emilia’s eyes opened wide.

Rem gently lowered her gaze towards her own cup of tea.

“Me and my sister too, we had a lot in our hometown. Now, spending time with her under Master Roswaal, I believe I am happy. But…”

“I think about these things, too. About my hometown, about my family… about reuniting with my family.”

“…”

“That’s why, it is legitimate. And also why you can’t give up just yet.”

Having said that, Rem suddenly gulped down the remainder of her tea. She then stood up from the bed and, still holding her cup, lowered her head.

“I’m very sorry, Lady Emilia. For stepping out of bounds as a maid.”

“No, it’s all fine. Besides, besides… You reaally cheered me up.”

Shaking her head at Rem’s apology, Emilia was short on words. As she thought about how this one sentence had just rescued her, she smiled lightly.

Just then, she’d reflected on herself again. It was starting to become a frequent occurrence.

“Could it be that I’ve become a spoiled child…?”

“I wonder? I was thinking it would be fine to spoil you a little more.”

“More than this? Deep down, I’m a lazy person, so I’ll definitely end up being bothersome you know?”

Rem answered Emilia’s witty-smile with a similar one. Then suddenly, the both of them burst out laughing and, for a moment, the spurt of laughter between the two girls wouldn’t stop.

2

“Lady Emilia, I don’t hope Rem bothered you?”

“Ah, Ram? No, really nothing like that.”

Rem had left the room to be replaced by Ram. As Emilia responded to Ram’s inquiry, she tilted her head.

It wasn’t unusual for Ram to pay Emilia a visit, unless she had things to do. She didn’t think Rem had any particular reason to though.

“Ram, did something happen?”

“…Did you forget? If there’s anything you don’t understand in the reference books, I’d like you to tell me about it.”

“Oh. Right, that was the arrangement. Sorry, I’d completely forgotten.”

As her talk with Rem went, studying had completely left her head.

Originally, Rem was only supposed to bring her tea and Ram had taken a break from her work to make some time to help Emilia.

“I really lost my thoughts earlier.”

“How exasperating… is what I’d like to say, but it seems like Rem was in very good spirits, because of her smile I’ll forgive you.”

“Alright, thanks. Sorry. I’ll be more careful next time.”

Emilia accepted Ram’s insolent remark without issue, and apologized. Ram crossed her arms in front of Emilia, who was treating her as the master.

“That aside, what did you talk about with Rem? When I asked Rem, she just said I should ask you directly and wouldn’t tell me anything.”

“Is that so? Then Rem probably wanted us to have a quiet conversation. She’s always very considerate.”

A very thoughtful person, that was Emilia’s evaluation.

Ram puffed her chest and answered, “That’s a matter of course.”

Seeing how they both took pride in the achievements of the other, Emilia smiled lightly.

“How sudden. For you to throw lines right out of a love story, what might have happened?”

“Right, It’s a declaration of my resolve, I guess? Of what kind of ruler I’d like to become, someone to whom you can talk to reliably, Roswaal taught me that too.”

“So you want to see mine and Rem’s smile? It doesn’t sound unlike you, but it’s a lot like Barusu’s way of thinking.”

"Subaru's?"

Emilia raised her eyebrows as Ram stiffened her cheeks for a moment, as if defeated, followed with a sigh.

"I spoke Barusu's name…"

"Ah, you say that… but, why? Is that a bad thing?"

"It's not a bad thing, but… It's just that I was afraid If he somehow heard this, Barusu, who is under the impression he matters at all, would get carried away."

"Wow, that phrasing was tough. But… I see, that's what this was about."

Putting her finger on her lips, Emilia widened her eyes in reaction to Ram's words.

"It hasn't been a month since Subaru got here. Even so, him being here feels very natural, it's reaally odd."

"You could also say we've had to put up with him for a month."

"I didn't say it like that. But, it's not false. …Ever since he came, Subaru has had no restraint, and he hasn't been very self-reliant which isn't good."

Somehow, it had become normal for him to be there. But the black-haired boy was originally only supposed to be a traveler stopping by the residence. He happened to work at the mansion for the time being but, some day, he wouldn't be there anymore.

"That will be sad, but there will also be things to rejoice about."

"You'd be happy if Barusu wasn't here? I see, that's what you really think."

"Uh? No no, that's not it… I meant going to other places, seeing other things and things like that. Like when I left the forest."

She hadn't heard much about Subaru's situation, but since he'd been traveling alone, she thought many things must have had happened. She wanted to hear about it someday.

Although deplorable, Emilia wasn't able to freely talk about her circumstances, although it most likely wasn't the same.

"You might think that, but I doubt Barusu gave it much thought at all."

"That's not right. Rem also praises Subaru for being a hard worker."

"When Rem says something, I would normally agree right away, but when it comes to Barusu I can't agree."

"There you go again saying things like that… Oh, I get it."

Hearing Ram's harsh answer, Emilia lowered her eyebrows and clasped her hands.

"Then, you're feeling left out right? Because Subaru gets along so well with Rem."

"That's… Wait, Lady Emilia. It's the other way around."

"The fact that Rem is attached to Barusu is what annoys me; I don't care about Barusu being attached to Rem. That's a cruel mistake."

"Is, is that so…?"

"Yes. Apologize right now."

"I'm sorry…"

Hanging her head in defeat, Emilia apologized to the upset Ram. Letting out a frustrated groan.

"Hmmm."

"You don't need to get that angry. In my case, Puck gets picked up by Beatrice a lot, but it doesn't bother me at all…"

"Isn't that just a consequence of the fact that the great spirit chose you?"

“…? You don’t think Rem can choose for herself?”

“…How cunning of you.”

Emilia gave a wry smile to Ram, who muttered this in a low voice as she averted her gaze. She didn’t think that Ram would admit to anything though.

“But as I thought, even for you it has become normal for Subaru to be here.”

“I’m supposed to be an instructor today, but it seems my student is being extremely impertinent. Is someone who aims to be a ruler unable to show respect to their superiors?”

“Uh, ah, that was a reaally mean thing to say you know.”

What superior would a ruler need to show respect to? If she’d use that provocative argument, it would only have worsened Ram’s mood, and would have been trouble for her, so she didn’t say anything.

Her chat with Ram ended then, and she lined her questions regarding the reference books on top of the desk. Chit-chat time was over. …And she got back to studying until dinner.

“A lot has changed, but this is still my work to do. …But, looking back, I really should have studied more when I lived in the forest.”

“With the great spirit as a teacher, I guess you must have had nice lessons.”

“Hehe, you think so? I guess you would but Puck is surprisingly strict.”

Mixing in some of that reminiscent talk, Emilia listened to Ram with one ear and remained immersed in her studies.

…The forest, it had been a while. For so long with Puck, in that white scenery. Leaving that place behind, she persevered, aiming for an absurdly high goal.

It felt strange, but she would still remain happy and gradually progress, while keeping the people that are frozen at Elior Forest inside the corners of her mind.

“…That’s all I can do for now.”

At dinner time, she would have to answer, “Emilia-tan, what do you think of clouds?”.

To which she would tilt her head and say, laughing, “Clouds? They’re white, fluffy and look like they’d taste good”, leaving the troubled boy perplexed.

But that’s another story.

Happy Diary

"—Then, Subaru! He didn't pay good enough attention to what was behind him, so he ended up tripping over Mr. Bucket. Everything around him got drenched in water. Hee-Hee."

While gently shutting her eyelids, Emilia couldn't help but let out a smile as she recalled the scene at the time.

It wasn't so good for Subaru, who got absolutely soaked, but he looked so clean with his hair stuck to his head, that even though he asked me to "Forget it," I don't think I'll be able to.

"And besides, this diary is here so that I don't forget."

With a mischievous smile, Emilia ran the tip of her quill over a white page.

It was her memories of the day that she wrote about without any hesitation. —What she remembered just now being Subaru getting completely soaked, and other events that happened today.

Garfiel getting told off by Ram for burying a gnawed-up knife in the yard, Otto getting scolded by Petra for working too much, Frederica being appalled by Roswaal's villainy, Subaru getting soaking wet and Beatrice getting dragged into it—

"Sooooo many things happened again today!"

Even for Emilia, who didn't have such a good memory, there were many unforgettable events. The situations of everyone in the manor were like a treasure chest of happiness that always surprised her.

Subaru might get sulky since he asked me to forget about it, but I just can't help but keep a diary of such fun and exciting memories. While muttering, "Cause Puck will definitely be happy to hear about it later," Emilia turned her attention to the crystal stone hanging from her neck down to her chest.

It was a crystal stone with a cracked surface, having lost its sparkle.

Inside, Puck, a dear part of Emilia's family, was in a deep sleep. There were many problems that needed to be overcome for him to be awakened, so his slumber should last for a while.

Meanwhile, this was Emilia's very first experience of being separated from Puck.

Along with the sound of knocking at her door, a familiar girl's voice came from the other side. "—Emilia, do you have a moment, I wonder?"

Hearing the voice, Emilia put down her quill, slightly widening her eyes.

"Beatrice?" she asked. "I hardly ever see you at this hour. Has something happened?"

"Betty has something she wants to discuss," replied Beatrice. "Do you mind if Betty come in, I wonder?"

"Sure, go ahead. Come in, come in."

It was the time of day when dinner had ended, and the sun had already set. The world was about to enter Earth Time now that Water Time was over, which was not a usual time for a visit.

Not only that, but it was not Subaru, nor Ram, nor Frederica, but Beatrice; for the first time.

"Then Betty shall impose on you for a while," said Beatrice. "This wasn't a very good time, I suppose."

"Yeah, it's totally fine, but what's wrong?"

Beatrice opened the door and timidly showed herself. She appeared not in her usual dress, but in her nightwear, which she wore after bathing.

In her fluffy princess-like nightwear, and with her ribbon undone and her long, wavy hair flowing down her back, Beatrice looked around Emilia's room.

Appearing somewhat restless, Beatrice turned her gaze to the desk, which held the quill Emilia had placed there, and her diary, which was still open.

“That… Have you been writing a diary?”

“Yeah, I have,” Emilia replied. “Well, Subaru also keeps a diary, right? So I’m just following suit and writing down all the things that have happened lately.”

Beatrice pouted and responded to Emilia, who now had the diary in her hands. “It seems a little odd to call Subaru’s a diary, I suppose…”

She’s probably embarrassed. Subaru says the diary he keeps every day, without fail, is called “Beako’s Growth Diary,” which describes the things that happen in Beatrice’s daily life.

He occasionally showed her what he was writing, which described, from his perspective, how much affection he had for Beatrice day after day.

“It…it…doesn’t feel very good for Betty though, you know. Subaru reveals too much in whatever he writes down, I suppose. It lacks elegance.”

Emilia tilted her head at this unfamiliar word. “Elagan…” and Beatrice replied proudly with her chest pushed out. “It has a similar meaning to ‘grace’, I suppose.”

It appeared that was also a local word from where Subaru was from. It looked like Beatrice, who recently learned such words from him, was having fun using them.

—Has it been about three months since Subaru and Beatrice formed a contract?

Emilia was observing the way they were getting along better and better each day, and it filled her with joy.

“But it looks like you are happy using Subaru’s language,” Emilia commented. “It’s kind of like Roswaal.”

“What!” Beatrice exclaimed. “How can you say such a thing?! That’s the worst assessment Betty could think of, in fact!”

“Eh… I… I’m sorry. I didn’t think you would get so angry.”

“Hmpf, of course Betty would!”

She’d just said what came to mind, but she had made her angry without realizing it.

As usual, everyone in the manor was struggling a lot with how to interact with Roswaal. Neither Subaru nor Ram could interact with him like they used to, either.

However, Ram’s change from before seemed to be less from awkwardness and more because of some other reason.

“That’s something different, I suppose! Betty didn’t come to talk about such things. We should just put Roswaal aside, in fact.”

“Right… Yeah? Then put him in the corner of the room… What happened tonight?”

Beatrice threw the invisible Roswaal, and Emilia made a motion as though to catch him, and then put him in the corner of the room.

After that, Beatrice plonked herself down on top of the bed and finally got to the point. “There’s nothing particularly monumental Betty wants to talk about,” she began. “Betty just came to talk to you, I suppose.”

“To talk to me? Why, all of a sudden?”

“Betty just thought, ‘why not!’” It was just on a whim, I suppose… But, you know, Betty hasn’t had many chances to talk to you,” spilled out Beatrice while abruptly turning her face away and hugging the pillow. Upon hearing that, Emilia was both delighted and surprised at the unexpected offer.

Indeed, Emilia and Beatrice had never been able to just slowly settle down and talk.

The two first met at Roswaal's manor—which, moreover, was the one that had burned down—when Puck had been there between them. Beatrice had taken such a liking to Puck that she wanted to be alone with him whenever they spent time together.

So, Emilia had been treated as someone who was in the way, and they couldn't spend time together.

"But, Puck isn't here right now…"

"—. It's not that that is the only reason why, I suppose."

"Huh?"

Burying her face deeply into the pillow, Beatrice, in characteristic fashion, turned her eyes towards Emilia. "It's very lonely to not have Bubby here, but Betty trying to talk with you is not a case of replacing him, I suppose… It's rather that Betty just thought she should talk to you, and that's it, in fact."

Emilia received the greatest surprise of all today upon hearing Beatrice's words.

"Oh my gosh! I have to write what happened just now in my diary so that I don't forget it…"

"You don't have to write about it, I suppose! Do you also mean to write revealing things about Betty down like Subaru?!" Beatrice exclaimed.

"But I don't want to forget how incredibly happy I am… You know, it's also written that you and Subaru both got aaall wet."

"Subaru must have also said to not write about that and to forget it, I suppose!"

Beatrice, with a flushed face, tried to snatch away the diary, but Emilia raised it up above her head, saying, "I won't let you!" and kept it there where her little hands couldn't reach.

Beatrice stretched out her hands, hopping up and down for a while, but when she realized she wouldn't be able to take the diary away from Emilia, she dropped her shoulders, crestfallen.

"Uh, Bubby will find out about Betty's shameful past..."

"It's nothing that shameful at all. Now Puck is sleeping, and all I want to do is just tell him all the things that have happened when he wakes up."

"All the same, is it really necessary to tell him about even such trivial things as this, I wonder?"

"—Of course it is. Because Puck is an important part of my family."

Dejectedly, Beatrice got back on the bed, and behind her, Emilia held the diary to her chest.

Each of the events described here were like a bouquet of precious memories tied together that she wanted to tell Puck about, that she wanted him to know. Because—

"Puck told me something at the time I was to leave the forest I'd always lived in."

"...It was when Roswaal came to meet you, I suppose. What did Bubby say exactly?"

"Umm... He said that 'Down the road, all sorts of things are going to happen right in front of me, and that I want to see, feel, and remember all of those things together. That's why, every day, I look forward to the next.'"

"..."

"I was truly out of it when I lived in the forest. Though I was with Puck every day, I don't have many decent memories."

Emilia had spent many years alone together with Puck, while taking care of the white, snow-covered forests and all the elves frozen in ice.

Hardly anything changed. Day after day, it was as if time had stopped.

So, when Roswaal appeared to meet Emilia and she left the forest after being invited to join the royal selection, Emilia was worried about moving the time that had stopped. That's when Puck said it.

"He said, 'Everyday, I'm looking forward to the next.' Puck was looking forward to it."

"—. So, what you mean is that you are writing this down for Bubby?"

"Yeah, that's right. I also want to make Puck happy."

Each and every single bit of time I spent with Puck is irreplaceable.

However, after spending time in the manor away from the forest, she met lots of people day after day, including Beatrice, of course, who was right in front of her, but also Subaru, Ram, Frederica, Petra, Otto, Garfiel, and then Roswaal. For Emilia, that was also time that was irreplaceable.

She was laughing and having fun every day, and she wanted Puck to know about even the times they couldn't be together.

"So, is it okay if I also write about how you and Subaru got all wet?" she asked.

"…Ahh, you are an impossible girl, in fact," Beatrice replied. "When you reveal things about Bubby like that, Betty's resolve weakens, too."

"Right, well then, will you let me do it?"

"If, from now on, you let Betty check and edit out the things about her that she wants to, I suppose. Let Betty make sure there are nothing but facts."

"Sure, you got it. Well, you'll have a chance to check the diary every day, so…"

With her big round eyes wide open, Beatrice was astonished at the unexpected amount of work. "It's true for Subaru, too, but why do you write so much about Betty every day, I wonder?"

However, even just such a cute and flustered appearance provided enough material to write about for the diary. Emilia totally understood why Subaru kept recording things about Beatrice nonstop.

"Goodness, Betty's head hurts… Petra and the others will surely be upset when they hear about how what you write goes too far, I suppose."

"But Petra has complimented me on how easy to read it is…" Emilia revealed.

"This has already been inspected by Petra?!" lamented Beatrice as though the world had ended, after taking the diary that had been handed to her.

However, though the appearance of Beatrice holding a large book with her small body was something that Emilia had seen many times before, it looked somehow new to her now.

The Beatrice of the past had worn this very same appearance, but it had been tense, and she seemed like she couldn't relax. "I'm sure it's because she is having way more fun than she used to," she murmured to herself.

"…Are you talking about Betty, I wonder?"

"It's nothing. It's just that you are carrying a book like that, but the air about you is sooo different compared to before."

Appearing not in a dress but in her sleepwear, with her hair hanging down, ribbon undone, and a book in her arms—not desperately clinging to it. That's definitely what's different about her.

Upon hearing Emilia's words, Beatrice murmured, "It's strange."

"Strange?"

"It's strange because I don't feel guilty when told things like that, I suppose. Even when I burned the books…the precious books that Mother gave me."

"That's because…the entire Forbidden Library had burned down…"

As far as Emilia remembered, the Forbidden Library in the burnt manor held an enormous number of books. She could see why Beatrice was disappointed.

The way Subaru and Petra told it; it was due to Otto's carelessness that the manor burned down. However, Otto was probably always working late to make up for it.

"That's not the only reason," said Beatrice, "and if we accept that as so, it makes Otto look way too pitiful, I suppose…"

"You think so? But that's what I wrote in my diary…"

Beatrice shrugged her shoulders in resignation. "If that's the case, checking it over is going to take a considerable amount of time, I suppose."

Seeing her stroking the cover of the diary with her soft hands, Emilia struck upon a great idea. "That's it!" she exclaimed. "Hey, Beatrice. If you like, how about staying over in my room today? Then you can 'cheke' the contents of the diary? Yeah?"

"En…"

"I'm sure there are a lot of other weird things in it. As it's something I want to show to Puck, I'm sure he'd be pleased if you helped with it too."

Putting her hands together in front of her chest, Emilia brimmed with enthusiasm at her great idea.

She could picture the sight of Puck jumping up and down, rejoicing. No doubt Subaru, too, would be pleased to see Beatrice giving it her best. It was a wonderful idea that everyone would be happy about.

"What can I say. I guess I'm just soooo smart."

"If that's true, surely the contents of the diary are just too scary, in fact! …I was expecting that, I suppose."

Beatrice sprung out of bed and thrust the diary she was holding at Emilia. Emilia quickly took it, and tilted her head, baffled. "Beatrice?"

"Betty will go and tell Subaru that she is going to stay at your place tonight. If she doesn't, there is bound to be a lot of fuss about how Betty has run away from home, I suppose."

"—. Hee-Hee, I don't doubt it. Subaru loves you."

"Good grief, it's tough being born cute." While saying so, Beatrice left the room with pride in each step.

Beatrice is going to return with her own pillow this time. Emilia, her heart skipping with joy at spending the night together with her, looked at the diary. "Right."

Of course, she was going to write down all of this evening's happy events in her diary, but there was something else that occurred to her. —Giving my diary a name.

"Like the way Subaru writes things down about Beatrice, I, too…"

…want to give it an important name, since it's going to be read by Puck once he wakes up.

Every day from now on, Emilia wanted to cherish and share her days with others—the days Puck said he was looking forward to.

"Wake up soon, Puck. —Because I'm soooo happy every day."

With a smile on her face, Emilia hugged her dear diary tight—which would later be named, with Subaru's input, "Happy Diary."

Two Witches Tea Party

A teapot and cup clinked as they were placed upon a silver tray. The faint but sweet aroma of freshly baked teacakes previously brought to the table lingered in the air. It was the type of smell that would automatically make stomachs rumble, but she made an effort to endure. Today's Emilia was somewhat different than usual.

"It would be reaaally unladylike if my tummy were to make a noise, right?"

Teachings of Puck, who wasn't just a precious family member but also a father figure, still lived firmly inside her. If she closed her eyes, she could still see his soft fur and adorable face, casually scolding her with a "Hey!"

So, making sure to do it in a way that would make Puck proud, Emilia fulfilled her duties as the hostess.

That's right, Emilia was the hostess today, and she had to properly entertain her guest. And so… Placing the tray upon the table, she called out to them. "It's ready. I'm sorry to have kept you waiting."

On the opposite side of the round white table, the person waiting for her was sitting in a chair. There was to be a tea party today for just the two of them. Of course, just because there was only one guest did not mean she was at ease. On the contrary, entertaining this singular person had only increased her anxiety.

Whether or not the guest knew how Emilia was feeling, she drew her eyes, framed by long eyelashes, towards her and let out a sigh from between her thin lips, "May I ask you something?"

"Of course, ask away. I am the hostess today, after all."

"I'm glad you're so prepared. But be that as it may, I'm not sure you will be able to clarify my doubts…" While she spoke, her dark eyes passed slowly over their surroundings. In the area around Emilia, who was confident she could deal with any question, there was a round table and two chairs. And besides the parasol, nothing but a vast grass meadow.

And so… “Why did you wish to have a tea party with just the two of us?” asked Echidna, the Witch with long white hair and a long, black stretch dress, with a tilt of her head.

It was a known fact that the tea parties held by the Witch of Greed, Echidna, took place in an empty green meadow.

A white table and two chairs, a large parasol, and all the necessary objects were there. Hot tea, and the sweet smell of teacakes. There wasn’t the slightest bit of doubt. The one and only exception was the fact that the roles of the guest and the hostess had been switched.

“Look, it’s always you who prepares the tea and cakes, right? I just thought that sometimes you, too, should be able to be treated as a guest.”

“…So?”

“Huh? So, that’s the reason for today’s tea party. Is something wrong?” Emilia tilted her head. In front of her, Echidna sighed theatrically.

Thinking how strange her response was, Emilia did her duty as hostess and lifted the teapot to pour tea into the cups. In preparation for this day, she had done a lot of research on the brewing and steaming of tea.

Of course, since she was taking lessons, Emilia too took it seriously, so now she was trying to display the results of her studies in terms of providing hospitality to an important guest, but…

“Yaah!”

"Ack! It's hot! You spilled it. You spilled it on my hand!"

"Oh, I'm sorry. I guess I got a little carried away…"

The tea, having spilled all over the place, had made Echidna quite angry. "My thought was that it wasn't a sound that people make while pouring tea in the first place!"

A little too enthusiastic in her task, she had overpoured the tea. Emilia, now feeling down, poured the tea more carefully this time. "Phew, here. Dig in!"

"What a very inappropriate expression for offering tea… Well, though I may not like the one serving them, neither the tea nor cakes have committed any sins. I'll have some."

"Yes. Dig in!"

"…I want to ask you something first."

Leaning forward, Emilia waited for Echidna to take a teacake. Echidna narrowed her eyes and Emilia asked, "What is it?" before going on. "You should drink the tea before it cools off, plus it goes really well with the cake."

"Based on your confidence, could it be that you had a hand in making these cakes?"

"…Wow, how did you know? Yes, that's right. Petra and Frederica taught me, and we made them together…"

"Really? Then, no thank you."

"What?! Why?!"

"If you must know—I'm concerned about you having made them."

The plate of teacakes held by Emilia's outstretched hand was pushed back, and her shoulders slumped, dejected. But then she suddenly brightened up. "Wait," she said, pushing the plate back. "I understand why you'd behave that way. After all, you are mean. But I didn't make these all by myself, so…"

“I’d very much like to object to the dishonorable expression that defines me as “mean,” but I also can’t imagine wanting to eat them no matter how many others helped make them…”

“Beatrice helped make them too, you know.”

“…”

Beatrice helped make the dough, kneading with an unskilled hand. It was the first time they had stood together in the kitchen, enjoying themselves as they baked. The baking was fun, and everything turned out pretty well. Echidna wasn’t there when we made it, though. “So I’m sure we can share the good times we had with you. So eat it, alright?”

“…You’re not convincing me at all.”

“…No?”

“No, not one bit. But—” After pushing the plate back and forth several times, Echidna suddenly stopped and stared at the teacakes on the plate. Then, with her thin fingers, she slowly reached and picked up a single, flat cake. “Just because you’re quite persistent, okay,” she said, raising the cake to her mouth.

And…

“…Ugh.”

“How is it? Good?”

“Did my reaction make it seem like it tasted good? I can’t believe it betrayed my expectations like that!” exclaimed Echidna with a bitter face before shoving the remainder of her cake into Emilia’s mouth.

Having to eat it so suddenly, Emilia’s eyes widened as the taste hit her. She bit through it with a crunch, the texture being hard and gritty. “…Yep, sooo sweet.”

“The right answer is too sweet,” Echidna retorted. “Also, I don’t get how you can be so nonchalant about it. It has to taste good for that to make any sense."

"But it would be nice if you acknowledged the effort everyone put…"

"I may be a Witch who's able to enjoy the process, but when it comes to cooking I think most people are more concerned with the finished product. Though that's just what I've learned after studying this world for a long time." As Echidna finished saying such harsh words, she took a sip of tea to cleanse her palate. Gently placing the cup back on the table, she added, "The tea was decent, at least…" feeling relieved.

Despite the single passing grade she received from Echidna in the end, Emilia was not at all pleased. I won't be able to face everyone who helped me, she thought. "Ah, but Echidna. I don't think all the teacakes were hard and gritty. So how about I take a bite of each of them, and then you can eat the rest of the ones that taste okay?"

"Do I look like a baby bird?"

"No, you don't look like a baby bird, you look like Echidna…"

Although Emilia had thought it sounded like a good idea, Echidna rejected that proposal and sighed once more. Subaru told me that every time a guest sighs, it's counted as a negative point against the host. This is already the second or third time she's sighed, so things aren't going well. As a proper host, it's my job to think about the treatment of my guests and see things from their point of view. "Echidna, is there anything you'd like me to do? I'll do my best whatever it is."

"Really? Then, will you be quiet?"

"Okay! I can do that." While Echidna tilted her cup, Emilia sat in front of her quietly, both hands pressed over her mouth.

During that time, Echidna stroked her white hair, then, from the plate of baked goods, took a different kind of cake and closely examined it.

Emilia—her mouth firmly shut—watched Echidna as she cautiously tried to decide whether or not it was edible, and wondered to herself whether it was the right thing to do. It's true that I'm fulfilling her wishes by doing as she said… "But is this really very hospitable of me? I'm not sure… What do you think, Echidna?"

"First of all, I'm rather surprised by your inability to keep quiet for even a minute… Hmm, this one doesn't seem to be entirely hard, nor too sweet," said Echidna after biting into the cake, which gave a soft crunch. She had most likely managed to find one that Petra or Frederica made, since Emilia's and Beatrice's would be a hit-or-miss, and Ram had just watched.

"Subaru claimed half of what I made, so…"

"So the ones brought to me were those that managed to escape his scrutiny? Does the rather hard one I ate earlier fall into that category by any chance?"

"No, mine were the super sweet ones. The hard ones were made by Beatrice."

"…I see."

"Well, we shared them between us, so I think Beatrice will be pleased."

"You have a bad habit of looking only at the end result and twisting the process. I find that hard to accept."

Covering her mouth, Emilia let out a short giggle. Echidna snorted and turned away. Guess I made her angry again somehow. But it's true that I thought that Beatrice would be pleased, and it offends me that it is getting treated as a mistake too. "Seriously Echidna, all you do is say mean things. Even though you're drinking the tea, eating the cakes, and fully enjoying this tea party, you're such a goblin."

"Goblin? That's a disgraceful way to call someone. I'm a Witch. Whether you like it or not, that is something that will never change."

"Hmph, then you're just like me."

“…Like you?” Pulling her beautifully shaped eyebrows together, Echidna looked at Emilia doubtfully.

Emilia, however, merely nodded with a “Yes” as though the look she gave her wasn’t a big deal. I’ve been hurt a lot by people calling me a Witch, but… “I was called the Witch of Glaciation by many people in the village near where I grew up. Perhaps not to the extent you were, but I was quite famous.”

“That’s all in the past. Now there are none left who know my name or the names of the other five.”

“Ah, that’s right… So, does that make me the most famous now?”

“…How stupid of you to even think of such a comparison,” Echidna replied coldly, despite how timidly Emilia had asked.

Compared to when I first showed up, or when I scalded her with tea, or even when I was forced to chew the hard cakes, this rejection is the worst by far. “No, I’d say it’s probably equal to when I spilled the tea…”

“I don’t want you to make light of us Witches… It is offensive not only to me, but to the five others who have lived and died as Witches as well.”

“…” Emilia’s eyes widened slightly upon hearing the objection made by Echidna, who was usually very quiet.

Perhaps not expecting Emilia’s response, Echidna grumbled sullenly. “What is it? If you think just making a dumb face is a type of response, then you would be mistaken… That doesn’t get anything across.”

“I’m sorry. It’s just that you’re sooooo thoughtful of your friends.”

“…I’m thoughtful of my friends?”

“Yes. After all, you don’t want anyone to have the wrong idea about your friends. That’s why you got mad at what I said, right? That’s what being thoughtful of others means.” From my experience, being called a Witch isn’t a good thing. But in Echidna’s time, it must have held some sort of special meaning to her and her friends, who were referred to as such.

To be prodded by Emilia, who knew very little of such things, surely wasn't pleasant. "…Even in our time, being called a Witch wasn't a compliment."

"Oh, really?"

"Yes. But it didn't matter what anyone called us. We didn't need anyone to define us, we defined ourselves as Witches. That's all."

"…That sounds reaaally complicated." Even though she wanted to know more of Echidna's story, it was difficult to understand. But as it was a compromise coming from Echidna, Emilia couldn't simply disregard it as difficult to understand and leave it alone. "This won't do. As you're the guest, I should be doing all sorts of things for you, but instead, all I do is learn from you."

"I am well aware that I am someone who enjoys teaching, but I don't recall teaching you anything. Even throughout the tea party, all I did was complain. Cruelly, too."

"…? Isn't that the same as teaching me not to do something? It'd be far more cruel to just watch me coldly without saying anything."

The word 'cruel' gave her a very unpleasant feeling, but Emilia did not think Echidna's attitude matched that word in the slightest. Although it was true that she may come across as foul-mouthed and mean. However, to Emilia, the worst thing in the world would be being ignored and kept at a distance.

"You're nothing like that. So it doesn't matter what you say." As she spoke, Emilia grabbed a cake from the plate and took a bite. The crunchy texture and sweet flavor warmed her heart.

Hearing Emilia's answer, Echidna placed a hand upon her forehead and sighed.

Another sigh means more points deducted, but that sigh felt different from the others.

“I know whatever I say will be pointless. You’re a very detestable girl.” More directly than ever, Echidna threw her cruel words at Emilia. But even as she said them, she was reaching for another cake. A grinding sound was heard, and she frowned. Then came a crunching sound, and Emilia smiled.

“…Why is it that I always pick the wrong ones? How do you tell the difference?”

“Huh? There’s nothing to it really. I just kind of pick one… Ah, this is delicious.”

“…Ugh.”

“Was it hard again?”

Echidna looked down and placed a hand over her mouth, but gave no answer to Emilia, who tilted her head.

But that reaction alone told her enough, so Emilia put a finger to her lips, and said, “Ah, then shall we try it the other way around? I’ll choose yours, and you can choose mine. Maybe that will work.”

“Even if you do that, I have a strong feeling that I’ll end up with a hard one again… No need to do something so unnecessary, just pour the tea normally.”

“Okay! I can do that! Yaah!”

“Ow! That’s hot!!”

And so the tea party continued like that. Although of different generations, the two Witches sat opposite one another—one as a host, the other as a guest—with a white table between them.

Although to an outsider, it would look like nothing more than a pleasant tea party between two girls.

The Two Witches’ Eventful Journey

1

“Whoa! Look, look! We’re reaaally high up! I didn’t know such a beautiful view existed!” Emilia exclaimed, her eyes widening at the sight from the window she had her hands pressed against.

The brilliantly blue sky infinitely stretched out in front of her, with a sea of thick cloud clusters floating within it. The airplane carrying the sparkly-eyed Emilia flew as it let out a deep roaring sound, and was already traveling above the clouds.

What a luxurious experience I’m going through right now! Emilia thought, flustered and unable to stay composed. “Hey, come on, you. Come here and take a look. You’ve never seen anything like this before either, have you?”

“…”

Without receiving any response from her companion, Emilia started beckoning them over with her hand. “What’s wrong? Hey, Echidna! Echidna!”

“You don’t need to keep calling me. I hear you,” the white-haired Echidna, clad in a black dress, spat.

Even though they were on the same plane, Echidna didn’t pay attention to the scenery outside the window and kept her gaze on her lap. Her face was pale, and she looked gloomy.

Furrowing her brow at her companion’s disposition, Emilia tilted her head. “What’s wrong? Are you not feeling well? That’s not good! We should get you off…”

“Unfortunately, that negotiation already ended in failure as soon as I was dragged onto this airplane by Natsuki Subaru.”

“I had no idea. Jeez, what was Subaru thinking… Dragging you around even though you’re not feeling well.”

"It's not that I'm feeling unwell… I'm just having a hard time understanding something."

"—?"

"About why I have to be here of all places with you," Echidna spat, glaring at Emilia with her eyes framed in long white lashes.

Emilia looked confused at first, but then quickly showed a smile. "That's because it's my birthday, and you have to do whatever I ask. Have you forgotten, Echidna?"

"No, I haven't, even though I should have. And these things you want me to do are…"

Emilia nodded. "The items on the list of things I want to do that Subaru asked me to write!" she exclaimed, taking out a file.

Inside the file was a list of wishes she had written for this day. This was one of Subaru's ideas, and he had asked her to draw it up for her birthday.

"He said we probably wouldn't be able to get to them all, so he picked some at random and got everything set up, and this is the first one," Emilia explained as she let out a chuckle. "It's only the first one and I already feel like I'm being spoiled."

Even though some of my wishes on the list were fantastical, the dedication everyone put in for me is amazing. I can't believe I'm able to enjoy such a wonderful view.

Since Emilia couldn't use flying magic like Roswaal, it was her first time looking down from such a height.

"I can empathize with your desire to overlook the world from a high place," Echidna said.

"Then why are your brows furrowed like that?" Emilia asked. "Could it be that you're scared of heights?"

"Nothing of the sort. Didn't I tell you? I'm just having a hard time understanding something. You can enjoy the view from a high place all you want. But what is this thing we're shouldering?" Echidna asked, pointing at the bag-like item on her back.

Emilia turned her attention to the similar bag she was wearing.

"What do you mean what?" she replied. "These are parachutes."

"Why?!" exclaimed Echidna. "Why is it that your wish is to jump out of an airplane instead of just enjoying the view?! There's something wrong with you!"

Emilia was taken aback by the rare instance of Echidna raising her voice. However, she empathized with her outburst nonetheless. The idea of jumping out was also not something she came up with.

"At first, I just wanted to enjoy the view too," Emilia explained. "But then Subaru told me about an activity called skydiving and…"

"And…?"

"It sounded reaaally fun, so I wanted to try it with you, Echidna."

"And thus I ended up in this predicament…"

Emilia began to feel bad as she listened to Echidna's begrudging words. However, Subaru, being the great storyteller he was, made skydiving sound extremely fun. Due to this, Emilia had written, "I want to go skydiving with Echidna," before she even realized it.

"Ah, Echidna," Emilia called. "We're almost at the point. Let's make sure we don't fool around like we were told before the airplane took off!"

Echidna groaned. "Wait, on second thought, I think I'd rather return to solid ground with the airplane…"

"Jeez, it's also your first time doing this, isn't it? You're always curious about everything, so you should try this and find out how it feels."

"It's infuriating to hear you talk about the fate of the Witch of Greed as if you know anything… Ah, wait, wait, ah, ahhhhhhhh!!"

“Kyaahhh!!”

2

“Skydiving was reeeally fun!” Emilia exclaimed cheerfully. “Next up is baking a cake!”

“Do you not realize the great disparity in those two activities?”

Emilia looked confused. “What do you mean?”

“Never mind if you don’t get it,” said Echidna, letting out a sigh. She was wearing a headscarf and leaning on the kitchen table, exhausted. “Unfortunately, I don’t have the energy to explain it to you.”

Emilia thoroughly enjoyed skydiving. However, as someone who wasn’t used to screaming like Emilia was, Echidna was exhausted from the activity.

“Good thing we did that first, then,” said Emilia. “They say sweet things help you when you’re tired, right?”

“That only applies if the sweet things are within reach and ready to be consumed. That being said, how experienced are you in baking… in making sweets?”

Emilia smiled. “Glad you asked. Back in the forest, I used to make sweets using crushed berries. Puck always complimented them, saying they were reaaally good.”

She puffed out her chest to show that she was confident in her skill in making sweets by sharing a memory she had with Puck. Life in the forest was hard, and since there weren’t any sweet fruits, the pastries she made out of berries had a rough texture. However, it was an occasional delicacy she enjoyed nonetheless.

“But today we have sugar,” Emilia said. “We could eat sweet pastries.”

“I see where this is headed. Give me the sugar. I’ll directly consume it and rejuvenate myself.”

“No need to do that! Just wait a little. I’ll make it really fast! Let’s see, it says one scoop, so it must be a scoop from a large container. Should I use this bowl?”

“That’ll make it too sweet. Whatever happened to the education you’re supposed to have received from the great spirit? I refuse to be the victim of your educator not doing his job!”

Echidna jumped at the door, trying to make an escape from the kitchen. However, the door was made so that it wouldn’t unlock until they finished baking a cake. Whether Echidna could exit the kitchen depended on Emilia’s baking skills.

“That’s a lot of responsibilities,” Emilia said. “Echidna, you help me too if you want to get out of here!”

“Just remember, I’m doing this for my own sake and not to be friends with you.”

“Oh no, I put in too much sugar. I wonder if I can balance it out with salt…”

“Stop!”

3

And so they went down Emilia’s wishlist.

“Just throw me off during the race…”

“Don’t worry. I’ll make sure to carry you till the end.”

“I wasn’t worried about being a dead weight.”

“We’d have a better chance if I sang… Wait, I’m not allowed to sing? Only listening? Then why does it have to be me? It could be anyone else.”

“Yeah, I’ll do my best next song. I have a feeling it’ll go well.”

“Are you saying your score will increase fivefold just like that?”

“Everyone did so much for me,” said Emilia, “so I want to get them something in return. And I wanted you to help me choose what to get, Echidna.”

“Although I have a reputation of providing wisdom to those in need, it was based on the condition that the problems those people faced were so difficult that my knowledge was required. Your wish doesn’t satisfy that condition…”

“What do you think I should get Beatrice? I’m sure Subaru will get her something too, so I want to get her something that’s just as good or even better than what he will get her.”

Echidna paused for a moment. “She’s probably read most books available, but it should still be something related to that. Perhaps a nice bookmark will do.”

4

One by one, they crossed off the activities on the list. It was virtually impossible to go through them all in only one day, but they still managed to cross off a great deal of them. However, Emilia thought wrong to think she was becoming an expert at having fun.

“Echidna, I’m sorry,” she said. “Looks like I made a mistake. This is the south pole, so there aren’t any polar bears here.”

Echidna said nothing.

“They say they’re reaaally big white bears. Doesn’t that sound like the Sacred Beast Odglass of Gusteko? I wanted to see one so badly…” Emilia slumped her shoulders and sighed a white breath as she fixed her ear muffs.

The pair was at the freezing continent of the south pole to fulfill another one of Emilia's wishes. Their objective, as Emilia mentioned, was to see the polar bears that inhabited the freezing land, but they had failed to do so.

Subaru's warning resonated in Emilia's mind.

"Remember, Emilia-tan, they're called polar bears precisely because they live at the north pole. Don't mistake it with the south pole, otherwise it'll be tragic!"

However, the existence of the two poles confused Emilia and ended up with them in such a predicament.

"I'm so sorry, even though you came all the way to this freezing place with me," Emilia apologized.

Echidna said nothing.

Emilia groaned. "Are you mad? Surely you are. This is all my fault. Hey, I'm really sorry, so will you at least speak to me?" Even though Echidna often complained, she still obediently tagged along to all the activities. Emilia was anxious whether she made her truly angry this time. However, noticing Echidna's dull response, Emilia grabbed her by the shoulder and began shaking her. "Hey Echidna? Echidna?" It was at this moment she realized that Echidna was freezing. "Oh no! Echidna! Please, move your body! You can't freeze up!"

"Let…me just…say…one thing…" Echidna squeezed out.

"What is it? A way to defrost a frozen body?"

"I hate it when it's too hot…but, I also hate it when it's too cold."

"Everyone does! What's gotten into you, Echidna?!"

Even her voice sounds like it's iced up, Emilia thought, widening her eyes.

As a measure to warm Echidna's body, Emilia embraced her. I'm worried that she'll lower my body temperature and end up freezing both of us, though. Then, she remembered there was something they could do in a situation like this that Subaru had taught her.

"That's it!" Emilia exclaimed. "Oshikura Manju! We should try doing Oshikura Manju to resist the cold!"

"As irritating as it is to have to depend on you, could you stay still for a little while?" Echidna asked.

"S-Sure," responded Emilia. "Whatever you want, but I'm really bad at staying still."

As much as she wanted to respect Echidna's wishes, Emilia wasn't comfortable not doing anything. She couldn't help but think it was a better idea to move her body so that she could raise her body temperature and warm Echidna as well. Carefully, so Echidna wouldn't notice, she began doing small squats. However, Echidna immediately noticed.

"Stop it," she said.

Emilia let out a small groan. "Okay."

Emilia held onto her companion anxiously. As she stood on the icy continent that lacked polar bears, she looked up at the sky. She contemplated how she made a terrible mistake in her last wish, despite successfully crossing so many items off the list while dragging Echidna along the whole day. She was worried Echidna would be fed up with her by this and wouldn't celebrate her birthday again. As she was beginning to feel depressed, Emilia noticed a change begin to take place in the sky.

"Ah," she let out at the change.

A banner emanating colors took form in the night sky. Emilia didn't know what the array of colors projected in the sky before her was.

Then Echidna whispered from Emilia's arms. "It's an aurora."

"Aurora," Emilia repeated.

The banner of colors slowly wafted across the night sky. It was unbelievably large and beautiful, causing Emilia to question if she was dreaming. Next to her, Echidna gazed at the brightly lit colors with her dark black eyes.

“Aurorae appear only when all the conditions are properly met,” she said. “You could say it’s dependent on the sky’s mood on any given day. It’s not something you can see easily even if you want to.”

“What are you trying to say?”

“We’re witnessing something way more significant than polar bears.”

Emilia thought the last remark was rude to polar bears, but decided not to scold her. She understood that Echidna was trying to console her for having mistaken the north and south poles. Even though we couldn’t see any polar bears, you shouldn’t feel down. Such was how Emilia interpreted her words.

Emilia chuckled happily at her interpretation. Hearing that, Echidna threw a glare at her, but Emilia met it straight on, locking eyes with her until she averted her gaze. Emilia turned her attention back to the aurora. She decided to enjoy the rare sight. Even though she wasn’t able to see any polar bears, she was happy with how her birthday turned out. The moments were imbued with an ethereal quality, reminiscent of a dream, their magic heightened by the unlikely fusion of different elements. She was extremely happy.

She looked down at Echidna with a smile on her face. “Hey, Echidna,” she said.

“Yeah?”

“I wonder what happens if we skydive into an aurora. If I write that on my list, will you do it with me on my next birthday?”

“Absolutely not,” rejected Echidna, making a face expressing repulsion at Emilia’s request.

Twinkle Twinkle Little Star

1

“Hey Beatrice, you’re reaaally knowledgeable, right? So, do you happen to know about the ‘constellations’ that were famous where Subaru used to live?”

“Constellations, in fact?”

Following Emilia’s finger movements with her eyes, Beatrice, who was soaking in the bath together with her, her usually adorably curled hair now tied up, gently swayed her head from side to side. Although she was contracted with Subaru and got along very well with him, it went without saying that she couldn’t accompany him to the bath or toilet, so she often opted to take baths with Emilia, Petra, or the other women of the mansion. It was Emilia’s turn today, so she and Beatrice were bathing together. They had already taken turns washing each other’s hair and bodies and were leisurely soaking in the hot water when the topic of ‘constellations’ was brought up.

“It seems that the way stars appear is completely different between Subaru’s homeland and Lugunica, so he was saying it’s reaaally disappointing that he can’t teach us the constellations he knows…” Emilia lamented.

“So you thought you’d teach Subaru the constellations of Lugunica instead, I suppose?” Beatrice guessed.

“That’s right! So I thought you might know them. Do you?”

“…Sorry, but Betty can’t meet those expectant eyes,” Beatrice replied, shaking her head. “She knows some star names here and there, but even in Betty’s knowledge, there’s nothing about constellations.”

Emilia slumped her shoulders. “Oh, I see.”

From what Subaru had told her about his homeland, they drew an incredible number of pictures in the night sky stars, and there were a huge number of constellations. I got him to draw some of them for me, but I can’t see them as dogs, rabbits, scales, or water jars at all.

“But I was reaaally impressed, because I’d never thought of looking at stars not just as something that twinkles, but in that way.”

In any case, Beatrice also didn’t know about constellations, so her plan had failed. Just like Beatrice said, I wanted to teach Subaru some constellations he didn’t know to cheer him up since he was disappointed that he couldn’t find any of the ones he knew, Emilia thought.

“In the first place, the positions of stars are fickle, so Betty thinks it’s difficult for constellations to properly exist, in fact,” Beatrice said. “Yesterday’s night sky and today’s might be slightly different, I suppose.”

“Is that so?” Emilia asked.

“Yes, in fact. The stars in the night sky are considered to be huge masses of mana, I suppose. As far as Betty knows, there are even Spirits that became stars, in fact.”

“A mass of mana… So, stars are magic stones that are reaaally far away?”

“That’s one way to think about it, I suppose. Of course, Betty hasn’t flown directly to a star, so she hasn’t confirmed it, in fact.”

Emilia widened her eyes at the unfamiliar bit of trivia she had just learned about stars. While I was certainly aware that there are a ton of stars in the sky, I never really looked at each one individually. So it’s my first time hearing that their numbers decrease or their positions change, she thought. “But in that case, it seems like it’ll be difficult to teach Subaru about constellations…”

“…Was Subaru that depressed, I suppose?” Beatrice asked.

“He wasn’t exactly moping, but he looked a little lonely. And he said that his name ‘Subaru’ was also taken from a star…”

It wasn’t just that Subaru liked them; he and stars had a very strong connection. Emilia wanted to tell Subaru about stars he didn’t know so that even in the Kingdom, where he couldn’t find the constellations he knew, he wouldn’t feel lonely.

Having that plan fail, Emilia folded her arms in the bathtub and thought with a “Hmm.” If only there was something I could give to Subaru related to stars.

“Really? That’s amazing! As expected of you, Beatrice!”

“I-It’s too early to praise Betty before you even hear the idea, I suppose! Besides, Betty’s not even sure if it can be properly realized, in fact. You’re so impatient, I suppose.”

“But it’s something you thought of for Subaru, right? I’m sure it’s something reaaally wonderful. Tell me, tell me. I’ll do anything.”

“Good grief, don’t get so worked up, in fact. But certainly, this idea can’t be successful without your cooperation, I suppose,” Beatrice reassured, though with a difficult expression.

Emilia’s eyes sparkled. “Yes, leave it to me!” she exclaimed energetically, patting her bare chest.

2

“Betty talked a bit with Emilia in the bath, but stars in the sky are huge masses of mana… Think of them as big versions of magic crystals, which are highly pure magic stones, in fact,” Beatrice explained.

"Big versions… But stars are very far away, right? How big are they?" Petra asked.

"They're not just any size, I suppose. At least as big as a mountain, in fact."

"A mountain! B-Bigger than I thought…!" Petra exclaimed with widened eyes at Beatrice's description of a size beyond her wildest imagination, trying to express it with outstretched hands.

Emilia understood Petra's surprise well, having been surprised in the same way.

Behind the surprised Petra, Ram and Frederica, who had also been summoned, exchanged glances.

"An unexpected lecture about stars… It's like Barusu's incoherent topics."

"Ram, do not talk like that. Is it not a very valuable story? No wonder the starry sky gives us such a mystical feeling…"

"Ha."

"Why did you laugh? You have not changed at all…"

"Sister Frederica, Sister Ram, please don't get into a silly fight!" Petra shouted, stepping between the two glaring at each other, meditating between her two elder sisters. She then turned back to Emilia and Beatrice and continued. "So… Um, the talk about stars is wonderful, but where exactly are you going with this?"

"Well, actually, I discussed this with Beatrice, and we're thinking about making a star for Subaru," Emilia answered without thinking too deeply. "So, I wanted the three of you to help."

Frederica and Petra blinked in confusion.

"…Lady Emilia, what did you just say?" Frederica asked.

"E-E-Eh, make a star…?" Petra sputtered.

Seeing their reactions, Emilia reflected that she might have skipped a few steps, and tried to re-explain, but—

“I see. If stars are masses of mana, then if we solidify a large mass of mana and make it float in the sky, it will become a new star that looks similar…is that it?” Ram offered.

“That’s right!” Emilia exclaimed. “Just like Ram said, that’s what we’re thinking…! Right?”

“That’s correct, I suppose. As always, Ram being quick on the uptake is quite helpful, in fact.”

“Thank you… But are you serious?” Ram asked Emilia, narrowing her light-crimson eyes.

At Ram’s gaze, Emilia puffed out her chest with an “Of course.” I know it’s not a simple thing, but I want to try. “I’m sure Subaru will be reaaally happy. And that would make you happy too, right, Ram?”

“No?”

“Eh?!”

“Lady Emilia! I-I think it’s really wonderful!” Petra shouted to overwrite Ram’s immediate answer, leaning forward.

Placing a hand on Petra’s shoulder from behind, Frederica nodded. “Indeed. Honestly, I am surprised at the talk of making a star…but if that is possible, I am sure Sir Subaru will be happy. I would love to see it myself.”

“Thank you! Petra, Frederica, Ram.”

“…Ram didn’t say she’d cooperate.”

“You won’t?”

“…Sigh. Ram didn’t say she wouldn’t, either,” Ram said, sighing, also coming on board after Petra and Frederica.

At the three's responses, Emilia clasped her hands in front of her chest and turned back to Beatrice, who nodded deeply at her gaze. "With the use of Emilia's unbelievably large gate, Petra's Yang magic, and Ram's Wind magic, we should be able to pull this off, I suppose."

"Ah, um, Lady Beatrice? What about my role?" Frederica inquired.

"Ha, seems like you're being declared unfit for the task. It's rare for you to be in such a position, Frederica," Ram commented with a shrug.

Frederica's shoulders shook with frustration. "Ugh, urgh…"

Watching the two's exchange from the corner of her eye, Petra looked worriedly at Emilia and Beatrice. "Um, is there something for Frederica to do…?" she asked.

"It's okay, there's definitely something I want Frederica to do," Emilia replied. "You see, this surprise plan takes a looot of time to prepare. So…"

"During that time, we need someone to distract Subaru so he doesn't find out, in fact," Beatrice finished.

"I see… So I have to prevent Sir Subaru from approaching Lady Emilia or Lady Beatrice while you all are getting things ready. Th-That is a surprisingly big role."

"That's right," Ram replied. "Given the chance, Barusu will try to get close to Her Ladyship or Lady Beatrice. How indecent."

I don't think it's indecent, but it's true that Subaru likes to be with me and Beatrice, so it's important to have Frederica prevent that.

"I was thinking of secretly telling Otto and Garfiel too…" Emilia said.

"Otto is fine, but is Garf okay? Won't it show on his face?" Petra asked.

"I also think it's better to avoid telling Garf, even if Mister Otto is okay," Frederica agreed.

"That's right. Otto is okay, but Garf is no good," Ram thirded.

Since everyone was on the same page, the plan was shared with Otto but kept secret from Garfiel. Also, just to confirm… "So, about Roswaal…" Emilia started.

"No!" Beatrice, Petra, Frederica, and Ram cried.

Thus, in that manner, they decided to carry out Operation: Subaru's Surprise Star.

3

For the important day of execution, we chose a day where the sky would be beautifully clear all day, Emilia thought. "Because even the special star would be ruined if clouds cover the sky and it can't be seen."

"But on a sunny day, there's a possibility that Subaru will be moving around a lot, so we have to be careful that our plan isn't discovered, in fact," Beatrice warned.

"He's quite energetic on sunny days… He's like a mutt," Ram added.

On that note, they started making preparations for the plan and then proceeded to carry it out. Although they had initially started with enthusiasm, making a star was no easy task, requiring a delicate touch, and Emilia failed over and over, producing many a star fragment.

"This is what you'd really call stardust… Next, let's try again! I'm sure it'll go well next time!" Petra cried, encouraging Emilia so she wouldn't be discouraged by continuous failures.

"That's right! I feel like I'm starting to get the hang of it little by little!" Emilia exclaimed, feeling motivated. "Next time…there!"

With the effect of Petra's Yang magic, Emilia somehow shaped the formless mass of mana, trying to maintain its form so that it would be okay to launch into the sky as a star. She would normally give directionality to the mana mass and shoot it out as ice, so this was a very difficult task.

“This is bad. Since Lady Beatrice and Lady Emilia have not been seen since morning, Sir Subaru is complaining of withdrawal symptoms. Mister Otto is holding him back for now, but…”

“…E-Even Betty wants to go to Subaru’s side, I suppose. But if Betty isn’t supervising, the mansion might get blown up by a star, in fact!”

While Emilia and the others were hard at work, Frederica, who had been saddled with the most important role, was working with Otto to somehow keep Subaru in check. In that way, as they gradually inched closer to the creation of a successful star, Emilia had a thought: “It’s only in times like this, but it’s reaaally nice to have everyone working hard on one thing together.”

“Indeed, it truly is only in times like this… Kindly do not lose your focus until you have completed it,” Ram scolded.

“Oh, you’re right. Thank you, Ram.”

Despite having said mean things at first, Ram ended up helping them out until the end. Being helped by that kindness, Emilia continued to focus, and then—

“And that’s why we prepared a star for you, Subaru! Have a look!” Emilia exclaimed.

“Prepared a star?!” Subaru cried.

It was nighttime at Roswaal Manor. Subaru had been called out to the courtyard, where Emilia and Beatrice, as well as their helpers, Petra, Frederica, and Ram, were finally unveiling the star.

Subaru, who had been obstructed by Frederica and Otto all day, was astonished as he looked up at the night sky, with Beatrice, who had leapt onto him upon seeing him, sitting on his shoulders. At the end of his gaze—there, Emilia and the others’ hard work was shining brilliantly.

“Emilia molded the mana, and Petra assisted with her Yang magic. To launch it into the sky, we borrowed Ram’s Wind magic power, with Petra assisting that. Once it reached the necessary height, Emilia fixed it in place, also with Petra’s assistance, I suppose,” Beatrice explained.

“Petra’s helper maid skills are amazing!” Subaru praised. “I mean, isn’t everyone incredible?!”

“Ehehe, we did our best,” Petra gushed, blushing shyly. Though as per Beatrice and Subaru’s evaluation, her efforts were a huge part of why the plan had succeeded. Emilia felt deeply grateful to her.

“I can’t believe you’d go so far for me, Sis… Ouch!” Subaru said.

“Don’t say unnecessary things,” Ram retorted. “Well, enjoy it to the fullest. It’s a special star that lasts only for a few hours.”

“There’s no need to step on my foot… But only for a few hours?”

Having been stepped on by Ram, Subaru hopped around with Beatrice still plopped on his shoulders. Her curls shaking up and down along with him, Beatrice nodded. “That’s right. Because it’s a hastily made star, it’s difficult to keep it floating in the sky like other stars, in fact. That is a special star just for tonight, I suppose.”

“Just for tonight… Th-That’s super luxurious! It’s an amazing special treatment!” Subaru cried, eyes shining, after hearing Beatrice’s explanation.

Emilia was relieved upon seeing that, then exchanged smiles with Petra and the others. I was a little anxious—that even if we made a star, if it disappeared shortly after, it might make Subaru disappointed instead. “But I’m glad you’re happy. I’m sooo relieved.”

“No, no, no, of course I’d be happy, maybe too happy! I never thought you guys would give me a star as a present… I’m really, super happy,” Subaru gushed, with Beatrice gently patting his head from her position on his shoulders as he became overcome with emotion.

Subaru’s straightforward and honest reaction brought a sense of satisfaction, and Emilia felt glad that they had done it. The star that she and the others launched was easily distinguishable among the myriad of other stars; emitting a faint bluish-white glow, it was exceptionally clear and beautiful.

“But Emilia-tan, why did you suddenly think of doing this?”

“Hehe, to return the favor for all the things you do for me.”

“Return the favor?” Subaru replied, tilting his head as if he had no clue, making Emilia smile.

Emilia, under the light of a star of their very own design, had always been receiving so much from the boy named after a star from a place she didn’t know, so…

“You’re always doing things for me, so I wanted to do something for you for a change, Subaru—I worked reaaally hard,” she said.

Two Witches' What Ifs
(LQ AI Translation)

Emilia: "—Hey, Echidna, have you ever thought about "what if"?"

Echidna: "…You are always so abrupt."

Across the tea table, Echidna, who had been lifting her cup to her lips, made a sour face.

Emilia had already lost count of how many times she and Echidna had gathered like this for a tea party. She felt completely used to seeing Echidna's face from this distance and angle, but if she dug too deeply into this strange tea party, it would only get weird, so she did not think about it too much.

What mattered was the simple fact that Echidna had agreed to keep her company again today.

Echidna: "Even so, "what if," hm…? Could that perhaps be your way of protesting the Trial I prepared in the Sanctuary? You had an awfully miserable time of it, so you will not be satisfied unless I suffer the same, is that it?"

Emilia: "Echidna, your eyelashes are reaaally long, aren't they? I feel like you could balance a sewing needle on them."

Echidna: "You are the one who began this topic, so is it not rather rude for you to be the one to abandon interest in it?!"

Emilia: "Ah, I'm sorry. I just got curious for a second."

Echidna's face, which she had been staring at intently, turned into an angry one, and Emilia hastily apologized like that.

True, it had been rude to Echidna, who had actually tried to think the matter through. That said, Emilia was also itching for the answer to her present question.

And so—

Emilia: “Echidna, I just made a sewing needle of ice. I think the weight and length are exactly like a real one. So with this, we could…”

Echidna: “Did you consider the danger of it sticking to my lashes? To begin with, why must I go along with your harebrained whims…?”

Emilia: “I made the surface slick, so it’ll be fine. Besides, you are the “Witch of Greed” who wants to know everything, right? In that case, wouldn’t this be one of those everythings?”

Echidna: “—. The number of sewing needles that will sit upon my eyelashes is three.”

Emilia: “Really? Then, if we could just check…”

Echidna: “You never display that inquisitiveness when it would be useful, so why are you so obstinate this time?? You just want to vent your grudge on me over the Trial after all, do you not!”

With her hands on the table, Echidna shouted in a loud voice, and since she clearly hated the idea, Emilia reflected on her proposal.

Emilia: “Ah, I know. I’ll do it too, so if we do it together…”

Echidna: “You would be wise to properly understand the meaning of the word ‘repentance.’”

Emilia: “Too bad…”

Having even her last proposal rejected, Emilia had no choice but to dispel the ice needle.

This was a failure for now. Even so, once something had caught her interest, she would surely want to confirm the answer someday.

Emilia: “Feeling like this might be because I started talking with you, Echidna.”

Echidna: “Do not shift the blame for your bad habit onto me. First of all, if you ask me, who saw you in your youth, you were born with a strange curiosity.”

Emilia: “Really? Maybe so. You’ve seen me from when I was reaaally tiny, so of course you’d see right through that.”

Echidna: “…”

Emilia: “—? What is it? You look like when the tea was reaaally bitter.”

Echidna: “By and large, that understanding is correct… No, changing the tea would be pointless. So do not stand up. In fact, do not try to help. You will only spill it all over again.”

When Emilia tried to replace the bitter tea, Echidna stopped her preemptively. Emilia was surprised that her actions had been anticipated, but soon after, her lips loosened into a smile.

It was not that she enjoyed being stopped—it made her happy to be understood.

Echidna: “That is a vaguely displeasing reaction. If I ask why, I suspect I shall feel even worse, so I will not ask.”

Emilia: “No, it’s fine. It just made me think how well you understand me, Echidna.”

Echidna: “I said I would not ask, and yet you answer anyway. Moreover, that evaluation is outrageous. You are only unusually easy to read; that does not make me your “understanding friend.”“

Emilia: “Is that so? But Subaru says I’m beyond what he could imagine, or that I leap over his expectations, and things like that…”

Echidna: “Your habit of bragging with such an innocent face is truly malicious!”

Seeing Echidna knit her brows sharply, Emilia once again reflected that she had angered her.

Because Emilia’s circle of acquaintances was not all that large, her talks with Echidna naturally included the names of those close to her camp. But when Subaru came up, things were always like this.

Emilia: “Subaru also makes a reaaally weird face when I bring up your name. …Ah, by weird I don’t mean it as an insult, okay? Subaru’s gaze is sharp, but I think he looks reaaally cute when he smiles with that look, and also…”

Echidna: “…”

Emilia: “—! I’m sorry, I did it again.”

Even though she had meant to be mindful, she had ended up talking about Subaru again.

As expected, having spent so much time together, his presence as Emilia’s knight took the words right off her tongue even when she was not consciously thinking about it. —That had once been Puck’s role, but the long hiatus had taken its toll, and now that position was under threat.

Bearing that mix of half-loneliness and half-affection, Emilia sighed —

Echidna: “So? Are you going to leave the first topic lying where it fell?”

Emilia: “Eh? The first topic…?”

Echidna: “You were talking about “what if,” were you not! It is not as if I am particular about it, but I pity a topic that is born only to be left untended… For me to say that is something indeed.”

Emilia: “Ah, right! The “what if” story. For some reason the conversation wandered all over, but that was what I wanted to talk about with you, Echidna.”

Echidna: “—. Very well. Before we go off track, proceed to the specifics.”

Emilia: “Yeah, okay. It was originally a story Subaru started, but—”

Saying so, Emilia began explaining the “what if” story to Echidna.

Since he had been the one to bring it up, she had no choice but to mention Subaru's name, but Echidna graciously endured that, and from there Emilia was able to tell the whole thing without a hitch.

Having finished listening, Echidna stroked her own chin with slender fingers as she murmured, "Hmm," and then,

Echidna: "—I see. A time that is not now, a place that is not here, a circumstance in which you are not yourself—changing such conditions as a thought experiment, in other words. As expected, it is similar to the Trial in the Sanctuary."

Emilia: "Mm, right. I think it's more like the second Trial than the first… But the way Subaru tells it, you're supposed to change things much more drastically. For example…"

Echidna: "For example?"

Emilia: "Let's see, like if you and I were sisters…"

Echidna: "What a frightening premise. The very thought sends a chill down my spine."

Emilia: "Come on, saying it like that. Do you hate being my little sister that much?"

Echidna: "Why are you defining yourself as the elder without any discussion at all? Whether elder sister or younger sister, I dislike both equally, but I stumbled over that part beforehand."

Though Echidna had accepted the "what if," she pushed back against the concrete content.

Apparently, it struck Echidna as strange for Emilia to be the elder sister of the two.

Emilia: "But even though I spent a long time frozen, I'm older than a hundred, you know? How old were you when you died, Echidna?"

Echidna: "Do you mean to freeze the count at the age of death? I shall inform you that it has been several centuries since the Witch of Greed's Tomb began functioning in the Sanctuary… Though the number of visitors has been trifling, I spent a very long time in the dream castle. That I would be younger than you…"

Emilia: "Then how old are you, Echidna?"

Echidna: "—. My age at death was nineteen, but I was born over four hundred years ago."

Emilia: "Ah, no fair."

By adding that on, Echidna tried to make herself older by date of birth instead of actual years, and when she pursed her lips and looked away, the gesture seemed childish, making Emilia think she really was better suited to being the elder sister.

Emilia: "Mm, all right. If you insist that much, you can be the older sister."

Echidna: "Wait. I said from the outset that being either sister would be unpleasant. Moreover, it makes the one who gave ground seem the bigger person. That sort of thing is…"

Emilia: "Then how about this? What if you were a boy…"

Echidna: "I would not be the "Witch of Greed," but the "Warlock of Greed"… Hey, do not move on to the next topic without asking!"

Emilia: "If you were a boy, your hair would surely be shorter. You always wear a dress, but I bet you'd wear clothes that seem easier to move around in."

With her hands clasped before her chest, Emilia carefully looked Echidna over as she imagined what she would be like as a man. Keeping the white hair, the distinctive lashes, and the well-proportioned features as they were, would she be a little taller, with a more valiant way of standing?

Emilia: "And you might run faster, too. See, you're reaaally slow at running, right?"

Echidna: "Mind your own business. Leave me be."

Emilia: “And! You refer to yourself as boku, right? That would be perfect.”

Echidna: “Such shallow points, one after another… I am sorry, but I refuse to be taken in by your patter. If you insist on continuing the “what if,” how about this: I am the master and you are the servant.”

Emilia: “A servant… Okay, sure. Then I’ll pour you some tea. — Here goes!”

Echidna: “Hot hot hot hot hot! It is splashing! It is splashing onto my hand!”

Hearing Echidna, standing close by, cry out like that after Emilia poured tea into the cup with great vigor, Emilia reflected hard that she had done it again.

Ram and Frederica had taught her, and she had been practicing, but she just could not get the knack of this sort of etiquette. If she let her guard down for a moment, strength went into her at once.

Emilia: “Ah, then how about this one? “What if” you and I swapped bodies for a day.”

Echidna: “How do you manage to line up topics I dislike so precisely? First of all, what would your aim be in swapping bodies with me? Taking on the burn’s pain in my place?”

Emilia: “I’d take responsibility and cool that down, but that’s not it. I often put too much strength into everything—just “heave-ho” and there it goes—so that wouldn’t happen if I had your body, right? Subaru says that you can’t lift anything heavier than a teacup.”

Echidna: “…On the contrary, if I took charge of your body, I fear I would end up destroying everything.”

Studying Emilia intently, Echidna said something along those lines.

Emilia, who put too much strength into things, and Echidna, who had far too little—ideally, they would both be able to manage a middle ground, and if their minds and bodies were exchanged, that seemed like it might be possible.

Emilia: “Ah, but getting tired easily would be a problem. Right now I have a lot I have to study, and I’ve been told it’s like an endurance match.”

Echidna: “If I could not carry out the process of gaining knowledge because of a lack of stamina, how, with this body, did I ever call myself the “Witch of Greed”? I am known as a wise one, you know?”

Emilia: “So if it’s studying, you don’t get tired, Echidna?”

Echidna: “There were times when I forgot sleep and meals for days at a stretch, immersed in it.”

At Echidna’s faintly proud tone, Emilia felt honestly impressed. “Amazing,” she said.

Emilia considered herself someone with stamina, but when it came to studying at a desk, it drained her terribly. She did not dislike studying, but using only her head was not her strong suit.

Emilia: “There are a lot of things you only realize if someone tells you. This “what if” way of thinking might be reaaally interesting.”

Echidna: “Was that not why you recommended it to me…? No, fine. Delving into this will only tire me.”

Emilia: “Other “what ifs” sound fun, too! Like, not just me, but if you were a Royal Candidate as well, or if you had a knight, what kind of person would they be, or if you were an animal, what animal would suit you…”

Echidna: “You want to make me do quite a lot! —If I am to play along, then how about this: “what if” neither you nor I were daughters of “witches.”“

With a faint smile, Echidna said so, and Emilia blinked in surprise. Then Emilia smiled back,

Emilia: “Then how about this? —“What if” you and I were friends.”

Echidna: “…”

Emilia: “Echidna?”

Echidna: “—. I see. So that was the theme of today’s tea party.”

With a look of having reached understanding, Echidna started to bring the cup to her lips, then stopped.

It was the tea Emilia had just poured to the very brim of the cup.

With hands that could not lift anything heavier than a teacup, Echidna gingerly grasped it, and with the cup trembling, she somehow managed to bring it to her lips without spilling.

Watching without thinking, Emilia herself tensed up and put strength into her hands.

Echidna: “This is “what if” we were close enough to casually share a tea party together… Time arising in accord with such a script of yours, is what it is.”

Emilia: “Good. I’m glad you could drink it without spilling. If you want more, just say so anytime. Ram taught me, and I’m a little confident about the taste.”

Echidna: “I would prefer you not excuse talking about yourself alone as a matter of narrow vision—one of your bad habits, I think!”

Angry as she was, Echidna still, so as not to spill the half-drunk tea, slowly and carefully returned the cup to the table. Hearing Echidna’s complaint, Emilia said, “I’m sorry,” lowered her brows, and quietly placed a hand over her own chest.

What Echidna said rang true to her.

Emilia: “There are still lots of things I’m lacking, so I think I’ve been relying on you to tell me them, strictly. It’s only natural for you to be angry.”

Echidna: “That is not chiefly the topic I wish to address… No, it is not fine. Put that way, it makes it sound as if I am offering harsh words because I expect improvement from you.”

Emilia: "—? Telling someone what you want them to fix is because you would like the "what if" version of them better than the way they are now, right? If you were not hoping for any "what if" from them, you would not say anything… No, rather, I do not think you would even find anything to say."

Echidna: "…"

Emilia: "Ah, that's a "what if" story, too. Maybe we have been saying the same thing all along."

Covering her mouth, Emilia smiled at Echidna. At Emilia's words, Echidna heaved a long, big, showy sigh.

Seeing that, Emilia let out a little breath and said, "Honestly," then,

Emilia: "You sigh a lot, Echidna, but doing that makes happiness run away. Puck taught me. I would feel sorry if happiness kept running away from you, so I want you to be a "what if" Echidna who does not let happiness escape."

Echidna: "In that case, what I shall wish from the "what if" you is that you stop angering me at every turn, stop doing things that get on my nerves, and can at least pour tea without tensing up."

Emilia: "Okay, I'll work on them one by one, so you have to come and check properly, all right?"

Echidna: "…Blast. That might have been a case of digging my own grave."

Muttering so, Echidna made a sour face again, and Emilia thought of her as a naughty child.

She did not dislike it when Echidna spoke bluntly, grew angry, or looked proud of herself, but if she could just reduce the sour faces a little, that would make Emilia happier.

Since they were comrades who could talk about "what ifs" that had yet to be realized—

Emilia: "As I thought, my knight is amazing. This was the kind of story I wanted to have with you, Echidna.”

Echidna: “There you go bragging again…”

Echidna’s face grew even more sour, and Emilia let her lips relax into a smile.

As she thought, she reaaally wanted to someday see the “what if” where that stubborn crease on Echidna’s brow disappeared.

Oni Sister Birthday Specials

Blessing Day Ex:
Rem's Birthday Party

1

Emilia: "Hey, Rem, aren't you hungry yet? I made a reeeeally big rice ball."

Puck: "Yeah, it's Lia's masterpiece. It's so big that it'll knock your socks off."

Rem: "Oh, ohh…thank you, Lady Emilia. But, just those feelings are enough."

Emilia: "Hey, Rem, aren't you tired yet? Want a lap pillow?"

Puck: "It can be from me or Lia. Today is a great feast."

Rem: "Oh, ohh…thank you, Lady Emilia. But, just those feelings are enough."

Emilia: "Hey, Rem, aren't your hands lonely yet? Puck, will you let her cuddle you?"

Puck: "Since it's Lia's request, okay. Today is a special case when the seal to my chest fluffiness has been unlocked."

Rem: "Oh, ohh…thank you, Lady Emilia. Then, just a little."

When Rem nervously reached out her hand, Puck accepted her fingertips with his chest. Emilia made a fist saying "Good" while she looked at that situation from the side.

All spots of Puck's fur felt outstanding to touch. However, Emilia knew about the three spots you should pay particular attention to, as she was someone who had always been with Puck.

His ears, tail, and chest hair—these three spots of Puck's fur were excellent in sense of color and touch. They were the three supreme, deluxe, and best places of his fur.

Nobody could resist their charm. Emilia couldn't, of course, and Rem also shouldn't be able to either.

Puck: "Hmmm? Why is even Lia joining in, playing with my tail?"

Emilia: "Eh? I got jealous just from watching, and your tail was open too…was it not okay?"

Puck: "Nothing was wrong with it. But when you do it suddenly, it'll surprise me."

Emilia continues to cuddle Puck while saying sorry to him as he floated in the air, folding his small arms. Rem also unconsciously sighed at that touching.

Rem: "Ahh, I can't get enough…Great Spirit, I can't believe you've been hiding something like this."

Puck: "It is my prized possession. It's a secret garden that nobody in the mansion has touched, besides Lia and Betty. Today is special, so don't tell people about it."

Rem: "Yes. I've been allowed to enjoy it thoroughly."

Rem also replied politely to Puck's jokes, being someone who had a very honest personality. Then, she reluctantly took her finger away from Puck's chest hair and said

Rem: "But, I'm a little…just a little, just a tiny bit regretful about this spot."

Emilia: "Eh?! Umm, Rem, you can play with Puck more, you know? This is a rare opportunity, so it'd be a waste."

Puck: "Putting it as playing with me is a little wrong, but it's true. It's a rare event that may or may not happen in 100 years. You can enjoy it."

Rem: "I appreciate the thought, but I still have work to do after this, and I'm also worried about not preparing dinner in time."

Emilia: "But wait! I am still full, you know?"

Rem: “Isn’t that because Lady Emilia ate her own big rice ball…”

Emilia responds to Rem’s point by saying “Yea”, feeling on her stomach.

There was no sign of Emilia eating too much on her slender, thin belly, but she personally felt her stomach swelling up quite a bit. Actually, the gigantic rice ball that she made Subaru hold before—she had to eat this armful of food herself, so you could say her having a full stomach was natural.

Puck: “Well, I helped with half. That was a tough opponent.”

Emilia: “Yeah, that’s true. I thought it’d be perfect for confining Rem…”

Rem: “Confining me?”

Emilia: “Ah! Oops!”

Emilia carelessly lets out their objective, and she panics. Emilia became frantic trying to think of a way to trick Rem, who had a doubtful look.

Emilia: “No, Rem. Don’t misunderstand me. I said confine, but I don’t mean it in a dangerous way. I meant it in a more cute and kind…Puck, what should I call it?”

Puck: “Cute and kind confinement, right? Isn’t it just standing in the way?”

Emilia: “Yes, I just thought to stand in your way.”

Rem: “The way you put it sounds cute, but…”

Rem speaks as if the essence of it hadn’t changed, and Emilia hesitates. Afterwards, Emilia looked at Puck with a side glance to seek help.

Puck responds to Emilia’s look by slowly blinking his round eyes, and he said

Puck: “Lia, resignation is the great lesson of human life.”

Emilia: “Puck, you idiot! Also, in your case, it’s not human life!”

Puck: “Resignation is the great lesson of not only human life, but nyan life too.”

Emilia: “What in the world does nyan life mean…”

Puck lacked seriousness, acting carefree, and Emilia dropped her shoulders, seeing how she had no one on her side.

She thought to do her best, and to fulfill her role seriously—no, giving up here would surely be falling into the same trap as Puck.

Emilia: “I won’t lose.”

Emilia lifts her head courageously, saying”Alright”, and her motivation makes her bluish purple eyes burst into flames.

Then, she began to fight against Rem earnestly to do her best in one way or another.

2

Emilia lit up the fire in her eyes, and it was two minutes after she took the challenge with enough fighting spirit.

Rem: “—I see. And then Subaru made the request to Lady Emilia, and you tried your best to distract me.”

Emilia: “Yes…”

Emilia failed to trick Rem, and she suffered utter defeat from her.

She did her best in various ways, However, Rem’s questioning was too stern. Unfortunately, Emilia’s best efforts were in vain, and she fell a step short.

Puck: “Not sure if it was one step…even with 10 steps it’d still feel like rooting for the underdog.”

Emilia: “Jeez, Puck you be quiet! You’re the one to talk, not helping out at all at a crucial time!”

Puck: “With this result, I feel like me helping or not would only be a difference in the unofficial record.”

Puck makes an excuse, him being cold-hearted, and Emilia pouts at him as she showed an unhappy attitude. Puck being carefree was just the usual, but he had a very important role today.

—The many times Emilia got in the way of Rem’s work today were all diversion tactics to make the “Surprise” a success.

“Let’s celebrate”, is what Ram had said the other day, and it was fresh in her mind. Having said that, Emilia wasn’t there for it, and she heard it second hand using Subaru as an intermediary, but they were all for the celebration.

The celebration—it was for Ram and Rem’s birthday that was coming up.

It was a once a year commemoration of birth, and they worked their butts off especially for this year as they wanted to celebrate Rem.

Emilia got surprised too when Ram said that, but she also somehow understood Ram’s real intentions, who said that “This year is special for Rem.”

—It was because the major change Rem had this month was obvious to everyone.

Emilia also couldn’t say that she knew Rem for a long time. It was a relationship that started when she went out of the forest and got invited to the mansion. Even then, she could clearly feel Rem’s transformation.

She smiled more than before, talked more than before, and looked more brilliant than before.

That transformation definitely—she felt like it was a result of the worry in Rem’s heart disappearing in one way or another. Emilia felt jealous of that.

On top of that, she also felt like Rem was reeeaally cute now.

Emilia: “I’m saying that I want to make your guys’ birthday party a success at all costs!”

Rem: “Understood. Lady Emilia, thank you for telling me everything.”

Emilia: “No, it’s okay…wait what? I told you everything?”

Puck: “She induced you just like she wanted to. As a lone father with a beloved daughter thinking about the future royal election, I’ve gotten kinda worried.”

Anything and everything gets out of Emilia’s mouth, and she gets surprised by her own carelessness. As you’d expect, this was unacceptable, no matter how good of a listener Rem was.

Emilia: “But I kinda feel relieved now that I don’t have anything to hide…”

Rem: “I don’t think I should be saying this, being the one who listened, but if Lady Emilia can’t be a little more suspicious of others, I’ll be a little…just a little…just a tiny bit worried.”

Even Rem says something like that to Emilia, and so she hung her head in despondence. However, Rem sighed at Emilia’s situation in response and said

Rem: “I apologize for being a bother to Lady Emilia. For some sort of reason, I will make time for Sister, Subaru, and even Master Roswaal and…”

Emilia: “Ah, you can’t. Rem, don’t say it like that.”

Emilia puts a stop to Rem, who looked down as she muttered in a troubled way. That look, voice, and speaking were unacceptable. That was the look, voice, and speaking of the Rem from the past.

It was the Rem that had no self-confidence and was still fine with relying on serious worrying.

Emilia: “I reeeally understand the feeling of not having self-confidence. But, you can’t speak like you’re deprecating yourself. That’s kind of unfair.”

Rem: “Unfair, you say?”

Emilia: “I can’t put it in words well, but I feel like it’s a way of speaking that makes you leave things out. Also, I too don’t like Rem saying “for some sort of” and “things like”. Even Ram will get reeeeaally mad.”

Emilia puts her hands on hips, and she pictures the pink haired girl in her mind. Ram and Rem looked like two peas in a pod. She neither hid the doting love for her sister, nor was she embarrassed, always being full of confidence.

That was because it was her true feelings. The two of them also had the same trust Emilia had in Puck.

Emilia: “That’s why I’m really looking forward to this celebration. It is true that I want your guys’ birthday to be happy, but I also want to show my thanks.”

Rem: “For me, Lady Emilia?”

Emilia: “Yes, of course. Is it that surprising? Rem does the cooking, laundry, and cleaning for me. Also, you were nothing but a help to me during the witchbeast incident, even at the mansion’s festivity that happened afterwards.”

It wasn’t just Rem and Ram she should’ve expressed her thanks to. She had to tell tons of things to Puck, Subaru, Roswaal, and Beatrice, too.

And even then, the first time the opportunity of their birthday came around, she felt like she wanted to bless her first meeting with the two of them, and she wanted to show her thanks along with it.

Puck: “But Lia is clumsy with decorations, planning, and other things like that too. So she didn’t get that work. Instead, she was appointed to confine you.”

Emilia: “Don’t just butt in like that! Also, it’s not confinement!”

Puck: “You were appointed to stand in her way.”

Rem: “You were appointed, I see.”

Rem agrees with Puck’ joking, and Emilia gets shocked from seeing their smiles. Who would’ve thought that Rem and Puck would be mean to her?

On top of that, it was a scene that would’ve been impossible before. Now that she thought about it, she did let them off naturally.

Rem: “…In other words, whenever you saw me at the main wing or the west wing, you went ahead and did something like bother me.”

Emilia: “Not exactly. In Subaru’s words, it being a “Surprise” was important. So I had the role of casually distracting you so that Rem wouldn’t notice.”

Rem: “Casually…”

Puck: “I understand how you feel, but we’d appreciate it if you don’t say anything.”

Rem accepts Puck’s words, and she looked towards Emilia. Rem smiled wryly at her situation of being in dire stress from not knowing how she’d distract Rem from here on out.

Then, Rem changes her wry smile to just a smile as she said

Rem: “I understand. Lady Emilia, what you said is quite right. Always turning my back on celebrations is inexcusable to Sister and Subaru.”

Then, she pauses once, and continuing with a “Also”, Rem said

Rem: “I think it’s unfair to turn my back on Lady Emilia’s feelings.”

Emilia: “Rem…”

Rem: “How about it, Lady Emilia? Want to have tea together now?

You seem very thirsty…it'd kinda be like standing in my way."

Rem tilts her head with a smile, and she asks Emilia that question. Just from seeing Rem set up the table, Emilia also knew what she wanted to say.

It was her accepting the birthday celebration, as well as the thoughtfulness of letting Emilia also fulfill her duty. Although, she was also embarrassed due to her being spoiled from beginning to end.

Emilia: "Then I'll at least make the tea. You'll at least let me do that, right?"

Rem: "I don't mind it…but Lady Emilia, is tea your specialty?"

Puck: "It won't taste anything with the rice ball. That's how Lia's natural flavor works."

He saw an opportunity to come into the conversation, so Puck landed on Emilia's shoulder just when his role had ended.

He hides in her long, silver hair like that, and he withdrew as he said "My work here is done~"

Emilia: "Jeez, you really are a sloth."

Rem: "The great spirit's chest hair got me good. So, he did his job."

Rem soothes Emilia, her being angry, and she supports Puck. Rem was completely on Puck's side during this small interaction. People could not resist the fur's charm after all.

That trivial jealousy was put aside and—

Emilia: "It is a secret "Surprise", but I wonder what kind of preparations Subaru and the others have in store."

Rem: "I don't know. It must be things that are far beyond my imagination. But, I hope that Sister and Subaru don't get injured from being reckless."

Emilia: “Yeah. Subaru is a good boy, but he is reeeaally reckless.”

Rem: “Is he just a good boy? Subaru, to Lady Emilia.”

While walking side by side in the corridor, Rem said that as she suddenly looked at her with a side glance. In response to Rem’s words, Emilia blinked her big eyes, and she put a finger on her lips.

Rem’s question. What was Subaru to Emilia besides a “good boy”?

He was—

Emilia: “…A reeeaally good boy?”

Rem: “Lady Emilia is unfair.”

Emilia: “Eehh?! Why?! What’s this all of a sudden?!”

In a flash, Emilia lets out a sigh as well as a complaint, and she gets confused.

Rem leaves Emilia behind, and she walked forward briskly with quick steps.

Emilia: “Ah, hey wait, Rem! Jeez, what is this, and what’s up with you?”

Rem: “I don’t know.”

“…”

They both couldn’t handle the situation, and they both suddenly let out smiles.

Catching up while jogging, Emilia stood with Rem. Rem also slowed down her pace.

Slowly, they laughed for some reason, got surprised, and they started to walk in the corridor while chatting with excitement.

—It didn’t look like a relation between a master and a servant, they looked like fellow, young friends.

Blessing Day Ex: Rem-rin’s Day

1

Ram: “Let’s have a celebration.”

That was what Ram said a few days ago, just like that.

Ram’s sudden proposal was also fresh within Subaru’s memory, who was first to be surprised after hearing it.

As for what Ram’s suddenness was actually for at this time—he was convinced that it was for to celebrate the birthday of her beloved younger sister, Rem.

Subaru: “That also means she wants to put off her own…”

Ram and Rem were twin sisters. So, of course, their birthdays were on the same day.

If the younger sister’s birthday were to be celebrated, then naturally she as her older sister would be celebrating it as well.

That’s what people like Subaru thought, but Ram obstinately—not obstinately, but she did briefly deny that.

Which meant she was saying that she’d put in effort for everything, putting it in for Rem’s sake.

Prioritizing Rem no matter what really was like Ram, but—

Subaru: “—I feel bad for Sister, but what’s left is for me to watch the day.”

Subaru rubs the bottom of his nose, and he mutters like that. Subaru’s eyes, which people always called nasty, looked even more frightening, and he snickered quietly at the evil scheme in his chest.

Then, as for who was where Subaru was at when he made an evil brat-like face—

Subaru: “Oh.”

Subaru hears footsteps, leaning his fingers onto a pillar, being at an entrance hall of the Roswaal mansion. After he looked over, he saw a girl walking towards him quickly.

It was a person with rather short, blue swaying hair, and eyes that had the same type of light blue her hair had—it was one of the two people Subaru had pictured in his mind a moment ago, the youngest of the maid sisters, Rem.

Rem: “Sorry, Subaru. I made you wait a bit.”

Rem came over, and she lowered her head properly as she pinched her maid outfit apron. Subaru smiled at that situation, and he shook his head saying “No”.

Subaru: “Considering how you just got here, Rem must be busy with work. Hell, if that’s true, then people like Sister and I should help out more…”

Rem: “No, no way…I won’t be a bother to Sister and Subaru. Plus, it would be faster and more thorough if I did it instead of getting help from you two.”

Subaru: “You just declared to go solo with a big smile on your face, didn’t you?!”

Rem tilts her head at Subaru’s screaming, unaware of how she said something cruel.

Frankly speaking, Rem did not have a compromising attitude; in fact, it was uncompromising. Although her sense of resistance had disappeared, on very rare occasions, he’d catch a glimpse of one part of it that was her sharp tongue.

Maybe Ram throwing straight balls and Rem throwing curve balls were the source. They were the bits of knowledge that now allowed him to understand how he became friends with them.

Anyhow, he disregarded not being able to object in relation to the quality of his work with a wry smile, and Subaru said “My bad” to change the topic.

Subaru: “Rem should be busy, and yet I had you make time.”

Rem: “Well, I can’t do something like turn down Subaru’s requests…but what made you want to do this? You wanting to go to the Earlham Village with me. It shouldn’t have any particular necessary ingredients right now, so I can’t think of any reason to go shopping there.”

Subaru: “It has sugar, salt, and the ingredients to make mayonnaise…not. It’s not like you always need a reason to go out, you know?”

Rem: “So then what?”

Subaru: “It’s just going out. It’s for Rem’s…I mean, my break. So can I not take Rem along with me?”

For a second, it seemed he was about to say the wrong thing, and he corrected himself in panic.

If he were to carelessly say something like “Rem’s sake” here, he’d see Rem declining his offer firmly after being appreciative of it. That wouldn’t be good for the evil scheme that would happen after this.

Then, Subaru’s innermost thoughts were put aside. And when Rem sweetly smiled and went into deep thought, she said

Rem: “Going out, you say?”

Subaru: “Yes yes, let’s go out.”

Rem: “Isn’t that…basically…erm…a date?”

Subaru: “Yeah.”

In response to Rem’s questioning, Subaru faced towards the ceiling, and he let out a short “Yeah”. Everyone in the mansion had the same general idea of what a “Date” was because of the spreading of the story when he invited Emilia to a flower bed before.

If a man and a woman went out intimately, that was a date, so Subaru nodded at Rem’s question.

Subaru: “Yeah. It’s a date. Alright, Rem, let’s have a date together!”

Rem: “Yes! I’m happy! …But, if you told me earlier, I would’ve came with my maid outfit to go out on, Subaru, you meany.”

Subaru: “It’s a maid outfit even though it’s for going out?! You should have some discussions with Ros-chi about that!”

Of course, maid outfits certainly did fit her excellently, but Ram and Rem wearing things other than maid outfits would be cute, too. Come to think of it—

Subaru: “—I feel like I’ve talked about this in the first week of the mansion.”

Rem: “Subaru?”

Subaru: “Nah, it’s nothing. Okay, let’s go, Rem.”

He holds back just a small sentiment, and then Subaru and Rem’s date began.

2

And then, he brought Rem along, her being absolutely cheerful, and the “Date” began, but—

Rem: “—You know, Subaru is a meany. I was very mad.”

Rem pouts with her cheeks angrily, and she expressed her crankiness in a cute way.

In response to Rem’s situation, Subaru apologized to her complaints about being invited, holding onto his head because of his own clumsiness.

The “Date” itself was carried out well, and Rem was in an unusually good mood along the way. The conversations were lively, and Subaru was also confident that he successfully concealed the plan at the bottom of his stomach.

So, in regards to the existence of problems with the present situation, everything was perhaps going well beyond his expectations.

Rem’s good mood, Subaru’s secret, both of them were—.

Subaru: “I didn’t expect Rem longing for a date that much, even with my amazing eyes…”

Rem: “Subaru’s manly eyes are blind, so he wouldn’t expect it.”

Subaru: “Rem, you’re being unusually bitter! Sorry, it’s my fault, yes.”

Subaru gets seen with a side glance, and he takes only a meek attitude. Then, in response to that interaction between Subaru and Rem

Kid: “Subaru’s weak”

Kid: “Subaru’s pitiful”

Kid: “Subaru’s lame”

Kid: “Subaru’s pathetic”

is what they said in succession as a final blow. After that coordinated verbal attack made Subaru curl his lips, the people who watched him and laughed at him happily were the kids.

Their identity was called The Six Earlham Villagers—Subaru was the only one that called them that, but they were brats that got along with him. However, at this rate, there was a possibility of the relationship of trust that had been built up to this point everyday getting cracked. That was because Subaru: “You guys, follow up on me a little more. Partners in crime share the same fate, right? Who do you think I'm working hard for?"

Petra: "For Rem-rin's sake, right? You won't do it for us."

Subaru: "Gulp, it's just like what you said…"

He gets easily defeated by Petra, the six people's leader, a girl known to be the most promising in the village.

—As of now, Subaru was conspiring with the six people for a certain goal.

The seven people had the same goal, and his "Date" with Rem was to cover it up. Rem was brought to the village so that the true goal wouldn't be suspected.

Subaru: "As a result, I made Rem really mad…"

Petra: "You need to think about a girl's feelings more.

Meina: "I think so too."

Petra and Meina, the two people that represented the village's girls, judged him in a very harsh way. That made Subaru hang his head, being heartbroken, and the remaining four evil brats tapped Subaru's shoulder in turns as if to comfort him.

Rem: "…Jeez, Subaru just can't be helped."

Subaru: "Rem?"

Rem: "Getting depressed like that makes me feel anxious too. I'll forgive you if you let me sneak attack you 10 times for that, so please lift your head."

Subaru: "Ohh, Rem, you're kind…10 times? Are you kind? Isn't that pretty strict?"

Rem: "What do you mean? It's a mass of mercy."

10 sneak attacks. What did that mean? Perhaps it meant something like Rem tricking Subaru at every opportunity from now on. If that was the case, then Rem's overdoing also had to be considered, but Subaru felt like there was a chance of his life span shortening greatly.

Subaru: "Anyhow, let's get down to business while I show my gratitude for Rem being merciful. The truth is, I'm not the one who has business with you today, Rem. It's this gang of kids."

Rem: "Gang of kids…?"

Rem tilts her head upon hearing the unfamiliar words, and meanwhile, Subaru gave up his spot to the six group of people. The kids appear with Petra in the middle, and they face Rem from the front.

Rem also wasn't tall, but when compared to kids, she could look over them and see the other side. While being confused with the unfamiliar eye level, Rem stiffened up from wondering about what was going to happen.

Rem does that, and in response, when Petra and the others—when everyone looked at each other for just a second, they said

Everyone: "—Rem-rin, happy birthday!"

Then, their voices came together, and they each held out the presents they had concealed behind their backs.

Rem: "—Eh?"

In response to those children's gifts, Rem fell behind for a step, and she let her voice out, dumbfounded.

The unexpected situation, the bolt out of the blue, the shock freezes her thoughts—describing it would be something like that. Subaru taps Rem's shoulder softly and affectionately.

Subaru: "It's a surprise birthday plan. You weren't ready, huh, Rem."

Rem: "Th-That…but it's not Sister's and my birthday yet…"

Subaru: “In the birthday plan’s draft, Ram accepted having hers delayed. So, I attacked preemptively, not wanting to lose. —Well, that might be kind of an excuse.”

Rem: “Eh…?”

Subaru: “I talked with Petra and the others about Rem’s birthday. And then, these guys got hyped too saying “I wanna celebrateeee”… they wanted to do it for the witchbeast incident too.”

The forest’s witchbeast incident—that was treated as Subaru’s achievement for some reason, but as for Subaru, he felt like it would’ve been impossible without Ram and Rem’s help. Plus, if Roswaal wasn’t there, he would’ve died, and there was also him doing his best thanks to Emilia and Beatrice.

And yet, the reality was also that he was puzzled with him being treated like he was the only one to be rewarded. That also overlapped with this time’s discussion and the kids’ gratitude, and—

Subaru: “It’s a simultaneous implementation of thanks and celebration. If it starts to feel like one is lost from the two, then I’ll apologize.”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “…Guess it seems like you’re not worried about that.”

Subaru gently gives a wry smile, and he scratched his head. Next to Subaru, Rem looked down, hanging her head, and she was holding onto the edge of her skirt without saying anything.

The people who reacted that silence, worried about what was wrong, were the kids.

Kids: What’s wrong?”

Kid: “Hungry?”

Kid: “Not what you wanted?”

Kid: “I knew I shouldn’t got a bug…”

Subaru: “Ahh, don’t crowd her like that. Don’t worry, your guys’ feelings got through. But, bugs are no good, Lucas. Go let it free. Petra, you stop them too.”

Subaru asked the kids pitter pattering restlessly around Rem to give her time. Each of their presents had not money put into it, but their feelings.

They were put into the bunch of flowers, a handkerchief, rice balls, vegetables, crappy pottery, forget about the bug, and the fruit.

He didn’t go as far as to talk to them about what they’d give. Subaru felt like it’d be insensitive to ask, so he left it as what they’d answer with when asked what they liked.

So, these were the gathered presents after all of the kids thought, worried, and ran around for what they they’d obtain, what they’d get to please Rem.

Subaru: “Well, I don’t know about the bug, but…”

Rem: “…I’m a lucky person.”

Subaru: “What about the bug?!”

Rem: “Even the bug. Well, actually the bug isn’t okay.”

Rem rebukes Lucas quickly for a second, who had reacted to the bug issue, and she slowly lifted her head.

That smile she had with her relaxed mouth was so brilliant that it even captivated Subaru, who got used to seeing Rem’s smiles often.

“…”

That’s why the children were also all dumbfounded by Rem’s reaction. However, kids were of course honest beings, so when they noticed they got accepted by Rem with her smile, they immediately started to get super excited.

Kid: “Rem-rin smiled!”

Kid: “Rem-rin’s cute!”

Kid: “Rem-rin’s an angel!”

Kid: “Seriously an angel!”

Petra: “Guys, HEY! The Subaru words are showing! Rem-rin is bothered, you know.”

Petra scatters her warnings at the boys that began to dance. To be honest, they were attracted to the “Subaru Words” language with their stupid curiosity, but Subaru kept his mouth shut, thinking that this wasn’t when he should cut in.

Rem: “Thank you all. I’m so happy.”

Rem accepts the held-out gifts while saying that. She exchanges looks one by one with each of them, along with words, and smiles.

That scene certainly had a radiance that Rem had never seen before.

Subaru: “Can’t shrug off all of Ram’s points, I guess.”

Then, Subaru grinned widely as he watched over the presents being handed over pleasantly.

—On the way back from the “Date”, Rem was in an even better mood than when they went, and she walked in a lively way.

She held onto the tons of presents from the kids with both her hands, and she said this to Subaru, him holding onto what was called half of it,

Rem: “I’ll hold onto this myself.” and he handed them over.

The way Rem would treat these unexpected gifts would tell just how much she was happy with them.

That day, she put her heart into her arms to make dinner with the consumable rice balls, vegetables, as well as the fruit as ingredients, and everyone at the mansion smacked their lips in satisfaction.

The handmade pottery that couldn't be complimented for its quality became a vase to hold up the flowers that came with it, and it was put pretty plainly in Rem's room.

Then, the handkerchief with lovely embroidery was carried by Rem by choice.

Rem would always remember this feeling of happiness.

Rem: "Subaru, thank you for inviting me on a date."

Subaru: "Oh, you're gonna count it as a date. I thought you were pretty mad."

Rem: "I am mad at Subaru. But, I'm thankful for those kids."

Subaru: "Rem is harsh, isn't she?!"

Subaru screams, and next to him, Rem smiled just like how she did when she received the gifts.

Rem also, once again, showed her thanks for the children's thanks. She felt happiness because of the gifts.

—Thus, if the kids ever needed something, Rem would do everything in her hands to pay them back with all her might.

Those thoughts and feelings of happiness continued to be in her chest throughout Rem's Blessing Day.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: Welcome to the Evening Party

1

“Just as expected, Sister, you’re as pretty as a picture no matter what you wear.”

Having finished dressing her, Rem looked over her older sister standing before her, and let out a sigh of admiration.

Hearing those words, the older sister—Ram—ran her hands lightly over her peach-colored hair.

“Do you think so? If you say so, Rem, then it must be true.”

“Yes. There’s no doubt whatsoever. Rem is proud to have a sister like you, Sister.”

“Naturally. Even without meaning to be, Ram is the sort of older sister one would want to be proud of.”

Smiling, Ram twirled in place in response to her younger sister’s praise. She made the skirt of her brand new purple-red evening gown flutter, and Rem clapped her hands at such loveliness that one couldn’t help but think it exceeded any other beautiful maiden.

Ram’s pale red eyes, and the dignity infused into every part of every gesture, charmed Rem to the bottom of her heart.

She felt like she wanted to let the entire world know how wonderful her older twin was.

“But, it’s just the same for Ram, you know.”

“Huh?”

“Rem, too, is a cute little sister that Ram can’t help but want to boast about. Indeed, you’re wonderful.”

For a moment, her eyes went wide as she couldn't believe what she was being told, and then Rem's cheeks went red.

Even as she hung her head down, Rem's clothing, too, was a brand-new evening gown, the same as Ram's. It used colors that made it a matching pair with Ram's gown, and honestly, Rem felt very unworthy of it.

"Silly. We're always wearing the same style of maid outfits, aren't we?"

"But, those are nothing more than servant uniforms. I'm embarrassed to be wearing the same thing as my sister, but I can endure it. However, the situation this evening is different, and…"

As Ram crossed her arms and softened her expression in understanding, Rem lowered her gaze.

Forced to confront head-on the problem she'd avoided thinking about until the last minute by focusing on dressing Ram entirely too perfectly, Rem wrung her hands as her embarrassment returned.

Removing her maid uniform, and putting on the same evening gown as her sister, tonight the two of them would stand as part of society.

And the reason behind that was…

"…Are the two of you going to be ready soon, perha~ps?"

"Master Roswaal."

At the sound of knocking on the door, and the low voice that continued after it, Ram raised her head. A faint sparkle could be seen in her pale red eyes, and Rem broke into a little smile. At times like this, her older sister was cute.

Rem nodded in response to Ram's meaningful glance, and the older sister hurried to open the door. Upon doing so, a man set foot in the room, one with the white-painted face of a clown—Roswaal.

Wearing his formal outfit for the evening party (having said that, it was still in Roswaal's own particular eccentric style), he looked around the room, and upon seeing the sisters standing side by side, his lips gave in to a smile.

"Mhmm, mhmm. The two of you look lovely, do~n't you. Your use of color is such an amazing display I can't stand it."

"Thank you very much. Your outfit looks very good on you as well, Master Roswaal."

"It's a hue that will be quite tiring for the other guests' eyes, isn't it? I'm quite taken wi~th it."

Wearing a hat, and making the sleeves on his cloak flutter, Roswaal was in quite high spirits. Narrowing her eyes at her lord's appearance, Ram grasped the skirt of her own evening gown.

"Incidentally, is this clothing something that you chose, Master Roswaal?"

"Indeed, it would be a tempting and luxurious idea to worry over that choice, but I've been a bit busy recently, you see. I assigned the selection of your outfits for the evening to Clind."

"To Clind… No, I don't really mind, but it's a bit unfortunate. But I don't really mind."

"You really aren't fond of him, are you. Even I'll admit that he is the problem, thou~gh."

Seeing Ram's stiff-faced response, Roswaal gave a wry smile. Then, he turned to the wordless Rem and closed one eye, directing the gaze of his blue eye towards her.

"Oh my, Rem, why are you trying so hard to avoid drawing attention? You finally have a chance to wear lovely clothing. It would be a shame for it to go to waste."

"Ah, um, Rem's apologies, Master Roswaal. That wasn't her intention. It's just that Rem is very overwhelmed."

"Overwhelmed?"

“…Rem and my sister are servants. My sister is one thing, but Rem is entirely unable to leave behind that disposition. With things going like this, Rem is afraid that she will be an embarrassment to Master Roswaal or my sister…”

Falteringly, Rem revealed her fears about being in a position she was unsuited to. However, in response to her words, Roswaal replied with “That’s not true.” as he shrugged.

“There’s no need to worry. The one who ordered the two of you to participate in the evening party was myself. No matter what kind of inappropriate display you put on at the party, the responsibility is one that I should bear, and it’s not something you need to wo~rry about.”

“But still…”

“Or do you intend to take away my authority as a margrave, perha~ps?”

With Roswaal smiling at her mischievously, Rem could say nothing more. And, when she turned her troubled eyes to where Ram stood, Ram responded “Silly”, and laughed gently.

“Didn’t Ram tell you before? You are Ram’s pride and joy of a younger sister, Rem. There’s no need to worry that you’ll turn into a disadvantage for Master Roswaal. Ram will stay by your side, after all.”

“Ah…”

Having been told that by both her lord and her older sister, Rem’s pale blue eyes widened slightly. Then, nodding deeply, she smiled.

“Yes. I’ll put in my very best effort.”

Swaying the sleeves of her brand-new evening gown, she stood up straighter.

2

The two of Ram and Rem being ordered to participate in the evening party is something that goes back to only a few days earlier.

It was fairly common for Roswaal, the pair's lord, to suddenly come up with new ideas. He was in the habit of waiting until the very last moment to pass on something he had already decided to the party in question.

This time around, it was the sisters Ram and Rem who were caught up in their lord's whim. Having said that, Ram seemed to be enjoying it, and Rem was satisfied with being able to see her sister's evening gown.

Despite that, her position was that of a servant. Something overwhelming remained overwhelming, but still…

"…Oho. Just as I thought, the two of you do look good in those outfits."

Placing a hand on her abundant chest, and letting out a sigh of relief, was a woman with long, beautiful, blond hair. Both their senior as a maid, and the one who had trained them, she was Frederica.

With her clear green eyes, she looked over the two carefully, and seemed satisfied.

"The master gave instructions to hurry, so Clind and I prepared your outfits. Clind drew up the rough general design, and I took care of the accessories."

"If you had only said something, Rem would have gladly lent assistance…"

"Don't say such silly things. Making someone sew up their own clothing on the event of their grand debut; it's something that, as a maid to the Mathers family, I could never permit."

After Rem's nervous offer, Frederica displayed her sharp fangs while speaking of the philosophy of a maid.

"I'll accept the feeling behind that consideration. …It would be nice to see something of that from Ram as well."

"Oh? After stringing together so much high-minded thinking, you would treat only Ram as an exception?"

In response to Frederica's stare, Ram thrust out her thin chest, the very image of confidence. Her bold form made one question if this figure in an evening gown wasn't her true nature, and the maid uniform she normally wore only a temporary standing. She truly wore it well enough that one might fall prey to such an illusion.

"Honestly… that's not even a little bit adorable. Don't you agree, Rem?"

"Immovable and fearless. That calm and collected part of her is another bit of my sister's charm."

"Ha."

Rem giving her full approval, and Ram looking satisfied with the praise. Seeing the way the sisters were, Frederica placed a hand on her forehead and sighed "I was foolish to expect otherwise.". And then…

"Is this where you were? It will soon be time to be ready for the evening party. Imminent."

"Eep."

The voice that found its way into the waiting room was familiar, but nonetheless Rem's shoulders jumped at the suddenness of it. No matter how many times she heard it, it was something she could never get used to. Ram and Frederica calmly held their composure, and that led to Rem feeling that she was that much more inferior as a servant.

Completely unaware of Rem's inner feelings, a tall, thin man had appeared in the waiting room. Politely smoothing back his thick, blue hair, wearing a butler outfit and a monocle on his left eye—it was the steward, Clind.

"Just like always, the way you show up is bad for our hearts, Clind.”

“Not changing is something we have in common. However, the outfits you are wearing differ from your usual attire, and suit you well. Beauteous.”

Although Ram’s tone was unfriendly, Clind’s face was composed as he gave a relaxed reply. However, after those words of praise, he continued on with a “However,”.

“A little while ago it would have been even better. At that time, your troubles would still have been childlike, as well. Anguish.”

“…”

“In that sense, Rem is still likable. Whether or not that is a good thing is another matter. Off course.”

“Rem is?”

With the flow of the conversation suddenly directed at her, Rem tilted her head in surprise and puzzlement. There was no change in his expression, and with his voice lacking in warmth, Rem couldn’t read Clind’s emotions. He would often add in a joke without pausing, and Rem’s poor head felt like it was going to spin.

To clear away Rem’s tribulations, Ram stood to block Clind’s line of sight.

“Don’t direct your filthy gaze towards Rem; that’s disgusting. Kindly pick someone better suited to your perversions… Focus on Lady Annerose.”

“That’s a problematic thing to say as well, you know?!”

Frederica’s face reacted drastically to Ram’s words, but then she coughed as though embarrassed at having raised her voice. Then, grasping the shoulder of the unwelcomed Clind, she turned him about and pushed him out of the doorway.

“Come now, you shouldn’t be spending so long in a lady’s room. We will be along to the meeting room right away. You should hurry, too, and…”

“Ah! Clind and Frederica, this is where you’ve been, then.”

As she opened the door, and attempted to drive the butler from the room, she encountered someone coming thumping down the hallway. It was a very young girl, dressed in a lovely gown.

Her thick indigo hair was braided and wrapped about her head. This was, under Roswaal’s guardianship, the child at the head of the Miload family, Annerose Miload.

Annerose (who was six years old), peeked into the waiting room. Seeing the four people inside, her eyes lit up upon seeing the sisters Ram and Rem specially dressed up.

“Oh my, the two of you look very wonderful! I’m sure that uncle must be proud, as well!”

“Ah, thank you, Lady Annerose. Your dress also suits you very well, Lady Annerose. It’s wonderful.”

With her hands clasped in front of her chest, and smiling with reddened cheeks, Annerose raised an approving voice. In response to the honest appraisal of a child, even Rem could not brush it off with a meaningless objection.

Hearing Rem’s words, she asked “Truly?”, and, grasping the sleeves of her dress, continued “If Rem says so, then maybe it’s alright to believe it. Clind praises me no matter what I wear, so I can’t rely on him at all. Do you think uncle will praise me too, perhaps?”

“Yes, I’m sure Master Roswaal will be overjoyed as well. Seeing Lady Annerose growing up in good health is something that both Ram and Rem feel proud of.

“Haha, thanks, Ram. But I still won’t give up my place at uncle’s side for you, you know?”

Displaying the rebellious heart of a little child, Annerose wore a fairly strong-willed smile, and Ram smiled in return.

This exchange between the two of them, with Roswaal caught in-between, was entirely expected by now. As both her guardian, and a friend to her deceased parents, Annerose was captivated by him. On the other hand, there was no need to explain Ram's feelings. It put Rem in a very complicated position.

On top of that, Rem was there to witness the moment of Annerose's birth. It would be audacious to say it, but she couldn't help but hold a familial feeling in regards to her growth. This, too, was overwhelming.

Regardless of that…

"It's almost time for the evening party. Shall we call a temporary truce, and head to the meeting room? Ram, and Rem, too, please take my hands."

"You do like to have things your way, Lady Annerose, don't you?"

"It's only natural for the privilege of escorting the guest of honor to belong to a noble!"

Countering Ram's teasing tone, Annerose raised her voice. However, Rem tilted her head at the content of what was said. 'Guest of honor' was an odd thing to be referred to as.

"Now that you mention it, Rem's mind was entirely focused on joining in the evening party… What on earth is the reason for the party being held tonight?"

"Oh goodness, Rem… Clind, Frederica! And Ram, too, didn't you speak to her about it?"

As Annerose was surprised by Rem's question, the three she looked to for confirmation all shook their heads in unison. However, their expressions were soft, and while Rem was surprised at being the only one who didn't know, she couldn't help but be worried about that.

Annerose's little hand gave Rem's hand a gentle squeeze. Then she smiled, and said, “Wearing those cute evening gowns, you two are the guests of honor, you see? It’s uncle’s …slightly pompous, lovely gift to his retainers, of course.”

3

“Those are Rem’s memories about this evening gown. Rem apologizes for bothering you with this silly story.”

“Nah, nah, nah, it wasn’t silly at all; it was a really good story, wasn’t it? In the end, that evening party was a roundabout way of throwing a birthday celebration for the two of you, wasn’t it?”

As the boy with black hair grinned cheerfully, and spoke that way to her, Rem nodded and replied “Yes” to Subaru.

The setting was the Roswaal manor, in Rem’s personal room. When Subaru dropped by to tell her good night, he had found her arranging her closet, and the evening gown caught his eye.

It was stored carefully, as a reminder of the blessing that had visited Rem and the others years earlier.

“Roswaal can be pretty sharp, too. If it’s like that, I can’t just sit back and lose, either.”

“You can’t lose, you say?”

“Oh, just talking to myself, just talking to myself. Anyways, it’s something to think about, and I’m glad I could hear about it. Thanks for telling me, Rem. I’m looking forward to someday meeting up with the weird people in the story, too.”

“Indeed. …Subaru, please at least be careful of Clind. He’s someone with, um, odd habits, so Rem would be worried about Subaru.”

“When you live around here, people without odd habits are pretty rare.”

With Subaru scratching his head, and smiling as though he thought she was exaggerating, Rem clenched her fist. She felt anew that she would need to be well-prepared for the time of trials that would someday come.

“So then, it’s gotten a bit late, what will you do? If it would be difficult for you to return to your room, Rem wouldn’t mind if you were to rest on her bed…”

“C’mon, you’d mind, right? I’ll go back to my room just like usual. Seriously, if I did that, what would you do, Rem?”

“Rem would rest on your bed in exchange, Subaru. …! This is even more of a forbidden temptation than Rem had thought… Let’s put a stop to it, Rem can’t believe herself.”

“What on earth kind of internal conflict did you have in that short time…”

Smiling wryly at Rem’s words as she struggled valiantly with her impulse, Subaru headed towards the room’s door. As she reluctantly watched him go, he suddenly turned around and pointed at the evening gown on the bed.

“It might be a little too small now, but I’d have liked to see you wearing it.”

“Indeed. Rem’s chest might not fit into it anymore.”

“That’s a reply that it’s difficult for a boy to respond to! But, if you don’t mind, please give it some thought. Maybe there’ll even be a chance for it at this year’s little celebration.”

Widening her eyes at Subaru’s words, Rem saw Subaru off with a “Yes, understood.”.

This year’s celebration—Rem was no longer so childish as to not understand what that referred to.

So, respectfully following Subaru’s instruction, she began making plans to re-tailor the evening gown.

Thinking that the evening gown that matched her sister’s, if it were worn now, would turn out like this, wouldn’t it.

Lugunica Newspaper: Volume 3

Lugunica Travel Plan (1)

“Circumstances of the Journey”

Rem: “Nee-sama, nee-sama, it’s terrible.”

Ram: “Oh my, what’s got you all worked up, Rem?”

Rem: “So, to tell the truth, it seems there’s some talk of having everyone in the mansion travel somewhere to celebrate Ram and Rem’s birthday.”

Ram: “Is that so, going on a trip… not a birthday party only, but going so far as to show that much consideration. Truly, one cannot express enough thanks to Roswaal-sama.”

Rem: “Ah, nee-sama… the one who suggested the trip was Subaru-kun…”

Ram: “Barusu did?”

Rem: “Yes. Of course, Roswaal-sama offered his support as well, but it was Subaru-kun who mentioned it first. Rem couldn’t help but be deeply impressed.”

Ram: “It can’t be helped, then. It’s a bit bothersome that it was Barusu’s idea, but if it makes Rem that happy, then Ram will go along with it.”

Rem: “Thank you, nee-sama. So the next matter to discuss, then, is that Subaru-kun asked if nee-sama and Rem would choose a place they’d like to travel to.”

Ram: “Indeed, given the rare opportunity to go on a trip, the thought of allowing Barusu to choose the destination doesn’t seem appealing. Ram and Rem should choose something together.”

Rem: “Yes! Nee-sama, what sort of place would you like to go and see?”

Ram: “Indeed, it would be…”

Rem: “It would be…”

Ram: “Looking at the available space, that should be something discussed not here, but in the next article.”

Rem: “Amazing, nee-sama… Rem is very impressed!”

Lugunica Travel Plan (2)

“Watergate City Priestella”

Rem: “So with that, Rem would like to think of a vacation destination, together with nee-sama.”

Ram: “You seem to be enjoying this quite a bit, Rem. It’s very cute.”

Rem: “Yes, it’s a rare opportunity, so Rem would like to turn it into wonderful memories with nee-sama and Subaru-kun. Hence, as the first candidate… how about Priestella?”

Ram: “Priestella… one of the Six Great Cities of Lugunica, the Watergate City, then.”

Rem: “With many waterways flowing through a large city, it seems one can move throughout the city on dragon boats pulled by water dragons.”

Ram: “Water dragons… similar to ground dragons, they’re water-dwelling dragons raised by humans. Unlike ground dragons, they have ferocious temperaments, but Ram has heard that the water dragons in that city have been raised from eggs by humans, so they’re quite well-trained.”

Rem: “Making one’s way around the town, with the clear water rippled by the dragon boats, would be quite elegant; Rem thinks it would be nice!”

Ram: “The origin of the name Watergate is the Tigracy river right next to the city, and the large flood gates that regulate the vast amount of water that flows from it into the city.”

Rem: “With the intermingling with the Kararagi city state just on the other side of the river, it looks like the Kararagi culture has established itself in some parts of the city. It seems like something that Subaru-kun would be very interested in… nee-sama, wouldn’t you like to choose Priestella as the vacation destination?”

Ram: “Sightseeing together with Rem in a pretty city of water sounds like fun. But, making Barusu happy doesn’t sit well with Ram. Let’s put that one on hold.”

Rem: “On hold… understood. Well then, Rem will suggest a place that will be more satisfying for nee-sama next time!”

Ram: “So full of motivation. Rem is cute, so let’s draw this out a bit longer.”

Lugunica Travel Plan (3)

“Flanders, the Ground Dragon Capital”

Rem: “The next candidate is the Ground Dragon Capital, ‘Flanders’!”

Ram: “And here is another of Lugunica’s Six Great Cities. A city in the eastern part of Lugunica, it’s point of interest is, just as its name suggests…”

Rem: “Yes, it’s a city with many ground dragons. Originally, ground dragons largely did not inhabit the wilds in other countries… It seems that it’s due to exports from Flanders that they spread explosively throughout the world.”

Ram: “Kararagi had their ‘Rygar’ Great Dogs, Vollachia had their ‘Faro’ Red Bulls, and Gusteko had their ‘Mafmaf’ Silver Bears, but it seems that ground dragons, being suited to any land, are prized in all countries.”

Rem: “No matter how you look at it, the highlight of Flanders is how the people coexist with the ground dragons. All throughout the town there are mechanisms that are powered by ground dragons; even outside the ground dragon industry, ground dragons fill valuable roles, and so on…”

Ram: “Even simply going on a long ride together with Rem, though the Haikrala Plateau that’s well-known for its scenery, seems like it would be delightful.”

Rem: “Yes, Rem, too, is looking forward to going on a long ride with nee-sama… Speaking of that, the time that Rem rode on a ground dragon together with Subaru was fun as well.”

Ram: “…Indeed.”

Rem: “Subaru-kun was surprised at first by the height and speed of ground dragons, but when he got used to it, he was excited right away… The way Subaru-kun gets ahead of himself is cute… Ah, nee-sama, what’s the matter?”

Ram: “Due to a matter of personal convenience, Flanders is out, then. Let’s move on to the next one.”

Rem: “Ah, yes, understood. Next time for certain, nee-sama will be enchanted!”

Lugunica Travel Plan (4)

“Picktat, City of Commerce”

Rem: “Rem’s apologies that it’s lacking in unexpectedness. The next candidate is…”

Ram: “The City of Commerce, ‘Picktat’, one of Lugunica’s Six Great Cities, then.”

Rem: “…! Nee-sama, how were you able to tell what Rem’s next thought was?”

Ram: “Silly. Something like this is easy. When it concerns Rem, the only thing Ram doesn’t understand is your taste in men.”

Rem: “Very impressive, nee-sama. And just as you’ve said, what Rem wanted to suggest next is Picktat. A city adjacent to the Vollachia Empire to the south, it’s the most thriving commercial center in the Kingdom of Lugunica.”

Ram: “Lugunica doesn’t have very good relations with Vollachia, but fortunately, thanks to the pact with the Divine Dragon, there are sufficient connections to allow for trade.”

Rem: “The ‘Dance of Silver Flowers’… Just like the “Sword Demon’s Love Song”, it’s one of the places that became a stage for the Sword Demon’s love story. Rem would certainly love to make a pilgrimage there.”

Ram: “A p… ‘pilgrimage’… What does that mean?”

Rem: “Oh, it’s something that Subaru-kun taught Rem. After learning about people and places through the songs of minstrels, and places one has learned of through reading legends, a ‘pilgrimage’ refers to when one travels around the actual locations, it seems.”

Ram: “Somehow, it seems like the term holy land has been cheapened.”

Rem: “But Rem is very interested… Going to place flowers at the famed stone bridge where the Sword Demon crossed blades with ‘Eight Arms’, or the spire where the black dragon appeared…”

Ram: “Here Ram was thinking that it would be more of a cute wish like wanting to go shopping, but that rascal Barusu has been giving strange ideas to Rem…”

Rem: “On that note, nee-sama, there are other stories about Picktat…”

Lugunica Travel Plan (5)

“A tour of famous locations”

Rem: “Rem’s apologies, nee-sama… she forgot herself in the excitement.”

Ram: “It’s alright. Please cause some trouble for your big sister now and then, like a little sister should.”

Rem: “Nee-sama, you’re so kind… but it’s all been suggestions from Rem from the start, and not very good ones at that. Nee-sama, isn’t there somewhere that you would like to go?”

Ram: “A place Ram would like to go… Mhmm. Now that you mention it, the tree so vast that it pierces the clouds, ‘Flugel’s Great Tree’ was something to see.”

Rem: “Ne, nee-sama, Flugel’s Great Tree was, um…”

Ram: “Barusu snapped it, didn’t he. Honestly… well in that case, how about the Gina mountain range, that legends say is where the ‘Divine Dragon’ Volcanica dwells?

Rem: “That would be wonderful. But… that place is a mining center for mana stones, so it’s impossible to enter without permission from the kingdom.”

Ram: “Ah, that’s right. It had completely slipped Ram’s mind. Next would be the Pleiades Observation Tower where the ‘sage’ lives, the Augria Sand Dunes…”

Rem: “Even the current ‘Sword Saint’ returned empty-handed, and that’s rumored to be a nest of witchbeasts.”

Ram: “It might be fun to go beyond those dunes and sprinkle some sand on the witch’s shrine, then.”

Rem: “…Nee-sama, would it be a mistake to guess that you’re joking?”

Ram: “Oh my, you noticed? You’re so cute when you’re enthused, Rem. Besides, even without bothering with a trip, Ram is sufficiently satisfied.”

Rem: “Nee-sama…”

Ram: “After all, everything that’s important to Ram is here in this place.”

Rem: “Nee-sama… Yes, Rem feels exactly the same way!”

Ram: “Also, going on an outing is tiring. The mansion really is the best.”

Rem: “Honestly, nee-sama… That part of you that’s a homebody is wonderful.”

Hectic Birthday Celebration Preparations (1)

Roasting a Hundred-Faced Bird

Subaru: “So with that, for Ram and Rem’s birthday party, we’re going to do our best to come up with a meal that will knock their socks off.”

Emilia: “Mhmm, I think that’s a rea~lly good idea. The two of them are always taking care of me, too, after all, and I haven’t been able to do anything for them. So we have to come up with some luxurious food that will delight them.”

Subaru: “That’s the spirit, that’s the spirit! So, what kinds of recipes do you know, Emilia-tan? Personally, I’m really curious about it!”

Emilia: “Leave it to me. I’ve got one that’s just right for celebrating… and it’s called ‘Hundred-Faced Bird Roast’!”

Subaru: “Just the sound of it makes it seem like a feast of impressive scale has jumped onto the stage, doesn’t it?! Not a seven-faced bird, but a hundred-faced bird?! Isn’t that too greedy?!” (note: ‘seven-faced bird’ would usually be translated as ‘turkey’)

Emilia: “Seven-faced bird? I’m sorry, I don’t really understand what you’re saying.”

Subaru: “Ah, well, let’s just accept that as a culture gap. So, what kind of meal is roasted hundred-faced bird… There’s not much room for the imagination!”

Emilia: “Hm, that’s not true at all. This is a rea~lly difficult meal to prepare. If you underestimate it, Subaru, even you could wind up in real trouble.”

Subaru: “O~h, really? Now I’m a little unsure if I should believe you or not… what’s it made of?”

Emilia: “The ingredients are a hundred-faced bird, garnic and solte, and then flower nectar!”

Subaru: “Ah, when you put it like that, it sounds like it’s actually a reasonable meal… Hmm, Emilia-tan? Why have you changed into an outfit that it’s easy to move around in?”

Emilia: “Hm? Well I have to go catch a hundred-faced bird first, don’t I? Leave it to me, I’ll be back by supper!”

Subaru: “Wha, Emilia-tan?! Emilia-ta~n! Oh, this is no good!”

Hectic Birthday Celebration Preparations (2)

Fluffyfluffy

Subaru: “Since Emilia’s up and run off, I can’t deny that it feels like our plan is already on the verge of running aground, but I’m not the kind of guy to give up at a time like this. Our next guest is this well-known person here!”

Beako: “Who on earth are you explaining to, I suppose? More importantly, why does Betty have to play along with this farce, you know?”

Subaru: “Don’t say things like that, Beako. Ram and Rem are always taking care of you, too, right? Honestly, with things going like this, I was thinking I’d picked the completely wrong person on this when I called you, but let’s just accept that and work together.”

Beako: “With the way you’ve been talking, there’s no way that things would go like that, I suppose! …Regardless, I understand what you are thinking, you know. Let’s get this over with quickly, so Betty can get back to spending dreamy time with Bubby, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Ah, ah, we can’t be thinking of ourselves at a time like this. Anyways, please help me out here, Beako. What kind of recipes do you know?”

Beako: “Right to the point then, I know how to make sweet, enchanting fruits, and fluffy frozen dessert, you know.”

Subaru: “Right after the hundred-faced bird, it’s already time for dessert?!”

Beako: “Even if there’s no bread, as long as I can eat sweets, I’ll be satisfied, I suppose.”

Subaru: “It’s kinda amazing ‘cause given your hairstyle, it doesn’t even sound odd when you say that. Umm, how do you make it and what’s the ingredients…”

Beako: “You gather the fruit you like, and the frozen dessert, you know. Then you throw them into the same bowl, boom! And then it’s ready, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I guess so!”

Beako: “O~h, it’s so sweet and chilly, I just can’t stand it, you know. I’d like to share some with Bubby too, I suppose…”

Subaru: “And you’re gonna go and eat it all up right here, too?!”

Hectic Birthday Celebration Preparations (3)

Nostalgic Meat Pie

Subaru: “I can’t believe this; there’s been so little progress with the situation it’s almost impressive. Emilia’s in the forest, Beako’s in the Forbidden Library, with things like this, what can I…”

Roswaal: “It see~ms you’re troubled, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Roswaal! Am I glad to see you… am I glad to see you? I’m deeply concerned, but right now, I’m kinda worried about what to do for the meal for Ram and Rem’s birthday celebration.”

Roswaal: “I see, I see, I understand the situa~tion. In other words, you’re seeking recipes for a meal to make for the two of the~m?”

Subaru: “Yeah! That’s where we are. So, Ros-chi, you got any ideas?”

Roswaal: “Leave it to me~. Passed down through the generations in our family, our special dish for celebrations is known as ‘Hundred-Faced Bird Roast’…”

Subaru: “And we’re already into repeats! Also, we already covered Fluffyfluffy made from fruit and frozen dessert, so you don’t have to bring that up, either!”

Roswaal: “Oh dear, how sad… In that case, perhaps there is something we could try. Ho~w does a meat pie sound?”

Subaru: “Sounds great! I’m shocked to suddenly hear something so normal, but it’s great!”

Roswaal: “You make it by putting minced meat and chopped anions into the pie dough, and adding mushrooms and tometo sauce will make the flavor stand out, wo~n’t it?”

Subaru: “And it’s really done so properly I’m amazed! Do you cook or something?”

Roswaal: “So~metimes. This is something that, a long time ago, a girl who took care of me a little while used to make o~ften. Such a nostalgic flavor. Do your best to make it deli~cious.”

Subaru: “For sure! You really are seriously useful now and then, aren’t ya! With things going like this, make sure you look forward to the main event!”

Roswaal: “I am indeed. …As much as if it was a competition for top spot in this mansion.”

Hectic Birthday Celebration Preparations (4)

Nee-sama’s Steamed Yams are the Best in the World

Subaru: “So, we’ve been dealing with this and that… It sorta feels like it’s going to turn out to be something with no sense of unity…”

Rem: “At times like that, please leave it to Rem, Subaru-kun!”

Subaru: “Rem! Ah, I really appreciate the thought, but this is something that you and Ram can’t be part of…”

Ram: “You intend to make Rem an outcast? It seems that you do not value your life.”

Subaru: “You’re saying that while you know exactly what I meant, aren’t you?! It’s a birthday party for you two, so you can’t help out with it! Comprende?!”

Rem: “‘Comprende’…? Never mind, setting that aside, you are underestimating Rem too much, Subaru-kun. Rem understands her role and is carrying it out as she should.”

Ram: “Therefore, helping with the cooking is out. Instead, Ram and Rem will teach you a recipe.”

Subaru: “Seriously?! That’s… just barely on the safe side! Great, what’s the recipe?”

Rem: “Yes! Right to the point, it’s nee-sama’s best-in-the-world steamed yams!”

Subaru: “I thought so! The method would be… put solte and yams into a pot, take it to a light boil, and when the skins start to come off, you’re good. It’s quite simple!”

Ram: “It’s not as simple as it sounds, you know. Go ahead and give it a try.”

Subaru: “Sure, I’ll give it a shot! Watch this, watch this…”

Ram: “…Ah.”

Subaru: “Would you quit making me feel like I’m doing it wrong?!

Rem: “Uh… Th, that’s not right… For this, Subaru-kun, you at least must do your best, Subaru-kun, or it was all for nothing… Uuh!”

Subaru: “It’s that bad even for you, Rem?! Darn it, just watch me until it’s time for the real thing! I’ll get better at it for real, just wait and see… see… see.. (fading into the distance)”

Ram: “Good grief, what a noisy man.”

Rem: “But, since that, too, is something he’s doing for nee-sama and Rem, Subaru-kun is wonderful.”

Ram: “Your smile is the best feast Ram could hope for, Rem.”

“A Greeting from Ram and Rem”

Rem: “Once again, everyone, thank you sincerely for coming to the store for nee-sama and Rem’s birthday event.”

Rem: “Speaking honestly, Rem is actually still a bit bewildered. She isn’t very fond of the thought of her own birthday, you see. It’s only natural to celebrate nee-sama’s birthday, but due to being twins, when Rem tries to let her own birthday pass unnoticed, nee-sama looks very lonely, so…”

Ram: “Oh, Rem, you really are such a troublesome girl.”

Rem: “Nee-sama…”

Ram: “There’s no need to take it so seriously. Ram is fine simply having you together with her at her side, and seeing that you are well. That alone is blessing enough.”

Rem: “…Yes, Rem feels the same. More than before, she’s now able to look at things just a bit more optimistically.”

Ram: “Is that thanks to Barusu as well?”

Rem: “Yes! That’s right! It’s thanks to Subaru-kun and nee-sama!”

Ram: “Ha! How annoying.”

Rem: “Nee-sama?”

Ram: “It’s nothing. However, in truth, it seems that Barusu was involved in the plan for this birthday event as well, and Ram wonders if a dose of Barusu isn’t mixed into the exhibition in this gorgeous event venue.”

Rem: “A dose of Subaru-kun… Somehow, Rem’s heart is starting to beat faster.”

Ram: “Rem.”

Rem: “Ah, Rem’s apologies, nee-sama. But, that’s true. Subaru-kun came up with so many different kinds of ideas… Rem, too, helped out with these decorations, and did all sorts of things to help with the preparations.”

Ram: “Is that so. …Is that so? Even though it’s Ram and Rem’s birthday celebration?”

Rem: “Yes. Subaru-kun was very cute when he was working so hard, and Rem thought it would be faster and cleaner, and turn out better if she did it herself, so she couldn’t help it…”

Ram: “…Is that so.”

Rem: “Ah, but Rem made sure it was all done very casually so Subaru-kun wouldn’t find out. Actually, Rem helped out with the cake and merchandise as well. Oh, and then, and then…”

Ram: “With the way things are going, it’s difficult to say how much of Barusu’s hard work was put to use.”

Rem: “Oh, and also! Please listen to this, nee-sama! The truth is, Subaru-kun…”

Ram: “Well anyways, Rem is cute when she’s like this, so Ram is satisfied.”

Rem: “So then, if you can believe it, Subaru-kun… Nee-sama, are you listening?”

Ram: “Yes, yes.”

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: A Happy Bad Dream

1

“—Nee-sama, what might be the matter?”

With those few words directed at her, Rem’s mind was visited with severe shock and blankness.

“Umm…?”

Placing a hand on her own cheek, Rem tilted her head while scrunching her eyebrows together in confusion.

Hadn’t there been something odd about that? She inquired to herself about it.

There shouldn’t be anything unusual about that. Just as normal, she had woken up, enjoyed looking at Subaru’s sleeping face in his room, and then made her way to her sister Ram’s room.

And then, she shook Ram by the shoulder (her sister was just a bit of a sleepyhead) to wake her, and was trying to help her get changed; that was when the afore-mentioned call to her had come…

“…nee-sama?”

“…”

In front of her, Ram narrowed her pale red eyes, and was staring at Rem skeptically. With her smooth hair, strong-willed eyes, and supple limbs, simply having her beside you was enough to draw out a sigh of admiration.

This was her twin sister. Though the molding of her facial features shouldn’t have been that different from Rem’s, that what was hidden inside it could alter the nature of its radiance this much, Rem could feel nothing but admiration.

Such an amazingly lovely and wonderful being was Ram, her… younger sister?

“…ah.”

“Something really is odd after all. Are you feeling unwell, nee-sama?”

“…No, it’s not like that.”

As her younger sister suddenly reached out a hand and touched her cheek, looking concerned, Rem shook her head.

Once she had arrived at the proper conclusion that this was her younger sister, the sense of strangeness in her chest faded quickly away. It was odd that it had occurred to begin with, of course.

“Perhaps Rem was a bit sleepy as well. It’s fine now, Rem is awake.”

“Is that so… then that’s fine, but you always work too hard, nee-sama, so Ram worries about that. If it really does get to be too much, you should just leave all of the work to Barusu. Ram will sleep by your side, too.”

“That’s a very tempting suggestion, but… let’s put it aside for now.”

Smiling at her concerned younger sister’s words, Rem confidently asserted that she was fine.

Taking it easy together with cute little Ram. It sounded very tempting, but if Rem were to slack off, it meant that much more of a burden on Subaru. And besides, she didn’t want to look bad in front of Ram.

“After all, Rem is cute little Ram’s nee-sama, after all.”

“Just as expected, nee-sama. You’re outstanding.”

“Indeed. So, let’s get you changed, Ram. Now then, please raise your arms.”

“It can’t be helped, then. But please comb my hair as well, nee-sama.”

Nodding obediently to Rem’s words, Ram raised both hands and entrusted herself to Rem. Softening her expression at Ram’s pampered attitude, Rem nodded cheerfully and replied “Alright.”.

2

“He~y, nee-sama. We didn’t need to clean the storage room out today, did we?”

“…”

“Huh? Nee-sama? C’mon, nee-sama! Wait, am I being ignored here?!”

“…Ah, were you speaking to Rem?”

Shrugging his shoulders with a ‘Hey, hey’ at Rem’s response, was a black-haired boy, Subaru, wearing a butler uniform. He narrowed his sharp eyes in concern.

“When you ask if I was speaking to Rem, there isn’t anyone else in this mansion that’s a nee-sama, is there? Or wait, does Emilia-tan actually have a younger sister or something? If she does, that would explain her overflowing gentle aura…”

“No, Rem doesn’t think that’s the case. Rem’s apologies. She was daydreaming.”

“…Are you really alright?”

As he hugged his mop, and sent his thoughts far away to Emilia, Subaru asked that of her. The way he would, now and then, show what was going on behind his normal, shallow facade was unfair, Rem thought.

When he looked intently at her like that with that gallant gaze…

“You’re making Rem blush… You’re a shameless person after all, Subaru-kun.”

"Hmm, I don't recall ever having committed a sin like that. Well anyways, if you don't seem to be feeling well, just speak up. Even I could shoulder some of your burden, nee-sama…"

"Some of Rem's work, you say?"

"Even if shouldering some of your burden is too difficult and harsh for me, I'll take on at least a teeny bit of it."

Indicating the vast Roswaal estate with his hand, Subaru's statement was too small to be thought of as a grand boast. In response to Subaru's honest declaration, Rem suppressed a cheerful laugh.

As she did, Subaru let out an 'oh' as his expression softened.

"That smile is worth a million night skies."

"Disgusting."

"Woa~~~~~~h?!"

After he'd snapped his fingers and winked, Subaru jumped in shock at the quiet voice. As he continued his retreat until his back was against the wall of the room, Ram sniffed with a 'Ha!'.

Holding her cleaning equipment in one hand, Ram had returned to where Rem and Subaru were. She moved to stand beside Rem.

"Barusu, please refrain from directing your beastly lusts towards nee-sama. It would seem to be more appropriate for you to direct such vile emotions towards Emilia-sama. Know your place."

"That's a totally inappropriate thing to say too, isn't it?! Seriously, don't be lumping my pure emotions together with beastly or vile stuff or that kind of thing! And the thing I was saying to nee-sama, too, had the nuance of meaning that her smile was cute and stuff…"

"Disgusting."

"Listen to what I'm saying!"

Uninterested in listening to Subaru howl, Ram took Rem's arm and rested against her. While feeling the weight of Ram leaning on her, Rem turned her gaze towards the side of Ram's face, and inquired "What's the matter?".

"You're such a cuddlebug. Go on, you can tell your nee-sama anything."

"It's nothing that important… It's just, Ram has grown tired of working at cleaning windows when she can't see it making any difference."

"Oh my…!"

"It really is nothing important, isn't it?!"

Rem's eyes went round, and on the opposite side of the room, Subaru stamped his foot and yelled.

"Ya gotta do it right, even if ya don't wanna! Even boring work is necessary! That's what work is! It's our job! It's an 'It's my life' kinda thing! Get it?!"

"Subaru-kun, please don't get so angry. See, take a look here at Ram's hands."

"Ram's hands…?"

"These white fingertips have darkened this much."

"That's 'cause she's cleaning! When ya touch the window frame, that kinda thing happens! Don't pamper her!"

"cough cough"

"What's that coughing about?! Some chronic condition?! It's just chronic slacking!"

Cradled in Rem's chest, Ram rested against her and coughed weakly. Seeing the smooth sisterly coordination, Subaru took a very deep breath.

“Honestly… No matter how cute your little sister is, ya gotta be strict when it’s time to be strict, ya know?”

“You think you’re in a position to say something like that, when nee-sama pampers you so much, Barusu? What a world.”

“How can you say that when you’re being clasped to her chest as we speak?!”

Ram’s arms, currently hugging her sister, squeezed tighter. Patting the head of her pampered little sister, Rem’s expression softened every so slightly, and she looked at Subaru.

“Subaru-kun, Rem is very happy that you’re concerned about her, but she’s just fine.”

“Well, I’m sure you’d say something like that, nee-sama, but…”

“… Subaru-kun, Rem is just fine.”

“Uh? Ah, yeah. You don’t need to tell me twice…”

“Subaru-kun! Rem is! Just fine!”

“Yes! That’s correct! Rem-san is an upstanding, wonderful nee-sama, after all!”

Standing straight, with a saluting hand at his forehead, Subaru responded with a sharp voice.

Hearing that, Rem was able to let go of the vague unease in her chest. But there was still a faint speck of something she couldn’t entirely erase. The truth behind that was…

“…Nee-sama, it makes you upset when Barusu doesn’t call you by name, then?”

“Uhh…”

“Is that what it is? Why is that happening all of a sudden?”

Speaking while still held to Rem’s chest, Ram, who had always been good at figuring things out, revealed the truth of Rem's feelings. As Rem fell silent at what had been pointed out, Subaru raised his eyebrows in surprise, tilted his head, and crossed his legs.

"But I've always called nee-sama 'nee-sama', right? Why would she get hung up on that…?"

"Rem, too, thinks that something seems odd about it. It's just… ever since she woke up this morning… No, ever since she woke Ram up this morning, she's somehow felt out of sorts."

As Subaru's words expressed his bewilderment, Rem, too, had difficulty grasping the true nature of what felt wrong to her.

Even now, the strange, cloudy sensation would not cease swirling within her chest. There shouldn't be anything that was out of the ordinary. And yet there was; why?

Subaru calling her nee-sama, and Ram being a little sister who was good at being pampered, and Rem taking the initiative and working (which was only natural as a nee-sama) were all normal, so why?

"Subaru-kun, would you please try calling Ram 'nee-sama'?"

"Say what?!"

"Rem is sorry. She's all jumbled up inside, too. What a silly thing to say…"

She'd suggested that feeling that somehow it would make everything clear, but thinking about it calmly, what a foolish thing it was to request that.

And, as Rem was keenly regretting her silly idea…

"…Fine."

"Ram?"

Suddenly, Ram, who was still clasped to Rem's chest, raised her head, and gently moved back from her sister. Then, heading towards the back of the room, she turned back towards Rem and Subaru, and spread her arms.

With her pale red eyes alive with understanding, Ram smiled.

“I don’t understand your intention, but Ram will take nee-sama’s feelings into account… Go on then, call me ‘nee-sama’.”

“Why are you saying something like that when your eyes look like you’ve got it figured out?”

As Ram’s posture suggested she was ready for anything, Subaru scratched his cheek and looked amazed.

But, next to him, Rem clasped her hands softly in front of her chest, and took a little breath.

“…Nee-sama.”

“…”

Ram trembled in response to the sincere greeting directed at her.

And Rem, who had blurted that out, realized that her own heart had trembled… No, it was more than that. The cloud of unease that had suffused her chest had fallen apart.

Not only that, each time that Rem spoke those magic words, the effect grew stronger.

“Nee-sama… Nee-sama, nee-sama.”

“Hey, that’s…”

“Nee-sama! Nee-sama nee-sama nee-sama, nee-sama!”

With her eyes sparkling, Rem called to Ram again and again, and ran into her arms. Ram caught Rem’s body in a powerful hug, and smiled softly.

“Oho… so that’s what it was. Something you felt not with words, but with your soul.”

“That’s right, that’s just right… Rem is just, is just…”

“You don’t need to say anything, nee-sama…no, Rem.”

“…Yes.”

With Ram’s tone of voice saying that she understood everything, Rem needed do nothing more than quietly entrust her body and heart to her. With Rem like that, Ram gently patted her back.

With this beautiful sisterly love in front of his eyes, Subaru took a little breath and…

“What the heck is going on?!”,

he cried.

3

“And that’s the dream that Rem had this morning, it seems. It’s cute, isn’t it?”

“Nee-sama, nee-sama, nee-sama…”

“Well, I can kind of tell how things went, but…”

While saying that, Subaru frowned a little with a stern look. In the direction of his gaze was Ram, seated on a bed, and Rem, hugging Ram’s waist and doting on her.

When morning came to the Roswaal manor, Subaru was concerned about the sisters who hadn’t shown up for the usual meeting time, and when he visited their rooms, he encountered the scene of the two of them hugging.

What he was told of then was the story of Rem’s ‘nightmare’…

“So Rem was nee-sama, and nee-sama was the little sister, then…”

“Yes, it truly was a nightmare. But, even inside the dream, nee-sama saved Rem…”

With a smug look, Ram was gently caressing Rem’s head as she adored her.

One might want to poke fun at that, but the way Ram's hand caressed Rem's head was truly gentle, so to make fun of it would be thoughtless.

"But anyways, even with the sisters reversed, the content is pretty much unchanged, isn't it? Nee-sama became the little sister, and it just means she had even more justification to be spoiled by Rem, right…?"

"No, that isn't right! To begin with, Rem is always pampered by nee-sama every day… In the dream, that feeling was especially clear."

"You're saying you're being pampered every day, Rem…? Does this mean I'm having a nightmare?"

Doubting the reality of the world he was seeing, Subaru rubbed his eyes. Pinched his cheeks. The world didn't disappear, and his cheeks hurt. This was reality. Ram's smug face was annoying.

While still looking smug, Ram gazed intently and lovingly at Rem.

"There's no need for you to worry, Rem. No matter what happens, there will never be a world where Ram is not your nee-sama. Even when we emerged from our mother, Ram came out first for your sake."

"I'm impressed you can speak so confidently about things that happened not only before you were aware of the world, but even before your birth cries."

"It's natural, isn't it? Ram was Ram from the moment she was born, after all."

"Amazing. I can't deny that at all."

"And Rem was nee-sama's little sister from the moment she was born! Nee-sama!"

Rem clung to Ram even more strongly and tightly, and rubbed her head back and forth against her. Seeing Rem's earnestness, Subaru scratched his head, and then suddenly began to smile.

"What's this, Barusu? The end of your nose has reached all the way to the floor; disgusting."

"That'd make me a monster, wouldn't it…? Nah, I was just thinking that it's rare to see Rem acting seriously like a little sister and being pampered like that, and maybe a morning like this isn't so bad every now and then."

"…Indeed."

It was a rare thing for Ram to simply agree with Subaru's words. Taking that into account as well, Subaru felt that having a day like this now and then really wasn't bad.

"Perhaps for Rem, it's the morning when she saw a bad dream, but for Ram, it turned out to be a good morning."

"For Rem, too, it's a morning where she truly felt how much nee-sama means to her."

"Yes, yes, all this sisterly love has been a treat. Well then, I'm gonna get started on this morning's jobs. Take your time, and once Rem's had enough pampering, come join up with me."

Waving his hand, Subaru began to turn away and leave Ram and Rem behind.

"Subaru-kun."

As he did, Rem's voice landed on his back. Halting his stride, he turned only his head back towards her. His gaze fell on Rem, still resting her head on Ram's chest, smiling.

"Subaru-kun, too, please call Rem by her name more than usual today. Rem felt down to her bones, not only the importance of nee-sama, but also of having Subaru-kun call her name, after all!"

"Gotcha, I'll keep it in mind… Take it easy, Rem."

"Yes!"

As Rem replied with a smile that could only be called lively, Subaru left the room for real this time. And while he scratched his head, his expression softened.

For her to want him to call her by name as many times as he could, it was… yes, what a very cute request that was.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: ~An Oni's Role~

1

"To tell the truth, Nee-sama, there is a matter of some importance."

When her beloved little sister arrived and said that with a serious look, Ram narrowed her pale red eyes.

The time was evening, and the place was Ram's personal room in the Roswaal manor. She had already finished her work as a maid for the day, and had bathed as well, and was about to take on one last task before sleeping.

Ram entrusted the bulk of the mansion's maid work to Rem, but secretly, she was assisting Roswaal with his tasks as he carried out his role as a margrave. While her master usually seemed to be aloof and rarely looked busy, his responsibilities included a wide variety of tasks, and his workload was far beyond normal.

As well, due to there being more than a few jobs that certainly could not be called cheerful, Ram deliberately avoided letting Rem see what she was doing as she assisted Roswaal.

"Understood. Ram will just tidy her room a bit, if you'll wait for a moment?"

"Yes, Rem will wait."

Hence, as part of allowing Rem into her room, she needed to begin by stashing the offending documents in a clothing rack. Shoving the roll of documents into the rack with a pop, she closed the door tightly. Then, so that the door could not accidentally open again, she used her wand in place of a latch. Now, there would be no problem.

"Rem, sorry to keep you waiting. Please come in. Now, what's the matter?"

“Yes. …Well, it’s about Subaru-kun.”

“…Of course.”

After she invited Rem into the newly-tidied room, Rem (wearing a light blue nightgown) responded to her question. Understanding the content of the matter she wanted to discuss, Ram (who had more or less guessed at it) nodded with a difficult feeling.

Lately, half of Rem’s life had been entirely concerned with the black-haired boy in question. Where previously Rem’s thoughts had been entirely focused on Ram, it felt like the boy had run away with half of them. To Ram, who had felt worried over Rem until only a short time ago, this was both something that she felt she should welcome, as well as something she might also be a bit envious over.

In short, as someone who doted on her little sister, to be thought of by her less often wasn’t fun.

“But Ram wouldn’t want you to hate her for saying it, so she won’t say that.”

“Nee-sama?”

“It’s nothing. So then, what’s the matter with Barusu? If you’re too sweet to him, he’ll take advantage of your generosity and become arrogant, so I think you need to hang him out to dry now and then, too.”

“No, if anything, Rem would like Subaru-kun to depend on her even more, and hanging him out to dry would just be cruel, but… there is that.”

“There is that?”

Ram tilted her head as she didn’t quite follow the meaning of Rem’s words.

As she did so, Rem said “Yes” as she nodded deeply, and gently took Ram’s hand, sitting next to her on the bed. Then, with her pale blue eyes moist, she continued.

“Nee-sama, have you ever heard of a game called ‘pretend oni’?”, she asked. (translation note: the Japanese term here would usually be translated ‘tag’, but the more literal ‘pretend oni’ may make more sense in this story.)

2

According to what Rem said, it was this sort of thing.

After lunch today, Subaru and Rem had set out to do some shopping in the nearby Arlam village. There, as usual, Subaru had lost track of time while playing with the village children, and skipped out on his work. It seems that he’d promised to play with the children. And the name of what he’d promised to play was…

“So it was ‘pretend oni, then.”

“Yes. It seems there are variations such as ‘frozen oni’ or ‘high oni’, and ‘color oni’ as well, and Subaru-kun was inviting Rem to play along too, but…”

“You couldn’t imagine what sort of game it was. With the example of what happened at the Snow Festival, this must have been a custom of Barusu’s backwards hometown. Honestly, how bothersome.”

While comforting Rem (who was drooping dejectedly), Ram inwardly cursed Subaru’s thoughtlessness.

Since it was Subaru, most likely there was no ill will behind it, and he was simply lacking in consideration for others. It was a result brought about by his unfounded sense of trust that everyone was familiar with everything that he was.

How much worry that would cause for gentle Rem was surely something he did not imagine.

“How infuriating. …But wouldn’t it have been good enough to simply go ahead and ask him directly?”

“That is true, but… Subaru-kun looked like he was enjoying himself greatly, so Rem hesitated to spoil his mood… Also…”

“Also?”

“Rem didn’t want Subaru-kun to think she is an ignorant girl… is that strange, perhaps?”

“No no, it’s just very cute. Also, Barusu is loathsome.”

The way Rem held herself so bravely was so adorable, Ram almost gobbled her up without thinking. It was an impulse that had attacked her now and then since she was little, and this time, too, she just barely managed to endure it.

Setting that aside,

“Even so, ‘pretend oni’, is it… What a deeply meaningful name this must be.”

“From the way that Subaru-kun was talking about it, Rem would guess it’s a game that uses the body. Do you know what kind of game it could be, nee-sama?”

“Sadly, Ram does not know of this game, either. However, if it’s something that children and even Barusu can play at, then the content of it can’t be all that complex. Let’s see…”

Tapping a thin finger on her chin, Ram turned her imagination around the unseen game of ‘pretend oni’.

It was a terribly simple name, but it’s meaning could be derived from ‘pretend’ and ‘oni’. Regardless of what ‘oni’ implied, ‘pretend’ should mean some sort of behavior or imitation.

“In other words, one should think of it as a game where one acts like an oni, or in some way imitates an oni.”

“That, that’s definitely true. When presented with an unknown phrase, Rem entirely failed to try and imagine what it might mean. Very impressive, nee-sama.”

“Don’t fret about it. No matter what, there’s a way to break through it. Well then… from here, what becomes most important is what oni they’re trying to imitate.”

“Rem sees! Well done, nee-sama, such keen insight!”

With her eyes sparkling, Rem cheered as she began to see the breakthrough.

Since Ram was the sort of older sister that would feel empowered by Rem gazing at her like that, and she could be thought of as a symbol of love for younger sisters, to put it plainly, she started getting full of herself.

In truth, she felt like she had a good lead in inferring the meaning of ‘pretend oni’ from its name. Naturally, there would be nothing to the sort of game that Barusu could think up. There could be no doubt that it would be as simple and obvious as it could possibly be.

“And so, the oni in question… He went to the trouble of bringing up such a topic as ‘pretend oni’ deliberately while speaking to Rem, after all. Certainly, he did so with some sort of intention.”

“Some sort of intention, is it? Subaru-kun’s deep thoughts are surely something that Rem could never imagine… Can you grasp them, nee-sama?”

“Hmm, well, just as an example… to you, Rem, what is an oni, perhaps?”

“It’s you, nee-sama!”

Raising her hand in a flash, Rem answered with a smile that reached every corner of her face. In response to that answer, Ram felt a sense of warmth, along with a bit of amusement, as she softened her expression.

“Correct. But it should mean you as well, Rem.”

“Oh… that’s right. However, we were speaking about what it means to Rem, so without thinking…”

Observing her younger sister as she looked down with an air of embarrassment, Ram could see that there was nothing forced in her expression, and a short sigh escaped her.

…Being a member of the oni race, the problem of whether one had horns or not was inescapable.

Even while understanding that, Ram had dared to push forward into that, wrapped in an air of unconcern. However, Rem's reply to her had been natural, and Ram carried a sense of relief over that fact.

"To Rem, speaking of an oni couldn't mean anyone other than nee-sama. So naturally, the oni being imitated in 'pretend oni', too, could only be nee-sama…"

With her chest held proudly, and speaking of her feeling of respect towards Ram, Rem's face carried a look of surprise. Bringing a hand to her own mouth, she whispered "Could it be…"

"Nee-sama, could it be that 'pretend oni' is…"

"Yes, that's right. Everyone will have a different 'oni' that they picture in their mind. In short, an imitation of what that person thinks of as an 'oni'. That's the essence of 'pretend oni'.

"That means that, to Rem, 'pretend oni' is imitating nee-sama…!"

"…"

Rem was stunned by the conclusion she had arrived at, and beside her, Ram was similarly shocked.

With a straightforward name like 'pretend oni', how could it require such ingenuity to understand the implications. Someone who didn't have an 'oni' in their vicinity would even be required to use their imagination to make up the difference.

Setting Subaru aside for the moment, it was difficult to think that the village children would have an 'oni' nearby, and there was no reason to think they were aware of Ram and Rem's nature, so they would need to be filling that in with their imagination.

"For Rem to do something like imitating nee-sama… she couldn't dream of it. It seems this was too heavy a burden for Rem. She should return to Subaru and quietly apologize…"

“No, wait, Rem. Regardless of anything else, that would be getting ahead of ourselves.”

“But, still…”

Ram was very glad for the high regard that Rem held her in. But taking that too far was also the true form of a curse that had tied Rem down for a long time.

“…”

Thinking of it that way, Subaru’s intention in inviting Rem to join in ‘pretend oni’ became clear bit by bit. There was no ill will, so she had thought at first, but this was outrageous.

Even if there was no ill intent, there was a plan. …Those were the wiles of Natsuki Subaru.

“He’s endlessly clever. No doubt the bottom of his heart is pitch black.”

Ram thought of it as a dangerous thing to test, much like walking on thin ice, but in truth, for all that she could tell from looking at Rem, it was clear that her fears were needless. Aiming for that kind of change in her feelings was skillful; that was the sort of evaluation that didn’t match up with the way he normally spoke and acted. Such a mismatched boy he was.

Regardless, discarding Subaru for the moment, she focused on Rem, who was right in front of her eyes.

“Ram hates to say it, but the change in you came after what happened between you and Barusu, Rem. You were cute from the very beginning, but you’ve softened. You could say he broke you out of your shell.”

“Nee-sama… Your thoughts on Rem are too kind.”

“Hence, that sort of Rem could do it. …A ‘pretend oni’ of Ram.”

“…!”

On the receiving end of Ram’s powerful declaration, Rem’s eyes opened wide.

However, her hesitation and uncertainty lasted only a moment. Rem closed her eyes as though digesting those words, and then made up her mind and opened them again.

“Nee-sama… Rem, too, thinks that she would like to try it.”

“That, indeed, is worthy of Ram’s little sister. It will be fine, don’t worry. You’ve been watching Ram for a long time, haven’t you, Rem? With that, a sense of what Ram is should have worked its way into you.”

“Yes!”

With her heart soaring, Rem nodded deeply in response to that affirmation. Gazing happily at her little sister’s powerful form, Ram moistened her lips and continued “Well then,”.

“Assuming that’s enough about simple ‘pretend oni’… you were saying there were variations?”

“Ah, yes, that’s right. ‘Frozen oni’ and ‘high oni’. There was something called ‘color oni’ as well…”

“It’s just a guess, but in this case, ‘oni’ is probably just ‘pretend oni’ shortened down. In other words, one might think that ‘frozen oni’ refers to ‘pretend frozen oni’.

“‘Pretend frozen oni’…! Amazing! The puzzles, they’re all coming unravelled!”

“Continuing like this, it would become ‘pretend high oni’ and ‘pretend color oni’, then.”

While listening to Rem’s praise, Ram closed one eye as she unravelled the puzzles one after another. She was fairly sure that she was grasping the terms correctly, but now the problem became understanding the different variations of ‘pretend oni’…

“Rem, what would ‘frozen oni’ be?”

“Something to do with ice, perhaps? If so, something that makes a very chilly impression…”

“If so, hmm. In other words, it’s ‘pretend cold oni’, then.”

“You are always warm like the rays of the sun, nee-sama!”

When Rem protested after arriving at the answer in a single leap of logic, Ram drew her agitated sister to her chest and patted her head while she sent her thoughts searching for the remaining two answers.

“‘Pretend high oni’ and ‘pretend color oni’… If high isn’t referring to monetary value, then surely it means pride. As for color…”

“As for color?”

“Filthy.”

“…?”

An unpleasant image passed through her mind, but the way Rem tilted her head showed that she was too innocent to grasp what Ram had thought.

“No, never mind. Forget about ‘color oni’. Start with ‘pretend oni’. As well, mastering ‘cold oni’ and ‘high oni’ takes priority. …Rem, can you keep up with me?”

“Ne, nee-sama… Oh but nee-sama, Rem couldn’t take up any more of your time.”

“Silly.”

The moment the situation showed signs of improving, Rem was once again aware of her surroundings. Perhaps due to at last thinking it wouldn’t do to be dropping in on her older sister just as she was about to sleep, Rem’s shoulder’s drooped, and Ram couldn’t help but smile at her.

Her words a few moments earlier, that Rem had changed, were no lie. However, just the same as before, the cuteness of how she would depend on her older sister, and come to softly grasp her clothing by the sleeve, was not lost.

So, feeling that her little sister was adorable, Ram patted her on the head.

“Trouble Ram as often as you can. Ram is Rem’s nee-sama, after all.”

As she said that, she smiled.

3

And, after that night of sisterly closeness had passed, the next day…

“Wha, wha, what happened, Rem?!”

Subaru stood with an astonished expression plastered on his face, his jaw dangling, and his eyes opened wide.

In front of Subaru as he gave that exaggerated reaction were Ram and Rem, who had gathered for the morning’s servant work. Subaru’s surprise was a result of hearing Rem’s first words.

Those first words were…

“Why are you speaking so loudly first thing in the morning? Think about the trouble you are causing for others, Barusu-kun.”

“Barusu-kun?! The way that sounds is way too unfamiliar! What on earth happened to you?”

Subaru could only wring his hands in confusion. Standing in front of him as he did so was Rem, with her hair parted on the opposite of the usual side, looking cross with an icy expression on her face.

With the sisters working together, this was the product of Ram and Rem’s efforts over an entire evening. Truly, this was a form that represented the completion of Rem’s ideal ‘pretend oni’.

“Rem is a hard worker, after all. Rejoice, Barusu.”

“Yes, rejoice, Barusu-kun.”

“How’m I supposed to rejoice about this?! Wha… what could Rem have been working hard at to make things end up like this? This has gotta be some kind of prank by nee-sama, right? Two nee-samas would be a nightmare for me… hey, ow ow ow!”

As Subaru continued running his mouth, the sisters pulled his ears from the left and right at the same time. Normally he’d get away with only Ram doing that, but this time Rem joined in disciplining him without a moment’s delay.

“I, I don’t get what’s going on…! Rem, what kind of bad influence was nee-sama being?!”

“Ha! To call it an evil influence is an outrageous misunderstanding. Rem is always receiving nothing but fresh, rare love from nee-sama. This is a perfect ‘pretend oni’ that embodies that.”

“Nah, when you say it embodies it, where are you seeing love in this kind of behaviour… huh? Pretend oni?”

In the middle of his sentence, a look of having realized something appeared on Subaru’s face.

While the ear-pulling discipline continued, Subaru mulled over something in his mind. Seeing him look like that, Ram released his ear with a pop.

“Rem, the rest is up to you. Ram feels like she’s short on sleep, so make sure to work Barusu to the bone. You can do that now, right?”

“Oh yes, leave it to Rem. Nee-sama, be sure to rest well.”

As Rem saw her off with a curtsey, Ram gave a little wave with her hand and headed off. Subaru called “Hey, nee-sama!” to her back as she went.

“Let me guess, you put this weird ‘pretend oni’ stuff in Rem’s head, didn’t you?! Even though you know exactly what it means! Darn it, nee-sama! Wait, c’mon, he~y!”

Subaru’s yells echoed through the mansion, but Ram didn’t pause as she walked away.

As the shouts washed over her back, she simply smiled as though they felt comfortable, and stretched her back well.

“…Silly boy.”

It looked like she’d have a truly wonderful mood to take her through her morning nap, was the feeling she carried in her slender chest.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: ~Nocturnal Reverie Sisters~

1

“And it’s all set…now.” She smoothed out the wrinkles on the white bedsheets and nodded after checking the quality of her work.

It’s a task that I have become accustomed to doing, but it’s never a good thing to do things without focusing. No matter what the job is, getting used to it and becoming careless with it are two sides of the same coin. A bit of slackness can give birth to a minor mistake that eventually develops into a huge error.

If you think of it that way, you can be serious about the daily chores.

Besides… “—Rem doesn’t want her bad side to be seen by Subaru.”

She gently touched her cheeks, which felt slightly hot to the touch.

This heat on my cheeks is the sign of my feelings for the person I love, for the one who makes my heart flutter.

The black-haired boy that appears when I close my eyes, always keeps Rem warm. For example, even on days like today when Rem doesn’t happen to be around him.

“Rem wonders if Subaru is fine all alone… Even though Master Roswaal and Lady Emilia are with him, it hasn’t been long since he started working.”

Her hands still on her cheeks, a feeling of restlessness got mixed in with the heat her heart was sending.

The boy who was accompanying the lord of the manor and his important guest was full of determination, but nobody would ever have a hard time if their work ability was equal to their level of determination.

If the situation was the same as always, then either I or my sister could accompany him and help him out with his work. But—

“Well, weeell, it’s something caaalled experiencing things. Occasions like this might increase for Subaru in the future. He needs to become independent someday, so you neeeed to watch over him, alright?”

Her appeal was denied by the words of her master, and that’s how things happened.

The owner of the mansion’s—Roswaal’s—profound thoughts aren’t beyond the ability to comprehend. He must have thoroughly thought about the things I’m worried about a long time ago. In fact, accompanying him on that trip isn’t much of a difficult task, I think it’s an ideal task considering it’s meant to make Subaru independent. I guess…

“But even so, Subaru…”

“—Rem, can I take up some of your time for a bit?”

“Eeek!”

She widened her eyes at the voice that suddenly came from behind, and quickly turned around. She saw a perfect being standing at the entrance to the room. She was a beauty with pink hair and pink eyes, and her brows were slightly raised at Rem’s exaggerated reaction.

“…” With the assistance of her surprise from before, she got trapped in Ram’s beautiful eyes and was left temporarily speechless.

“Rem? Did something happen?”

“Oh, no, I’m sorry, Sister. Rem was surprised and…also enchanted by Sister.”

“I see, it can’t be helped then. Since Ram is Rem’s older sister. You can admire Ram as much as you like.”

Rem thought that her response didn’t make much sense, but the person responding to her—Ram—was kind.

She relaxed her lips into a gentle smile that was full of confidence, slightly puffing out her chest. And with the same kindness, said, “Since,” and then continued, “there’s no one in the mansion apart from Ram and Rem.”

2

Rem and Ram, who worked at Roswaal Manor, were sisters, but surprisingly, they didn’t have much time to spend alone together. To be more precise, they couldn’t get much time to spend alone together. Around 10 years had passed since they started working as maids at Roswaal Manor, but they were never able to get time off, no matter how good their work got due to getting used to it.

In the end, even if Ram and Rem were skilled maids, it was not easy to manage and maintain a large mansion with only a few servants.

Moreover—

“Since Ram is useless every day, when it comes to the work in the mansion,” Ram muttered while doing one tenth of the work Rem does.

If Subaru was here, he might have criticized Ram’s unapologetic attitude. But unfortunately, since he was away, no unnecessary comments were made. Ram felt grateful that she didn’t have to shut his meddlesome mouth because of that.

“This situation without Barusu is probably easier on Ram’s mental state.”

That noisy, loud, and restless boy was an oddity that had recently moved into Roswaal Manor—and he was Roswaal’s favorite for some reason, so she couldn’t be cold with him.

And while doing that, one more reason was added to the list of why she couldn’t be cold with him.

“Sister, is Subaru fine? Rem hopes that Subaru doesn’t make a grave mistake while accompanying Master Roswaal and Lady Emilia…”

"…"

"Rem made a guidebook about countermeasures of the problems that Rem could think of and gave it to Subaru, just in case. So, Subaru will definitely be fine, I think. But it doesn't mean that Subaru won't face problems that Rem can't think of. Maybe it's better for Rem to go after…"

"Rem, calm down," Ram said, looking up quickly and stopping her younger sister, who would've run right out of the mansion without a second thought, by grabbing her shoulder.

Rem opened her eyes wide at Ram's words and the sensation of her touch and looked down in shame. "M-My apologies. Sister, that was thoughtless of Rem."

"That's right. It's good that you were able to reconsider things on your own. Since it looked like you were about to run off."

"Yes, it was outrageous. Rem should make tomorrow's breakfast and lunch for Sister and leave without any regrets, is that right?"

"—It's unfortunate, but it seems like we need to talk a bit more."

Rem was getting pumped up with a cute face, but the direction of her enthusiasm wasn't what Ram had expected. The boy that Rem couldn't stop caring about like this—Natsuki Subaru—was the first person apart from her twin sister that Rem had been shy and reserved with and had strongly cared about. Ram, as a person who doted on her younger sister, couldn't bring herself to be cold against someone who Rem held such feelings for. And thus, Ram felt like she was being too soft on Subaru because of that.

Although, a suspicious newbie is someone worthy of being bullied to death, is what Ram thinks, Ram thought.

"But anyway, Barusu is becoming somewhat useful. That's why Master Roswaal took him along on this trip… It's not that Ram doesn't have anything to say about that, but it can't be helped."

"Sister has something to say about it too… Are you worried about Subaru?"

“Ram is worried that Barusu will get carried away when they get there and embarrass Master Roswaal. Also, Barusu disturbing Lady Emilia. Apart from that is frustration at Ram’s duty being taken away.”

Originally, it was often Ram who was assigned to accompany Roswaal on his outings. Consequently, Rem would stay behind in the mansion, separating the sisters. That’s how things usually were.

But this time, that role got stolen by Subaru. It was something that made Ram, who was extremely loyal to Roswaal, really angry.

But it isn’t like there isn’t anything good about it, Ram thought. “Since Ram and Rem can spend some quality time together like this.”

“Ah, Sister…”

Ram’s fingers gently parted Rem’s bangs and touched her forehead. The ticklish feeling made Rem lower her eyebrows, her cheeks turning slightly red as she lowered her face.

There was a bed behind Rem that she had made just a moment ago.

Ram and Rem had their own private rooms, but this was the guestroom that wasn’t usually used. The guest bed was huge, large enough for them to sleep together side-by-side. So, they were preparing to spend a rather luxurious night together.

“Ram would feel lonely if it got ruined with Rem worrying about Barusu.”

“You, are right. Since Lady Emilia and Subaru told us to enjoy our time together while it’s just the two of us …”

“Yes, it is one of the few favorable things that Barusu’s existence has created.”

“Okay… Rem will also hold back her tears and become an Oni…!”

Rem squeezed her hand into a fist in front of her chest and made up her mind. And at the sight of such a lovable younger sister, Ram held back from pointing out that they were Oni's to begin with.

Anyway, what's important is that—

"We should enjoy our time together while it's just the two of us like Barusu said, even though it's frustrating to admit."

3

And so, Ram and Rem were spending the night together with just the two of them. In fact, wishing to be all alone with Ram in the mansion wasn't something she could just wish for since Roswaal Manor typically only had two servants. Rem was really grateful for Subaru's existence in that regard, too.

"Actually, it isn't just the two of us since Miss Beatrice is also here," Rem said.

"…Oh, now that you mention it. I forgot about her since he rarely shows up."

"Ha-Ha, it's not nice to say it like that, Sister."

Rem smiled gently, looking at Ram's side profile in her nightwear as they laid side-by-side in the huge bed, since Ram was trying to make her laugh by saying things she didn't mean. Beatrice, who shut herself in the forbidden library of the mansion, didn't usually come out. But she was seen often outside the forbidden library nowadays, probably due to Subaru's influence.

"A long time ago, when Rem had just started working at the mansion, Rem thought that the existence of Miss Beatrice was a lie or a joke."

"That's because she doesn't show herself. Ram doesn't blame Rem for thinking that way."

"Since when did Sister start seeing Miss Beatrice?"

"—I don't know, but I do wonder. Ram thinks it was around the same time as Rem," Ram replied, tilting her head, and looking back at Rem.

Rem couldn't determine if Ram was being honest or just being considerate towards her. But Rem felt like she was being supported and helped by her beautiful and wise older sister.

And it has been like that since my birth to every moment of my life. Until just a little while ago, I often felt guilty about it, but—

"Rem?"

"No, it's nothing, Sister. It's just that Subaru is wonderful…"

"Ram doesn't know how the conversation about Miss Beatrice came to this. Barusu… Oh, is it because Barusu is friendly with Miss Beatrice? Well, that's quite the spectacle."

The reason why she was feeling less guilty towards Ram was due to Subaru. His words had opened up a new world for Rem. And she was extremely grateful for that. Leaving that aside, she could agree with Ram about Subaru's relationship with Beatrice.

As mentioned above, Beatrice had been confined to the Forbidden Library, so much so that her existence had been shrouded in doubt. It was only fairly recently that she started showing herself to Rem and the others.

"But now she always comes to dine."

"Ram thinks that the main reason was the great spirit that Lady Emilia has with her…"

"But the one that the great spirit cares about the most is Lady Emilia."

Puck, who had a contract with Emilia, and Beatrice had known each other for a long time. The two were as close as a brother and a sister, but Puck's priorities were clear, and it seemed like Beatrice had no intention of complaining about it.

It would be far too arrogant to interfere with it as an outsider, but…

"But Barusu doesn't seem to care."

It was as Ram had mentioned: Subaru had closed the distance between him and her without any regard or consent.

—No, it wasn't only the case with Beatrice. Rem was also one of the people whose boundaries had been breached. Ram, Roswaal, and even Emilia, were also definitely included in the list.

"A lot of things keep changing," Rem said.

"Yes, that's right. Ram doesn't think that it's a bad thing… The cause of that being Barusu is the only thing Ram doesn't like…"

"Sister…"

"But then, it's not like he doesn't have any achievements, so that and Ram's frustration cancel each other out in Ram's mind."

"Sister…!" Rem, her eyes lighting up after hearing her sister's benevolent judgment, grabbed Ram's hand.

The two sisters were laying on the bed side-by-side, facing each other. They were so close that they could feel each other's breaths as they held hands, gazing at the face in front of them they had seen every day for oh so long.

"…" She narrowed her pink eyes and gazed at Rem kindly and compassionately. Ram had been looking at Rem like this ever since they were born. So much so that Rem couldn't picture any of Ram's other expressions. Rem knew that this was how Ram expressed her love and how she herself received love.

But… "Rem also wants to love Sister back."

If the way she saw the world had changed, then the way she loved her loved one could change too.

I'd like to be able to give back what was given to me rather than just getting used to the luxury of being on the receiving end, so that I can become someone I can like, Rem thought while tightly holding her sister's hand.

It was because of that vivid moment that I can think about things like this, and I can hope for tomorrow.

“—Subaru is wonderful.”

4

“…” After Rem fell fast asleep while breathing softly, Ram reached out to her sleeping face. She gently brushed her bangs away from her forehead, and the faintly ticklish expression on Rem’s face made her feel even more love for her.

That made her feel like she had even more reason to complain about what she had said before she’d fallen asleep. “You aren’t even here…”

Unspoken anger started boiling up at the man who was still occupying Rem’s heart.

She told Rem that her frustration got canceled by his achievement. But the achievement was only a one-time thing, and the frustration was something that accumulated day-by-day, so even Ram didn’t know how long this offset would last.

Anyway… “If even Ram thinks about Barusu, it’d just be doing what he wants. Disgusting.”

If Subaru was here, he would have claimed that it was a false accusation, but the only people present here were the two sisters, who were close to each other. And on top of that, the only one awake was the elder sister. Ram banished the noisy boy from her mind and lowered her eyebrows at her sister’s peaceful sleeping face.

In the past, Rem used to have restless expressions even when she was asleep. Ram, who visited her sister’s bed from time to time, was pained by her sister blaming herself. She was now at ease, however, for the tenseness in her cheeks had melted away along with the cause of her frowning.

“Tomorrow…”

When she woke up, Rem would be next to her. Or Rem, who would wake up next to Ram, would end up seeing her sleeping face instead. The thought of it made her feel all fuzzy inside, which was no exaggeration.

She thought that it was such a shame to close her eyes, but she did anyway and got ready to fall asleep.

She wished to enjoy every minute and every second of today and looked forward to every moment of tomorrow. She wondered if Rem thought the same thing, and then she suddenly realized something. “Come to think of it, Ram didn’t serve dinner to Miss Beatrice.”

Beatrice almost always showed up in the dining room lately, but today, Ram was all alone with Rem, so they didn’t sit around the table with everyone like always.

Ram should get up and prepare dinner, but…

“That would wake Rem up. Ram thinks that Miss Beatrice will forgive her.”

Ram thought that if something happened, she could just send Beatrice’s complaints Subaru’s way. Thinking that before falling asleep, she cursed the fact that she ended up thinking about him again, then dreamed about tomorrow with her dearest sister as she slowly drifted off to sleep.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: ~Before and After Pleiades~

1

—At a time before Natsuki Subaru arrived at Roswaal Manor.

“Sister, Rem regrets to say that another letter from Garf has arrived,” Rem said caustically as she placed the letter on top of the desk.

The white stationery had both the name of the addressee and the sender, the former being Ram, the latter being the name of a young man they knew. Both names were written with an unsteady hand and barely legible.

Although the young man would never be considered a prolific writer, he frequently sent letters such as this. The content was written in an arrogant manner that showed little consideration for the reader. And to make matters worse, his letters never became any more legible with the passage of time.

As a result of which, however, their deciphering abilities had simply improved.

“What a fool,” she muttered, releasing an involuntary sigh—something that seemed to become a habit when it came to him.

However, Rem seemed to take issue with the utterance. “It seems that Garf is bothering you again, Sister. Rem is sorry for not being attentive enough. Rem should have just thrown it away before showing it to you.”

“Garf really is pitiful. But, just in case, Ram will give it a quick look.”

“…Understood. But Rem thinks you are too gracious for your own good, Sister."

Ram gave a faint smile at her beloved younger sister's biting remark.

Rem and the author of this letter—Garfiel Tinzel—had a terrible relationship. The two sisters, Rem and Ram, had met Garfiel a year or two after they were taken in to work at Roswaal Manor, which meant they had known one another for nearly ten years. However, Rem's attitude towards Garfiel had only become more hostile as time went on, while Garfiel seemed equally displeased with Rem. The reason behind their discord was obvious.

"…Ram really is despicable," Ram muttered to herself.

"You're not despicable, Sister! Garf is the only one at fault here."

Much like a dog with its bone, Rem stubbornly refused to give up her opinion once she had it—which was utterly irrational, yet adorable—as Ram begrudgingly acknowledged with a sigh.

Normally, Rem was considered an outstanding maid who worked hard at everything and never embarrassed herself, no matter what she was asked to do. However, from her older sister's perspective, that appraisal might not be quite so glowing.

Namely, Rem's biggest weakness was her sister, Ram. When problems involving Ram arose, Rem immediately lost her composure. Even at times when Ram wasn't directly involved, around their long-time acquaintances like senior servants Frederica and Clind—with the notable exception of their Master, Roswaal—Rem would practically puff out her cheeks in childish anger.

For Ram, it was especially precious to view her expressions around Garfiel. Only then was the reality truly inescapable that she was indeed a child of the Oni, even though it most likely only emerged from a childish desire to keep her sister all to herself.

"Ram supposes that's Rem's love language, in a way."

Characteristics such as this, which she exposed only in front of her closest friends, could be considered a real sign of trust.

Ideally speaking, gaining Rem's trust was something to which her older sister, Ram, would like to devote herself wholeheartedly, but the reality was that it wasn't that easy. Unfortunate, but Ram was smart enough to understand that it was probably for the best.

"Sister?"

"…It's nothing. But just to clarify, if you want to blame everything on Garf and his tenacity, does that mean you doubt your sister's ability to charm and captivate him?"

"N-Not in the least! Of course, it's all thanks to how amazing you are that Garf keeps sending letters to you without getting discouraged."

"If that's true, then Ram really is despicable, isn't she?"

"Yes, you're very delightful, Sister… Huh?" Having been caught in a mean leading question, Rem tilted her head and blinked owlishly. When Ram smiled unconsciously at her sister's expression, Rem jutted out her bottom lip in a sulk. This face was also a rare expression that she only showed when she was acting childishly towards Ram.

"Sister, please don't tease Rem like that. Rem is not that smart, so she might easily become confused."

"Confused Rem is very cute too, so please stop putting yourself down like that. If you say you're not smart, then everyone else who's more foolish than you will simply lose the will to live."

"R-Rem thinks that's going a bit too far…" As she let out a sigh, Rem's countenance took on a hint of uncertainty. "Rem doesn't believe that everyone is as smart as you or Master Roswaal, but it would be troublesome if everyone were like Garf. It would be a complete nightmare."

"Everyone being like Garf… Yes, that's certainly a nightmare. It would be so noisy that no one would be able to sleep, even in the middle of a nightmare."

Briefly lost in the absurd prospect that Rem had conjured up, Ram raised her well-shaped eyebrows.

In response to Ram's reaction, Rem smiled and said, "Yes, That's right. Rather than a world full of Garfs, it would be much more wonderful to have a whole group of Rams instead. In fact, Rem actually thinks that's how it should be. Then, wherever Rem looked, Sister would be…"

"Rem, Rem. Calm down."

"Ah! S-Sorry, Sister… Rem had a wonderful dream just now."

"There's no need to apologize. It's actually Ram who should apologize for waking you up from your dream, but…" Pausing as she spoke, Ram placed a hand on her chest. Then, with a warmly bemused expression, she smiled at Rem's patiently waiting face. "Even if there are many Rams out there, there's only one unique Ram right here in front of you, Rem," Ram assured her.

"S-Sister…" Rem murmured meekly.

"You get to have the only Ram in the whole world all to yourself. What do you think? Is that still not enough for you?" Ram asked, brimming with confidence.

"Of course not! You're worth 10,000 other sisters!" Rem cried indignantly.

Of course, all sisters have their own special bond, but all Rem and Ram had was each other, and their bond was strong. So Ram decided it was worth indulging Rem in a bit of hyperbole. But either way, Ram's heart was satisfied and tickled by her sister's affection.

"To evoke such a pleasant feeling before Ram has even read the letter…perhaps she owes Garf a thank you."

"Even Garf's letters have their uses," Rem said with a smile, but it seemed as though she might go on to say that the only other use for Garfiel's letters would be as kindling. That really would be too cruel, however, so Ram finally opened the envelope and unfolded the letter inside. Unsurprisingly, just as the name and address on the envelope had been, the handwriting inside was equally sloppy.

“It would be nice if Ryuzu could somehow teach him to write neatly.”

“Or rather, maybe Garf should write a letter to Frederica instead of you, Sister… He always ignores her, and Rem feels sorry for her.”

“…?”

As she blithely allowed her sister’s intractable attitude to wash over her, Ram began to see the situation differently. Rem had been referring to the complicated sibling relationship between Garfiel and Frederica. Garfiel resented his older sister for leaving the village they had grown up in to become Roswaal’s maid. As a result, no matter how many letters Frederica sent to their village, Garfiel never responded.

So it seemed only natural that Rem did not think highly of him. For Rem, who loved and respected her older sister Ram, it was an act of someone violating the bonds of filial piety.

“Both Garf and Frederica most likely have their own side of the story, I suppose.”

But as far as the reason for their fraught relationship, Ram suspected that it concerned the fact that they had never talked deeply about the issue of their homeland, the Sanctuary—why Frederica had left it, and why Garfiel continued to fixate on it. Still…

“Even for the most determined busy-body, it’s never right to intrude upon other people’s relationships,” Ram remarked.

Even Ram had not disclosed all of her feelings in her heart to others, not even to Rem. In fact, there were many things she couldn’t say exactly because it was Rem.

Just as long as there is a separation between one human being and another, there are inevitable boundaries that can’t be crossed.

"That's why Rem doesn't approve of Garf, who has been so unfilial towards his own sister. He has no right to show his face before Rem's honorable sister."

"How harsh. Ram feels quite loved."

"Of course. Besides, this isn't something Rem understands."

"What isn't?"

Lowering her voice, Rem dropped her gaze ever so slightly as she let her feelings show. Seeing this expression in her, Ram softened her pale red eyes.

Rem offered her a lonely smile in return and said, "The way Sister cares for Master Roswaal. The way Garf cares for Sister. The preciousness of experiencing that emotion, of caring for another person. That is what Rem does not understand."

"…"

"The way you look when pining after Master Roswaal, Sister, to Rem, you seem to be almost shining. And yet Rem can offer no such praise for Garf as he pines for Sister. Thus, Rem does not understand."

Rem's words, so full of resignation and self-awareness, brought a painful tightness to Ram's chest. If the thing Rem didn't understand was the emotion of "longing," then she didn't understand something that, at times, could make one wise, and at times, into a simpering fool.

The letter she held from Garfiel described the fact that daily life in the Sanctuary rarely changed, as well as the current circumstances that he was curious about. The handwriting was a mess, but the letter was surprisingly readable, and if Rem were to read it, her impression of him might have changed.

This letter was written for Ram, so she doesn't think she can show it to Rem.

Each word was painstakingly spelled out line by line, and filled with affection, so she thought it would be incredibly inconsiderate to allow such a letter to be read by someone it wasn't addressed to.

And so, Ram couldn't provide the magic answer to Rem's concerns just yet. As the older sister, she thought that she couldn't recall a time she'd felt this powerless. But surely…

"The day will come when you, too, will understand."

"…Since Sister is the only one Rem cares for, she wonders about that," Rem answered without a hint of a smile, tilting her head to express her dubiousness towards Ram's sentiments. "You will be writing him a response, right, Sister? Rem will only get in the way of that, so Rem will excuse herself."

"It won't disturb Ram to have you here."

"No, Rem can't look at the letter. Rem also knows that much. Whether or not Garf is qualified to receive your kindness is another matter, Sister."

With that, and a single curtsey, Rem gracefully took her leave from Ram's room. For a moment, Ram almost called out to her retreating form, but, unable to find the right words, she simply let her go.

Despite a moment of regret over causing Rem to feel so alone, her eyes returned to the letter once again. "Fool."

No one could be sure whether that abuse was directed towards herself for being such a poor older sister, or to the letter's sender, who had spelled out their feelings.

2

—Subsequently, on an occasion after Natsuki Subaru arrived at Roswaal Manor.

"Sister, another letter from Garf has arrived," Rem said in a merciless tone, placing a letter atop the desk.

With both the name of the sender and addressee written in such a messy hand on a white envelope, it was clearly the usual letter from Garfiel. If anything at all was different, it was only Rem's attitude as she brought it over.

"Your attitude seems different, Rem."

"Oh…is that so?"

"You didn't realize? Normally, you'd have added something inventive to his name, like stubborn-Garf, or ungraceful-Garf, or ill-mannered-Garf, or that brat-Garf."

"Now that you mention it…"

As if Rem had genuinely been unaware, she placed a hand over her mouth in surprise when Ram pointed it out. But after a moment of reflection, she seemed to be able to apply some logic to her own behavior, and therefore dismissed it.

Letting her hand drop from her mouth, she addressed Ram. "Sister. Would it be okay if Rem shared a somewhat embarrassing story…?"

"Something embarrassing? From you, Rem?"

"Yes, if that's not okay—"

"Ram doesn't mind it at all. In fact, please tell her about this embarrassing thing."

"O-Okay. It's a little bit awkward, but…"

After hearing such an opening, Ram was naturally immensely curious and eagerly leaned forward to listen, which caused Rem to blush slightly.

Notwithstanding the fact she was her own little sister, it was incredibly cute, and Ram admired her appearance like a doting parent. But at the same time, a tinge of unease flashed across her chest.

This was because Rem's current expression had become all too frequent at Roswaal Manor lately. The one responsible for that was —

“Could this be about Barusu?”

“…Wow! Amazing, Sister! Rem is surprised that you figured it out before she could say anything.”

“…It was a fairly simple deduction.”

It was also rare for a correct deduction of hers to make her unhappy, but, nevertheless, Ram couldn’t hold back a sigh. Moments like this, of Rem praising her elder sister’s perception with such wide, innocent eyes, were more and more becoming the prerogative of someone else to appreciate.

The one Rem had become infatuated with was the new apprentice servant who had recently joined the mansion, Natsuki Subaru. He had been making every effort to solve various incidents around the mansion, and Rem had come to view him as someone special to her.

The problem was already quite dire.

“Sister, you told me this before, that someday Rem would also understand such feelings…and it’s just as you predicted!”

“…And exactly how is that related to the way you handled Garf’s letters?”

“Well, Rem’s chest feels a warm sensation when she thinks of Subaru…and Rem realized this is most likely what Garf feels towards you, Sister. Rem began to sympathize with him, and then she decided that at least it wouldn’t be so bad to allow him to send Sister letters,” Rem explained.

Rem clenched her fists to express her resolve, and she was clearly hopeful about the future, but it was unlikely that Garfiel would be so charitable toward her. Free from his concern of the letter being callously disposed of on its way to Ram, his new concern would surely be enduring the pity his attempts seemed to have evoked.

In any case…

“Rem has also learned from Garf’s example, and is wondering whether she should send a letter to Subaru… Subaru is still learning how to read and write though, would it trouble him?”

“There’s no way Ram would let Barusu be so foolish as to act bothered by a letter filled with your feelings… But if you’re going to do it…”

“Yes…?”

“Then Ram wants a letter from you, too. If you’re writing one anyway, kindly send one to Ram too.”

“Understood! Rem will write you a letter filled with her feelings, Sister!” Rem’s face lit up as she gladly accepted Ram’s request.

As she got to enjoy her sister’s loving response, Ram quietly gave the black-haired young man a mental slap across the face. Of course, it was merely a fantasy born of jealous anger. She would like him to feel grateful that she didn’t feel inclined to act on her impulses.

“Being unable to act on one’s irrepressible feelings… Rem wonders if Garf might also have felt this way. Rem has been cruel to him. Next time Rem sees Garf, she’ll apologize.”

“Ram imagines he’ll be quite disturbed to receive such a sudden apology from you. How amusing.”

To someone like Garfiel, Rem’s apology would certainly be a big event. Ram absolutely had to be there to see it with her own eyes.

Even so…

“It was Ram herself who had hoped that Rem would have this kind of change of heart.”

As long as she was offering a prayer for her own sake, she might as well do so in a way that her wishes regarding those she loved would come true as well.

With a faint pang of bittersweet feelings, Ram smiled at her innocent younger sister, who was hesitating on whether she should take the initiative to write on her own or seek advice on conveying her feelings.

“Fool,” she muttered.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village: ~One Thousand Origami Cranes of Prayer~

1

—One day at the Roswaal estate, there was a moment of conversation between sisters.

"—Nee-sama, do you know what a folded crane is?"

"A folded crane?"

Hearing the unfamiliar vocabulary, Ram's hands stopped their scrubbing of silverware, and she narrowed her fine eyebrows.

This was the mansion's kitchen, where there was nobody else but Ram and her younger sister Rem, who were cleaning up after lunch.

The twin sisters, Rem and Ram were often described as looking exactly alike. However, were you to hear from Ram, she and Rem are nothing alike. They are both exceedingly dazzling, but just like there are different ways in which precious gems may gleam, these sisters each had their own charm.

Presently, Ram does not believe herself to be adorable, but believes Rem to be extremely adorable.

Being relied on and sought out for knowledge by that adorable Rem is also one of Ram's greatest desires. But, at the same time, being unable to live up to expectations when the time comes, is the double-sided sword that befalls her.

What's more—

"—Barusu."

With her brow furrowed, Ram reproachfully muttered such.

What she muttered was a person's name—their nickname to be precise, but one without any affection to it so it was a simple alias.

Regardless, it was meant for the one working in this mansion, Natsuki Subaru. And, this young man who became a servant and is still wet behind the ears, is the object of Ram's cute Rem's infatuation.

"…Then, are you unaware after all, Nee-sama?"

Like so, he was also a man that continuously forced Ram to be confronted by Rem's disappointment.

—Ever since Natsuki Subaru's appearance, this was not the first event of this type, nor will it be the last.

This time around, it appears he told Rem about a "Folded crane" or some such word that Ram had never heard about, however he continues to incessantly reveal this knowledge, bring up this culture, that even Ram and her sister—No, it was not known to even the master of this mansion, Roswaal himself.

From Ram's point of view they're all complete nonsense that don't deserve even a shred of attention, but Rem who lends enormous trust to Subaru, Emilia who is unbeaten in her childlike curiosity, and Roswaal who loves that unusual inventiveness and way of thinking of his to no end, are receptive to and continue to enable Subaru.

Only one, only Beatrice, shares Ram's opinion towards the rampaging Subaru—

"Since Beatrice-sama can't be relied on, it's no different from Ram being solo."

Such was this whisper, that would make the person in question go red in the face and stamp her feet if she heard it, Ram's opinion on Beatrice who interacted with Subaru.

Whatever the case—

"As humiliating as it is, I am not aware of this word. Where in the Barusu did you hear it?"

"Rem heard this word from her Subaru-kun but… I am told that if you gather a lot of those Folded cranes, it seems it could grant a wish “

“—Grant a wish?”

Hearing that complete hooey, Ram furrows her brow once more as Rem nods with a “Yes”. Those very straightforward Rem’s light blue eyes, this adorable sister of Ram’s would not tell a lie.

“In short, it means the one lying here is Barusu. Filling Rem’s head with boring nonsense, he really messed around too far. He will need punishment.”

“P-Please wait, Nee-sama! Subaru-kun is definitely not a liar! His gallant eyes and burly chest are simply filled with hopes and dreams!”

Saying that, Rem stopped Ram who was holding the silverware she picked up in reverse grip in her tracks.

Ram did not think she could push her way through Rem with force after all, but that said she also did not think she could believe such a suspicious story as a wish granting Folded Cranes

Inevitably, that righteous indignation over whether or not he’s lying after all wells up again.

“Please listen to the context, Nee-sama. Subaru-kun brought up the story of the Folded Cranes, for the sake of an Arlam Village girl.”

However, the fire of Ram’s righteous indignation was just barely extinguished, and instead she closed one eye in questioning. Seeing her older sister’s behavior, Rem intelligently and cutely sussed that she’s pressing her to continue her story.

“In the village Subaru-kun has these kids he’s close with, and it appears one of them has a soon to be born brother or sister. And for their birth to go through safely, what Subaru told the children about was the…”

“—Folded Cranes.”

"That's right."

As Ram takes care of the conclusion, Rem draws her head down in assent. With that she finally understood the commonality between Subaru's nonsense and what Rem was saying.

To put it all together, these wish granting "Folded Cranes" are a sort of charm that Subaru brought up to try and bring them peace of mind. From what Rem said about gathering up a lot of them, they must be about the size of a flower or rock, and while she could picture having to prepare a fairly sizable amount of them.

"Did Barusu ask you to gather those "Folded Cranes"?"

"…No, nee-sama. Quite the opposite."

"Opposite?"

"Subaru-kun told me, that he wants to gather the cranes together with the children, that he has no intention of troubling Rem with it."

Lowering her shoulders disparagingly, Rem sadly lowered her head.

That remark from Subaru that made Rem depressed, it was likely brought on from Subaru's care and concern for her, or so Ram conjectured. After all, it was a charm to dispel the children's worries, different from a proper magic or shamanic ritual.

So long as you prepare it superficially it would be enough with that, it would be foolish to busy the hands of the already busy as it is Rem, or so would the foolish Subaru have naturally thought.

"However, everything that made Rem look sad is Barusu's fault."

Even if it was a remark born out of care and concern, if Rem was made sad, then to Ram that makes him guilty. Therefore, she will not hear Subaru out on anything.

"What do you want to do, Rem?"

When asked that gently by Ram, Rem's eyes waver, and look at

Ram. Rem's lips tremble with hesitation towards those light pink eyes of her sister.

Then, Ram's hand slowly draws towards her little sister's cheek.

“Silly. Ram is your Nee-sama, Rem. You can tell me anything that comes to your mind.”

That sentence from Ram, served as a gentle push to Rem's back, after she had put a lid on her own desires.

2

“This is a Folded Crane…!”

Rem's voice quivered, and her eyes lit up at the “Crane” that was placed atop the table.

Rem seemed moved by it, seeing her reaction, Ram was relieved that her sister's expecations were able to be answered. That said, once she tried to see through the reality of the “Folded Crane” there was some disappointment.

“Cannot believe it, did not think it would just be a type of paper game.”

Before Ram's eyes as she says that, is a “Crane” made of folded white paper. According to the creator himself, this is something that seems to have been modeled after a bird from his hometown called a “crane”, and since it's a “crane” made of folded paper, it's called a “Folded Crane” or so he said. It seems he can shape it into things other than birds such as other animals and flowers, which is generally called “Origami”.

While she felt like that was a pretty simplistic name, it could be said this was the one strange cultural import from Subaru that managed to impress Ram the most so far.

“Nee-sama, thank you so much! Thanks to you, I could observe this “Folded Crane” with my very eyes.”

“I see. Satisfied?”

"Yes!"

Facing the results Ram brought home, Rem nodded as she smiled like a flower. Though, she quickly followed it up with an expression that pushed down that smile saying "However"

"Nee-sama, how did you make the 'Folded Crane'? Subaru-kun said that until he had completed them, he would keep it a secret from Rem…"

"Simple. —Barusu could never go against Ram could he?"

"N-Nee-sama…?"

"Joking. It was just a simple warning that he should show it to me if it wasn't anything that would make him guilty."

Rem who asked through a frontal attack, seemed unable to collapse Subaru's castle walls due to her virtues being taken advantage of. That's why, Ram did not take a frontal attack.

In the first place, Subaru was a hundred years too early to try and argue his way out of, or escape from Ram's pressuring.

"But, it's not like I don't fully understand why Barusu wouldn't want to show these to Rem yet. It might have just been a lie he came up with on the spot, but you seem to need a thousand of these 'Folded Cranes'."

"A- a thousand of them?! That many 'Folded Cranes'…?!"

Hearing that absurdity, the wide-eyed Rem stared fixatedly at the "Folded Crane".

Rem's surprise was only natural. Even Ram believed it to be a joke the first time she heard it, so much so she pulled on the sides of Subaru's face as she told him to stop saying things to mess with her.

However, once he showed her the "Folded Cranes" the village kids were actually in the process of making, Ram couldn't help but believe him that they really were aiming for a thousand.

"In that case, Rem just must help him out…"

"Because he thought you would come to that, must be the reason that Barusu did not want to show you."

"Ah…"

Rem's wide eyes blinked, and her shoulders dropped hearing that sentence from Ram.

"It's so frustrating. Just how can Rem be useful to Subaru…?"

"Rem."

"Nee-sama, sorry. Rem is the younger sister of such a wonderful Nee-sama, and yet Rem…"

"Listen, Rem. Then— make your choice."

Gently, she put her hands on her slim shoulders, and Ram looked at Rem's face as she let out an "Eh". And while Ram was reflected straight into Rem's light blue eyes,

"Why do you think that "Folded Crane" is here?"

"That's… because Nee-sama asked Subaru-kun to show it to…No, that's strange."

When she said that, Rem felt something strange about her own statement.

"Subaru-kun is trying to avoid Rem helping him… and yet, if he had given a real "Folded Crane" to her like this, Rem would also end up helping him."

"Indeed, that's right. Unlike Barusu, you're smart, Rem."

"But, in that case…In that case! Nee-sama, it couldn't be that this 'Folded crane'…"

"That's right. —When Barusu showed it to Ram, Ram was able to replicate it with her own hands."

Hearing Ram's reply, Rem was immediately drawn back to look towards the "Folded Crane" on the table.

These crisp folds on the "Folded Crane", are surely from a much more proper craftsmanship than the "Folded Crane" that Subaru let her peep as reference. The material needed is paper, and as long as one knows that the completed form must look like a "Crane" then it is quite simple to re-assemble that in one's head.

And therefore, the true form of this "Folded Crane" was one that was folded again by Ram's own efforts.

"Rem, make your choice."

At the surprised Rem, Ram once again tossed those words at her.

"…You said the same thing a moment ago, Nee-sama. What is it you want me to choose?"

"Will you do as Barusu says, and simply observe the situation sitting by obediently without touching a 'Folded Crane', or will you ignore what Barusu said and help in the making of these 'Folded Cranes'?"

"—Hic."

Ram narrowed her light red eyes at Rem whose response was a gasp.

It was likely that the "Folded Cranes" were a ritual of prayer. Each individual one had a prayer carefully, gently folded into it, giving shape to this prayer, and expressing the extent of this prayer by numbering to a thousand of them.

It wasn't just about getting fixated on the number of a thousand.

However—

"Even after a calm and careful explanation, they are still children whose hands will be held back by their clumsiness and lack of focus. Subaru, with a personality which can't stay away from wickedness, will help them out with it…in the most inefficient possible manner, to the point it's dubious whether or not they will make it in time for the birth of the baby."

"Nee-sama…"

"That these thousand cranes could possibly grant a wish, is something Ram just doesn't believe. But even then, I don't believe these "Folded Cranes" with wishes put in them are meaningless. If they are completed, that is."

Results appearing in the middle of a prayer ritual, such a letdown wouldn't happen.

Hearing Ram's words Rem, after a moment of silence, tightly grasped the hem of her Maid dress and lifted her face up.

"Nee-sama, I have a request."

"…"

Being looked at straight on by the eyes of such a serious Rem, Ram let out a sigh.

And then—

"How foolish. —Ram is Rem's Nee-sama. I already know what you want from me."

3

"Aaalright! Now then, for the sake of Meina's mom we'll speed through one thousand of these cranes! Yesterday we ended up a bit off track. But we'll give it our all from here on!"

""Yeah!""

Saying that while encouraging the children who are vigorously raising their fists up, Subaru was actually quite panicked.

It was quite a good idea to get the children together to make a thousand cranes, but he was quite pleased with the excited reactions of the kids due to the novelty of origami itself, so much so he ended up getting off track a bit too much.

But the due date—or anything like that is not quite clear as of yet, but he wanted to complete the thousand cranes while retaining quite a bit of leeway from the soon to happen birth of Meina's siblings. Or so he intended with the schedule he planned, but he's already quite late for the deadline.

"But I really don't wanna get in the way of Emilia-tan's or Rem's work…"

Emilia has her many preparations and studies regarding the incoming Royal Selection, and Rem has her very diverse numerous daily maid duties. For a moment he was struck by the temptation to involve Ram or Beatrice, but the severe difficulty and toil of that negotiation made it hard to see any returns coming from it.

Ram aside, as he saw it, Beatrice was all thumbs.

"Subaru, all ready here."

"Oh, my bad my bad. Thanks, Petra. Alright, over here we…"

Petra, who finished the preparations for doing the origami on the floor of Subaru's room, calls out towards where Subaru is as he rearranges his schedule in his head. Pushing away that feeling of tragedy at the energetic attitude from the children, Subaru goes to take the origami set for cranes, and as he opens the closet—

"—Woaaaah?!"

—In the next instant, he's swallowed and washed away by an enormous quantity of folded cranes that come bursting out of the closet.

"Subaru?!"

Seeing Subaru who had been flipped over, the surprised Petra rushed to his side. Petra began to dig out Subaru who had been buried, and once he was pulled out of there, he finally grasped the situation.

"Wh-Wh-Wh-Wha-…"

“There’s so many!” “Tons of Folded Cranes!” “Subaru’s Grave!”

Listening to voices of those rowdy boys, Subaru was bewildered at the incredible quantity of folded cranes. But, soon enough did the suspect who had a hand in this come to his mind.

Then, as Subaru threw the window open, he looked down on the mansion’s courtyard.

“Hey, Rem! I told you not to—”

“—Thank you big sis!”

That voice of protest was drowned out by the voice of a girl who used her whole small body to muster it. Shoving her body past Subaru’s and raising her voice was Meina.

Having been herself the reason for the thousand cranes, and the one most desperately chasing after them, hers was a voice of gratitude—

“That’s awesome, there’s so many folded cranes” “Maids are awesomee.” “Awesomer than Subaru!”

In that moment, the children pushed Subaru aside and, all together, gave their thanks and sang praises towards the outside of the window.

Seeing that made his eyes go wide, and subsequently Subaru stood up scratching his head.

Let alone a thousand, these cranes looked to be approaching ten thousand, just how much time did they spend on this he wondered

““Big sisters, thank youuu!””

Hearing the gratitude from the innocent children, the oni sisters who had sneakily helped in that prayer ritual—the two of them who had brightly raised their faces looking up from the courtyard and at each other, then, as if to hide the proof of their staying up late, they covered their mouth with their hands and gave a small yawn in unison.

The Oni Sisters of the Hidden Village:
~The Maid's Nocturne~

1

—That, was an event from before Natsuki Subaru and Emilia had come to the Roswaal estate.

“Aah, Rem. perfect timing meeting you here.”

Having finished her inspection of the dragon carriage, Rem who was returning to the mansion from the stables, hears that call from an awfully familiar voice, and blinks her light blue eyes.

Standing in the mansion's front garden, waving their hand, the figure standing there as if welcoming her in was—

“Frederica, what brings you to this mansion?”

A tall, beautiful Maid with long, golden hair—Frederica, meeting face to face here with her was something Rem was not expecting and so she tilted her head at her, puzzled.

Currently, Frederica is tasked with working in the main Mathers family estate, and the separate residence—This mansion that is currently being prepared for when it's needed, is supposed to be the responsibility of Rem and her beloved and respected older sister.

Hearing Rem's question, Frederica smiles while covering her mouth with a hand as she says,

“No need to act so surprised, I merely had a matter I needed to consult with the master so I carried myself over here. I am quite relieved we did not end up missing each other.”

“Is that so? I suppose all is well then.”

“Yes, indeed. Though I am not sure if this was a particularly untimely moment for Ram since she gave me quite a few choice words. Geez, that girl always seems to lack any respect."

"Her unbendability no matter who the other party may be is Nee-sama's charm."

Frederica grumbled with a sigh, however Rem answered with her chest puffed out.

Yes, yes that is right. No matter what anyone may say, she never sways her core strong self and that is something for which Ram has her own Ram-like reasons—a way of being which is endlessly mesmerizing.

Regardless—

"If you had business with Roswaal-sama, then why would you be here? You should have made it to the mansion earlier than me…"

"You see…you are precisely right. Simply put, I had no wish to rush this work topic to our master who had just returned you see? It was not exactly a pressing matter either, we can make time for it after dinner perhaps."

"If it is not a pressing matter, why go out of your way for today when we had a scheduled inspection?"

"Eh?! That is, well, you see……"

"…Quite strange."

Rem narrows her eyes in suspicion as Frederica becomes perplexed.

This is almost as if having a matter she needs to address with Roswaal was merely an excuse, so she believes she must have a different reason for coming to this separate estate—or so she was thinking to that point, when she noticed.

The real reason why Frederica had come to this separate estate, and was waiting for Rem.

"Ehem. Rem, what may be the matter? Why are you staring so fixatedly at me…perhaps you finally feel like addressing me as Frederica nee-sam-…"

"No, Rem's Nee-sama is her one and only Nee-sama. I will not be calling you Nee-sama. I have told you so for many years now."

"You have indeed told me so for many years now, so I thought maybe you would have conceded at least a-…"

"—Frederica, you came here to ask about the Sanctuary, didn't you?"

"Guhck."

At Rem's sharp observation, Frederica was very transparently shaken.

Sanctuary —That is, a village hidden within the Mathers territory, and what was this time, the destination that Rem traveled to inspect together with Roswaal. While it is Frederica's hometown, it is also a Sanctuary for many demi-humans with reasons for being there, and living there were also the grandmother who raised Frederica, and also her younger brother by blood.

For several reasons, Frederica had decided she won't return to Sanctuary yet. Knowing that of her, anybody would be able to imagine what she would want to ask of Rem who had just returned from Sanctuary.

"No news from the village itself. Lewes-sama welcomed us without any significant issues arising. We received some confectionaries as well."

"I. See. I am sure that is just what Grandmother would do. In that case, that would just leave…"

"Yes. —No news from Garf, his attitude towards Roswaal remains dreadful, it was unbearable to look at."

"Oh my- Awawawa…"

Hearing Rem's report, Frederica completely lost her composure even forgetting to hide her fangs.

Having inherited the blood of a Leopard person, Frederica is very mindful of her sharp, pointed teeth, and hides her fangs with her hand whenever she laughs or gets angry so that they don't stand out. For her to be forgetting to do that, must mean this —Garfiel's unmanageable rowdiness, was too much to bear

"Geez, when it comes to Garf…"

On top of Frederica's reaction, Rem also breathed a sigh in lament at the figure of the golden-haired boy who popped up in the recesses of her brain.

Garfiel has had a relationship with Rem and her sister Ram from the beginning when Roswaal confiscated them, he would be someone who could qualify as a childhood friend for them. However, he'd been a mischievous little fiend from then, and has not grown since. And that had not changed even on this inspection.

"He is under Roswaal's patronage and yet all he does is snap at him… he was also incessantly voicing his displeasure for Nee-sama's absence. Unbelievable."

"Uurgh, the more I hear the worse it gets…"

"Yes, and I am still not done. He is utterly immature still and yet he is trying to vie for Nee-sama's affection, he really should know his place. This time, it was the correct choice for Rem to come with Roswaal-sama in Nee-sama's place."

It goes without saying, but Ram being an existence completely without parallel, it was rather natural for Garfiel to be blinded by such brightness, and hold feelings for her that will never bear any fruit. Though, If you were to ask if he should be allowed to act upon those feelings, then it was the younger sister Rem who felt she would not allow that.

In the first place, the object of Ram's affections is clear, and Rem respects that way of being of her's that won't bend to any one. —She wishes for all of Ram's desires to come true.

“That is why this time, I made sure to give Garf a good raking over the coals. This should have made him a little better behaved.”

“Is- is that so. Also if I may, how exactly did you rake him?”

“Yes, well I let him have it, with a flail.”

“With a flail, you say…?!”

With a thump, Rem’s favorite flail drops on the ground of the front garden. Seeing that, Frederica takes a gulp of air, as she trembles nervously, though she needn’t be so worried.

Garfiel is actually quite sturdy, so long as he’s not struck by the spiked parts, he should be sound.

“But well, this time he got hit by the spikes and some degree of blood was shed…”

“I-Is he all right?!”

“Rem’s healing magic was at hand, and Garf himself had his blessing as well. After some time, Garf was back to his hissy fits. At any rate…”

Rem swipes away the figure of the loudly complaining Garfiel that comes closer into her head and changes topic. The issue lies not just with Garfiel’s rowdiness, there are other points of equivalent importance.

“It appears Roswaal has some ideas for the future of Sanctuary as well. At that time, Garf will most definitely change his attitude, so you have no need to worry, Frederica.”

“…Do you truly, believe that Garf will change his attitude?”

“If he will not, then Rem will have to begin to escalate her use of her flail.”

Rem herself did not want to have to start seriously pummeling Garfiel with it. Garfiel who’s one merit was how sturdy he was, crushing that singular thing he considers his strong point would make her feel sorry for him

While she hates his attitude with how he tries to woo Ram, she doesn’t think bad of how he never gives up on Ram. —Rem’s attitude towards this childhood friend of her’s was quite the complicated thing after all.

“Thank you so much for always talking to me with such frankness, Rem.”

“I am not ever going to tell you any lies when it comes to Garf, Frederica. I also understand how anxious you are as a sister about Garf’s intolerable actions.”

“—. Indeed. He really is such a handful.”

“Yes. Garf is quite the trouble.”

While they were exchanging wry smiles over such, Rem tilts her head internally with an “Oh my.”. In spite of her grumbling, Frederica seemed to give an unreserved laugh with her mouth covered by a hand, as if the evil that had been possessing her had fallen out.

She had some questions about that, but for now Rem believes that the fact she’s laughing is a good thing.

She will not be calling her Nee-sama to her face, but to Rem, Frederica is no less a childhood friend with whom she’s shared some irreplaceable times.

2

“—Frederica, will you quit making Ram’s, my little sister act as some sort of spy for you.”

After dinner, aiming for the opportunity when Rem is busy cleaning up the kitchen, Ram called Frederica over to the garden where no one will interrupt them and demanded that of her.

Hearing Ram’s words, Frederica’s expression turns to an awkward look and she falls quiet. The fact that she cannot attempt any boring excuses, or try to argue it away like nothing happened is due to Frederica's innate goodness.

While that in itself was something she was fond of, it did nothing to blunt Ram's tongue.

"…Spy or some such, would you please not phrase it that way. Even I know it to be quite an improper manner."

"Both for Garf and for Sanctuary you should be going to check them yourself if you are so interested. Not returning to your hometown is not part of your agreement with Roswaal-sama. Things that you have decided for yourself… breaking those or making exceptions, is something you can let your own heart decide."

"Which is exactly why, if you do not draw a line and hold yourself to it, you would lose your limits now would you not?"

Dejectedly lowering her shoulders, Frederica responded with a rather infantile attitude

However, it couldn't be helped that for this point specifically, Frederica displayed a childishness that mismatched her real age. —After all, when Frederica had separated from her brother, she had not even reached 10 years of age. After which, they both have been awfully distant as siblings for a long time.

In short—

"Unlike Ram and Rem who have not been apart for even a moment, Frederica is ultimately a beginner at having a younger brother. You have not gained any experience as an older sister; therefore you remain unable to let go of your brother."

"When it comes to letting go of a sibling, you sure are one to speak!"

"Hah! Ram? Let go of her sibling? Have not felt the need to. Not now, not ever."

Internally, she did have some thoughts about Rem's dependance on her, but she keeps that quiet for now. Whatever the case, what is important now is Frederica's feelings.

"Ram's idea is as stated previously. Instead of having Rem sneaking around probing for you, you should boldly arrive at Sanctuary with your head held high."

"I already said, if I do that then my restraint…"

"Just set up some restraint to it then. Whether it be your birthday or Garf's birthday, or Lewes-sama's birthday, anything is fine. Decide on a date, and make that your exception."

"~~hk, you really, make it seem so simple."

"It is simple—Matters of your own heart, are something you can address with your own heart."

The things that Frederica wants no matter what, the things that she is stuck thinking she cannot overcome, all of those can be addressed depending on her own heart.

Ram's wants, the obstacle to them could be said to be a completely different height to someone else's heart.

"If you cannot decide then that's also fine. But, at the very least do explain your expectations to Rem. That way, Rem will also be able to spy with delight."

"The way you phrased that, about my feelings, you mean perchance that Rem is…?"

"Yes, adorably she has been completely unaware. From the beginning, Rem has been looking at Garf with quite the warped lenses so it just couldn't be helped. It's due to Ram, due to these charms of mine."

For many years, Ram has continued to turn a cold shoulder to Garfiel's passionate feelings, and Rem who had continuously seen that close hand, holds an intense enmity for Garfiel.

Due to that, Rem's evaluation of Garfiel is prone to being done through clouded lens

"Which is why, she believes that Frederica wanting to hear about Garf is, rather than your sisterly heart, due to your feelings of guilt from Garf's poor behavior."

"Aah, so it was that after all…"

"On the opposite hand, though it might not be as much as towards Ram, Frederica, she puts that much strength into her flail as she tries to beat Garf's character back into shape, due to how much she respects you."

Somehow, the impression given was that of a continuous chain of one-sided counterproductive feelings.

Luckily, thanks to Garfiel's toughness and, though many things have been said about him, his old-fashioned chivalrous heart that will not let him hit Rem back, this relationship had managed to come together.

Rem may not have noticed, but having been locked in the Sanctuary, Garfiel who had been recklessly trying to get stronger, had long since become stronger than Rem, and maybe, even Ram.

Only on that point, does even Ram have many things to be vexed about.

"…"

Towards Ram who thinks that way, Frederica can only remain silenced as she sports a frown.

This silence, similar to when Ram had initially questioned her about her attitude towards Rem, it was Frederica's virtue that would not allow her to lie or make excuses, and aside from that she felt the presence of something that would not allow her to do that.

If she could not speak of it either way, she would rather she try to fully hide it at least but—

"You and Garf both, are such a handful."

"…Somehow, it does not feel right to hear you say that to me."

"That so? For better or worse, you overthink this far too much, Frederica. You're such a—"

"—? What is it?"

Cutting off her words, Ram narrowed her pink eyes towards Frederica's puzzled-looking face.

Towards her, Ram held back on voicing that sentiment that arose from within. —This was what she had thought. That she was such a handful of an older sister.

Calling her Nee-sama, something that was apparently a tradition between junior servants towards senior servants, this being something which she had continued to ignore, meant she could most definitely not voice that sentiment.

"Nee-sama, thank you for waiting. So you were together with Frederica."

Saying so, there arrived Rem, who had finished cleaning up after dinner.

With that, the conversation so far has reached its end, is what Ram signals to Frederica with her eyes.

"Yes, I was bored waiting for Rem, so I was killing some time with Frederica."

"I am not particularly pleased about being called a time killing tool I will have you know?"

"You are something like that. More importantly, we haven't had any time to relax and talk, so I want to hear about Rem's inspection this time. —That's right, it's the perfect opportunity, so why not do it over a bath?"

Saying that, Ram looks at both Rem and Frederica's faces. Receiving that, Rem put her hands together in front of her chest and gladly said “Yes.”.

“Let’s do just that. It’s been quite a while since we had Frederica together with us.”

“When you put it like that, certainly….Though I cannot help feeling that I am being tricked in some way.”

“Don’t sweat the small stuff. Rem, make sure to give a good washing to Frederica’s back. I’ll grant you that honor especially this time.”

“Mmmmh, these girls are so difficult to give up on…”

“Fufu, if you would be fine with Rem, then please allow me to wash your back. Let’s go.”

Frederica, happy to be taken care of by her junior, and Rem, capitalizing on that part of her, while following after those two who went ahead, Ram let out a small sigh and looked up at the sky.

Under the white round moon, all of them were gathered in the Roswaal estate. All of them, Sanctuary, Lewes and Garfiel as well, part of Roswaal’s plans.

And, what is the foundation of those desires and plans, is being deemed acceptable due to Ram’s endless love.

“It’s not like that will make everything about this moment a trifle or falsehood, will it?”

Because to these nocturnal maids, pondering in the night, that could be said to be the inviolable value of time without pretension.

Another World / Reincarnation SS Paper

“Hey, Subaru, Subaru. We’re reaaally cutting it close! It seems like it’s time for us to start working.”

“What happened, Emilia-tan? You’re in such a rush. Your cute face’ll… ah, it really is cute.”

“Gosh, this isn’t the time to be talking like that. Look, this is our chance to introduce Re:Zero, so we need to do our darndest!”

“I don’t hear the word ‘darndest’ being used in this day and age… But alright! It’s a chance to have fun with Emilia-tan, so I’ll hop aboard! Time to introduce Re:Zero!”

“Umm, the official title for Re:Zero is ‘Re:Zero – Starting Life in Another World,’ and the main point of this introduction, the plot of this story, is… It’s a story where Subaru dies a lot in a world he isn’t familiar with.”

“That’s really vague, and is it just me, or does that make it sound like I’m just dying a lot without doing anything?!”

“It’s in the looping events genre, and Another World x Return by Death are the foundations of the plot; it’s the story of an ordinary boy that scrambles around to help the girl he likes. Hey, Subaru, who is this girl you like…”

“Aaah-aaah! That part’s kind of about a boy’s pure heart, okay?! Anyway, it’s a story about an ignorant, incompetent, reckless protagonist whose initial status is disappointing, and his only weapons are his ability to rewind time by dying and his unwillingness to give up! Isn’t this script terrible?!”

“The world gets rewound with his death, and the bonds and memories that had been formed there get lost and only remain within Subaru, who starts over from square one all by himself. That’s reaaally a cruel and sad thing.”

“But even so, I’ll do it over and over again. Even if no one remembers how kind they were to me and how we laughed together, it’ll always be in my heart.”

“A looping events fantasy in another world, ‘Re:Zero—Starting Life in Another World’. It’s a story of a very weak boy’s continuous perseverance.”

“—Even if you had forgotten me, I won’t forget you.”

“The fifth volume and the first collection of short stories have already been published! They are on sale with great reviews! Please support us at your local bookstore, too!”

“You’re super enthusiastic about your work all the way up until you complete it. You’re seriously an angel, Emilia-tan! E.M.T!”

Emilia’s Blog Practice Diary

Hello everyone, nice to meet you! I am from St. Lugunica… Eh? I can’t say the school’s name?

Wah, sorry! So, I’m a junior student in this country’s high school, and am also a magazine model. I’m Emilia.

I was persuaded by my friends to start using this so called “blog” thing, so I started practicing using this as a diary. As for whether or not I can write something interesting, I’m not really sure, but I will do my best to try and make it more interesting. Pleased to meet you all.

What should I start writing about… Ah, this is my classmate friend Rem, who is teaching me while I write. Since I’m technologically impaired, I don’t know how to use cell phones at all, and Rem has been the one always teaching me. I am proud to have such a reliable, good friend like Rem.

“Emilia, please get to the point. All the readers are getting bored.”

…I got reprimanded.

Ooookay. I wake up everyday at 5:30. Although I don’t leave home until 7:30, because my hair is very long, it’s very difficult to manage it. Also, while it’s a bit embarrassing to say this, it’s very hard for me to leave from my blanket.

“I got my silver hair from my mother’s genes. The way I braid my hair also changes often. I envy Rem a bit because she has short hair.”

That’s right. My mother also has silver hair. I look quite like her, so I’m quite proud of it.

Combing my hair after I wake up is very troublesome. Bathing also takes a lot of effort. But because I've kept my hair long, I'm very reluctant to cut it. On Saturdays, because I have model work to do in the afternoon after class, I don't change my hairstyle.

"Emilia, do you wear pajamas when you sleep?"

Yep, I do. My favorite pajama is the pink one, with a cat pattern on it. I have a cat at home too, and the pattern is just like Puck. It's very cute!

After I get up in the morning, I comb my hair in front of the dresser and change to my school uniform. St. Lugunica… cough cough Our school's uniform is a sailor outfit! The summer uniform is cool and comfortable, but has a bit less of a floaty feeling to it compared to the winter uniform. As for school uniforms, I probably like the winter one more.

"Rather, I think Emilia likes winter more than summer. Although Rem also can endure the cold a bit… Emilia is extraordinary at it."

That's because, in the summer, even if I want to hug Puck, he'll run away. During the winter, even if we get in the quilt together, Puck won't mind.

"Putting Emilia's love for cats aside, after changing clothes, you go to school for class, right?"

Yes. Ah, hold on. Before going to school, I will go to the bakery. On Saturdays, I will go to the renovated bakery I discovered recently to buy lunch, and then go to school.

I recommend the clubhouse sandwich! The salesclerk secretly told me that they imitated it after the food reported in a special TV program.

"Emilia, if you advertise that on the blog, customers might flock to it."

Ah, I might not be able to buy it then. Is it better to keep it a secret? But if the bakery can become more popular, I would very happy… Yeah, write it in.

“I thought it was pretty good. Next is arriving at the school, and then…” Right, afternoon work. Finally, doing something fitting of a model!

After school, the lunch I buy is the same as the morning’s sandwich.

Although it’s nice to eat freshly baked bread on my days off, enduring it until your stomach is deflated before eating will make it very tasty. Ah, after you finish eating, you have to properly brush your teeth.

I was asked to pay attention to my diet, but I am weak to sweets. If I’m not careful, I’ll be swayed, so I have to pay extra attention!

After lunch, I have to go to the model office to work in the afternoon. Am I going to be late?

“Ah, you’re here Emilia.”

OOh, my Senior, Crusch was the first to arrive at the firm. She’s tall, slim, and has perfect facial features. She’s very cool!

Even though she has such beautiful long and green hair, she’s dashing. If I’m stared at by her, I would fall into a trance without realizing it.

“What’s that? A blog? Even though you’re technologically impaired? That’s strange.”

I was made fun of. By the way, even though Crusch is my senior in modeling, she is also my school’s mentor sister. She’s quite known for her academics and sports.

When Crusch is praised, I also secretly feel proud. For me… erm, I’m not that good at studying or exercising.

(TL Note: the school’s mentor sister is a system where a junior is paired with a senior to have an easier time at school. Basically teach the ropes.)

“If you have any questions about your homework, come ask me. In exchange…”

Crusch gave me some kind words while I was being dejected. And after that, she made a troubled expression, which I quickly understood.

I got it. It’s material collecting again. I’ll help!

“Sorry. It’s only when it comes to this that my desires are too overwhelming.”

Surprisingly, Crusch is very fond of games! But she’s not very good at them. This point makes her cute. Actually, even though I’m technologically impaired, when it comes to games, I can do alright. In the first place, we became close after hunting with Crusch during our break time.

“Hah… It’s finally over. Ah, it’s Emilia. Ya~ho!”

I was just chatting with Crusch when Priscilla came in. Priscilla and I are the same age, and we started modelling around the same time too. She’s my good friend! Twos peas in a pod!

“Priscilla, you and your inattentive and weary look. If you’re like that, you’ll ruin the dreams of the children who look up to you.”

Along with Priscilla came the stylist, Felix-sensei. Felix is very cute, and wears an outstanding dress… but Felix is actually a man! Anyway, you can talk to him about anything. He’s a very reliable big brother… Hm, rather, he’s more like a big sister.

“Listen to this, Emilia. About tomorrow’s clothes, Felix was really mean. He wouldn’t let me wear cute clothes…”

“That’s because Priscilla’s chest is a bit big. Just let tomorrow’s theme of cuteness be taken care of by Emilia. Priscilla’s will handle sexy. How about it?”

Even Felix-sensei is winking at me… Ahaha… guess I’ll answer it this way.

Although Priscilla is the same age as me, but… that, her chest is very big! Really big! After patting my chest, I look at Priscilla, and become depressed.

"Ah! No good. I was asked to go home early today. Then, I will take my leave. Emilia, see you tomorrow!"

Before I fell into sadness, Priscilla rushed out like a storm. Even though the conversation was not over yet, she packed her bag and quickly left.

"Priscilla sure is spirited. Felix-kyun is also shocked by her youthful vitality."

"It's too early for you to say such things, Felix. Now then, I also have some business to take care of… Felix, don't tease Emilia."

"Nyai won't. Really, Crusch is too ruthless."

Because they've known each other for a long time, Crusch and Felix-sensei's relationship is very tight.

After Crusch left, only Felix-sensei and I were there. Today's job is to discuss tomorrow's photography session, and trying out clothes…

"Well, go change. Nyahehe, I won't hurt you… ♪"

Although I trust him, I feel a bit uneasy after hearing him laugh while speaking.

The whole day tomorrow will be spent on modelling, so it'll be very busy starting from the morning. The entire morning will be in the studio, and most of the afternoon will be at an aquarium. Because Priscilla is also going, I won't feel particularly uneasy.

"Although it's a bit bold, we can't go feeling worried now."

Our manager, Ms. Anastasia, smiled as she recited tomorrow's schedule.

Ms. Anastasia is an outstanding manager, her responsibility in the office is to take care of the girls who are full of potential. I can understand if it's Crusch and Priscilla, but to let her be responsible for me is simply a godsend.

"Reality is reality. Our job is to make dreams become reality. You'll be treated as a dressing doll today. Tomorrow will be the same, so you better be prepared, ok?"

Or so I was pressured.

After the discussion, Ms. Anastasia took a slight detour and drove me back home. Ms. Anastasia, who has a cute appearance, drives a very wild sports car, which shocked me. But that car really fits her. I wonder when I can become a mature adult like Ms. Anastasia… I thought to myself.

Driven home by Ms. Anastasia, I arrived before sunset.

Because daylight has been getting longer lately, I can see the sunset sometimes, which makes me feel happy. The orange sky. Don't you think it looks extremely sweet and delicious? Ah, anyone who sees it will be mesmerized!

"Big sis is saying something weird again."

I was startled in front of the front door. I came across my little sister, Beatrice, who just returned home after playing outside! Also, it seems my talking to myself was heard.

How embarrassing.

"Don't worry. The parts that would disappoint others won't show in the photographs. You can rest assured."

Ugh… how un-cute! Lately my little sister who matured early would tease me like so. Since she said that, then I won't go easy on her, and I won't shower with her.

"That's underhanded. Big sis, that's cheating!"

Once she had an expression of looking like she was about to cry, I could only relent. I made up with her, returned home together, and had a fashion show with Beatrice until dinner. After changing my cute little sister's clothes, I kind of understood Felix-sensei's feelings. No, I really understood it.

Tonight’s dinner is Japanese-style. Although there’s a saying that one should chew slowly, and eat 30 different types of food, leaving that all to mother makes me feel a bit uncomfortable. I would occasionally help out, and each time I wear the apron to clean up the table, Beatrice would also stand up to help.

After that is bathing with Beatrice, changing to my pajamas, and work on homework at my desk. My condition for working as a model is to not fall behind on learning. I have to work harder studying!

When I finished half of it, I lost to my exhaustion and snuggled into bed. No. It’s because I have to wake up early tomorrow, not because I lost.

Ah, Puck came into the room. That’s rare. Even though he’s afraid of the heat during the summer, he’s willing to sleep with me today? Good boy, let’s sleep together.

Just like this, my day has finished. I will continue working hard on writing my diary tomorrow… but this’ll be it for today. Yep, good night.

Re: Starting Life in an Endless Summer from Zero

1

Seeing the superb vista spread out before him, Natsuki Subaru shouted that without thinking.

Right in front of his eyes, welcoming him with a flourish, was a vast quantity of clear blue water. Before this beautiful view that nature had brought forth, what a very small thing a person was, is what he couldn’t help but think as he was swept into a poetic state of mind.

“Say, Subaru.”

The one calling to Subaru as he waxed poetic was a silver-haired girl viewing the same scenery he was. With her beautiful amethyst eyes open wide, she tilted her head and asked:

“What’s ‘summer’?”

“Also, I don’t really get what ‘sea’ refers to, either…”

“Ah, well you see, that’s…”

The silver-haired girl’s inquiry was followed by an additional question from another girl. On hearing that, Subaru turned around with an excessively extravagant gesture, prepared to give a grand response, and came to a sudden stop.

The cause couldn’t be simpler, or easier to understand.

When Subaru turned around, what he entered his view was two girls whose attire was way too different from what they normally wore.

Shoulders and waists, backs and stomachs; white, bare skin that was normally hidden underneath lovely outfits was now shown without reservation… To put it in less shameful terms, they were wearing what could be called swimsuits.

Two beautiful girls—Emilia and Rem—had been standing behind Subaru wearing swimsuits.

“I’m so~ glad I was born on Earth!”

Taking a victory pose, Subaru thanked his good fortune. Strictly speaking, this was another world and not Earth, but that sort of thing was unimportant.

Regardless, while Subaru felt a firm resolve in his heart to burn this scene into his memory…

“You shouldn’t look at my daughter like that.”

“Don’t stare lewdly at Ram’s little sister. That’s filthy.”

“Burning summer?!”

There was a soft impact of a paw on his face, and as he tilted backwards, he was struck by a sudden wind and pushed away. Unable to support himself, Subaru’s body was blown backwards.

“Ah, Subaru!”

“Subaru?!”

Seen off at the end by the two girls’ voices, Subaru’s form was smashed into the surface of the water with a great splash.

2

The Roswaal manor project, “Getting-out-of-the-heat Tour of the Lakes in the Territory”, has begun!

That, indeed, was the tour name that directly expressed the content of this swimsuit event. Further, exactly as you’d grasp from the plan’s name, this tour was something made real by Subaru’s planning and suggestions.

Recently, there had been ongoing record high temperatures in Lugunica.

At this rate, there was a danger of a drop in morale in regards to the Royal Selection, and the unity of the camp could begin to crumble—would be an exaggeration, but as a result of letting off steam like that, the getting-out-of-the-heat tour at local lakes became a reality.

Not only was it a private beach, it was even a private lake, and it truly was a significant vacation.

“It really never hurts to try asking…”

Squatting at the water’s edge, Subaru looked back over what had happened.

Perhaps one should say that it was no surprise that mansion’s master Roswaal, who loved festivals, readily accepted Subaru’s appeal, and brought it to pass in an entirely unexpected form.

It was not summer, but fire season, and since there was no sea, they used a lake, but nevertheless, this was a perfectly good “Summertime Swim in the Sea”.

“And what matters most is that the part about girls in swimsuits playing on the beach in today’s perfect swimming weather really came true, after all.”

“Well he~llo, Subaru. Are you enjoying the lake swim, perha~ps?”

“Oh, Ros-chi. I was just thinking again about how I need to thank you…”

As he was speaking, Subaru looked up at the silhouette of the tall man standing next to him, and was left speechless. That was because Roswaal was standing there majestically with his hands on his hips, wearing a black, daringly cut boomerang swimsuit on his unexpectedly well-toned body.

“The first detailed portrayal of a swimsuit is Roswaal; who wanted that?!”

“Now, now, don’t be like that. A~lso, I’ll be quietly devoting myself to the role of pleasantly watching over you as all of you frolic in the wa~ter. Relax, and go have a goo~d time.”

“Well now, I’m glad to hear you say that, but…”

The unclouded smile made it all the more suspicious, but Subaru slid his view to the side in response to Roswaal’s words. Doing so, his sight was now directed at Ram, who was holding up an umbrella for protection from the sunlight. She was supporting a rather large parasol, creating shade for Roswaal and herself.

Naturally, Ram, too, was wearing a swimsuit—the peach-colored swimsuit offered little defense against viewing, and her long, slim arms and legs were extravagantly exposed. While certainly delicate, they gave an impression not of weakness, but of solidity. Her chest was only slightly filled out, but womanliness could not be measured by the shape of the body alone…

“Barusu!”

“Gaaah! My eyes! My e~yes!!”

“Do not direct your beastly eyes towards Ram. She’ll crush them.”

“Dundundundun… The, the same damage that happened in the story that my nickname’s from…”

Engaging with her head-on backfired, and the sand that Ram kicked up hit him right in the eyes. As Subaru rolled around on the ground in pain, Ram snorted a derisive ‘Ha’ at him.

“But Master Roswaal is enjoying himself, and Rem is cute when she’s having fun like this, so I’ll praise you for that.”

“With things going like this?! Couldn’t you have said that before wrecking my eyes?!”

“We don’t have the kind of relationship where I can look you in the eye and openly express thanks. Figure it out.”

“I can’t see, but I know you don’t have a serious look on your face! I know it!”

“If you rub at them too much, the sand will injure your eyes. Look, go wash them out with water. You’re so much trouble.”

“Yeah, thanks… wait, you did it in the first place! Stop that! Stay out of my heart!”

Just like the saying goes, Subaru rejected the kindness he couldn’t see, and rolled over towards the water.

Watching Subaru go as he fled at a furious pace, Ram sighed sadly.

“It would be alright for you to be kind to Subaru a little more openly, wou~ldn’t it?”

“…Master Roswaal, you’ll get sunburned. Let’s find a place to set up the umbrella.”

“Of course.”

Without responding to her master’s words, Ram began walking briskly, still carrying the parasol. Softening his smile at Ram’s bearing, Roswaal held his peace and followed her.

3

“Aw man, that was awful. I can’t believe, before I even got a good look at Emilia-tan’s swimsuit, I suddenly got saddled with a handicap like losing most of my vision…”

Splashing water on his eyes to wash them, Subaru had settled down and let out a long, deep sigh.

Fortunately, unlike seawater, the lake’s water wasn’t salty. There were no worries about further damaging his eyes by washing them, and he was able to safely reclaim his eyesight. Now, without further distractions…

“Swimsuit viewing… no, art appreciation.”

“…No matter where you go, you really are a noisy fellow, I suppose. If it was going to turn out like this, Betty would have been better off spending time quietly in the Forbidden Library, you know."

"Hm… that voice and abusive language; Beako, is it?"

Slicking back his dampened hair, Subaru's head turned right and left, searching for the owner of that voice. Then, he discovered a little girl's form bobbing on the surface of the water, comfortably relaxed into a swim tube. A little girl wearing a polka-dot swimsuit.

"Beako, you look like you're having a super-good time there… it makes what you just said entirely unconvincing."

"Betty has been dragged against her will under this burning sky, on a hot day like this, I suppose. If she doesn't take back at least a tiny bit of the peace of mind she should have been able to gain, it will have been a waste of time, you know."

"That way of thinking doesn't suit a little girl enjoying a swim tube at the beach, though."

When Subaru retorted with an astonished look, Beatrice's face, as she made waves in the water, suggested she hadn't a clue what he was talking about. Having said that, her expression was completely relaxed, so surely there was no need to take her statement at face value.

That was made all the more clear by the presence of the kitten atop her stomach that was playing with the water.

"You're having the time of your life there, in your own way. Where did we have a swimsuit in that size?"

When Subaru pointed him out, Puck murmured a 'Hmm?' as he floated in the water above Beatrice's stomach. His appearance wasn't what it normally was, clad instead in a swimsuit with red and white horizontal stripes.

"You see, this is the same as when I take on physical form. I'm making clothing from mana. Isn't it cute?"

“In other words, normally you’re completely naked on purpose, then. You see mascot characters like that now and then, but am I the only one that feels like it’s odd to see a character that never wears anything suddenly wearing just a swimsuit…?”

Hearing Subaru run out of steam, Puck let out a laughing ‘Hohoho” and winked deftly.

“It’s a rare shot that I hardly ever show. Doesn’t that make you feel fortunate?”

“It does, I suppose! Bubby in a swimsuit, playing in the water, it’s just too much, you know.”

“It’s not that hard to satisfy the demands of your core fanbase, though.”

“She’s not the core, you know. Lia saw my swimsuit too, and was happy with it.”

“Damn it! I can’t put up a fight when you’ve already captured the king!”

Puck’s attitude was ‘To the victor go the spoils’ as he placed his paws on his hips, proudly sticking out his chest as he stood atop Beatrice. To go along with that, Beatrice gloated as she rested on her swim tube.

It’s not like anything had actually been won or lost, but Subaru ended up feeling the misery of defeat. However, as though to save Subaru from that…

“Mya~!! Ee~k, I suppose!! Woah?!”

A round object flew in with incredible force, and scored an amazing clean hit on Beatrice as she floated on the water’s surface—the impact capsized the swim tube, and Beatrice and Puck were thrown into the water.

“I don’t believe it, is this… divine punishment?!”

“Wha, wha, what do you mean, divine punishment, you know?!

What on earth did Betty and Bubby do…"

Entirely soaked, and clinging to the swim tube, Beatrice snapped at him while looking aghast. Directly in front of her, the cause of the shipwreck—a round ball filled with air—bobbed merrily as it floated by.

Plainly put, it was a beach ball. It's construction was somewhat slipshod, but it was a decent approximation of the summertime beach friend that Subaru remembered—it had come flying in from a short distance away.

"Ah, I'm sorry, are you alright? It didn't hit anyone, did it?"

"Hey, hey, please be careful with that… Um, Emilia-tan?"

Running over while looking flustered, the one who had come to apologize was Emilia, with her silver hair dancing. Subaru blinked, and then took a good look at her outfit from top to bottom.

"…? What's the matter?"

Entirely uncaring about her own charms, Emilia looked mystified at Subaru's gaze.

Emilia's swimsuit look not only put her well-proportioned physical beauty on display, but also had a sense of style that lightly wrapped her bare skin in a shirt—some might feel it was a signal that she was reluctant to show more, but Emilia's charm, with the unpretentious impression it gave, was improved explosively.

"Professor Puck…!"

"Do you understand it now, Subaru? I'm not thoughtlessly keeping Lia's skin exposure low for nothing, you know. This is exactly what I was aiming for."

"I'm sorry, I'm not really sure what the two of you are saying."

Emilia herself was left behind by the hot-blooded handshake between Subaru and Puck over their shared understanding.

"…Lady Emilia, Rem's apologies! It would seem she put a little too much power into that."

Saying that, rushing in late to the scene was a beautiful girl with her blue hair bobbing, Rem. Slightly short of breath, she widened her eyes at the gathering.

"Ah, Subaru! Were you able to play as much as you wanted with my sister and Miss Beatrice?"

"Wait a minute I suppose, younger of the sisters! I have something to say about your idea of him having been able to play, you know! When are you trying to say that Betty was playing with this man, I suppose!"

"Yeah, we were having a great time. Hey, your swimsuit is cute too, Rem. It looks good on you."

"Oh that… makes me blush…"

"Don't ignore me, you know!"

Rem, acting bashful with her cheeks reddening, was wearing a simple, captivating blue bikini. Compared to her older sister, her body had more bountiful feminine curves, and her white skin was exposed to the rays of the fire season's sun. Healthy, and enchanting.

Ignored during the Subaru and Rem's exchange, Beatrice indignantly made her way to the beach. Gripped in the little girl's hands was the beach ball that had been the root cause of her shipwreck.

Seeing that, Emilia's face lit up immediately.

"Ah, Beatrice, you picked that up for us. Thank you. I was playing, um, 'beach volley?' with Rem, and we got really worked up."

"Ah, you were playing beach volleyball?! This isn't really a beach, but that's fine, that's fine! It's a summertime classic! I want to hustle with Emilia-tan, too!"

"Truly? Then you should join us at beach volleyball, Subaru. If they wouldn't mind, perhaps Miss Beatrice and the great spirit would join as well."

When Subaru got on board with what Emilia was saying, Rem cheerfully suggested that Beatrice and Puck join as well. Beatrice frowned at those words, and tried to decline reflexively, but…

"Hmf! Who would want to join in that kind of play, I suppose? Betty will be with Bubby…"

"Heh, that sounds like fun. It's been a while since I gave my body a proper workout."

"With Betty and Bubby working together, any contest is an easy victory, you know!"

"It's really cute the way you always do that…"

Beatrice easily reversed her opinion, and at last it was time to begin beach volleyball.

4

…At last it was time to begin beach volleyball, but it was also the beginning of a scene of carnage.

"Alright! Here we go~! Eiya!"

"Wha, wait… eek!"

Together with an adorable shout, Emilia used her open palm to strike at the ball she'd thrown overhead.

The next moment, the ball grazed Subaru's cheek, and stabbed into the corner of the hastily-created court. Just like it said, it stabbed into the court. It didn't bounce. It was stabbed in. It was spinning. Smoke was rising.

Stretching across any and all sports, the idea of a difference in physical ability—this was clear proof of it.

“Has there ever been a time where the term ‘one-sided game’ applied more correctly than this?”

“Don’t…don’t start feeling like we’ve lost already, I suppose. There’s still our turn to serve…”

“Right there!!”

Beatrice had sent off a relaxed serve well-suited to her appearance, but it was thwarted by a strong block by Rem that made it seem like a mountain had risen to halt it in its path. Rem leaped, brought her arms together, and smashed the ball (which was moving slow enough to be stopped by a fly) with a tremendous blow.

“Mya~o!!”

“B, Bubby~~~?!”

Struck head-on by the ball after it was knocked back, Puck let out a high-pitched wail and sank into the sand. Beatrice hurriedly crouched down, desperately working to retrieve Puck from where he was buried. Looking at that ruthless outcome out of the corner of his eye, Subaru watched Emilia and Rem modestly clap their hands together, celebrating the point they’d gained.

At the point they’d divided up into teams by playing rock-paper-scissors, the victors had already been decided.

The ‘rock’ team was Subaru, Beatrice, and Puck, and the ‘paper’ team was Emilia and Rem. There’s no need to even mention the difference in physical ability, but even beyond that, both Emilia and Rem were of the same mind in that when it came to winning and losing, the idea of easing up or holding back would never occur to them.

Basically, since the both of them always put in their full effort, Subaru’s group never had a chance of winning.

“Somehow, it seems like they’re not hitting the ball back that often. It was amazing when I was playing against you, Rem.”

“Indeed. Between Lady Emilia and Rem, neither side was able to score a point. When the exchange of shots wouldn't stop, the tension was incredible. But, it was fun."

"Mhmm, I rea~lly enjoyed it. I'm rea~lly having fun now, too."

Showered in the rays of the summer sun, girls in swimsuits with bursting smiles and beach volleyball—there's no doubt, this is none other than the scenery that Subaru had wished for from the bottom of his heart.

"Nah, I didn't want the kind of game where you have to desperately run away from the ball!"

"A~lright, here goes. Puck and Beatrice, you guys try and hit it back, too!"

"Subaru, Rem believes in you. You can stop any sort of ball for us!"

"That might be hoping for a little too much… degeberofu?!"

In the end, unable to fully avoid that expectation, the bullet-like serve struck him in the face. Subaru was thrown out to the water, throwing up a tremendous splash.

"They're having fun, a~ren't they?"

"Indeed."

Watching Subaru and the others from a distance, Roswaal and Ram whispered to each other and smiled faintly.

This, too, was the "Endless Summer Life in Another World" that Subaru wished for.

Apparently, the content of the short story will be quite different from the original. Although Roswaal doesn't appear on the front cover, you might catch a glimpse of him in a rare swimsuit scene!

We have received some comments from everyone at Roswaal Manor!

[Emilia] Um, my thoughts on samma? You mean summer, right? Well, it's been soooooooo hot these days, you know? I'm not great with hot weather, so it's been tough. But I've had so much fun coming here and playing in the water with everyone. Subaru told me about this game, "Beech Balleyball" which was really great. I had a lot of fun playing it, when it was just me and Rem it was hard to settle the score, but the match with Puck and the others was great and Subaru said, "I didn't stand a chaaaaance!" But I had a really great samma. Despite the hot weather, I hope that everyone can make precious samma memories.

[Beatrice] Why should Betty have to entertain all this idle chatter, I suppose? She's not kidding, in fact. It was baffling to her getting dragged outside in this heat, I suppose. In fact, it wasn't so bad floating in the water and, playing in the sand with Bubby. But beach volleyball was not for Betty, I suppose! Bubby got his head stuck in the sand because of that useless oaf! Betty hopes she doesn't lose so that she can avenge Bubby's defeat. Betty will definitely, definitely show you her stuff next year, in fact!

[Rem] Yes, Master Roswaal kindly allowed Rem to take a vacation together with all the people of the mansion. Rem hopes this was a good change of pace for Lady Emilia, who has been constantly worrying about the upcoming royal selection. Rem is feeling more and more excited about serving tomorrow. But, the most amazing thing about it all was how Subaru suggested this vacation to Master Roswaal and convinced him to do it. Subaru looked so adorable in his swimsuit that Rem could hardly take her eyes off him. It was a shame that we were on different teams for the beach volleyball game, but Rem just hit the ball left and right. Oh, Rem just remembered, on that day Subaru did this thing and… (on and on she goes)

[Ram] Every day has been so hot; Ram simply cannot stand it. The only thing that saved Ram is the fact that she was able to spend some quiet time by Master Roswaal's side, plus Rem looked super cute in her swimsuit. Ram doesn't know who's reading this article, but please take of yourselves whoever and wherever you are at the very least. Don't say anything too outlandish or you'll end up like Barusu who got a fever the following day and Ram won't be taking care of you.

Re:Zero Ex:
I Can Hear the Festival Music

Rem: "…Would you like to go to the festival?"

Rem said this when the heat of the daytime started to cool down and there were faint signs of dusk approaching.

Subaru: "By festival, you mean that festival? The festival exists?"

Rem: "Yes. The event isn't that big, but it is on the day that's right in the middle of fire season. Apparently, it has little food stands too."

Subaru: "So the hot days will continue, but it's the kind of festival where you'll need to be fired up to get through the latter half too. And there'll be food stands…That sure sounds nice."

Subaru smiled and positively replied to Rem's invitation.

This goes without saying, but Subaru loves festivals.

Seeing the foods carts that are rather expensive and the tons of people gather at the event even though it's hot…kind of looks like something that requires toughness.

It's like, even if they don't have energy, they force themselves to. And when the fireworks go off in the end, it's awesome.

I probably shouldn't expect this world to even have fireworks regarding things that'd remind you of summer, though…

Subaru: "Guess I'll…go to the festival."

Rem: "…! Really?"

Subaru: "It's weird for you to be surprised when you're the one who invited me. I just happen to feel it today, and everyone's out too, so… Oh, I guess Beako's here."

When Subaru mentioned the girl that had said she was staying inside the forbidden archives to escape the summer heart,

Rem: “No, Miss Beatrice isn’t here today. Even if she was, I’d insist her not to be.”

Subaru: “Huh, she’s out too?”

Rem: “… …Yes, she is.”

Subaru: “Oh. Okay.”

It looked like she was really conflicted, but Subaru didn’t say anything to Rem, who looked like she had made a difficult decision.

For now, I’ll think of a suiting present to bring back home to Beatrice and…

Subaru: “…Alright, let’s go. To the festival.”

Rem: “Okay! Let’s do it!”

…And so, things ended up like this.

Rem: “H-How is it? Does it look weird?”

Subaru raised at an eyebrow at Rem in surprise, who said that and cast down her eyes in an embarrassed manner. They were going to go to the festival, but Rem had returned to her room, saying that she needed to get ready, and then they met at the mansion’s entranceway.

And then, when Rem appeared at the entranceway…

Subaru: “…Is that a yukata?”

Rem: “Erm, oh, yes, it’s a yukata. It’s not really popular in Lugunica, but I do recall you being well informed on them.”

Subaru: “Ahh, the dress in the dress code that is essential to the festivals back in my hometown… I can’t believe it.”

Standing in front of Subaru, who was shocked, was Rem in a white cloth yukata that had morning glory flower patterns designed on it. Upon seeing the large flower ornament on her head, the refreshing sandals on her feet, and the dress that was completely different from her usual maid outfit, Subaru nodded and said “Just as I thought” as if he had been convinced of something.

Rem: “Umm… Just as I thought… What do you mean by that?”

Subaru: “No, I just mean that I’ve known it for a long time. That it’s an utter shame that you and Ram only wear and have maid outfits.”

Subaru continued by saying “Because” and,

Subaru: “You’re this cute. It’s a loss for the world to not have you dress up. Beautiful, just beautiful. It looks great on you.”

Rem: “My…For you to say that I’m so cute that you want to have me all to yourself, I’m blushing…”

Subaru: “Having this amazing sight all to myself does seem like a sin.”

Hearing Subaru’s reply as he smiled wryly, Rem blushed. After that, she pouted a little bit and said,

Rem: “…Subaru, you’re a cruel person.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Rem: “Don’t worry, it’s nothing. Thank you very much for complimenting me on the yukata.”

Subaru: “But I’m complimenting you in your yukata, not the yukata itself…”

Subaru, who grumbled that with his head tilted, pulled himself together as he said, “Oh well.” After that, Subaru fully enjoyed seeing Rem in her yukata again.

Subaru: “But man, you wear a yukata perfectly. Just what you’d expect from a maid that can do everything.”

Rem: “Well, I’m actually used to wearing yukatas…wearing waso (Japanese clothing.) At my and my sister’s old home, it was normal to spend time in kimono waso.”

Subaru: “At this point, I wonder if maybe both Japanese and European clothes are acceptable… So many possibilities, huh, Rem?”

Rem: “I’m just honored to receive your praise.”

Rem started to do a curtsy like how she usually would, then shyly said “Ah” upon realizing that she wasn’t wearing a skirt. Seeing that, Subaru shrugged his shoulders awkwardly, and after that, to shrug it off he said,

Subaru: “This means it wouldn’t look right for me to be wearing casual clothing this time.”

Rem: “Actually, I’ve been trying to prepare a yukata like mine for you too, and I was this close to finishing, but I just couldn’t decide on the most important part…”

Subaru: “Decide…on the colors?”

Rem: “No, the patterns. I couldn’t decide between heart patterns and flower patterns. The gravest blunder of my whole life.”

Subaru: “Both of those would be so hard to wear! This is supposed to be my yukata, isn’t it?!”

He wasn’t proud of it, but Subaru didn’t believe in himself enough to think that he could wear Paris Collection and yukatas with heart patterns and flower patterns. Subaru was frightened by how difficult it would be to wear all that, although Rem persisted in saying “Subaru is wonderful in anything.”

Subaru: “If it were Ros-chi, he wouldn’t look weird in a yukata with heart patterns…”

Rem: “I’m sure you’d look cute in it too…”

Subaru: “About that, you see, I’m a passion kind of guy, not cuteness.”

Rem: “Passion, not cuteness…”

Rem tilted her head upon hearing Subaru’s reply. But anyway, this meant that Subaru’s yukata was a no go this time.

Subaru: “Well, let’s save talking about that for next time.”

Rem: “Next time, you say?”

Subaru: “Don’t know if it’ll be happening next week or next year, but this won’t be the only festival, right? This won’t be the last one, so let’s just go have fun today.”

Subaru gave a thumbs-up and nodded at Rem.

And so, he left talking with Rem about whether or not it’d be a yukata with heart patterns as something he’d take care of himself next year.

At Subaru’s words, Rem blinked several times and murmured, “Next time, again…”

After that, with a full smile as great as the morning glories on her yukata, Rem said,

Rem: “Yeah, you’re right! Let’s go to the festival again next year!”

Subaru: “Well said! Alright then, time to enjoy the festival this year! Let’s go, Rem!”

Rem: “Yes, let’s go together!”

Subaru gave an energetic command to leave, and Rem went with him as she raised her hand.

They could hear the festival music from the path that they were walking on side by side.

Even though this was another world, nobody hesitates to enjoy festivals. So, let’s do our best to go all out and enjoy this hot season as much as we can.

So that next year, we'll be able to talk about our memories of this day.

Subaru: "Anyway, our first goal is to conquer all of the food stands. Rem, what kind of place would you like to check out?"

Rem: "I don't know much about festivals, so is it okay if I leave that to you?"

Subaru: "Oh, fine by me. But, don't say I didn't offer. Also, I have to get Beako a present…Well, she'll probably be happy if I buy her a mask or something. Yeah, that'll do."

It was a pretty careless conclusion. Still, Rem didn't say anything to Subaru. Rem was just smiling as if to say that this time they were spending together and the atmosphere were enough for her.

When the festival music was finally near, they started to see the food stands' paper lanterns lighting up the evening scenery in the distance.

The people who noticed Subaru and Rem in the illuminating festival waved at them.

Subaru: "Hey look, everyone's full of enthusiasm. When it comes to enthusiasm, there's probably no one who could hold a candle to you in your yukata, though."

Rem: "Oh Subaru, you meanie."

Subaru: "My bad. But, this is a much bigger success than I expected it to be."

Rem: "Let's not get lost now. But even if I do get lost, I should be able to find you."

Subaru: "Oh, looks like I can count on you then. Like with a signal or something?"

Rem: "Nope, you're just really stinky."

Subaru: “There you go saying that again with an innocent look on your face!”

Even though it’s not about a specific body odor, it does hurt when you’re told about it over and over. So…

Rem: “…Ah, my hand.”

Subaru: “It’s a solution. Can’t go off getting lost now, after all.”

He took Rem’s free hand and held onto it so she’d never get lost. With this, all preparations were complete.

Rem: “…You really are a cruel person, Subaru.”

Subaru: “I thought it was a nice idea, though. So we shouldn’t do it after all?”

Rem: “No, let’s stay like this. Alright, the festival! Subaru, we’re going to conquer all the food stands, right?”

Subaru: “Y-Yeah, exactly! Still don’t really get it, but let’s go Rem!”

Rem: “Yeah!”

…After this, Subaru and Rem, being all fired up, went on to conquer the festival food carts one by one. Although, they did end up becoming known as “food cart robbers”.

…And that was a story for another night.

Subaru's Strange Tea Party

—It was a scene from a tea party that could have occurred.

"Well, the atmosphere seems completely different from usual, doesn't it? What's up with this?" asked Subaru.

"The atmosphere is different? I don't know what you are talking about. It's the same as usual: this is a Witch's Tea Party to welcome you, and my hospitality and everything else are the same," said the white-haired witch sitting on a white chair—Echidna—who then calmly picked up the cup on the table.

If I cut this part out, it would be the tea party I'm used to—though I never really wanted to get used to it—but I can't really object to what she's saying. However…

"It isn't the usual meadow but a dance hall that looks kinda stylish. What's up with that?! The décor is a bit modern, and it has a dazzling disco ball… How the hell can you say that it's the same as usual?!"

"Well, it's definitely a little different than usual, I guess? But is it really something to make a fuss about?"

"Put yourself in my shoes! You unsympathetic Witch!"

Echidna shrugged a little after Subaru got angry and started cussing her. He then let out a sigh at her lackadaisical response and looked around.

As I previously stated, a place in Echidna's dream known as the Witch's Tea Party has been completely transformed.

Naturally, this kind of décor wasn't found in this world, so it must have been created using Subaru's knowledge.

“But even so, you really must’ve dug deep to find interior décor like this in my mind. Even I’m not that familiar with disco-esque places like this.”

“Oh, is that so? But, in your mind, this kind of scene was associated with conviviality…”

“Yep, you just let the cat out of the bag! So it was your doing after all! And why is the theme of it conviviality… Wait.”

“Uh… Wha… What is it?”

“—You’re being influenced by the atmosphere outside, aren’t you?”

Echidna started averting her eyes upon hearing Subaru’s question.

The atmosphere outside… I can’t speak about it in detail, but currently, there’s a bit of a festival going on outside the castle of dreams. That was where I was until I got summoned here.

“You can’t go outside, so you decorated your usual space and made it shiny… You’re a loner, huh.”

“It can’t be helped, you know. I can’t get out of here. But you guys were really having fun. I’m just resisting in my own cute way. It’s the best I can do,” Echidna replied with a pout, then looked away from Subaru.

If you just look at how she’s acting, you could say it looks cute, but the person doing it is a battle-hardened Witch among Witches.

This was a place created using convenient information taken from Subaru’s memories to begin with, so…

“Hee-Hee, you have a cute side, Echidna.”

“…How can you be in a space that only he and I can be in?” asked Echidna.

“Huh? Didn’t you call me here? How else would I be here?” said the beautiful, young silver-haired girl—Emilia—as she put a finger to her cheek and tilted her head.

Echidna's expression turned gloomy at her appearance, but…
"Alright!" Subaru clenched his fist. "I've done it, I've summoned Emilia-tan! Wouldn't this be the first time Emilia-tan and I have been in Echidna's place together, then? This is a rare event!"

"So you've summoned her? How very boorish of you. Are you not satisfied with it being just the two of us?"

"I'm dissatisfied in every way imaginable! It's finally starting to feel good."

"Hey! Subaru, you shouldn't say it like that! It will hurt Echidna's feelings."

"…It's much more hurtful to be defended by you," Echidna, who'd gotten defended, grumbled at Emilia's back while she was glaring cutely at Subaru.

However, Emilia, not noticing that, spoke. "But I'm glad that I could meet you. It's reaaally lively outside, and it would be lonely if you're left alone."

"Right? I thought that Echidna and I wouldn't be able to hold a long conversation, so I had you come here, Emilia-tan. A nice decision by me! How truly DILIGENT I am, being considerate like THIS!"

"Sorry, but I don't know what you are talking about," Emilia replied, brushing Subaru off even though he was excited about it.

Echidna rested her cheek on her hand while looking at how they were acting.

This was Echidna's Castle of Dreams. She'd changed the meadow into a dance hall and could even create tea and sweets at will. She could do anything she wanted, and yet…

"There are two things here that I have no control over… Usually, it would have been something to be happy about though."

"Oh, Echidna, you are having tea. May I join you? I've always wanted to have tea with you," Emilia inquired after walking over to her.

Subaru panicked at Emilia's action and… "Wait, Emilia-tan! You're better off not drinking that tea! You shouldn't have the sweets either! I had a bad experience when I drank it before…"

"You drank it, but I'm not allowed to? Isn't that browbeating?"

"You don't hear people say 'browbeating' in this day and age…"

Subaru's well-intentioned appeal didn't go over well, and he slumped his shoulders.

"It feels outrageous to be on her side, but that's a terrible thing to say, Natsuki Subaru. Even though you so passionately drank all of my secretions twice like that."

"Be careful how you word it! Secretions? Are you a plant?!"

"Hey, it smells reaaally nice… It's fine right, Subaru? I'm hungry, too."

"No, no, no, it isn't good, Emilia-tan! Believe in me! Trust me!"

As Subaru and Emilia sat around the table and argued, Echidna tilted her cup silently, her beautiful eyebrows scrunched up, and muttered, "The festivities outside were interesting, but this place has its own merit. I'll be more careful next time."

The tea cooled down while the argument between Subaru and Emilia heated up above Echidna's head.

Isekai Quartet Special: Another World, Another Episode

1

…When I woke up, I found myself in the middle of a barren wasteland.

???: “Man, I really am in a fix. What’s this all about?”

I frantically looked around the room, trying to grasp the situation I was in the best I could.

I may not look it, but I’ve been through tons of hellish experiences; the likes of which ordinary people wouldn’t be able to go through. I’ve been chased by a Dragon, swallowed up by a flood, asked to siege a fort run by a tribe of savages alone without causing any bloodshed—quite unreasonably might I add—and I’ve even flitted between life and death for three days and nights due to some strange illness.

From all of these experiences I’ve had while travelling, I may have found one or two ways to deal with situations such as these…

???: “That’s what I thought, but nothing’s coming to mind. I’m sure there must have been signs back when Reid-kun and Farsale-kun took me to the Great Waterfall in the dead of night, or when Echidna-kun accidentally blew up a forest with her magic…”

Whenever I recall all the pleasant faces of the people I travelled with, comparing them with the experiences I’ve accumulated so far, the fact I’ve managed to make it this long without dying genuinely impresses me.

Of course, when it came to that, it had been those with some sense about them who would shoulder his hardships.

In any case…

???: “Last night was going to be the first time in a while where we’d have stayed at a town inn, rather than camp outdoors…”

It’s not unusual for us to camp outdoors while on long journeys. That said, I’ve got a bad leg and use a cane, so it’s always been a concern of mine that I’d end up putting too much of a burden on my fellow companions.

Well, some of these kids would come kick my back whenever I lagged behind, not showing me an ounce of mercy. The fact remained though; every part of my body was groaning in complaint, nevermind my mental state.

After all, compared to the other kids, who were full of youth, I’m a middle-aged geezer who’s been getting on in years.

That’s why it should have just been me calling it an early night after doing that “massawge” stuff I’d learnt from Flugel-kun; that way I’d be able to give my body a proper rest in preparation for the long journey.

And yet…

???: “Looks like I woke up to find myself alone in this strange place… In the past, Flugel-kun told me he went through something similar, and now I feel bad for not taking him seriously.”

Scratching my cheek, I looked around the area, attempting to gather information.

At the very least, it didn’t look like I was going to be woken up from this weirdly realistic dream. Thus, what I needed to do was discard the preconception that this was a dream or illusion, and instead, seriously come up with a plan for later.

I need to try and find a way to not die in this parched wasteland with nothing in it, I need to find a way to live.

???: “How did a mere hermit grow to be so bold. If not for Satella-kun finding me, I would have probably died like a wretch… Apparently, it looks like I don’t want to die.”

Luckily, when I was thrown right into the middle of this wasteland, I had all my provisions on hand.

I've got food, my water flask, and my jacket packed in my knapsack. What comes most handy is the fact that I've got my cane on me. Without it, I'd end up having difficulties walking properly; plus, who knows what Farsale-kun would yell if I told him I lost it.

If I were asked to reimburse it, my debt would start getting to the point where you wouldn't be able to document it.

???: "Still, at least with the debt I owe, I don't mind if the amount balloons up, so long as I can meet them again."

I'd probably get laughed at if I said something like "They're priceless to me", but before I even realised, they'd become something like that to me.

Going by the rules of thumb I'd built up so far, it probably wasn't just me stuck in a strange situation like this. Perhaps, all of my companions were going through the same experience too.

In that case, since I'm the second most likely to die among my circle, Satella-kun, earnest as she is, probably is searching for me with all her might. If she lost sight of Satella-kun, Echidna-kun would probably get frantic as well. As for Reid-kun; seeing him whenever he could, should be fine. He probably wasn't going to die anyways, also, with Farsale-kun, he too had the sort of disposition where he could get on with things regardless of where he was, so no worries there.

???: "Guess the issue is with Flugel-kun, he feels like he'd die more easily than me…"

Flugel-kun, strangely unreliable as he is, was more likely to drag himself into danger; even more so than myself with my bad leg. There have been many times where he's jumped into danger all on his own. In some aspects, he's been reaping what he's sown; yet even then, I was worried enough to think about his safeguarding.

Anyways, that's that. My goal now is to link back up with my companions, and then…

???: “I’ve gotta find out where I am, and what I need to do to get back to where I was.”

Just to put it out there, our journey is one of great importance to us.

I myself don’t really want to flaunt it everywhere and exaggerate it, but apparently this journey thing of ours is quite the grand undertaking.

…After all, it’s a journey to save the world.

2

I’m rather pessimistic, if I do say so myself.

Reid-kun just laughs me off as a worrier and coward, but unless I think about all the variables, I can’t act immediately when responding to situations.

I also think the fact I have a bad leg adds to my pessimistic nature.

Even when things are good, I’m not the quickest person in the world, so it’s not like I am going to survive if I’m slow whenever something happens.

Not to mention, there’s no way I’m going to drag my comrades into it.

Thus, even in this situation where I was thrown into a desolate wasteland, I quickly let go of any optimism and took my own measures to deal with the pessimistic circumstances I was put in.

I have no idea how many days it will take for me to meet back up with my lost companions.

Securing food and water is my top priority… The stuff I already have in my knapsack is by no means enough. It’ll get me through my first bouts of hunger, but I only have enough such that I’ll completely run out in no time.

Even so, I guess I should say I'm plenty fortunate.

If not for these provisions, it wouldn't take long before I'd be joining the tumbleweeds in this wasteland.

I may not be like Farsale-kun, who lives it posh, but I'd like to voice a few complaints as well □ Such as the fact that, being able to put off my destiny in becoming one with the tumbleweeds for a few days, isn't at all very joyful in taking pride in myself for being lucky.

???: "It's been two weeks already…"

I brushed my hand against my now unkempt beard, muttering those words in dejection.

It's been two weeks since I had been thrown into this wasteland and began walking, believing that I'd meet back up with my companions—And even now, I still haven't met a single soul, nevermind any of them; I was all alone.

I managed to find a source of water, and now I was looking for human habitation upstream by the river. Still, my search was being delayed by how unfamiliar I was with the environment and my loneliness, thus I hadn't made much distance.

I could stave off my hunger by eating the wild plants growing along the riverside. However, setting up base by the riverside, unable to ensure my personal safety, was dangerous, as there existed the possibility of coming across large animals.

???: "…Things are rough, huh."

I let some of my feelings slip as I felt my mental state slowly eroding away.

However, there was no one around to hear my lonely monologue, not to mention, it felt like the words I'd uttered remained at my feet, as if even the parched wind found it too bothersome to sweep them away.

I still didn't realise it, but apparently I had a nature of wanting to seek the company of others. Once upon a time, I'd acted like a hermit, so because of that, I had no idea how much I couldn't see about myself.

No, I knew I couldn't live by myself, and so, I tried to commit suicide once. But then, I was saved by a gentle hand.

Someone wanted me, I was pulled in by that hand. I suppose I was just trying to fulfil my duty, and as for how I originally was, well, I suppose I wasn't actively living, dying, or taking life seriously enough.

I could hear the footsteps of my original nature slowly creeping up on me.

???: "…Man, everyone would probably get mad at me if they knew I was thinking this stuff."

As I muttered, my parched lips broke into a slight smile.

I pictured Satella-kun, angry, with tears in her eyes, as well as Flugel-kun, red in the face, indignant. Reid-kun and Echidna-kun would probably act fed up and disinterested. As for Farsale-kun, he knows the least of what it feels like to be lonely, so I guess he wouldn't be able to empathise with how I am right now.

???: "Hah."

I was surprised, amazed at the fact that I could still laugh when I thought about everyone.

I miss everyone. It's only been two weeks, but I've become so weak.

I miss everyone.

I miss you all.

3

…Time passed slowly, ever so cruelly without stopping.

Before I knew it, I gave up keeping count of how many days I'd spent in this place.

I just, without thinking about things too deeply, accepted the situation for what it was, and kept my legs moving to schedule, going through each day while trying to stop my spirit from petering out.

???: “…”

I mustn’t think about this. I mustn’t think about this wasteland, nor of this world.

This isn’t the world I am acquainted with.

This isn’t the world I travelled through with my companions.

That’s why my companions will never be able to find me.

I mustn’t think about these things. I’m all alone. I haven’t talked to anyone for such a long time.

There’s no sign of human life, I can’t even see any animals; all this time, I’ve just been talking to the sky, water and flowers.

I was fine with it back when I was a hermit. I was dead sure that I’d abandon the world. But now I’ve been made to realise, that the one who was abandoned by the world, is me.

I wonder what Satella-kun, Flugel-kun, Reid-kun, Echidna-kun and Farsale-kun are doing. I wonder if they are worried about me.

I wonder if they’re looking for me.

I wonder if they are bothering to look for me.

I miss everyone.

I miss them. I miss them. I miss them.

I miss them. I miss them. I miss them. I miss them. I miss them. I miss them.

I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them I miss them—

???: “…Ah.”

Suddenly, something snapped in my head.

Trying not to think about it was no different from thinking about it when you are trying not to. I had no interest in these kinds of word games.

Nevertheless, the unwardable feelings of loneliness and desolation kept swirling around my chest before finally exploding.

???: “GHWWAAAAAAAAA—!!”

I clutched at my head, eyes wide open, and threw down my cane, sinking to my knees.

The azure sky, ever unperturbed, looked down at me as I continued to walk alone. I despised it, I loathed the sky, thinking why is it making me suffer like this.

I’d let my true nature show. So when it came to my calibre, in the end, I guess this is all I had in me.

By being by someone’s side, by fulfilling a duty that was wished of me, I’d been able to accept myself, I’d been able to find definite proof that I could be here.

People were mirrors for me, and mirrors served as indispensable signposts which shape the being that is myself.

But none of that was here. No mirrors, no one I could reflect myself in, no role for me to carry out…

???: “…Listen, Alec-san. Won’t you try to live for our sake, instead of dying?”

Back then, I’d thrown myself into freezing cold water. But there’d been a girl there who’d spoken those words to me after she pulled me out.

She was an audacious girl, she was pure and honest, and despite being burdened with a harsh fate, she didn’t let it show. Thus, I was moved by her kindness, feeling like I needed to help her.

All those good-hearted people who’d been made to feel that, were always by her side. As for me, well, I’m not a pure, good-hearted person, so I was just acting like this because that was what was wanted from me.

Then, I guess that’s it.

I never thought I’d be dropping out halfway through like this, but our journey was drawing to an end. Even without me, the journey should turn out well.

I guess they would be sad not having me around, and they’d miss me. Still, no matter how tough it will be, they will lift their heads up and begin to walk.

Indeed, I can place my trust in my most precious comrades.

That’s why…

???: “…”

No sooner had that sense of resignation took over my heart, did the sky, which up until now had been silent, respond.

To put it more accurately, a large shadow blocked out the repugnant sky that was looking down on me. This shadow now took over that role, coming into sight with a roar in its place.

—It was a massive humanoid creature, made entirely of solid rock.

I could intuitively comprehend it was a living thing. As for whether it was made by someone or not, that much I couldn't tell.

Alec: "…Huh, isn't this just what I needed right now?"

My cane had ended up somewhere far from me, and my weary legs were practically like sticks.

My scrawny body, which was practically skin and bones, didn't have the strength in it to let me run away, plus, it's not like I had a will to live.

I suddenly recalled something Flugel-kun had said. "Mark my words, when people are in desperate situations, what truly kills them isn't violence, but despair."

Then again, having said that, Flugel-kun himself was crushed by Reid's violence, with him only using his fingers—and that was despite him hearing the same thing too. That made him quickly take back what he'd said.

Alec: "Hah."

Memories of carefree days flashed across my mind. I unintentionally let out a laugh, despite the situation I was in.

My cheeks had grown rather stiff, making it so I couldn't laugh properly. How long had it been since I'd last laughed? Our journey had been so full of laughter, we're always, always be walking around laughing.

Oh, yeah, now I finally realise. Our journey was enjoyable.

And having it end like this, that's something I…

Alec: "…Cannot accept."

Those words I muttered came a bit late as I lifted my head up.

The colossal lump of rock before me—I guess I should call him Rock Dude—lifted its huge arm up.

I could clearly see what its goal was. It was going to crush the tiny living beings below.

I had no way to dodge it, so I was going to get crushed, and that would be the end of me.

I was helpless against anyone who wasn't open to conversation, and of course, I was helpless whenever my companions weren't there to help me. I'd truly felt that so many times during our travels, and that, I guess, was going to take my life.

Indeed that was the moment where I despised, from the very depths of my heart, this very reality.

???: “WAAAAAAAAAAIT A SEEEEEEEC—!!”

A really loud voice rang out, and with it, a small shadow wedged itself between myself and Rock Dude.

With how sudden it was, both me and Rock Dude stopped in our tracks. Or rather, it seemed more like the reason we stopped was different for each of us.

For Rock Dude, it was because it was told to “Wait”. For me, it was because I caught a glimpse of someone's back, someone I was unfamiliar with.

I'd been separated from my companions in this barren land, left all alone. And here, before me, there was someone's back.

???: “Heaven calls, Earth calls, Man calls. This unexpected encounter has gotten me awfully surprised, but the most important thing is that it looks like I made it here in time!”

The figure turned to look back at me, as I stood there gawking, doing so with an exaggerated motion.

Standing there was a small girl—But not an ordinary one. Some parts of her body were made up of bits that really couldn't be human, and she had a really sharp look to her.

The girl assessed me from top to bottom, as I stood there petrified, before then giving me a nod, hands at her waist.

The Girl: “Three months ago, I sensed a great energy coming from the East. I’ve been searching around looking for the cause of what happened… So it was you! Just who the heck are you?!”

Alec: “Uh…Errm…?”

The Girl: “Got it! You’re Errm-san! I’m Pantagruel! I was made as a human-type Golem, who roam this world, the one with ten thousand Golems at my command!”

I could barely keep up with all this suddenness. And in front of me, the girl stiffened up with her strange looking figure after having cleanly given her name. Her striking pose surprised me a bunch, but what surprised me even more, was the fact Rock Dude, who’d been about to crush me before, was now assuming the same pose as her.

I compared them by eye and recalled her earlier words.

Alec: “By Golem… Are you referring to the big Rock Dude behind you?”

Pantagruel: “Yep! He’s not the only Golem, there’s a heap more of them around! I may look fairly different in appearance, but I’m one of their fellow Golems too!”

Alec: “I see… Ah, wait, no, I’ve got some much I want to ask, but…”

Pantagruel: “Go on?”

Though I wanted to shower her with questions, I shook my head instead.

And then, I offered my hand out to the girl—Pantagruel—who had a mystified look on her face.

Pantagruel: “Um, what’s up with this?”

Alec: “It’s a token of friendship, a handshake. After all, it looks like

I was really helped out by you.”

Though I was just thinking this to myself, it was meant out of self-interest. However, my mental state, which had been all over the place, grew calm instantly just by the fact I’d seen Pantagruel.

Just how much have I been saved, having the circumstance now where I can talk to someone, where I have someone here with me.

Pantagruel: “Oh, a handshake! So this is a handshake! Whoa, this is the first time I’ve gotten one, Errm-san!”

Her eyes twinkling, Pantagruel grabbed my hand and hopped up and down. I let out a long, long sigh as I looked at this pleasantness.

I’d almost prepared myself to throw everything away and die alone in this place with no one in it. But…

Alec: “I’m so glad I met you, Pantagruel. Also, is it okay if I mention just one thing?”

Pantagruel: “Of course! What’s up Errm-san?”

Alec: “Yeah, speaking of that, I’m sorry, but allow me to correct something.”

I tried to relax my tensed up cheeks using my fingers, then gave an awkward smile as I continued to shake hands with Pantagruel, who wasn’t letting go.

Then, I finally gave my name to the peculiar girl—my peculiar friend—who’d taken away my loneliness while in this land.

Alec: “My name isn’t Errm. It’s Alec… Alec Hoshin.”

Pantagruel: “…! Alec Hoshin.”

Alec: “Well, I’m more used to just being called Alec, I guess.”

That was the name my companions called me, as well as the name that I defined myself with.

Having heard me, Pantagruel began to mutter “Alec, Alec” over and over again to herself, as if she were making sure. Unrelated, but behind Pantagruel, Rock Dude was mirroring her movements, so as he hopped up and down, I felt like my life was casually in danger.

Putting aside for a moment my small concern…

Pantagruel: “Very well, Alec-san! Now then, let’s go together to my house! It’s dangerous for you to be here alone, not to mention it’s also lonely!”

Alec: “—. Yeah, that’s right. That’s a huge help. I was lonely indeed.”

Pantagruel: “Mhm! Mr. Loner, got an invitation for one right here!”

Her expression was fairly questionable for a forty plus year old geezer like myself. However, I accepted it with a smile, otherwise it would be downright uncouth to point that out.

Pantagruel still hadn’t let go of my hand which was shaking hers, and it seemed like she was going to guide me to her house, or whatever, like that. I guess I’ll let myself indulge in that feeling.

Maybe if I go to her house, I’ll be able to see others from this world. If that happens, then I can find some means to meet up with my companions again.

Thus, to do that…

Alec: “I’m counting on you, Pantagruel.”

Pantagruel: “Mhm, alright, leave it to me Alec-san!”

Pantagruel answered me with a beam; I smiled seeing that.

And as I smiled, we set out walking. We set out with the colossal Rock Dude in tow.

Pantagruel: “Ne~ko♪ Ne~ko♪ Ne~ko nyan♪ Nyan-Nyan neko ne~ko nyan♪”

Alec: “What’s with that song?”

Pantagruel: “It’s the Nekonyan-san person’s theme song, the one who made me!”

Alec: “Nekonyan… What a strange name.”

Pantagruel: “Huuh?! You reckon so?! I think it’s cool!”

I cocked my head in thought when she said the word “cool”. I couldn’t pretend not to hear the echoes of the word “theme song” coming out of her mouth. Once before, Flugel-kun too had said something similar…

Alec: “Nevermind.”

Having thought about it this far, I chided myself to put it off as overthinking things.

She was singing it ever so happily. Guess it would all be so boorish of me.

Alec: “Ne~ko ne~ko nyan… huh.”

Pantagruel’s eyes sparkled when she saw me copying her.

I felt like her eyes had become my justification to say that it looked like everything was going well.

However, after I was told that no one other than Pantagruel lived in the settlement we arrived at afterwards, and that there weren’t any human beings in this world, my awful pessimism ended up rearing its head again.

Yet that was a tale in which time was not enough to tell.

Hansel and Gretel

“Nee-sama, Nee-sama, I hear there exists a mansion made out of candy in the forest.”

Looking happily at Rem who said that with gleaming eyes, Ram quietly replied with “I see” to her cute little sister.

“A candy house, how very unrealistic.”

“That may be the case… But, the one who told me that was Subaru-kun. I don’t believe Subaru-kun to be someone who would lie.”

“I see, Barusu said that. —What a nuisance.”

Remembering the black-haired boy’s idiotic face, Rem whispered that in annoyance.

Subaru lived in the vicinity of the two’s house, he was a Troublemaker who dealt out a number of tales he got from who knows where.

While Ram believes them all to be tall tales, Rem is very interested in Subaru; as such, she tries to believe his tales whenever she can.

Each time, Ram works hard to get Rem to reconsider, while trying to keep her innocence intact.

“What an annoying man. I wish he’d suffer a horrible experience and have nobody believe him thanks to his tall tales, right now.”

Still, let us leave aside whether Ram’s wish right now comes to pass, and whether or not several days later there is an episode where the aforementioned Subaru comes crying “A wolf is coming!” and nobody believes him.

In any case—

“Nee-sama, I want to find that Candy House for Subaru-kun’s sake. Otherwise, people will continue to treat poor little Subaru as a liar.”

“Ram believes that to be an appropriate treatment, though.”

“Not at all! Subaru-kun is amazing! He’s definitely going to become a fine person who will achieve great things in the future!”

“He has a criminal disposition. He’s dangerous.”

Ram’s internal stock of Subaru continues to lower the more Rem passionately defends him.

However, undeterred by Ram’s curt attitude, Rem adorably squeezes a fist and…

“In any case, Rem has decided. Tomorrow she will find that candy house, for Subaru-kun.”

“…Rem, I don’t really want to tell you this but—”

While sorry to the enthusiastic Rem, a candy house in the middle of the forest is just something too unnatural, a tall tale far too removed from reality to need verification.

And while she wants to gently dampen her spirits as much as she can without hurting her adorable little sister—

“Listen, ok? What Barusu said is…”

“Will you come as well, Nee-sama? Rem feels a bit uneasy going alone, so I’d be glad if Nee-sama could come as well.”

“Whatever will I do with you.”

Being told that by Rem with an uneasy look, Ram instantly retracted her opinion from just before.

As soon as she did, Rem looked overjoyed, which to Ram was satisfactory.

Of course, while they’re not going to be finding a candy house, if she thinks about it as going out with Rem on a picnic with a little lunchbox, it doesn’t sound too bad.

“Of course, I will give Barusu his just desserts at a later date.”

“Let’s do our best, Nee-sama! We’ll bring back that candy house for the sake of Subaru-kun!”

“A magnificent goal.”

A declaration of excitement from the little sister at the prospect of her older sister accompanying her, hearing that, Ram smiled, and was caught in the careful selection of the contents of tomorrow’s lunchbox.

—The next day, the two having now prepared their lunchboxes, split off from their worried eldest sister, and set out on their journey.

“Come back before it gets dark. Ram, make sure to look after Rem. Rem, please listen to what Ram tells you.”

So said the always anxious worrywart eldest sister. The youngest sister had much more guts, in comparison, as she saw them off with “Bring back a souvenir.”

Anyhow, they saw their sisters off in such a way, and Rem and Ram entered the forest.

For Ram, if they can end this at some fitting spot, and sate Rem’s adventurous spirit, then that’d be Best.

“But well, we’re not going to be finding a candy house, so we can just take this easy.”

And the adventure started with that intention—

“Nee-sama, look! A candy house!”

“…That it is.”

Ram answered with indignation at Rem, who pointed a finger at the house visible from between the trees, with an excitable voice.

What stood in a break in the tree line, with a roof made of chocolate, walls made of pastry, and windows made of candy, was a Candy House.

"…"

Not having expected to encounter an actual one, Ram's mind was at the edge of complicated confusion.

Rem, overjoyed over having found the candy house, was lovely. As a big sister, that made her very happy.

While on the other hand, she felt displeasure at the fact that since Subaru's tale was proven to be true, Rem will continue to indulge Subaru going forward, and there was also the bothersomeness of not being able to dismiss his statements as falsehoods anymore.

"Could it be that we should also believe his story about the rescued turtle taking you to a castle within the ocean?"

"I knew that what Subaru-kun said was true…! Let's bring this back to the village immediately! Errr, will one of those doors made of chocolate bars suffice?"

"…Sure will."

Cutting short her worthless thoughts for just a moment, Ram looked intently at the candy house.

They actually do have to bring back some evidence, or else Subaru's infamy will not be cleared. Though it's not the kind of infamy that will be cleared by finding a single candy house.

"But you'll get your hands filthy when the chocolate melts. You won't get filthy with the pastry. Go tear off a wall or two."

"Understood! Let's do just that!"

"Wait wait! Aren't you two a bit too extreme?!"

Following the instructions of Ram who was holding her elbows, Rem rolled up her sleeves and set out to pull off a wall. There, a panicked voice and a panicked figure broke in.

The one who jumped in front of the surprised duo was a white-haired woman in a black dress.

She spread her arms wide, and while protecting the candy house from both Ram and Rem…

“My oh my, unbelievable. Who would’ve thought they’d just look at a candy house and unquestioningly start dismantling it; are kids these days all like that?”

“I would not like to be lumped into “kids these days”. The wonderful Ram and adorable Rem, are incomparable to anybody else.”

“You see that black haired kid who came by recently nibbled on it soon as he laid eyes on it too.”

“Expected no less of Subaru-kun! Rem is just impressed!”

When they looked at the spot the woman pointed out, there indeed was a dent in the wall where it had been nibbled on.

There was no other possible suspect, so just like Rem had been so moved by, it must have been Subaru. Ram, however, thought of those marks as nothing more than vulgar.

“So then? I take it you’re the owner of this candy house?”

“Yes, that is indeed the case, I am the lord of this candy house, and the evil witch of the forest.”

“Witch, is it…?”

Smiling faintly, the woman proclaimed herself to be a witch.

Being overpowered by her aura, Rem gave a small gulp.

Standing as if to protect that Rem, Ram narrowed her light pink eyes.

“I don’t like you.”

“What’s this, do you hate witches?”

“No, I don’t care about whatever it is you are, I just don’t like your face.”

“My face?!”

For some reason, when she looks at the face of the witch in front of her, a feeling wells up within her like she’s seeing her love rival of many, many years.

She thought it was quite unreasonable, but that’s just how it was.

Because—

“Nee-sama is wonderful.”

“Indeed, for Ram is Rem’s great older sister.”

“My face has presently just been spoken ill of, I wonder if I am allowed to be angry now…”

Her extended arm being held onto by Rem, Ram was in a good mood. The witch in front of those two sisters made a sulking face.

Indeed, she felt for the witch as they had been talking while ignoring her, so Ram reflected.

“You said you were a witch, right? What should we do? I take it then that we can take the house so long as we defeat you, then?”

“No you can’t?! Why are we now discussing such a violent thing like defeating me?”

“I see. Rem, seems we can’t.”

“Is- is that so? I jumped to conclusions.”

Hearing Ram’s conversation with the witch, Rem retracted the horn which had sprouted from her forehead.

The witch's cheeks stiffening for a moment while she was looking at the retracting horn, was quite striking.

"But, if that's the case, how could we obtain the candy house?"

"Isn't it quite strange that you're thinking about obtaining my house in the first place? I live here. I'll have you know. Me, and my daughter."

"You have a daughter?"

Hearing the wide eyed Rem's words, the witch replies, "That's right" with a strangely puffed out chest.

"She's a bit of a withdrawn girl, you see. Which is why I made her this candy house. Children like candy, right? With this, I'm sure she will get friends just gathering around it like ants."

"I see. So the true form of this candy house… Was a manifestation of your twisted parental love for your daughter."

"Hey you, that's quite the frightening ignorance! You should know I am usually a more frightful being!"

Whence Ram had let her pass as just a yapping annoying witch, her attention was piqued by the unexpectedly quiet Rem.

"Rem?"

"Ah, Nee-sama, look at that."

After being called out, Rem points towards the candy house. When she did, inside of the house, on the other side of the candy windows, she could see a small girl looking this way.

The girl, noticing their gazes, hurriedly closes the oblate curtains and hides.

"Why are the curtains oblates?"

"I couldn't come up with any curtain-like candy. It's edible, so I thought it'd be fine."

"More importantly, is that girl miss witch's daughter? Could I know her name?"

"—Beatrice."

When the witch answered with her daughter's name, Rem whispered it to herself, and turned towards the house.

Then—

"Miss Beatrice, would you not talk with me? My name is Rem. I would like us to be friends."

Ram, together with the witch, gazed at Rem's back as she called out to her.

"You won't join your little sister?"

"Rem is doing her best. Ram would not do such a tactless thing. Like a certain witch."

"I can feel the spite…"

Putting the witch's whispers aside, Ram truly wanted to see Rem's efforts through.

Previously, Rem used to be a more shy person, who closed herself off in her own little garden, scared of the outside world.

That that very same Rem is now trying to talk to a girl who locked herself up like that, made Ram very proud.

"The fact that Barusu was the one who made it happen, is Ram's utmost gripe."

"Nee-sama! She's not coming out at all! What should I do?"

"She came out when you ripped a wall, didn't she?"

"No she didn't?!"

Giving the waving Rem a very uncompromising means, the witch immediately rejected it.

Ram shook her head, as if to say geez, at the witch's complaint, and Rem's gaze full of expectation.

And though she didn't want to be relied on at all—

"Our worrywart eldest sister and our well put together youngest sister, we'll bring them and Barusu along too for good measure, and pry her out of there."

"We really do need Subaru-kun after all!"

"That man's worthless at all but this."

Smiling wryly at the gleamy eyed Rem, Ram met eyes with the girl inside the candy house, who peeped at the outside.

They've not even exchanged words, and yet she's decided to drag her outside, and make her Rem's friend.

"Well then, we'll be leaving for now. Keep your necks clean while you wait for us."

"That phrasing is scary. Will you be fine without a guide? It's easy to get lost in these woods…"

"Foolish question."

Shrugging her shoulders at the witch's questioning, Ram turned back towards the thick tree foliage of the forest.

Catching Rem next to her in her periphery…

"For Ram is Rem's great elder sister. There is no way she would ever do something as infantile as getting lost in the woods."

"Yes! Nee-sama is wonderful!"

Laughing at the cheerful Rem's words, she takes a bit of the candy window her little sister tore off; while nibbling on that, the two stepped into the forest.

Next time, when they bring a bigger crowd and pull out the girl who shut herself in the candy house, whatever will they make her do?

“Just when did they tear off a window?!”

Such was the shriek-like voice they heard from the witch. As they tasted the surprisingly wall-tasting candy, Ram’s lips loosened.

“Not that it’s because of the candy house, but Ram has mellowed out quite a bit, hasn’t she?”

—Though a digression, the sisters Ram and Rem headed straight back to the village, gathered up all the children there, and headed back once more for the woods.

Then, they splendidly brought out the daughter, and while she was looking at the candy house being torn to bits by the children, the witch whispered thus.

“See, told you they’d come crawling and nibble at it like ants, didn’t I?”

Re: Starting a Menu Life from Zero

—It was an event that took place in the Roswaal estate before the royal selection had yet to truly begin.

"By the way, Rem, how do you decide the menu every day?"

Speaking the question that came to her head in the moment, Emilia raised her head from the book spread atop the table, and looked at Rem who had poured her some tea.

The place was the Roswaal estate, Emilia's private room. The short period of time before the camps began activities in full, was when this question was asked during a small break from her studies.

At that question, Rem curved her well-shaped eyebrows down at the edges and said,

"How…? Do you mean the menu for dinner?"

"Hmm no, I'm not talking about just the one for dinner, there's one for breakfast and lunch too right? Occasionally Ram also steams yams but, doesn't Rem make them for the most part?"

"With all due respect, I do hope they are indeed to Emilia-sama and Subaru-kun's taste."

"Of course, they're always so yummy I end up with my cheeks all stuffed up. Subaru asks for seconds and thirds too, we're suuuper satisfied with Rem's cooking."

Putting her hands together in front of her chest, Emilia answers so while smiling widely.

The hardest worker in the mansion, Rem, was someone with her hands full with meals, cleaning and laundry. Emilia would also particularly look forward to every one of her meals, and anything

Rem made was delicious.

But, there was more to this ‘everything’ than it would seem.

“I also struggled a lot to think up a menu when I was living alone with Puck in the forest. You have to eat food everyday but Puck would always say “I’m fine with anything~”“

“Would that not be because great spirit-sama was satisfied with Emilia-sama’s cooked meals?”

“Hm, I get that, and it makes me suuuper happy. But it’s also true that I struggled to think up of a menu, and this and that are different things you know?”

“I understand your feelings. Just ‘everything’ would leave you troubled.”

Rem showed a faint wince, and Emilia leaned forward while saying, “Right?” then moving the edge of the desk away, sat atop the bed that was in the corner of the room.

Then, she patted the spot beside where she sat with a hand, as if asking Rem to sit as well.

“Heavens no, for Rem, that’d be too…”

“Nothing rude about it. Ram does this often too while taking breaks.”

“Then if Nee-sama does so as well.”

Her feelings of respect for Ram were so grand, that Rem sat next to Emilia upon hearing such persuasion. Both holding a cup of tea in hand, they sat together enjoying the aroma.

Somehow, they felt like friends close in age.

“That’s kinda weird right? Since I’m a suuuper old onee-san compared to Rem.”

“That makes me feel like when Beatrice-sama asks me to treat her like my elder.”

“Ah, that’s hard right? I mean Beatrice is so tiny and cute so… huh?”

Tilting her neck, Emilia somehow felt like she was talking about something strange.

This was about how Emilia was older so she had to act like it, so why did it become about Beatrice being small and cute?

She feels like that’s a strange connection to make.

“Ummmm…?”

“Emilia-sama, about your question of how Rem decides the Menu…”

“Eh? Ah, yeah, that’s right. It’s suuuuper hard right? Is there some trick to it?”

“Well you see, Generally, I decide based on that day’s food stocks and what is being sold in the village…”

While dropping her gace to the surface of the water of the tea in her hands, Rem tells her about her methods.

Emilia felt convinced by the contents of what she said, and when she put it like that she saw what she meant.

“In that case, I didn’t really do much shopping, so I see that I couldn’t decide the menu in that way.”

“—. I deeply apologize for making you remember such a painful memory.”

“Eh?! Not at all, it’s…not quite true to say it wasn’t painful.”

She was given a wide berth by people in the forest of her hometown no matter what she did, so it never really was an option for her was all she meant. Besides, there are ways other than trading with people to get ingredients.

For example—

“Mugging, is it?”

“Ah, you can’t do that, Rem. Don’t do something that dangerous… But occasionally, there were people who ran away from dangerous things in the forest, and left behind their belongings.”

“And that dangerous thing was…”

“Not me of course! And obviously, it wasn’t Puck either. Geez, I’m talking about hunting.”

Being teased by Rem who made a serious face, Emilia pouted. Seeing Emilia’s reaction, Rem apologized saying, “My deepest apologies,” with a small laugh then said:

“That said, hunting is it? How unexpected.”

“Is that so? Hunting while searching the forest for food?”

“No, not that…It’s that Rem also did the same when she was little. So it kind of, was unexpected that Emilia-sama and Rem would have something in common.”

“—? You mean in a good way?”

“If it would not displease Emilia-sama, then a good way.”

With rem having appended that on, Emilia nodded saying “Then, it’s fine.”

She would not think that a point in common with Rem would be a bad thing in the least. But, now suddenly, an interest in Rem’s stories of when she was little arose in her.

“I mean, Rem being little, means that Ram was also little right?”

“Yes. But, Nee-sama was perfect since she was young, thus nee-sama compared to now-…”

“Rem?”

“—Has not changed for the most part. Nee-sama, is Rem’s perfect Nee-sama.”

For a moment, she felt like she hesitated to continue but, as there was no hint of her forcing herself or lying when Rem continued on to boast about Ram, Emilia relaxed her lips too.

As they were indeed a pair of sisters that very much treasured each other.

“I suddenly remembered this while we were talking. —The first menu Rem thought up in her life, were powdered potatoes and Barbaro rabbit, with stir fried nuts”

“Wow, that seems suuuper yummy.”

“Unfortunately, I failed to make it. A great storm rained down.”

Rem answered so, her profile looking ever so slightly lonely, Emilia furrowed her brow. From how she said it just now, she got the feeling that after failing to make it when she was little, Rem had never completed that dish.

“That is suuuper regretful…”

“Emilia-sama?”

“Rem, if you’d like to, could we try making that menu you failed to do, together? Ah, I don’t actually know if there are Barbaro rabbits in the forest though…”

Suddenly standing up straight from the bed, Emilia proposed so to Rem. Hearing Emilia’s proposal, Rem said “Huh” as her eyes opened wide.

With the surprised Rem beside her, Emilia gulps up the remaining tea she was holding. While it was still a little hot, the warm fuzzy inside her chest was even hotter.

“Eh, Emilia-sama, this was a long time ago when we were children, you know? “

“Geez, I told you, right Rem? I am an onee-san much older than you, ok? So, from my point of view you’re still a child. That story of yours feels like it was just yesterday.”

Raising a finger, Emilia persuades Rem with some forced logic.

Of course, doing that won’t make the disappointment Rem felt as a child when the great storm rained down disappear. Emilia understood that—

“But it might make the reason for your sad face from just now go away. Besides, this is just my impression but… wouldn’t you have wanted Ram to eat that cooking?”

“—Why do that?”

“Hehe, I got it after thinking suuuper hard. And then, I thought of this too. That maybe that might have meant, that Ram also was looking forward to it.”

“Nee-sama, looked forward to it…”

Hanging her head at Emilia’s words, Rem reminisced about her childhood times.

Ram and Rem were surely the closest since forever. Emilia believes with no doubt that if you see how much Ram treasures Rem right now, then she also must have when they were younger.

In which case—

“If you fulfill your promise even now, Ram will also be suuuper glad!”

“…However, this evening’s dinner should be a vegetable filled cold soup that if I made Subaru will.”

“I’ll apologize to Subaru with you for that!”

Sorry to Subaru who was enthused about this evening’s menu, but her feelings for Ram took priority.

Rem’s light blue pupils begin to wander at Emilia’s persuasion, and she made a huge frown. However, after thinking it over a lot, she looked back at Emilia’s eyes and…

“Will Nee-sama, really be happy…?”

“Yes, for sure! Ram will be so happy she’ll definitely break into dance out of joy!”

“—Understood.”

Listening to Emilia’s response, the determined Rem completely drank her tea in one gulp.

“Unfortunately, there are no Barbaro rabbits. Let us procure another rabbit. Umm, it may be rude to ask this of Emilia-sama but…”

“Leave it to me! Of course, I’ll also be helping Rem”

Emilia was the first to say it, so it was only natural Emilia would be the one to help Rem.

Emilia stood up and flexed her arms, and Rem hearing her words raised her hips from the bed as well. Then bowed her head deeply and…

“Thank you very much. —I can finally fulfill my promise from that day to Nee-sama.”

“No it’s totally fine. I’m happy if Ram and Rem are getting along, and besides…”

“Besides?”

Emilia gently patted her own stomach towards Rem who had tilted her head.

It was likely because they’ve been talking about a menu the whole time.

“I suuuper wanna try that menu too now.”

—We will omit the tale of Emilia and Rem’s adventure as they headed for the forest after that.

However, the two of them, having managed to safely take down the unexpectedly tough rabbits and return, the two of them were able to feed Ram the menu she had desired so much that Rem had promised when they were young.

Ram who saw the menu seated at dinner, smiled very gently, and said:

“Powdered potatoes and Barbaro rabbit, with stir fried nuts…I’m so happy.”

She seemed so so very happy that her promise with her younger sister from those days of youth had finally been fulfilled.

Emilia and Rem laughed together as their efforts had bore fruit.

Then—

“Huh? Today we were going to have cold vegetable soup didn’t-…”

“Geez! Subaru, don’t be so selfish!”

“I’m the one getting scolded?!”

Such disappointed-seeming Subaru’s whines, were once again a story for another time.

Malice Before the Theater

1

Clangs of chains spiritedly resounded.

A clear sky overhead, the plashes of water tickling one's eardrums affirmed the hospitability brought by the waterways dispersed across this great city. Perhaps the very refreshness promulgated by the water's flow was the source of the clearness in the hearts of the people residing in this Watergate City.

“Yes, yes, surely that is also connected to this delightful song.”

Varnishing over the ambient notes of the chains' clangs and water's plashes, was a song echoing across the entire city—the broadcast enounced through the Meteor stationed at the City Hall, jolted the emotions of all hearers without choice.

The song inescapable even to plugged ears succored the days of the city's residents.

“I imagine the both of you also adore this song, yes?”

Whilst listening to the magnificent song, she turned her head around and addressed the two behind. Nestled there next to each other were a young boy and girl, their petite frames shuddering upon that enquiry.

Both of them teetered at about seven to eight years of age, the age of childhood. Their large, round eyes and florid cheeks were an incantation that spontaneously tickled instinctive protectiveness. Children should be adorable. The two who seemed considerably close with one another, hugged each other as to not be separated, a valiant sight—truly, wonderful.

“—A deed of Love, isn't it.”

The sweet bond made excitement bolt down her spine, she inadvertently charged her breath with heat.

She firmly reprimanded herself that this was wrong. When the two were already laded with worry after being taken to this unpopular alleyway, she'd frighten them further with that attitude.

The two huddling together were the main guests for an incredibly, incredibly important ceremony.

"Thank you, my apologies."

"—~hk."

"Ah, you need not be so afraid. I am not thinking of anything so terrible as wanting to torment the two of you. It's just that looking at you two, I was suddenly reminded of my past… the beginning of the love between my husband and I. Wow, I'm so embarrassed."

Palms on her cheeks, she shook her head, writhing from her bittersweet old memories. —Her and her husband's meeting had truly been an act of destiny.

The hand of that person proffered to her amidst the abyss of death, showed hope and despair to her self, for whom it was natural to be oppressed and trodden upon, appeased her lacerated body with blessedness and misfortune.

Life was both sour and sweet, and what her husband bestowed upon her was Life itself.

"What can I describe that as, if not Love? Both of you would agree, yes? My apologies, thank you."

When she apologized for making them listen to her loving recollections, the young boy and girl hugged each other harder. With tears sojourning their eyes, they peered at her as though praying upon every single one of her actions.

It resembled faith stemming from affection, coming across even as unconditional acceptance—.

"—One of you."

"Huh…?"

"One of you… yes, either one of you is fine. My program that will happen in the city's plaza after this, my act of affirmation of Love, could I ask for your cooperation in that?"

Smiling as to comfort them, she candidly communicated her intent. Using all words necessary to ensure there were no misunderstandings was incredibly important. The disparity between emotions or thoughts, was unmistakably the most lamentable tragedy of this world.

The connection between this young boy and young girl ought to be esteemed and treasured. —With just the most convenient physique to carry, and yet a loving couple was a fairly lucky draw.

No matter right or wrong, she wanted to choose one of these two to cooperate.

And—

"For the both of you to raise your hand, you must be truly close, yes. But, thank you, very sorry? The boy was just a very teensy bit faster, so I applaud your bravery~."

Clapping her hands, she indulged in the Love of the two who had volunteered at about the same time. Pronouncing a "Well then", she then offered her hand to the brave young boy.

As she smiled,

"Bearer of incredibly marvelous Love, what is your name? Ah, I am —"

2

"Huh? I thought it was just some decrepit building looking at it from the outside, but it's rather refined from the inside."

Enunciating so, with the hem of his long, white robes waving, a white haired man stridently surveyed the building's interiors.

Like the man had spoken, the stone structure's age exceeded a century, but by virtue of prudent care and maintenance it did not give an antediluvian impression. The building was structured to be a cathedral—a place only to bring prayer and blessing, boding an apprehensible air of solemnity.

Furthering that impression above all else was a beautiful engraving limned on one of the inner walls. Graved were perhaps the Three Heroes spoken of through generations in the Kingdom of Lugunica, the Divine Dragon, the Sage and the Sword Saint—

"But, it's just this artwork that's unacceptable. An identical one is also carved behind coins, but even if they get themselves some bigshot name like the Three Heroes I'm sure they're just a horde who'd be powerless before me. For this bunch to be venerated, ignorant individuals oblivious to what's genuine are pitiable."

Gazing up towards that engraving, the man grumbled his impressions devoid of any respect. Her ears unwittingly trembled for an instant, and she faintly held her breath.

"What? Judging from that reaction, do you mean to disagree with my thought?"

As usual, the man overlooking of not even the slightest of her reactions plunged into displeasure, and the diligent and composed woman calmly lowered her head, not letting any of her internal trepidation show on her visage.

"—My apologies. I merely thought that even those revered as legends in the kingdom would stand to be nothing before Husband-sama."

"Say, you don't need to be awestruck by each and every obvious thing. You knew that from the beginning. I possess all things needed. I am an unselfish and perfected being. Any lizard inflated in size or hubris in swordsmanship has no basis to be compared with me to begin with."

"…"

“Yet, to compare me to a horde of that sort, is to doubt my way of life that happens to be perfect and bearing no connection to any flaws. Actually, it’s much more so an act of looking down upon me. That blasphemes my very existence, and is an infringement of my rights. I don’t think I can quite turn a blind eye to that.”

Prattling on with his substanceless talk, the man continued to add to reasons he was giving himself to be angered about. As his irrational fury accrued, the woman made no unneeded rebuttals.

Rebuttals were futile. She shall do nothing but await the storm of ire to pass. —Just as ordinary people could do nothing but pray before genuine genius, the woman hung her head low, when the man’s hand about reached her as he pronounced a “Sa∼y”.

“—Husband-sama, there is something I wish to enquire about.”

Interposing her voice there was a different woman, discernible through the entrance of the church. Though immediately sensing the tense atmosphere inside the church, the woman stiffened her cheeks—

“I was speaking just now??!!”

“—. My apologies. But, there is something that necessitated your judgement, Husband-sama… regarding the choice of the bride’s dress.”

“…Dress. Ah, the dress. I see I see, that’s certainly right. The garb that the new bride shall wear. Even in spite of being my wives, that is not something I can make you choose.”

It was apparent that the emotions nearing eruption withered away upon hearing a reason enough to intercede his mouth. As the man fidgeted his bangs with his upraised hand, asked “Where’s the dress?”,

“I’d like to choose by looking at the real thing. Besides, I have to coordinate my attire with it as well, you know? To be honest, I don’t think weddings are something one does frequently, but I must attune to the bride’s sentiments as well.”

As the man started an alacritous walk with a self-indulgent spiel, the imperilled women beside him exchanged glances, intently congealing their expressions and cognized anew of each other's circumstance. That they and so many other women, were birds inside this white man's cage—.

"You all are truly fortunate. There's no knowing what you would've been put through had you been found by people other than myself. In that regard, the conditions I correspondingly seek from you are quite extraordinary, don't you think? After all, I am—"

3

"From what we heard, it seems like the Sin Archbishops besides us have also come to the town?"

"Huh, condolences to this town's people then. If it's just us then that's still something, but if guys like Regulus or Sirius, and even Mama on top of that have shown up then hell would be more preferable anywa~y."

"To begin with, us coming together only happened to be the direction of the Gospel by chance anyway, isn't it."

"That's right that's right. But, a large city's great ~tsu! How nice ~tsu! Old and young and men and women, human and demi-human, as far as the eye goes it's all up for plucking you know ~tsu!"

"Heyhey, it's totally pointless to interfere in our ways of eating so we won't do that bu~t… stop with the nonchalant all-you-can-eat oka~y? If not…"

"We know we do know. If we do it till we're full, then your side of ingredients will disappear is what you want to say, right? We know, we know. We know bu~t."

"—First come first served, don't say that up against us would you? Something like that is fruitless for us. Isn't that right? Surely that is right, certainly that is right, because that is right, because that needs to be right ~tsu! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu!"

“…That being said, you’re aware of who loses out the most when we eat competing together, ri~ght?”

“Yeah, we know. We sure do know. We know and so we won’t. On top of that, we also know who benefits the most when we eat competing together.”

“A~h, that’s true too. True true. Who will benefit the most other than us, it’s…”

““The other Sin Archbishops.””

“A~haha~, that’s absolutely intolerable, isn’t it. For that horde to be satisfied, that is one thing that just cannot be overlooked other than diet. That, belongs to us.”

“Won’t let even Mama impede on our meal. Meals are important. For we, for us, and for that child as well—”

“That’s right, that’s indeed right, that’s certainly right ~tsu! That is why we are—”

“We know, we do know, we indeed know ~tsu! That is why we are —”

4

“Hey hey, uncle, how do you reach the City Hall?”

“Oh, are you lost? Perfect. The City Hall happens to be my workplace. I’ll guide you to it if that’s fine with you.”

“Wow, really? Thank you, uncle. I’m glad you’re a kind person, uncle—”

“…Just kidding, I got you with that heartwarming exchange~!”

Upon that shrill proclamation of the petite girl capturing the attention of all those around, the eyes of Garek Thompson rounded as he walked to the City Hall alongside the young girl. He was aghast by the Transfiguration of the girl midway through their journey to the City Hall. It was not something in the realm of a changed attitude or person. The young girl had, verbatim, metamorphosed into Someone Else.

“Truly, this lovely lady was taken aback by your insanely deficient sense of danger! If it’s a cute little girl you’re gonna defend her no-questions-asked? Every single guy thinks they can do whatever they want with a small girl through brute force so they’re all too imprudent.”

Features that despite metamorphosing could still be labelled as cute, distorted with cruelty and spewed vituperation impossible to bear hearing, to which Garek remained lost for words.

He momentarily opened his mouth to refute her jeers, but was what he ought to do at this place to correct the young girl’s conduct, this impractical vexation restrained him.

Consequently—

“Little girl, this is everyone’s important workplace. So, making a scene like this is—”

“And, found one sense-of-danger-deficient fool as this lovely lady had mentioned!”

On one hand was the taciturn, frozen Garek, and in his stead one of the workers there approached the young girl to reprimand her words.

And thereafter, in the moment that followed, was assailed by a side-swiping impact, blown away.

The worker, blown away so effortlessly as though a weightless doll, swept into the work desks and ornamental plants and embroiled the other workers before collapsing onto the floor. That spectacle was an agonizing sight akin to the occasional crash of dragon carriages, but nobody could vocalize a scream.

That was because an impact greater than the one just earlier, clogged the throats of everyone with a baffling fright.

“Well well well? How heartlessly cold for nobody to go and help. Even if you are animals wonderstruck by this lovely lady and forcibly pressed back, you’re men? All the female creatures around, this is the perfect chance to rush over to that slumped fellow and show off your femininity. Go on, now, I’m telling you to go!”

Her temper flaring with her speech, the young girl swung both of her arms—two gigantic beast’s arms unbalanced on her petite frame, and began to wreak havoc on the City Hall’s parlour with the entirety of her might. The floor and walls smashed, and witnessing the chairs and desks about thrown into the air, Garek screeched a “Sto~p!”.

The engrossed Garek then vaulted onto the young girl with large, beastial arms,

“You must stop! All this… just what, are you?”

“Wow, so passionate. Are you feeling liable that you made a mistake by bringing this lovely lady here? If that’s the case, then this compassionate, merciful lovely lady shall award that guilt.”

“What, are… ararararararar.”

Even when grappled, the girl’s sadistic expression wavered naught. Instead, Garek who seized hold of her felt an abnormal heat in his body, and his voice trembled.

The unanticipated turn of events made his heart race—moreover, he felt his blood simmer.

“This lovely lady just happened to need at least one cool manservant for herself.”

Even the way he heard the voice of the girl whispered into his ears altered from the way it had been just a few moments ago, and he realised his perception of the world transform alongside the height of his vision.

Screeches and roars submerged the City Hall, and Garek discerned they were not directed at only the girl but also himself, whilst he flapped the Wings he was unacquainted with.

He had no clue, what was happening. But simply, only the faces of his wife, who saw him off to work per usual, and his two children surfaced in his mind.

“Just what, are, you… ~hk.”

“Amazing amazing, you can still chatter? If that’s so, you must be given one reward, that sort of thing. This lovely lady is—”

5

—Clangoring the reports of golden chains, before the shivering boy and girl the enigma in bandages smiled.

“Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Wrath, Sirius Romanée-Conti.”

—The hem of his long robes waving, with his wives bearing congealed expressions towed in company, the white-haired ruffian smiled.

“Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Greed, Regulus Corneas.”

—Avowing no hindrances in each other’s meal, the blasphemers of Gourmet and Bizarre Eating scorned each other and smiled.

“Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Ley Batenkaitos.”

“Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Gluttony, Roy Alphard.”

—Lusciously listening to the resonating roars and screeches ecstatically, with a bewitching glint in her eyes the monster smiled.

“Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Lust, Capella Emerada Lugunica.”

Bound to deliver a wretchedly disastrous spectacle to the Watergate City Priestella, were these atrocious villains.

Those who were originally never supposed to gather had gathered, and in order to fulfil their respective avarice, each would employ their own repulsive techniques and Authorities, and plunge the pristine city into a crucible of chaos.

Even within the long history of the Kingdom of Lugunica, the only precedent for such a dreadful situation harkened all the way back to the era of Witches—.

Within the city on track to be trampled by such an atrocious bunch, also were present those with an unceasing will to oppose them.

The good and the evil were clear, justice and villainy evident, no hesitation necessary to make the distinction between lux and nox, those two camps would clash against one another in a battle to determine the Watergate City’s tomorrow, and the rising of the curtain, was nigh—.

Twitter Short Story

Emilia: “Hey, Subaru! Big news! The official Re:Zero Tweeter account has reached fifty thousand fowllowers! …Can you explain what it means?”

Subaru: “No way, that’s great! You know, this is a big deal, Emilia-tan!”

Emilia: “Oh really? This is a good thing?”

Subaru: “50,000 followers… In other words, this is the number of people who’ve fallen in love with you, Emilia-tan! This many followers would make an incredible reinforcement troupe for the upcoming royal selection! The influence of anime is amazing, huh? This means that our E.M.T circle is growing! The pen IS mightier than the sword!”

Emilia: “Sorry, but you’ve lost me…”

Felt: “…You two are makin’ quite the racket, what are you guys up to?”

Subaru: “Hey, Felt. You got here just on time. There’s something we want to tell you…”

Emilia: “Hee-Hee. The Re:Zero Tweeter account now has 50,000 fowllowers. We’re reaaally surprised by it all.”

Felt: “You sound just like a kid that wants to use a word she’s just learned. I don’t know what this Twitter thing is, but who is doing what, where, and how?”

Emilia: “Um…Where? Who? How?”

Subaru: “Stop that! You’re making Emilia-tan’s head spin with all your questions! Look, Twitter is a community tool that exists in a cyber world.”

Emilia: spluttering

Felt: “Look what you’ve done! You’ve overcomplicated this and now there’s smoke coming out of Emilia’s ears!”

Subaru: “Uh-oh… But you know, Twitter is a really great… Never mind! It’ll be faster if I show you instead! Here, take a look at this metia!”

Emilia: “Wow, there are so many moving pictures and words! How jaunty.”

Subaru: “Um, we don’t really use that word nowadays… Anyway, this metia can be connected to Twitter which can connect you to lots of other people.”

Felt: “Huh. Look, it sounds really great and all… But what’s the point of it?”

Subaru: “It’s important to connect with others, even for you, Felt. If you had to go looking for the whereabouts of Old Man Rom, wouldn’t it be easier for you if you could ask around at the press of your fingertips than to physically search for him?”

Felt: “What kind of analogy is that! Anyway, I’ve noticed that you’ve become pretty attentive to Emilia lately…”

Emilia: “Oh, I would like to say hi to all the people who have become my fowllowers. It’s reaaally amazing and a lot to take in with 50,000 fowllowers, but I’ll do my best on Tweeter!”

Subaru: “Look at that face! E.M.T! But that’s a big job, it’ll take you three days to say hi to everyone.”

Emilia: “I guess that means I should reaaally hurry and get to it. I’ll work hard at it!”

Subaru: “You’re so adorable! I want to cheer you on, but the metia’s battery is about to die! Argh! This is so annoying!”

Felt: “You’ve made a huge deal out of this, and in the end you just want to say hi to them? Good grief!”

Martyr’s Death

—It was a dark place, filled with a gloomy feeling.

It was full of frigid, stagnant air. The walls glowed a faint blue, and an strange wind blew that felt both damp and dry. That was most likely an atmosphere molded to the views of those that dwelt here.

“…”

In the area shown by thin, blue-white light, a sound endlessly resonated. A sound like something being pulled along the ground; a sound like fingernails grating on a solid wall, a sound that was dissonant and disturbing to hear. Sometimes, lost in that sound, the sound of water was mixed as well.

“…ku…Aah, Aah, AaaaaAh”

Listening carefully, the water noise could be discerned as the sound of drops striking a floor, and at the same time, the sound of someone rubbing their nose—the voice of someone crawling on the floor, sobbing, could be faintly heard.

“Why, why… why has this happened to youuuuu?”

The sobbing voice was painfully to hear and high-pitched, sounding like the wings of numberless insects. Along with the rising emotion, little by little the voice added color and grief to the cold space. The endless wailing, sobbing that seemed to be dragging one down to hell, and—

“Say, would you mind cutting that out, please? If you keep on weeping like that, it’s honestly going to get bothersome, you know?”

That voice, from an entirely different direction, and even a different gender, drifted down. The new voice made no attempt to conceal it’s disdain and contempt. It seemed less like a voice meant for a weeping, grieving companion, and more like jeers thrown without mercy.

“It’s not like I don’t understand that you’re in pain, you know? I didn’t have any fond memories of him, but it’s not like I feel happy that he died; someone like that ought to have at least one person who’s sad that he died, I think. Look, I’m as generous as anyone else. Even a guy who had the wrong idea about hands deserves the right to be recognized that much; I have enough sense to agree with that.”

“…”

“But, you know… For something that’s just… can we call it an obligation? Because of that, for a companion you once taught… to go on crying in my face like that, it’ll start to ruin my mood too, you see. Do you understand? Normally, that’s the sort of thing you should take into consideration. It’s just the bare minimum of consideration for the feelings of those around you, that’s how things ought to be. Carrying on crying in front of everyone, that might feel good for the one that’s crying, but it’s a real nuisance for everyone else. Even the one who died, it’s like you’re tarnishing their honor after they died, isn’t it? Not like I care, though.”

“…”

“Pushing your feelings onto me… look, that’s what it is, right? Others go ahead and cry or get angry, and suddenly you feel like you’ve woken up. I’d like to have that experience sometime. With you crying like that, isn’t it like you’ve robbed everyone else of their right to feel sad? Really, if I happened to somehow be in a position to feel sad that he died, did you think about that? You didn’t, did you? That sort of thing… it’s an intrusion into my personal right to feel as I wish, don’t you agree?”

Unwillingly at first, then indiscriminately, with gradually increasing liveliness, that voice arranged a long, long string of depressing words for it’s crying companion. The words at the end were angry, an inevitable explosion of gloomy feelings. Regardless—

“Indeed, if this wasn’t a conversation over mirrors, you would be in pieces by now. I really think you ought to be grateful to me that it didn’t turn out like that.”

“…”

“Aah, not that I need the thanks. I’m quite satisfied with the modest happiness I have from day to day. Even holding on to the things I wasn’t happy to receive, I have no intention of causing unnecessary trouble. I’m just living the simple life here, passing time with my beloved wives.”

The voice continued as it pleased, and then finally cut off the conversation there. Except, just before the conversation ended—

“Number 122. Just now, you looked frightened, didn’t you?” it said, showing it had completely shifted its focus from the conversation. Just after that, as a sound of incredible destruction rang out, the mirror signal cut off. What happened on the other side of the mirror was unknown. There was no need to know.

“…No one, no one no one no one, cares that you died. Why, why is it? Why is it so? You did so much, you did so much for me, you worked yourself to the bone, only for me, you shed so much blood.”

Scratching at the floor, the shadow ceased crying and stood up. Both arms hung limply, the nails were peeled off, and blood dripped from pitiful wounds. But, the shadow was unconcerned. Instead, it simply pressing a blood-stained finger to it’s cheek—the bandages wrapped around the cheek were vividly stained with blood.

“Everyone, everyone is forgetting you. Everyone is putting you in the past. It’s unforgivable. It’s absolutely unforgivable.”

With glittering, abnormally opened, bloodstained amethyst eyes, it stared straight ahead. There, an oddly colorful thing in this gloomy place—was an altar, of sorts.

Considering the situation of the shadow, the existence of the altar was certainly no surprise. Originally, the shadow’s position was that of worshipping a certain entity. But, what should have been on the altar was unrelated to that position, and at the same time, no less horrible.

The boxes decorating the strange altar all gave off a different impression.

“Your nails. Your hair. Your bones, flesh and blood, spirit and everything else.”

Walking to the altar, the shadow opened the lids of the boxes.

Simultaneously, a clear odor mixed into the strange air filling the space. A horrible smell, that someone with normal nerves would turn their head and immediately flee from—the shadow inhaled it with a desolate expression.

The boxes were greedily upended. The shadow licked everything that fell from them, and took everything into itself. Enduring beyond endurance, breaking the taboo it had resisted by willpower alone, mixing the contents of the boxes with itself.

“—thank you, I’m sorry. With this, you and I can be one.”

Entranced, without the outbursts from before, the shadow whispered only that.

The boxes were hurled away. Tumbled on the floor, they suddenly burst into flame. The flames caught on the altar as well, and the scenery in the cave that could not be seen in the dim light before, was vividly revealed.

—Countless bones were arranged on the altar.

There were dried corpses, wrapped in vestments, as well. There were more than any sane person would want to count. Things that a certain entity had inhabited, then discarded were, by and large, gathered here.

All of them were consumed in the flames, and suddenly vanished, along with the terrible scent. In the space lit by the swaying flames, the shadow—a phantom wrapped in bandages, swiftly began walking.

It turned its back to the altar, to the smoldering remains of its loved one, without any sign of concern. After all, there was no need. Such things are unnecessary.

It was going to reclaim that person, after all. Someday, as it was itself lifted up from hell, it would do the same.

“—Please wait for me. I will never say I’ve lost you.”

After all,

“Because you are my dear, dear, most beloved—Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.”

Glossary

Out Of (convenience store)

Subaru: They said we'd be doing glossary explanations, and we start with a silly convenience store from my old world?

Emilia: What's a… convenience store?

Subaru: It's a handy little store with most things you need for everyday life lined up on the shelves. Out Of is a major chain with stores opened up all over the country. There were two of them within two hundred meters of my house, and it felt like they were eating into each other's business. I understand the strategy of trying to be dominant, but isn't that overdoing it?

Emilia: Um, I'm not really sure what you're talking about, but I'm sure you've got it just right.

Demi-humans – Demi-human Species – Demi-human Tribes

Subaru: From the mental image I have, I'd think of those as non-human humanoid races, but is that about right?

Emilia: Mhmm, that's more or less exactly it. Famous demi-human tribes include elves and dwarves. Giants and pygmies. The beastmen are divided into the beastmen tribes and the half-beastman tribes. When you include the half-blooded as well, there's rea~lly lots of them.

Subaru: From a quick look at the capital, I'd have to say it felt like the humans were the most common. It looked like the demi-humans and the humans were living together, but are there conflicts between the species now and then?

Emilia: There are different relations between the demi-humans and the humans depending on the country, is what I've heard. They're coexisting in Lugunica now, but it seems there was a civil war between the demi-humans and the humans a little while ago. It affects me too, but… I hope I can help reduce that sort of misunderstanding.

Royal Selection (Choosing the Throne)

Subaru: Having the royal family's bloodline wiped out really just stinks of a dangerous conspiracy or something.

Roswaal: They made sure to look into that ve~ry carefully, so there's no mistake. Making it look like an illness… is also a line of thought that was considered before coming to this conclusion. Everyone in the royal family truly passed away without any shady dealings behind it.

Subaru: That's an extremely polite way to say you're sure if it. … Regardless, it's thanks to that that Emilia-tan gets a try at it. And since it's called a selection…

Roswaal: Well of cou~rse, there are other candidates as well. Every one of them is filled to the brim with a drive to make the throne their own. Aha~, this is going to be fun, isn't it?

Subaru: At the very least, Emilia-tan and I feel nothing but unease over that smile on your face right now.

The Royal Capital Lugunica

Subaru: The most important city in the Kingdom of Lugunica… the largest city, and it also happens to be the place where I was first summoned.

Reinhard: The capital's population is roughly three hundred thousand people. However, that's only the number of permanent residents, and with the number of people entering and leaving the capital, taking a precise count is difficult.

Subaru: Incidentally, if you look at the entire Kingdom of Lugunica, around how many people live there?

Reinhard: The population of the entire country is said to be around five hundred thousand. However, this, too, is not a number that was accurately gathered by travelling to the different territories. It's the sum of the numbers drawn from the lords of the various lands; however, due to the possibility that in some areas it's been inflated for tax collection purposes, perhaps it's not reliable.

Subaru: I wasn't expecting to hear about the dark side of the capital here…

Kadomon's Fruit Store

Subaru: This store belongs to 'Mister Save Point'. Since I get pulled back here for some reason when I "Return by Death", when I think that maybe he was the starting point for "Return by Death", it freaks me out a little.

Kadomon: Quit yer mumblin'. If yer not gonna buy an appa, get lost already.

Emblem

Subaru: It's a badge-like thing in the shape of a winged dragon that has a red jewel in its mouth.

Felt: That's the one that I got asked to go steal, from the silver-haired girl. If things hadn't gone south afterwards I could have traded it for holy gold coins… Damn, I really messed up.

Subaru: But if you'd made that work, doing it would have been a crime against the royal family. It's the qualification to participate in the Royal Selection, so all the guards in the capital would have been in a frenzy searching for it.

Felt: …So that means it wasn't gonna work out either way, then? Damn it all!

The Forbidden Library

Subaru: There's a painful rumor that this is what the little girl who's a shut-in at the Roswaal mansion calls her room.

Beatrice: Do you want to be blown away, I suppose? Closed off from other spaces by Betty's "Door Crossing"; that's the Forbidden Library, you know. Connecting to only one of the doors in the mansion, the connected door is continually changing.

Subaru: And despite all that, I can find it pretty easily.

Beatrice: You’re just too odd, you know! Normally, it shouldn’t be that easy… Ah, it’s infuriating, I suppose!

Contracts

Subaru: If you don’t trust me, I don’t mind writing it down in a document. It can be used as evidence at the trial later.

Beatrice: Rather than putting it on paper, tie it with your soul. In this world, that’s how contracts are thought of, I suppose.

Subaru: Tying it with your soul sounds so cool. You tie yourself to it, is how you think of it, right?

Beatrice: Ignoring that and moving on, demi-humans and beings related to magic view them seriously. With older races and spirits in particular, you can think of it as something that’s sure to come up, I suppose.

Subaru: They were saying that Emilia-tan and Puck are bound together by a contract or something, too.

Beatrice: And what a regrettable thing that is, you know. If only there wasn’t a contract between Bubby and that girl, I’d peel him away from her by force, and never let him leave my side, I suppose…

Subaru: What are you talking about all dreamily, you loli? Scary.

Gate

Subaru: It’d be alright to think of this as an organ that magic users require to use magic, wouldn’t it?

Rem: Yes, although since it’s not something you can see with your eyes, perhaps the term ‘organ’ isn’t quite correct. It gathers in mana from the atmosphere, converts it into magic, and then releases it back out. That is its function.

Subaru: Superior magic users have more and larger gates. Roswaal is probably abnormal, though

Rem: As a magic user, Roswaal-sama has been blessed by the world. Nee-sama, Emilia-sama, and Rem are above average, and Subaru-kun is below average. No, well below average.

Subaru: We didn't really need that comment about 'well below', did we?! I get it already; you don't have to say it out loud!

Sword Saint

Subaru: From what I've heard, it's a really grandiose title, and it really resonates with my hyperactive imagination.

Reinhard: I'm honored that you've taken a liking to it, but for me personally, it feels like I'm still far too inexperienced to bear the title. The title of Master Swordsman that's been handed down from one generation to the next, that is.

Subaru: I remember you cutting a building and the sky in half, but that's still not enough? Were the Master Swordsmen of history nothing but monsters like that?

Reinhard: It's said that the first Master Swordsman used only a single sword when facing off with a dragon. That sword has been passed down to me as well, but frustratingly, I'm not able to draw it at will. When not even a sword will recognize me as such, isn't it presumptuous to call myself the Master Swordsman?

Subaru: Well, the way I see it, you can only think of it as the sword asking too much.

Satella

Subaru: Um, so I'm pretty sure they said she's the "Witch of Envy"…

Emilia: I'm sorry, I don't want to talk about this.

Beatrice: Even speaking the name of the abominable witch is offensive, I suppose.

Rem: Please don’t disappoint Rem by speaking of it so lightly.

Ram: It’s probably meaningless to expect that kind of delicacy from Barusu, though.

Subaru: What’s with everyone ganging up on me…

Return by Death

Subaru: Just like it says, it’s the power to rewind time by dying, returning to a specific point and redoing the world.

Ram: Indeed Barusu, your helplessness has finally spread through your entire body, hasn’t it.

Subaru: Will you quit patting me on the shoulder with a sad face like you’re trying to console me?! I can talk about it since this is sort of a meta discussion, but even I don’t know why I have this ability! It would have been so nice to get some kind of simple cheat that made me super-strong!

Ram: Be that as it may, the way that your hasty judgement won’t allow you to see anything but a dim future is really the thing that makes you a Barusu, Barusu. All hail “Return by Death”, indeed.

Subaru: Damn it, I can’t deny that… just you wait. One day, the promise of my future will triumph!

The Great Waterfall

Subaru: Further east beyond the furthest east; I was told that’s the sort of phrase that makes people snicker at you.

Puck: The Great Waterfall, you see, is the waterfall that falls from the edge of the world. At the end of the continent, when you go to the brink of the world, the sea is cut off and there’s a waterfall that never ends. It’s the end of this world, and if you were to fall in there, not even the spirits know where you would disappear to.

Subaru: That’s pretty scary. I get it. That’s why people laugh at you when you say you come from beyond the Great Waterfall. That Reinhard jerk, I guess he was actually making fun of me after all…

Puck: It's even said that only the dragons know what lies beyond the Great Waterfall, after all. Although they clearly exist, dragons don't have any lairs, and it's said that they have a paradise all to themselves on the other side of the waterfall, and occasionally, they come to this continent to stretch their wings.

Subaru: Just like it says, it's a vacation to spread your wings; I can't put it very well, don't laugh!

Loothouse

Subaru: It's where all the items gathered by the capital's light-fingered good-for-nothings are collected, in a good-for-nothing cave.

Rom: Don't put it like that; you're making it sound bad. It's a good-for-nothing central office.

Subaru: Changing what you call it doesn't change what it is! How long have you been involved in that kind of work?

Rom: It's been since I came to live at the capital, so… I guess it's been fourteen, fifteen years, then? It's been quite a while, even for me… I probably won't be able to wander around that area again for a while.

Subaru: Please take this opportunity to look for an honest job. It'd probably help get Felt's light-fingered habits under control.

Rom: You talk a lot for someone who knows nothing…

The Natsuki Family

Subaru: Pops and mom and me, a family of three. Since the eldest son, me, was transported here, I guess the family tree ends there.

Emilia: D… don't say such sad things. Come now, Subaru, maybe you'll have a new little brother or little sister born, right?

Subaru: That's not even a joke, and it scares me. Once they've realized I'm gone, it seems like they'd feel free to start producing siblings for me, and it scares me. I don't want to imagine my parents having that kind of plan!

Emilia: But I’m sure they’re worried about you. …I hope you’ll be able to set their minds at ease soon.

Subaru: …I don’t know about that. Maybe things are actually more comfortable for them without me around.

Emilia: Subaru…

Subaru: There’s no way that’s true. No one should know that better than I do.

Bubby

Beatrice: Bubby is wonderful… Bubby’s fluffy fur has Betty’s heart in a grip that will never let go, I suppose. He’s so furry it’s a sin, you know…

Puck: Hehe, that’s because my fur never misses being brushed daily by Lia’s own hand. I always want to look my best when I’m out in public; it’s expressing that, myep.

Beatrice: Oh Bubby, you’re just too much, I suppose… Betty is all aflutter, you know.

Puck: Honestly, Betty, you really are someone who enjoys being pampered.

Subaru: You’re getting off-track right from the start, you flirters! This is the start of the second half of the glossary, right?!

Half-elf

Subaru: A mixture of elf and human blood… that’s the right idea, isn’t it? I was wondering, are there any halves from species other than humans and elves?

Emilia: Um, hmm… I wonder. I’m not really sure, but normally when people say half, they’re talking about a child born from a human and an elf. And as for their numbers, there’s almost none of them.

Subaru: As far as the circumstances around that go, it feels like they're probably complicated in a lot of ways.

Emilia: They're not really… thought well of. That's why having someone treat me like you do, Subaru, is rea~lly precious and… mhmm, it saves me.

Subaru: If my ignorance can be useful to you off-screen, I couldn't hope for anything more.

Bowel Hunter

Subaru: …Is this a topic that we really need to dig into deeply?

Elsa: It's alright if you don't want to worry about it. I don't think that I'm well understood, or that I would want to be, after all.

Subaru: This is the nickname for the person who's standing proudly atop my kill counter. Even speaking about it from outside the story, it sort of feels like my sliced guts are aching.

Elsa: I'm certainly hoping to get a good look at them next time, so please take good care of your guts.

Subaru: This is the least happy I've been to have someone speak kindly to me in my entire life.

Shut-In

Subaru: Day and night, in order to defend the peace of mind of the family who comes home tired out, these warriors sacrifice their own futures and fight on. Their only solace comes from moments spent with their loves on the other side of the monitor.

Emilia: Somehow, it sounds like a re~ally difficult job… Were you a shut-in as well, Subaru?

Subaru: Ahem

Emilia: ? Hmm? Did I say something wrong?

Magic Stone

Subaru: This refers to rocks that accumulate mana, that contain a bit of magical power… I think. For heating water in the bathing room, and as tools in the kitchen, it seems they're used quite frequently.

Ram: They're closely tied into the foundations of life, indeed. Magic stones themselves are clumps of pure, colorless mana, but by adding properties to it from the outside, you can make it useful in various ways. Like the magic lights that illuminate the night in the capital, there are many settings where they are essential. It's just…

Subaru: It's fine for the capital and urban areas, but they're not able to be supplied to the countryside and the corners of the nation, I take it? Well, even in the slums, I didn't see anything along these lines; it's not hard to imagine that that sort of dilemma would come up.

Reinhard: It's unpleasant that the only thing I can say is I wish it was better. I'm always wishing that I was able to do more for the places that people live. …I'm ashamed of my inability to do enough.

Witchbeasts

Subaru: Ah, so you do have this sort of thing. Creatures that are treated this way, sort of like monsters.

Roswaal: When you say monsters… I'm no~t really su~re what you mean, but mabeasts are ge~nerally thought of as artificial life that is instinctively fixated on bringing harm to people.

Subaru: Artificial life… you mean the skills to create life and such exist in this world?!

Roswaal: Maybe I misspoke a li~ttle. I did say artificial, but they weren't brought forth by people. They were given birth by none other than the witch. Life that was created by the hand of the witch, to bring harm to people, is what we refer to as mabeasts. Their forms are close to beasts that already exist, bu~t every mabeast has a horn, so it's easy to be sure what you're looking at. That's setting aside a few exceptions, of cou~rse.

Subaru: The witch… the witch, huh. I guess you're not going to tell me the details of that?

Roswaal: That carries over into the next part of the glossary, doe~sn't it?

Witches

Subaru: I got beat up pretty good last time when we were talking about the "Witch of Envy".

Puck: I think you might say that the witch is the sort of enemy of humanity that goes down in the history books. Generally, when you say witch, it means the "Witch of Envy", but to someone familiar with the old world like me, there were six other witches as well. If you asked if I knew them… well, I guess it's sort of like I didn't.

Subaru: I read a little in passing about the "Witch of Envy" in a fairy tale. She's universally recognized as an object of fear by this world, isn't she. They're still really afraid of her, aren't they?

Puck: She didn't entirely perish, after all. In a shrine in eastern Lugunica, near the Great Waterfall, the "Witch of Envy" is sealed even now. So, the time when everyone can rest peacefully really hasn't come.

Subaru: Wow, that's… one long-lived witch.

The Witch Cult

Subaru: A word that's been applied to insane, baseless rumors. As for what it means… I think I can give a vague guess.

Rem: Is that so? Please explain.

Subaru: It's because just before this, everyone was saying all kinds of bad things about mabeasts and the witch. The witch cult has gotta be some kinda group that reveres the witch or something. From the way you overreacted, Rem, I can tell that they're a malicious, famous bunch.

Rem: For you to know that much… you really must be involved with them, Subaru-kun…

Subaru: That conclusion leads to a bad end no matter what I say, so cut it out! This is just the sort of thing anyone could figure out!

Mana

Subaru: You hear it a lot in games and such, the name that’s always used for a mysterious, invisible particle.

Beatrice: I’m not sure what you’re going on about all of a sudden, but I’ll ignore it and move ahead, I suppose. Mana is the basic element of magical power, that’s mixed into the atmosphere… more or less, you know. It’s indispensable for using magic, for spirits to maintain their existence, and for living things to survive, I suppose.

Subaru: I kind of get why spirits would need it, but even humans and the like would die without it?

Beatrice: If food and sleep are necessary power sources to maintain the body, then mana is a necessary power source to satisfy the soul, you know. If either of them is depleted, it’s impossible to maintain life, I suppose. Having said that, for a human to lose enough mana that they would die of weakness is not something you see at all often, you know.

Subaru: That totally felt like a flag being raised right there!

Magic

Subaru: Here it is, fantasy! It’s just not the same without it!

Rem: It’s good that you’re enthused about it, but you have no talent at using magic, Subaru-kun. Maybe it’s the sort of wistful thing where you long for something you can never have, though.

Ram: Through a gate, the mana that fills the atmosphere is pulled into one’s body. Then, by means of an incantation, the mana that was taken in is changed and given properties, and activated by expelling it back out of the gate – that summarizes the basics of magic in this world.

Subaru: There are six different affinities; they’re fire, water, wind, earth, shadow, and light, wasn’t it? No matter what kind of effect the magic produces, they can be generally classified into one of these six, I heard.

Rem: Rem is water, nee-sama is wind. Subaru-kun is shadow, and so on; each affinity has different things it’s particularly good at. When you reach the level of Roswaal-sama, you have things like being as suited as possible to all the affinities. Emilia-sama is fire, but the conditions for spirit arts users are a bit different.

Ram: That concludes our explanation of magic that’s simple enough for both Barusu and a dog to understand.

Subaru: Are the two of you suffering from some kind of disease where you’ll die if you don’t make me the butt of a joke?

Meteor

Subaru: And unexpectedly, it’s an explosive third magic-related item in a row! Here at the end, we present the metia.

Felt: And I’d like to lead off by saying that they can be sold for ridiculously high prices; the one you used to negotiate with me is like that, too. From what Old Man Rom says, it seems they’re super-rare.

Old Man Rom: Indeed, because an individual’s background and training are crucial to magic. A metia that allows you to ignore all that, and produce the same sort of effect as magic, is something that’s prized. It’s also said that, aside from the ones that they know how to produce, creating new ones is impossible.

Subaru: In the worldview here, they’re ancient weapons… or that’s how they’re treated, I guess. One might be miraculously unearthed now and then; that’s the sort of rarity we’re talking about.

Old Man Rom: Metia are generally discovered in excavations, that much is a fact. It seems that the original meaning of metia is “an impossible gift”. With their utility and rarity, it’s a fact that they’re exchanged for high values anywhere.

Felt: Well, setting aside the behind-the-scenes stuff, the way that they can be sold for a lot is enough for me. I'd love to somehow or other find another one, and warm up my wallet.

Subaru: You're an incurably romantic brat, aren't ya…

Appa

Subaru: The fruit of wisdom that Adam and Eve ate, and the reason they were driven from the garden of Eden. It gave the two of them, who knew nothing, the power to think, and brought down the displeasure of God upon them… the apple is the proof of that sin. This is the name of an exceedingly similar fruit. Now that I think about it, I never did realize my goal of obtaining one.

Kadomon: Yer a really noisy kid, ain'tcha. If yer not gonna buy one, get outta my face already.

Subaru: Alright, alright. …Next time for sure, I'll buy one of your appas, pops.

Loop

Subaru: So, this is how you refer to the collection of time-reversal concepts, including the Return by Death that's wrapped around my situation.

Emilia: You still don't know why you're able to return back through time, do you, Subaru?

Subaru: At this point, all that's been revealed is the condition for activating the loop. Who's doing it, what their goal is, what they want me to do… I know nothing more than when I first got dropped here.

Emilia: When you hear something like 'He can come back after he dies', it sounds like something you'd think was a good thing…

Subaru: The painful memories still hurt, and I'm the only one who remembers what happened in that length of time, not to mention that dying itself leaves you feeling a sense of loss… but, well, it wasn't all bad stuff.

Emilia: …Subaru.

Subaru: There's times when, rather than having some worthless power, it's more precious to maybe have a chance to take back something that you couldn't otherwise undo. That must be the kind of power that I have.

Emilia: Mhmm… I can't say it in the main story, but I rea~lly rely on you.

Subaru: Yeah, count on me. …Even if you do forget, I'll remember it, after all.

Give Blessings to the Beautiful Maid!

That day…

When I came back home, for some reason there was a maid.

She was a short, beautiful girl with blue hair, and she gave off somewhat of a quiet impression.

“Oh, welcome home, Kazuma. Jeez, you promised to come with me on my daily explosion, so where were you?”

When the maid caught my attention, Megumin, who sunk into the couch, started talking to me while pouting.

Daily explosions were a stupid daily thing that this loli wizard insisted she had to do or else she’d die.

It’s true that I was supposed to be the one to carry Megumin back home on my back today, but from what I’m seeing, I figure she’s already done with the daily routine.

“We were out of mayonnaise, so I went to go buy some more. I also bought some ingredients for dinner. I’ll take care of dinner tonight, so cut me some slack here will you?”

As I put the ingredients I bought onto the table, the blue haired maid muttered something.

“Mayonnaise…”

“Something wrong with mayonnaise? Actually, what’s a maid even doing here?”

When I asked the maid a question as she got lost in her thoughts, with a surprised look on her face she said,

“No, I was just thinking about someone who loves mayonnaise… So mayonnaise exists in this world, hm.”

“In this world”?

It almost sounded like she was saying that she came from a different world, so I felt like something was off here.

“Kazuma, allow me to this introduce her. This is Rem. She just happened to pass by when I was resting on the ground after casting explosion magic. When I listened to what she had to say, she sounded kind of troubled, so I thought to help her out and brought her here.”

“To me it just sounds like you were the one to be saved, unable to move and having trouble, can’t see it as anything else. Hell, what were you thinking, going to cast explosion magic all by yourself? What would you have done if that girl didn’t pass by?”

Once this girl casts explosion magic, she has no more magical power at all and she can’t move a muscle.

She may have a quick temper and all sorts of weird things about her, but I’d thought that she wasn’t stupid…

“I went to inspect targets for today’s explosion magic. I found a rock that looked like it’d be pretty good, and I was going to go home, but for some reason a suspicious, white mist started to form. I sensed danger, so I shot it without thinking what’d happen afterwards.”

“Then you were saved by this girl that happened to pass by. I’m sorry that our wizard bothered you.”

“It’s okay…I went out to buy some appas, but just when I felt like a white mist was wrapping me, I saw Megumin-sama passed out right in front of me.”

The maid named Rem says that and looked down in a troubled way.

I wonder what an appa is.

I could see some red fruits that looked like apples in the paper bag the maid was holding. Maybe those were it.

“Rem doesn’t know her way back home. She’d said that she was going back to a mansion, so I’d thought that she was someone from the town Axel, but apparently she doesn’t know the place…”

She said that she’s not familiar with Axel, but it’s the only town around here…

And you said that you were wrapped in white mist, were you being spirited away or something?

“Guess I’ll go to the Adventurer’s Guild and research magic like monsters that manipulate white mist. Rem, right? If you have nowhere you need to be, then you should stay here for a while. We have extra rooms, anyway. It’s to thank you for picking up our crappy wizard, so make yourself at home.”

All I’ve come across were beautiful but peculiar girls up to this point, but it must be fate or something for me to meet a genuine, beautiful maid like this.

“U-Umm, thank you. I’m not sure how useful I’ll be, but at least let me take care of stuff like the housework.”

As I tried to sound cool with some of my lines, Rem, the beautiful maid, let out a sigh of relief, perhaps because she’d been very worried.

And that’s how…

The beautiful maid and us—

“By the way, about the appas you’re carrying, they aren’t going to attack us, right?”

“Why would you think they’d attack? Appas are fruit, you know?”

…A life with Rem, a mysterious girl lacking just a little bit of common knowledge, began—

—The maid wakes up early in the morning.

She gets up in the dark before the sun's even up, and starts preparing breakfast before the landlord is awake.

"Good morning, Rem. You're up early again."

"Good morning, Satou-sama. Satou-sama is up early too. Sorry, breakfast isn't ready yet…"

Rem quickly bows her head, maybe because it was disgraceful for a maid to wake up after the landlord.

"Wait, I didn't wake up early, it's just that I stayed up all night. I'll be going to sleep after this, so I don't need breakfast either."

"Stayed up all night, you say… Um, were you perhaps doing research on that white mist?"

I suddenly look away, as I really didn't want to say that I was up playing games all night to a worried face like that.

"No, I was just playing stuff since I couldn't sleep. So you don't need to worry about anything, Rem."

"…Okay."

Rem looked at me with an apologetic look, I guess because she was reading too much into my attitude, and so I panicked and tried to smooth things over.

"No, sorry that's not quite right. I actually played games until morning! I'm really sorry for giving you the wrong idea! You know what, I'll have breakfast and I'll go to the Adventurer's Guild to do proper research on the fog!"

"O-Okay. But this isn't good for your health, so please make sure to eat breakfast and get some sleep properly."

…What is this refreshing feeling?

She's showing care for me seeing that I'd played games all night.

Since I met a heroine that doesn't classify as peculiar or crappy, once again I realized just how great my luck is.

I am living together with a beautiful maid that suddenly came to our home one day.

Isn't this the true life in a different world?

Yep, this is exactly what they call a 'beautiful girl flag'.

"I don't want to worry Subaru-kun any more than this, but I also feel bad for pushing you even though you're taking care of me…"

"Subaru-kun? Is that someone you like or something?"

When I saw Rem faced down with her ears slightly red, I understood that there was never any flag in the first place.

I knew it.

I knew there couldn't have been something so fortunate in this good-for-nothing world.

—The maid has a lot of work.

All kinds of shopping to prepare meals, taking care of the garden when cleaning the mansion…

And then there was stuff like…

"Today's black tea is splendid again. I give it a perfect score."

"Thank you, Aqua-sama."

Dealing with a worthless goddess that pretends to be a celebrity despite not even knowing what black tea tastes like.

I turn towards Aqua, who has been an attention whore ever since Rem came to this house and wants to poke her nose into other people's business.

"You're acting pretty high and mighty for someone who hasn't even helped out with the investigation whatsoever. Rem, she doesn't know what black tea tastes like, so next time just give her hot water."

"Rude. How could I not distinguish taste, I am the Goddess of Water, you know? You are annoying when it comes to the quality of drinks."

Aqua glared at me for a moment as she said that, but it's been confirmed that this girl doesn't even notice when high class sake is replaced with cheap sake.

It is currently in the afternoon.

I wonder if the relaxing time we spend after eating lunch in the hall will be different with the excellent maid.

Then, Darkness smiles at Rem, who was next to Aqua, as she drank the same black tea.

"Still, the black tea Rem makes is really good. Her cooking is also wonderful. Rem, you're always welcome to become a part of our group, so if you ever want to, just ask."

"Thank you very much, Dustiness-sama. But just those thoughts are enough."

Rem's whole reply was polite. She was too perfect as a maid.

"…Say, Rem, where are you from? You're kind of perfect as a human, so obviously you're not from this town full of oddballs, and such a good person being a resident of this country seems suspicious."

Rem answers my question with another question.

"Do you have any idea what names like Lugnica, Volcania, and Kararagi mean?"

“Well, I know a magical sword user named Katsuragi. Are those names of places? I don’t know them, but how about you guys?”

Aqua and Darkness, the two I asked the question to, also shook their heads.

While Rem pondered something, the entranceway door opened.

“I’m baaaack~ Why does Rem look so serious? Did Kazuma sexually harass you while I wasn’t keep an eye on him?”

“Oi, who do you think I am? I don’t remember ever doing anything weird myself. Mostly just unavoidable counterattacks against outrageous developments.”

Megumin, who’d went to the Adventurer’s Guild, came back and was saying rude things.

“No, apart from assaulting me by looking at me with indecent eyes once I get out of the bath, Satou-sama hasn’t done anything yet.”

“What the?! This girl has a surprisingly sharp tongue! O-Okay then. So, Megumin, how’d it go?”

Megumin had asked an Adventurer Guild member about the fog.

“I’m not sure if this has anything to do with the fog, but recently, never before seen monsters have been appearing near Axel. Apparently they speed up randomly, are pretty strong, and don’t like to go out of town.”

Never before seen monsters?

“Then Megumin, continue to get more information in town. Maybe Darkness will find out something with her connections with nobles? Meanwhile, Aqua and I will check out the monsters from afar.”

—The maid is really strong.

“Waaaaaa! Remmm!! Help me, Remmmmm!!!”

Aqua’s voice echoes throughout the vast plain outside of Axel.

"Hoo!"

As she let out a slight yell, an iron sphere with chains flies, and it smashed the head of the giant toad that was chasing Aqua.

Aqua, who had been chased by a frog, clings onto Rem as she had saved her.

"I'm never leaving this girl's side. I mean, we have the same hair color and eye color, and she doesn't even feel like a stranger. Please stay with me, even if it's just when we're outside of town."

"I don't mind…But is it common for frogs as giant as those ones to be around this area?"

"Axel is well known for its giant toads. They perceive most living things without metal armor as bait, and they're known as the weakest monsters around here. Not to mention, their bodies also are light and taste very good."

It was going to just be Aqua and I to go, but Rem said that guarding is also a part of a maid's job and came along with us.

At first, I was worried about if she'd be fine, but the results speak for themselves.

"By the way, where'd that iron sphere come from? You didn't have it when you left the mansion, right?"

"Satou-sama, it's insensitive to pry into a maid's secrets. Still, monsters, huh…they don't have the witch's stink, so they aren't mabeasts."

I wonder what's a 'witch's stink'.

I set aside the fact that Rem said something strange for now and looked around the area again.

"I haven't seen anything but toads. Where are the never before seen monsters?"

Megumin said that they're seen at this plain, but they were nowhere to be found.

“Since there’s nothing but toads in this plain, they probably moved to the forest or something. You know, toads smell like fish unless they’re cooked properly, right? I wanted to eat delicious things, not just monsters and toads. So how about we go back home? Let’s head back and eat Rem’s delicious cooking.”

When I thought about what to do with Aqua not showing one bit of motivation, Rem immediately sniffed.

And then…

“Is it just my imagination…?”

Rem, tilting her head slightly, muttered a few words.

—The maid makes people useless.

Yes.

“Megumin-sama, open wide.”

“Ahhhn”

Right now, in front of me I see Megumin unable to move from having used up all her magical power after her daily routine, making Rem feed her.

Darkness is out to investigate the mysterious monster and the fog, and the useless Goddess who hasn’t been helpful whatsoever is sleeping even now after making Rem play board games with her until it was late at night.

“Hey, Rem, don’t spoil her too much. Or rather, Megumin you become a useless human too quickly.”

While I have lunch, I give some advice to Megumin, who is lying down on the couch, and Rem, who is standing next to her. Lately, Rem has been working her hardest for Megumin, perhaps because she has a habit of spoiling people or something.

“Come on Kazuma, I know you’re jealous, but please don’t ruin this lovely life.”

Megumin, who wasn’t as dissatisfied with this life as I’d thought, gets along very well with Rem.

So well that Rem even goes with her on all of her her daily explosion walks.

“Sorry, it’s just that when I look at the color of Megumin-sama’s eyes, I remember Nee-sama…”

“Oh, so Rem has a big sister. What’s she like? I can imagine that she’s a very competent woman since she’s Rem’s sister.”

Rem looks sort of quiet, and she actually gives off this impression of being difficult to approach.

So her sister should be the same,

“She’s a lovely sister who likes steamed potatoes and naps.”

When I was having those thoughts on her, Rem started staring at me.

“What is it? I don’t dislike you looking at me with passionate eyes, but it does make me feel awkward.”

This is different from the crappy companions I’ve gotten completely used to. I’ll start to carelessly fall in love if a traditional beautiful girl stares at me like this.

“Sorry, Satou-sama’s clothes looked like the clothes Subaru has. Also, I’m just a little disgusted.”

“You really do have a sharp tongue sometimes! Anyway, you said clothes that look like what I have on? …Say, Rem, does ‘Subaru-kun’ have black hair and black eyes?”

What I have on is a Japanese jersey.

If his looks like that, then that means…

“Yes, that’s right. Subaru-kun has sanpaku eyes, is surprisingly fit, and is handsome.”

“Okay enough fawning over him, since I’ll start wanting to kill ‘Subaru-kun’. But I see. I get most of it… So I have to ask, does ‘Subaru-kun’ have some sort of amazing power? Like an unbelievable ability, or like a special move that turns everything upside down…”

Yeah, in most summonings into a different world, there are those sort of possibilities

“None. He’s just an ordinary boy that was a shut-in before and he has just a little bit of an aptitude for yin magic.”

“Huh?”

It’s not the pattern where you go to a different world with a cheat ability?

“In that case, he must go through the same trouble I go through. And the fact that he’s an ex-shut-in makes me sympathize with him even more. If me and him ever meet, I feel like we could be friends.”

In my case, I have Aqua, so I can come back to life as much as I want as long as I don’t get severely injured a lot.

So that in itself is kind of like a cheat ability.

I have crappy comrades as a handicap to balance it out, but he must be having a hard time, since if he dies, then that’s it for him.

When I considered that, I got over the fact that a beautiful maid likes him.

“Satou-sama, I won’t let you have Subaru-kun, you know?”

“Hold on there, I won’t tolerate those kind of jokes. I assure you that I’m not a homo.”

I faced Rem and gave her a wry smile as she started saying absurd things, but…

“Subaru-kun’s surprisingly popular with the ladies, be it Patrasche or Petra, so I just got worried.”

“Actually, I don’t think I could be friends with Subaru-kun.”

Petra sounds like a name of a beautiful person, though I’m not so sure what a girl named Patrasche would be like.

“Rem, if you’re lonely and want to see your sister, then how about you think of me as your sister and spoil me? I actually have a little sister myself. Leave it up to me to be your big sister.”

“But you’re the one that looks just like a little sister, and there’s something wrong with the older sister being spoiled by the younger one.”

Rem was diligently carrying the spoon to Megumin’s mouth, like how a parent bird would feed its chicks, and she smiled slightly at us.

It was the first smile Rem, who gave off a quiet, calm, cool, and collected impression, showed us ever since she came to this mansion, and it made it seem like she was watching a familiar nteraction—

—The maid…

“The bell peppors! Satou-sama, I was preparing meals, and then the bell peppors suddenly attacked me!”

Rem came rushing from the kitchen with a pale face while I was repairing equipment in the hall.

“Who the hell are the bell peppors? Red magical beings? …Wait, those are bell peppers. You didn’t kill them properly.”

Once I took a look, I saw Rem holding bell peppers tightly.

Bell peppers are tacticians in this world.

They play dead while being harvested. Afterwards, they still continue to do so, waiting patiently to get on a cutting board, and the moment the cook turns their back on them, they attack.

“Did you not learn that you should be careful to check if the bell peppers are dead when you cook them? It’s a good thing that they were bell peppers, because if they were matsutake mushrooms, you might’ve not been alive right around now.”

“Bell peppers are scary. So scary…”

“Hey, Rem, you aren’t actually someone from this world, huh? Aren’t you actually from a different world?”

Someone of this world and someone so good at cooking should be well aware of how dangerous bell peppers are.

Plus, she also didn’t know about Axel town, and she also brought up names of places I’ve never heard of before.

“Satou-sama, you aren’t surprised even after finding out that I came from a different world?”

Rem sighs with a worried look on her face.

I was going to tell her, “I probably came from the same different world as Subaru-kun, after all”, but I stopped myself.

Subaru-kun should be the one to come out with something important like this.

It would be against the rules for me to reveal it.

“There are a lot of people from different worlds in this world, after all. It’s nothing that surprises me now.”

As I said that, I placed the sword I was repairing back in its sheath.

“How are those people doing now? I promised to make Subaru-kun appa pie. Is there a way to go back…?”

This beautiful girl facing down with an anxious look probably came to this world through an irregular way.

In that case, forget about the useless Goddess that’s been spoiled by this girl everyday, we have to get the superior Goddess back.

“Don’t worry about it. I promise I’ll send you back. I may not look like it, but I have great luck. Soon enough, I’m sure that…”

Yes, I’m sure that someone will come barging into the mansion and —

…Then, it happened when I was having those thoughts.

“Kazuma, Rem! I found out what exactly the white mist is!”

Darkness came barging in as the entranceway door opened.

“Recently, there have been dog monsters frequently appearing near Axel, and when you see them, there will always be white mist that appears with them. I’m not sure if it has anything to do with Rem, but I accepted a quest to subjugate them.”

—When we were heading towards the vast forest near Axel, I saw Aqua and Megumin waiting.

“Kazuma, you’re late! The monsters are getting away! The forest seems to be their territory, so it’d be a pain if they got deep inside it. Let’s hurry up and kill them!”

Megumin, eyes shining red, was pointing at a group of gigantic dog monsters at the forest’s entrance.

I’d thought that there weren’t any monsters living around here that were this strong. Where the heck did they came from?

It happened then.

Rem, who had been standing still behind us up to this point, seemed completely different and it was as if she'd found her parent's enemy.

Once she brought out her iron sphere, she started running with it in silence.

“Wai!”

Rem rushed out before I could even stop her and she

“Al Huma!”

With a shout, she created several giant ice lances, and she shot them at the group of monsters.

“Hey, Kazuma, you know, that girl is pretty strong. Like so strong that I feel we could just leave.”

“Don't say that, Aqua. I've already declared that I will bring her back while showing off, and I've even repaired the equipment that usually doesn't work very well. What the hell am I supposed to do about this? She doesn't even need us.”

Rem killed a myriad of dog monsters by using brutal magic we didn't know about, and after that, she swung around her iron sphere and crushed them one after another.

The maid is strong. Super strong.

I seriously want her in my party.

Then it happened while we were watching her in amazement.

“?! Satou-sama, please run!”

A remarkably large animal with a horn on its forehead ran past Rem and dashed towards us.

Darkness went in front of us to protect us, and the arm she stuck out towards the dog was being bit on hard…!

"Damn! What a treat this is to have a dog reeking of beast on me! Kazuma, leave this up to me and cover Rem! Don't worry, I'll keep this guy busy like this! Come on now, leave it up to me to handle this and go on without me!"

I leave behind Darkness, who looked sort of fine, and backed up Rem with the bow I had in my hand…

"Satou-sama, please shoot it!"

I somehow reacted faster than Rem's frantic speaking.

The giant dog that was biting Darkness dodged it and disappeared into the forest.

"—Darkness-sama, please let me take a look at your injuries!"

Rem, who exterminated all of the dog monsters except for the one that ran away into the forest, came rushing over with a pale face.

"Don't worry, the wound is extremely minor. It's just a mere scratch. I wanted to be hit harder…"

"I'm sorry our weirdo acts like this even though you were worried."

"I'm already used to it because of Roswaal-sama, so it's okay! …Ahh…"

Rem gave an odd reply, though I don't know who Roswaal-sama is, and she moaned softly with a pale face as she looked at Darkness' wound.

"Rem, your face is pale. Do you know that monster? Does it keep poison or deadly viruses in its nails and fangs or something?"

"It's not poison, it's a curse! That mabeast casts a curse that weakens the person it bit! At the moment, the only way to release the curse…is to kill the mabeast that casted it."

Hearing those words, Aqua starts to feel Darkness' body.

Rem turns her back on Darkness, and she starts walking towards the forest the monster disappeared into.

“Darkness-sama, please relax. I will now pay you back for the kind hospitality you showed when I wandered into this world. I promise that I’ll save you!”

When Rem said that declaration vigorously, she looked towards the forest with the thirst for revenge in her eyes as I wondered, ‘What ever happened to the timidness she had when she first came to our mansion?’

What should I do?

I feel bad because she’s so fired up, but I’m familiar with these flow of events—or rather, I know what happens after this.

“Calm down, Rem. It’s alright, don’t worry about Darkness.”

“?! What are you saying, at this rate, she’ll…!”

Upon hearing those words, Rem suddenly turns around, and it happened just when she was about to lose control of herself.

“‘Sacred Break Spell’!”

Sure enough, or well, how should I put it…Aqua, being the dense one she is, chanted magic to release curses.

When white light rose from the magical circle that appeared at Darkness’ feet, something like a black haze appeared for a moment, and then it vanished.

“Rem, relax! Darkness is fine now! A curse like this is a piece of cake if you rely on me!”

“Oh…”

They turn towards Rem as she unconsciously dropped her iron sphere and looked at them in confusion.

“Thanks, Rem. Um…you tried to save me, and just those feelings are enough. I am very grateful.”

“Y-Yeah, stuff like risking your life and trying to dispel a curse aren’t things that people could do very easily! Yes, you were very cool!”

These two, as people who have memories of this same development, follow-up while considering Rem’s current feelings.

Rem was facing down, so her facial expression couldn’t be seen, but they were at least able to guess how she was feeling right now since her ears were red.

“Thank goodness, Rem, Darkness is saved! But that’s a relief. You usually don’t really show much facial expressions, but you’re actually really nice, huh!”

With another dense remark, Rem crouched down while covering her face.

“—This might just be my gamer’s intuition, but I feel like Rem will be able to go back if we exterminate the mabeast that ran into the forest.”

Hearing my words, Rem, who’d been crouched down up to this point, stood up as if nothing had happened.

“In that case, I’ll go into the forest now and chase it. But those mabeasts’ stink is very faint, I wonder if it’s because they came into this world where the witch isn’t strong enough… I’m not sure how many days it’ll take to hunt those mabeasts, but I hope that it’s okay for me to be under your care until then…”

I shake my head at Rem, who said that with an apologetic look.

“You can stay in the house for as long as you want, but I told you earlier, didn’t I? I promise to send you back.”

When Rem said that, I started using Enemy Detection with all the magical power I had in me.

It was that strong.

Just as I'd thought, the weak monsters around this area seemed to have ran away, and from inside the forest, I could only sense the presence of what seems to be the large dog from earlier.

“Oi, Megumin, are you ready? The target is in the direction I'm pointing in. If you cast magic with everything you have in you, the distance should be spot on. The town might get angry afterwards, but go ahead and hit the middle of the forest as hard as you want!”

“You can count on me! Allow me to blast away that mutt with my powers! Rem, your big sister's going to show you what she's really got. I, not Kazuma, will send you back home!”

Rem chuckles softly at Megumin, who went ahead and called herself her sister.

While Megumin was starting to chant magic resonantly, a remarkably loud cry was heard nearby.

“Nooooo! Nooo! Rem, be ours! Please, stay by my side forever and spoil me!”

“Aqua, don't be selfish! Everyone wants it, but why do you have to say things you shouldn't say out loud! Rem has a home, don't bother her anymore!”

Darkness frantically holds down Aqua, who was crying and trying to hold back Rem, as she probably anticipated what was going to happen.

Rem looks at the two of them, and in a bit of a troubled manner,

“Thank you all for taking good care of me. I felt a little confident in this world.”

She says that, bidding a shy farewell while sounding a little happy.

“Oh, Rem. Take this with you.”

While Megumin continued to chant magic, I said that and handed her large box closed tight.

“What’s this?”

I faced Rem who looked curious,

“You worked as a maid, but you weren’t even paid properly, right? Even if I gave you money from this world, you wouldn’t even be able to use it, so at least take this.”

And when I said that, with a slight smile, Rem said,

“Thank you very much. By the way, what’s in it?”

I also smile back and,

“Rem was in the middle of buying apples, right? I bought some high-class ones, so take them home with you and make some appa pie or whatever for ‘Subaru-kun’.”

When I said that and handed over the box to Rem, she blushed happily.

“—And well, I’m a little jealous, but I wish for happiness for you and Subaru-kun.”

To be honest, I’m not just a ‘little’ jealous, but it’s someone that such a great girl likes.

He must be someone I could never hope to compare to, liked by everyone, honest, sincere—

“Yes! Subaru-kun’s number one is Emilia-sama, but I’ll do my best to become number two!”

…

“Oi, what did you just say?”

“Do my best and become number two.”

“Oi, Megumin, stop the magic! We’re going to make this girl ours! That asshole Subaru is an awful two-timing bastard! …Ah, what are you doing, Darkness, stop it! Oi, let go of me. Megumin, you too, stop the mag…!”

The beautiful maid from a different world had a worried expression, but she had an amused smile on her face.

“‘Explosion’—!”

The forest was wrapped in white light while a thunderous noise resounded throughout it—

Give Blessings to This Wonderful EMT!

1

…This encounter was nothing but a miracle.

“Hey, is this place…”

In the white room, the stunned girl winked, tilted her head and asked herself.

That girl looked amazing.

With silver hair shining like the moonlight, purple pupils like gems, combined with that slender and perfect figure, just a glimpse of her beauty makes anyone’s heart burns.

She is simply the supreme beauty, a work of art made by God himself, and a manifestation of true beauty.

Afterwards…

“Welcome to the Great Beyond, Miss Emilia. Saying this suddenly might scare you, but you are already dead, not long ago.”

This girl in front of her is a beautiful goddess.

A girl with aqua-blue hair, eyes as clear as the sea, perfect body, a face blooming with a extremely lovely smile.

“…”

The two beautiful girls sitting in chairs and staring at each other across the table.

To be honest, the beautiful silver-haired girl Emilia couldn’t understand the situation as a whole.

Then the girl with aqua-blue hair nodded solemnly, and said “don’t worry”.

“I also know you are confused, but this is an indisputable fact… You’re already dead. Please try to accept this fact first.”

“Hey, hey…hmm, please wait a second. Um, am I really dead?”

“Right. You’re already dead. At a young age…it’s painful. I am also very sympathetic. Hey, according to the data, the cause of your death is…poof.”

…The girl with a mysterious face instantly giggled after reading the data on the table.

“Wait, wait a minute…Death, the cause of your death was ‘choking on mochi’. Actually, it turned out to be such a old people’s killing themselves method. You are so precious. Ahhhhhhh?! Actual age…”

The girl crying from laughing glanced at the information and then at Emilia, and gestured as she understood everything, pointed to Emilia’s ear and said.

“So that’s it, elves. I am generally in charge of Japan, so I have never hosted a child like you!”

“…I am not an elf, I’m a half-elf”.

“Is that so? But the ears are really long…Well, they are not that bad for me as a goddess. In other words, it turned out to be mochis, puff puff puff!”

“…”

Emilia’s eyes widened, staring incredulously at the belly laughing girl.

After seeing this reaction, the girl gently tilted her head and then said ‘Well, forget it’.

“In short, now we got it, let’s continue. I’m Aqua. I am the goddess who gives guidance to those who die young. Although it’s a little different now.”

“What did you just say now?”

“Don’t mind about details. More important. Well, it seems that you’re young and you currently have two choices! But because one of the choices is meaningless, just pretend that it does not exist. Then go straight to the one I recommend now.”

Although she was a mess at rhetoric, Emilia did not interrupt the girl named Aqua’s speech.

After seeing Emilia’s reaction, Aqua went back to the chair and said:

“That is, isekai: keeps the current memory and abilities, reincarnates in another world, and starts another brand new life!”

“Another world, rebirth…?”

“Well, as an Kazuma from Japan once said, my word is persuasion. It seems that the term is not very obvious for the child who originally lives in an isekai world. Hey, in other words…”

After all, Emilia had no idea about the word ‘isekai’ means, and Aqua suffered to explain ‘what a pleasant place the other world is’.

Then, after 30 minutes of explanation, Emilia nodded as if she was able to understand it.

“That’s it…Another world, where you can eat to and play with whatever your heart could wish every day, and there are many handsome men and beauties. It’s a very happy place.”

“That’s it! Having such an opportunity, you would be a fool if you didn’t take the opportunity. Don’t be a fool. You should make a decision as soon as possible!”

“Hmm, but…”

“Huh! But? What else?! Why are you still hesitating?! Is there any better than this?! Look, the welfare after reincarnation is also very luxe…”

While Aqua continue to pressure the hesitant Emilia, she hurriedly took out something from the drawer of the table.

That is, there is a “catalog” that contains a lot of information about the ‘isekai bonus’, including photos.

“Look, here you go! You can also freely choose these rebirth bonuses…even with photos? The office supplies are much more complete than previously. In other words, the chairs and tables seem to have being improved a bit. How dare Eris be so smug…”

The grudged Aqua knocked the “catalog” on the table and stamped in annoyance with an angry expression on her face. Then she gave the “catalog” to Emilia again.

“Okay, please have a look. Among the things here, you can pick one and take it.”

“But just now you put too muck on this book.”

“The book itself is not important, but it’s content is. Well, whether it is a legendary sword or super powerful magic, you are free to choose! With these, the crusade againt the Demon King can continue smoothly, and the possibility of me returning to the heaven is also…”

“The crusade againt Demon King? Heaven?”

“Don’t worry about these little detalhes! Now, p-l-e-a-s-e. Choose one and reincarnate in another world as soon as possible. Just do it for me, okay?”

Aqua continued to persuade Emilia to reincarnate in another world, but Emilia didn’t know what to do next.

To be honest, Emilia didn’t understand well Aqua’s explanation.

That’s because she treated Emilia as a dead person from Japan? Or is it simply because Aqua’s explanation is terrible? In short, Emilia still has a little knowledge about the situation.

“But…”

Emilia touched the emerald on her chest as a symbol of the contract with the spirits, and groaned.

Now she can't feel her connection with Puck anymore. This is, without a doubt, an unusual situation. In the past she would definitely panic, but…

"P-l-e-a-s-e."

The presence of that girl named the goddess in front of her gave her a wonderful peace of mind, so even in this state, she did not fall into a panic.

And, even if she is dead, isn't she still alive now?

"Now, please, can you decide quickly? I have to take advantage of Eris's absence and send as many people as possible to increase the chances of defeating the Demon King!"

"If I did that 'isekai', could I help you?"

"Yeah! That's right! How about it? Have you decided to do it?"

"…Oh, I see. Although I am still a little apprehensive, I will do my best."

"Ok! Ok! Yes, this is the job of a goddess!"

Seeing Emilia's consent, Aqua happily raised her hands in a gesture of joy, and finally showed a relieved expression on her face.

"Haha…It's good to meet a frank child, and I can also get the work done easily. Here is this. In retrospect, it was also strange to Kazuma at the beginning. Ah, did you decided which bonus you will get? Since you are the first person to work with this long-lost goddess, let me pick a good one for you."

Aqua, with a smiling face, flick through the 'catalog' on the table.

"The first ones are 'Sacred Sword of Destiny' and 'Masamura Demon Sword', forget it. At one hand they are very powerful when holding it. But on the other hand, as long as the sword is removed, you will completely become an ordinary person, so they are traps. There are also 'Weird Power' and 'Super Magic Power'. Although they look very powerful, they are also traps. If you are not careful, you will break the door, destroy the equipment, and even hinder any interpersonal relationship. Then there is 'Super Magic', which allows people to use very powerful magic. It's good for a goddess with such beauty and talent. If it is given to ordinary people, it is a completely overkill!"

"Hmm, I feel it'll very hard no matter what. I don't know how to use swords, and becoming a Hercules will bother me. Magic is… suck a thing."

"Hum, so what? Is there anything you want?"

Emilia, who looked confused, suddenly her eyes shone, she folded her hands, and nodded her head…

"…just Aqua is fine."

"Eh?!"

"Aqua seems to know many complicate things and is willing to teach me all kinds of stuff. She's really very reliable. Therefore, rather than choosing something, I still hope Aqua can be by my side…"

"Wait, wait, wait! Hey, is that a lie?! Wait, why?!"

Emilia held at her chest proudly as if she had offered a valuable suggestion, but Aqua fought herself desperate, with tears in her eyes. However, it was too late…at that very moment, the white magic circle on the floor released a strong light, surrounding they both.

Even Emilia was shocked by such amazing magic power. Aqua jumped from the chair instantly, panicky.

"Wait wait wait! That does not count! Invalid, invalid!! This is definitely not okay…Ahhh!"

"Ah, beware!"

Aqua, who was about to escape from the magic circle, was caught by the white light and hugged by Emilia. At the moment the two embraced, a dazzling white light was emitted on the ground…

“No way, ah ah ah ah ah! Why is this happening again?”

…With Aqua’s crying in sorrow, the two girls disappeared.

2

The two stood in the middle of the street, with a busy carriage in front of them.

As the light faded, the two had been teleported to a completely different place. Emilia was shocked by what happened in front of her, and she had to blink her eyes in amazement.

“Wow, that’s amazing. I went to another place out of the blue…like Beatrice’s Door Crossing.”

“Ah…ahh…ahhhh…”

“But, where is this place…Although the atmosphere is similar to that of Kingdom of Lugnica, it feels a little different…Heh, Aqua, what is this place?”

“Ahhhh…ahhhh…ahhh…”

“Aqua? Heh, Aqua, are you okay?”

Aqua ignored Emilia, who was talking about the place in front of her, and just crouching on the ground with her head in her arms. After seeing Aqua’s looks, Emilia shoke Aqua’s shoulder and said.

“Are you ok? Does the stomach hurt? Do you want to lie down and rest?”

“No! Do not confuse the great trouble of the goddess with a child’s stomachache!”

“Ah, really, you can’t speak in such a tone. I’m obviously worried about you, so if you say this, the other party will be very awkward. Honestly, Aqua is a naughty girl.”

“I just told you don’t treat me like this. And, and…ohhhh!!”

The crying Aqua stood up in frustration. After saw Aqua like that, Emilia crouched helplessly.

“Is there something bothering you? If you can, tell me about it…”

“Now! Just now! I’m in the middle of a trouble. Nah! Why are you doing this? Huh! What’s wrong with you? What do you have against me?”

“Hey…, hate or anything, not really…? “

Facing Aqua’s questioning, Emilia felt extremely confused. Why was Aqua so distressed, Emilia had no clue.

At that moment, the surrounding eyes instantly focused on the two people who were making a fuzz on the street. After all, as incomparable beauties, call attention for those two was inevitable.

“What…”

Although she usually calls attention, Emilia petrifies at being stared suddenly. By reflex, he stretched out his hand to put on the back hood, but felt empty because her current clothes did not have a hood.

Then…

“Ow, it’s broken. If this continues…Right! Come here!”

“Ugh, ah, uh.”

“Don’t waste my time. Ah…really. I thought I met a frank child, my mistake! Why is this happening to me?”

Aqua grumbled, grabbing Emilia’s arm and starting to walk. She just crossed the street and followed Aqua into a hidden alley.

In the dark alley, after confirming that there was no one around, Aqua casually said “OKAY” and turned round.

"There is nobody here for now. In any case, you did a really terrible thing. No one never brought the goddess into another world…no, you're the second person in history to commit such evil! Fortunately, I am a merciful and compassionate goddess, thank me very much!"

"…"

"Hey? Are you listening? Isn't this a warning from the goddess? Ignoring the commendable warning of Lady Aqua, are you as rude as Kazuma?"

"Ah, hey, it's not that. I'm listening…"

"So react. I'm in this situation because of you. Take responsability."

Aqua pouted and said, she untied the iconic knot with his hands, and after spreading the hair, she started form a long braid slowly.

"What are you doing?"

"Doesn't it look like you know it? Disguising. My current state would be very troublesome if I met any acquaintance. Although there is no way to be recognized no matter where, but if they found me, I would definitely be nagging a lot, so let's avoid it. Look, what about?"

After braiding her long hair, she put on glasses that she took out from nowhere. Her beauty with blue glasses frame is perfect, and the impression she gives had changed a lot in an instant.

But, although she looks nothing like Aqua, she is still Aqua…

"Amazing, it's like different people."

"Yeah? Isn't that right? Even myself am a little scared of being so almighty. You can call me Lady Aqua."

"I'm sorry, I don't understand what you are talking about."

"What?"

Emilia glanced at Aqua while twirling her silver hair.

“Would you like to say something?”

“… Hum, can I also change clothes like Aqua?”

“…? Why? It does not make any sense.”

“Because I’m a half-elf…If I show up on the street reckless, except for the people around, it will also gives Aqua a hard time.”

“Because you’re a half-elf…Ah…it seems you don’t know yet. Come here.”

“Ah, hey, ow.”

As before, Emilia was being dragged by the street by Aqua. When she heard the noisy voices in the street, she was about to break free from Aqua’s hands.

Aqua pointed her other finger forward and said ‘Take a look around’.

“The passerby over there, and the two people drinking tea there. Their ears are very long. They must be elves.”

“Oh…”

“Although I don’t know how your original world is, no one here cares if you are a half-elf or an elf…Compared to this, it would be even worse if my identity as goddess is revealed. So, try to call me Aqua…Hey, are you listening to me?”

“…”

“Hello, are you listening? Don’t ignore me.”

Emilia was so shocked by the sight that she was speechless. On the other hand, Aqua put on an expression of dissatisfaction, desperately emphasizing her existence.

“Excuse me, sorry?”

"Huh? What the hell is this…oh oh."

However, Emilia didn't pay attention to Aqua, but spoke to a fierce man who happened to be passing by there.

The man turned his head, with a pain expression at first, but when he realized that it was two beautiful girls who stopped him, his expression instantly changed.

"What, what's wrong, little girl? Are you looking for your family?"

"Puff! Man! This face looks too intense, it's cracks me up!"

"First, don't pay attention to those rude one over there, are you looking for someone?"

"Well, this may seems strange…Are you afraid of me?"

"…"

Hearing Emilia's question, the man was lost in thoughts.

After being hit on by two beautiful girls, he was expecting a romantic development. One of them pointed to his nose and laughed at him, and the other asked an inexplicable question.

"…Are you testing me? Or is it a prank?"

At that moment, the many bad endings that popped into the man's head stressed him out. If he was only being laughed at, it would be okay. If the worst comes to the worst, he might fell into a trap and will loose all his money. It was payday, and after finishing drinking, he would being ready to go to the dream shop…

Of course she came after the money, so the man immediately stayed turned.

"…"

However, the man hesitated for a brief moment. The reason is the look in the eyes of the girl in front of him, Emilia. This look is sincere, looking forward to the man's answer, as if she is seeking for something, and the man's answer will be its proof.

It's too much. This is not the look in the eyes of a passerby woman. Even in that man's not rich experience of interacting with women, there is no similar experience.

If the worst comes to the worst, you may be giving up on all his money and get poor. Eventually you will get full of debts and he will not be able to commit himself to the casinos and lose his dignity as a man.

"Ah, little girl. How could I be afraid? You are very beautiful."

After a great deal of though, the man answered the question.

After a great deal of though, the man decided to answer that way. If he deceived her, he would be that kind of man. Lost into the tears of that woman, he would just live as humble and lowly as a slave.

However, when Emilia heard the man's answer, her face immediately lighted up.

"Thank you! I'm so happy! Let's go, Lady Aqua!"

"Hey, ah, wait, wait?! Stop pulling me…too hard?! What's going on, this child is too strong! Like Darkness!"

After shook the man's hand and thanked him, Emilia took Aqua and walked across the street. Although Aqua wanted to resist, she was not as strong as her, so she complained and threw herself at Emilia's mercy.

"What, what happened, those two kids…"

The man stood there and watched the two leave.

Although he didn't know what was going on, the man was very happy deep down in his heart. The girl who held her hand to express her gratitude, and her gratitude wasn't fake. He didn't choose the wrong one, he really helped that girl.

"In that case…ah, that's great."

The man enjoyed a sense of satisfaction and walks in the opposite direction of the girls.

…Somehow, he feels very happy.

Therefore, the choice for that dream shop today is decided to be the ‘Arrogant Girl with Blue Hair and Glasses’. If he chooses the girl with pure silver hair, his conscience would be guilty.

3

Emilia took Aqua and walked upright on the street.

It was a pleasant surprise for Emilia to be able to walk in such an upright manner without wearing a hood or covering her ears.

“So it is a shop, and the people over there, everyone lives for granted…”

“Nah, it hurts! My hand…Easy! Please, can you be more careful with me as a goddess!”

“Look, Lady Aqua! This place… It’s great! It’s not like Lugnica at all!”

“It isn’t that different! Anyway, listen to what the others are saying!”

After struggling with all her strength, Aqua finally get rid of Emilia’s hand.

Aqua was blowing on her wrist while looking at Emilia who ignored her and continued to move forward.

“Listen! This is the starter town - Axel. Although I don’t know how you lived in your original world, since you get here now, forget everything about there!”

“Which means, without covering my ears and hair, can I walk upright on the street?”

“So are you wanted…? I don’t think so, this is such a terrible experience…”

Although there are subtle differences in understanding, the two have already begun to understand each other. In any case, Emilia no longer had to hide her identity, and little by little, she had stated to accept the fact that she reincarnated in another world…

“So, let me teach you about adventurers! Remember, and then go to defeat the Demon King as soon as possible, of course, the sooner the better!”

“Yes, Lady Aqua! But before that, there are so many things I want to do!”

“How dare you talk back to me. But as you called me ‘Lady Aqua’, I will spare you. Well, let’s hear it.”

“As expected of Lady Aqua! So gentle!”

“Hey, what? Say more, say more.”

Not knowing what was good or evil, Emilia has always been a very frank child, and soon the conversation proceeded according to what Aqua was pursuing.

After that, “Lady Aqua, so amazing!”, “Okay, comin”, “Lady Aqua, so cute!”, “Continue!”, “Lady Aqua, it’s so beautiful!”, “Heh heh heh heh!”, repeating the same conversations all the time.

“Ha, ha…I’m so exhausted…Although it is true, I haven’t been treated like this recently. It feels great.”

“Lady Aqua, are you okay? Take a break? I…Ah, I’m going to find some water.”

“No, it’s okay. About water, I can do it myself. I was originally the Goddess of the Water. Not to mention my own flesh water, even one month of domestic water here is a piece of cake for me.”

With that, Aqua activated Create Water, poured water into a cup that came out of nowhere, and drank it all in one go.

After seeing it, Emilia clapped in admiration.

“Amazing! Lady Aqua is really omnipotent!”

“Hey? Right? Did I accidentally let you see it again? Ahhh, that’s bad. I didn’t intend to show off at first…However, the strong ones show strenght in every move.”

“Lady Aqua, let us continue with what we’re just talking!”

Emilia asked Aqua to go ahead with the topic just now, but Aqua sighed involuntarily.

“Well, if you want me to listen, I’ll listen. However, if there is any strange request, I will refuse it without hesitation. So, what’s the matter?”

“Yes! Am I here to defeat the Demon King? But before this, I want to go shopping on the street!”

“Okay, dismissed! Puff puff! No way! Did you hear me? There is no time for these nostalgia here. You have to become an adventurer as soon as possible, and then embark on a journey to defeat the Demon King. Otherwise, why did I drive away Eris so hard and secretly send reincarnated over…”

“Hey? Lady Aqua, what did you just say?”

“Okay, okay! In short, rejected! Absolutely not!”

Seeing Aqua rejecting her request, Emilia bowed her head and mumbled regretfully “Really”…

“…Oh, I see. Too bad, but Lady Aqua said so.”

“You see, looking at your regretful expression, I can’t bear it…But there is nothing special here. Even if you stroll around, it won’t be fun?”

“Is Lady Aqua from here?”

“I’m a goddess, I’m from heaven, of course. It’s just been here for a while, and it doesn’t seem to have changed at all.”

“I see. However, this is the first time for me. And…”

“And?”

“Don’t care about your half-elf identity, this is the first time I feel this way.”

Emilia gave a lonely smile, then turned her head away.

“Oh, I’m sorry, just say some willful words. Moreover, what Lady Aqua said…”

“And more. Like that, it will deepen my guilt. I know. I know. I’ll accompany you for a little stroll…”

“Really?”

Emilia’s face suddenly lighted up, and she took Aqua’s hand. Then there happily jumped with joy…

“Wow, I’m glad! Thank you, Lady Aqua! You don’t have worry about causing trouble to others, it’s still the first time I go to the streets without fear!”

“Wait, wait! The child’s past is heavier than I imagined! The atmosphere before her death was terrible!”

Emilia spoke cheerfully, leaving Aqua frozen.

At that time, Emilia looked at the shops on the roadside and the outer walls surrounding the town with relish, and was full of curiosity about everything in her reach.

Where should I start? Seeing Emilia’s looks, Aqua sighed deeply.

“Don’t worry, just go and see all the places you like.”

“Hey?! May I?”

“To this extent, you can still be accompanied. I’m not a devil…By the way, I’m a goddess…Besides, as a reincarnation bonus, I have to accompany you on the adventure. It would be too pitiful if I didn’t satisfy even this little wish.”

“…?”

Emilia didn’t listen well the latter words, and tilted her head.

Aqua waved her hands vigorously at Emilia.

“Let’s go! Although I agreed to go sightseeing in the city, it doesn’t mean I can just hang around. Also, when sightseeing, try not call me ‘Lady Aqua’, or ‘Lady Goddess’. Whatever one, it’s going to be a lot of troublesome if I was exposed.”

“Yes, Lady Aqua!”

“Didn’t I just say not to…! But it feels good, you can call me again.”

“Lady Aqua? Shall we go?”

“You’re taking my ground, please don’t.”

The impatient Emilia leaped forward into the streets, followed by Aqua.

Then, they set off on their trip to Axel.

4

Although, the humha group started a trip to Axel…

“It’s really a town with nothing extraordinary! Do you want to go to Alcanretia? It can be a famous tourist spot, and you can also try the missionary activities of the Axis Cult.”

“Axis Cult?”

“Hmmm, the Axis Cult is a group of followers who worship and believe in me, Aqua, the goddess of water! Unlike the Eris Church, although the number is small, they are all elites. They work tirelessly every day to let the world know about my greatness. They are a group of lovely children. Are Emilia attending school?”

“Sorry.”

“Why did you apologize? It hurts me to be rejected!”

Emilia couldn’t help but laugh when she saw Aqua’s expression.

Aqua stared at Emilia and then said “even so…”

“Emilia is strange, too. Where is the fun of this town without charm?”

“Yeah. But it’s really fun. It’s all scenery I haven’t seen…and…”

“And?”

“Lady Aqua is with me. I am not alone, it makes me feel at ease and happy.”

Seeing Emilia smiling with joy, Aqua held her arm proudly.

In fact, Aqua was confused.

Recently, Aqua has had little to do with such frank and sincere thanks.

Forcibly being taken to another world by Emilia, although it was a cursed fate at first, after getting used to it, she also started to feel that life was not that bad.

That being said, there is still a little discontent over whether or not to be treated as a goddess. These dissatisfaction and depression are now being eliminated little by little thanks to Emilia.

Continue to deepen feelings, by the time there is guilt, the trouble…

“Lady Aqua?”

“Nothing. Anyway, are you tired of shopping in the city, right? We are almost at the Adventurer’s Guild, so prepare to become a real adventurer.”

“Ah, however, what’s on that little stall…?”

“Let’s go to the Adventurer Guild while eating! I’ll pay you for that. Thank me very much. Very charitable of a goddess.”

“Wow, I’m glad. As expected of Lady Aqua. So gentle!”

“Hum hum, go on, say a little more.”

Then, led by Aqua, the two made their way towards the Adventurer Guild.

The Adventurer Guild is a super large building that merges a wine shop and a restaurant, and the aroma of cooking standing outside just come to your nose.

Emilia was in front of the building, looking with wide open eyes.

“Is this the Adventurer Guild that Lady Aqua mentioned?”

“Yes. After registering here, an adventurer card will be given to you, and then based on the above stats, select the corresponding occupation. After registration, you are a real adventurer! The long-awaited journey to defeat the Demon King’s has officially begun.”

“…? …?”

“Rather than talking nonsense here, it’s better to take action. Excuse me!”

“Come on. Excuse me.”

It was something that hadn’t been heard before, and Emilia was filled with questions. Aqua happily patted Emilia on the shoulder and pushed open the door of the Guild.

Emilia followed right behind, and then…

“Welcome! Please come to the counter if you are looking for work, and please sit down if you have a meal!”

As soon as he stepped into the Guild, the voice of a busy waiter was heard.

After hearing the sound, the men in armor in the store looked at them at the same time.

After feeling so many sharp eyes, Emilia couldn't help but grabbed the sleeve of Aqua's clothes.

"Lady Aqua, it feels like everyone is staring at us…"

"Hey, will people be attracted by my breath of god even disguised? That's terrible…But if I respond, I lose. Ignore it here, ignore them and go to the counter."

"Oh, sorry…"

Emilia followed Aqua timidly. Although people in the union were looking at them both, the reason was completely different from what she thought.

They were simply fell attracted to the two unaccompanied girls.

However, this is enough to prove that Aqua's disguise is still effective.

But…

"Do the adventurer register? Okay, the registration requires one thousand Eris…hey, credit first? So we are in trouble. Originally you…Ah, isn't you Miss Aqua? Hey, why is it exposed? Because the adventurer card cannot be forged. And if you don't show your identity, you won't be allowed to pay on credit."

Immediately after hearing the conversation at the counter, the men in the store suddenly felt bland and extremely depressed.

"What? What's Aqua?"

"Don't make such misunderstanding!"

"In other words, the child next to her is also a child with a brain problem! That was close, I was almost cheated!"

The men she thought she had deceived started mutter.

They said things like “sober up”, “no more appetite for drinking”, and left one after another.

Because of this unexpected development, the Guild became extremely quiet.

“Hey…”

The woman at the counter looked at Akya with sympathy.

“So, can the registration fee be charged to Miss Aqua’s account?”

“Hemp, I’m sorry…Boo hoo.”

This evil capitalism that cannibalize people without spitting out their bones.

Aqua’s sobbing echoed through in the silent Guild.

5

“Yes, of course. Anyway, I am the goddess Aqua, and I am also a arch-priest of a higher class. How could I be in this beginner town with my rank?”

In a corner of the adventurer’s guild, Emilia said it while holding the adventurer card she just got while looking at it with interest.

Unbelievably, the text recorded there should have been something Emilia had never seen before, but it was as if it had naturally penetrated into her mind and could fully understood her.

According to the card, Emilia’s profession is the ‘Arch-Wizard’.

According to women at the counter, this is a rare profession that can then manipulate many powerful magic attacks.

Although Emilia didn’t have any idea about this, she couldn’t be wrong by the look of the woman at the counter who was taken aback when she saw the card.

“Well, it’s a higher-level profession, and it’s a arch-wizard, which is a good sign. If it’s like Kazuma who was nothing more than an adventurer, you would be troubled, but you will become stronger soon…Don’t learn a magic like Megumin?”

“This doesn’t matter. However, as Lady Aqua said, is this okay? Is this a skill point? It seems that they are all pointed to the banquet skills…”

“That should do it. It is very necessary. As an rookie, there is no harm in learning more. Besides, doesn’t Emilia also have her own magic?”

“Hmm, but, I don’t use a lot of magic. And I can’t feel the breath of quasi spirits around here…”

Emilia frowned, very distressed that she couldn’t feel the quasi spirits.

Since she came there with Aqua, the quasi spirits seem to have vanished from her side, and she still can’t feel Puck’s connection, and there was a great deal of unease about the future.

Not feeling the connection with the spirits is very unfavorable for Emilia, who is a spirit user. Not only in combat, but also in spirit…

I stayed there for so long, and I don’t want Puck or Subaru to worry too much…

“There is no need to put on such an uneasy expression, it doesn’t matter. Judging by the stats on the card, the magic side is quite high, and you will surely be able to learn other magic soon after you increase your level. As long as you learn one, your development will snowball.”

Aqua was completely wrong about the reason for Emilia’s anxiety, and she continued to encourage her.

Hearing Aqua’s encouragement, Emilia smiled and nodded.

“Well, thank you, Lady Aqua. Then, what do we do next? Eat?”

“Indeed. The next development should be to eat and drink, and then end the day in general. However, this is not okay. Emilia had become an adventurer! So, there is only one thing that we should be doing next: adventure!”

While listening to Aqua’s explanation, Emilia looked at the countless quests posted on the wall. Indeed, there are all kinds of requests posted there…

“I always felt that there are a lot of warcraft to be commissioned…”

“Well, adventurer is a life-threatening job. On the other hand, if it is a job that is not life-threatening, isn’t it necessary for adventurers to show up? But don’t worry. I’m the high priest, healing magic and resurrection magic are a piece of cake! No matter what kind of battle there will be, let it go!”

“Wow, that’s amazing! As expected of Lady Aqua! She’s beautiful!”

“Hey hey, don’t stop, tell me more.”

“Lady Aqua, awesome! Lady Aqua, so cute!”

Aqua looked at the requests posted on the wall with great joy.

“Mm-hmm, that too, this too, it’s not a difficult work. There isn’t a job that can pay off a lot of money, otherwise, how can we make use of mine and Emilia’s excellent talents?”

“Rather, what kind of job?”

“Yep, like a former Demon King’s general or the Mobile Fortress Destroyer.”

The triumphant Aqua brags to Emilia about her past battles. Seeing Emilia’s eyes gleaming, Aqua became even more triumphant and repeating herself.

“Urgent! Urgent! All the adventurers, please equip your weapons and gather at the main gate.”

Not only in the Guild, but the entire town was blasted with the sound of broadcasting.

This sudden voice scared Emilia, but Aqua squeezed her face with a tight cry.

“What is wrong? What happened?”

“It is an urgent quest. If there is an emergency, they will inform all the adventurers like this. It’s obviously not the cabbage harvest…”

“What! Miss Aqua, Miss Emilia! Please go to the main gate as soon as possible you two, please!”

The lady receptionist of the Guild said after seeing Aqua and Emilia.

To explain the situation, she hurried to the front door, and the two also left the union shortly thereafter.

“Hey, what is the urgent quest?”

Hearing Aqua’s question, the gasping receptionist said, with an uneasy face.

“The Magnificent Toad appeared!”

6

Although the Giant Toads are just giant toad-shaped monsters, they should not be underestimated. It is even larger than a cow or a horse. In addition, incidents such as swallowing domestic animals and people during the breeding period sometimes happens.

However, for the well-equipped adventurer, there is no danger, and for rookie adventurers, there are good experience points sources…

“Indeed, the Magnificent Toad is different.”

Even Aqua said nervously after seeing that far away.

According to the urgent quest requirements, the adventurers gathered in front of the main gate of the town. Even the strong man who lives for fighting, after look in the same direction, their legs trembled involuntarily.

Right in front of the gate of Axel, a mountain was moving…No, it was not a mountain. That was a giant toad as big as a mountain.

The toad of toads, the hero of the toad, unlike any toads they have seen so far.

So that was the Magnificent Toad, commonly known as King Toad.

The adventurers lowered their heads, all they felt was fear. Of course. There was no way. Although they are usually engaged in life-threatening jobs, the beginner villages there are still rookies after all.

Although there are experienced adventurers who are still there, their abilities are limited, after all.

However…

“No, wait! It’s too early to give up! Remember? So far, there have been many crises here. Haven’t all the dangers been eliminated in the end!”

Is was one man among the low morale adventurers who said. Someone was moved by what the man’s words and said “Yes”, “It is true”.

“And when it was the Dullahan, and when it was in the Mobile Fortress, we were all fighting!”

“Ah, there must be a way this time…”

The adventurers’ eyes gleamed with hope, and they looked at each other. Then their gazes were all focused on the high-handed Aqua. Although she is still in disguise, she has been exposed in the Guild, so the current disguise is meaningless.

So they all knew she was Aqua, and said it as if they were placing their hopes on her.

“Hello, Aqua! Where are your companions?! If Kazuma was here, with that little cleverness, there would be a way! Besides, that girl has a problem in his head!”

“Ah, Kazuma and the others are not at home. I’m acting alone because they three went away.”

The first man who had just spoken, his hope was broken again. There he scratched his head wildly in chaos, and all the other adventurers were like him.

The hope was ignited for an instant, and morale sank at the bottom.

“This is the biggest King Toad in fifty years…”

“This is the biggest King Toad in fifty years, bigger than the one two years ago…”

The adventurers muttered emptily. When Aqua saw how they were, she said with complacency.

“How rude! Even if Kuzuma is not here, don’t you still have me?! Whether someone is injured or dead, you can be a resurrection without fail? Go and die with confidence!”

“Be shallowed and digested?”

“It will make you a Buddha.”

After the adventurers heard Aqua’s pronunciation, their morale that was low, suddenly fell into the abyss.

After seeing their reaction, Aqua swelled up her cheeks and said

“Why!!”. The situation has not changed so far.

The King Toad did not change the direction, approaching the town step by step.

“Lady Aqua, what should I do now? How about spell it out first?”

As the toad leapt forward, making a sound that shook the earth.

A battle meeting was held at this time, although only Aqua and Emilia were present. But because Emilia only gave a few hard suggestions, Aqua also became uneasy.

“This, cleverness ideas should be made by Kazuma. My job is magical support, It’s hard to be useful in this.”

“I’m not good at using my brain, do you want to start anyway?”

“Wait. Wait. Let me think about it, wait a moment!”

Aqua looked at Emilia with excitement, but now she was very confused because of the change in her role.

That time, truthful words are bound to take advantage of that little cleverness, but today they are not. And, let a level 1 arch-wizard go to a hand-to-hand fight, although she could be resurrected, but it’s not too good. The other adventurers were also unreliable.

“Those people like Kazuma are really useless the most critical times! After we go back, I must talk about him well!”

“Is this person named Kazuma a friend of Lady Aqua?”

“It’s a companion! He was essential to defeating the Demon King and returning me to the heaven. Especially the man who is responsible for making suggestions in this kind of crisis! For several times…”

When Aqua was venting her displeasure with her grievances, she suddenly turned her head. Emilia also turned her head and looked in the same direction.

Then Aqua said:

“Emilia, can you use ice magic?”

7

The warfare which Aqua came up with was very ordinary.

It seems that Kazuma has done something similar before.

“Well, I and Kazuma are not the same. Although the ideas are similar, the specifications are very different. Make no mistake about this.”

“Stop talking, hurry up!”

The impatient adventurers protested against Aqua’s opening statement.

Aqua pouted and looked aside.

Standing there was Emilia with clenched fists in front of her chest, and then she also looked at Aqua.

Unlike the adventurers around, Emilia’s eyes were full of trust.

It’s like a believer who trusts her goddess Aqua.

Therefore, the goddess Aqua must show off in front of her follower.

“My life in this world belong to Aqua, the goddess of water…”

At this time, a huge magical circle was rolled up in the sky, and countless small drops of water floated up. Each drop of water possessed amazing magical power. As the water drops slowly gathered together, they formed a powerful force.

“Sacred Create Water!!”

With the activation of the spell, a large amount of water gushed out from the sky. Because the gate of Axel city was closed, the flood did not reach the city in danger, but swept towards the King Toad with stormy waves.

"…"

Due to the magnitude of the flood, even the King Toad couldn't move on for a while. However, even if the size is different, the toad stills a toad, after all, it is impossible to be completely submerged by water, so it will continue to move after the water slowly recedes.

But before that…

"Emilia, it's your turn!"

"All right, Lady Aqua!"

Aqua yelled when it was over, and Emilia also responded loudly.

Then, Emilia stretched out her hands to face the King Toad caught in the flood, and casted the spell as she taught before.

"The lonely river that connects the underworld will eventually reach the abyss of life, and the soul will be frozen. I will be hostile and lead you to…"

It was a huge magic power that could match the magic that Aqua casted. The mist started to surround her, and it was concentrated in Emilia's hands. With a burst of strong light directed at the King Toad, the flood was instantly frozen.

"…I've heard about Kazuma doing something similar with basic magic before."

"Hum, this is different in scale. This is the magic combo of the goddess Aqua and her devout axis cultist."

Aqua stood in front of the frozen King Toad and spoke confidently.

Next to her, Emilia snapped her fingers and said her final words.

"Confess to the underworld? All right, Lady Aqua?"

With some trick closing words, the King Toad spread out into ice.

After the peaceful chilling of the King Toad, following by enjoying being hyped by everyone, triumph like heros.

After being praised, Aqua and Emilia walked together on the road at night.

“Hum. Satisfied, satisfied. Such a giant toad, it’s really delicious!”

“Yes. It’s the first time I ate toad. I didn’t expect it to be so delicious. It’s great that the rest of the city could share it with us.”

“Well. I originally wanted not be too conspicuous while Kazuma and the others were out. But it would not be good if the town was destroyed and for not showing the identity, the reward be reduced.”

Before that, the Guild gave priority to transport the King Toad into the street, afraid the toad meat had been distributed everywhere for everyone to eat.

“However, master Aqua was really amazing. Coming up with that kind of plan…”

“That was nothing. A level 1 using such a powerful magic, you will definitely become a top-class arch-wizard soon. Thus goddess can assure you.”

“Thank you, Lady Aqua.”

Just as they were bragging about each other while walking at night.

“…Finally, I finally found you, senior!”

“You!”

Aqua turned her head stiffly after hearing the sound.

Emilia turned her head too, but it’s completely unknown why.

There stood a beautiful young girl with silver hair and blue eyes, her cheeks flushed, and she stared at Aqua intensely.

“No, isn’t it obvious that you can’t do this without authorization!

When I was away, you tricked this child, who was entrusted to stay behind, using the opportunity to take away a job or whatever…”

“Huh? In the final analysis, I think it’s even more unforgivable for you to be lazy at work. Even ignoring your own fault and accusing seniors instead?”

“Uh…this, this…but…”

The demoralized girl lowered her head in front of Aqua. Seeing this, Emilia poked Aqua on the shoulder.

“Look, Lady Aqua. Is this child an acquaintance of Lady Aqua?”

“Yeah. It is my junior goddess - Eris. I have been taking care of her since the beginning.”

“Hum…in the past, it was me who took care of Miss Aqua, so…”

Was it because the gratitude was too strong, Eris was completely speechless. Emilia nodded and thought to herself “I see”.

“My name is Emilia, the name is Emilia. Tell me more, Eris.”

“But, please also advise…No! This is not the time to lose with senior! Senior!”

“All of a sudden, is there anything wrong? Look, even if you being so smug, I will not be afraid…”

“Miss Emilia is not dead yet. It’s all arbitrariness of the senior.”

“Huh?!”

Aqua was shocked when she heard what Eris said.

“The senior sneaked into my room and saw information about other worlds and got confused. The child I asked said that in that world the judgment of life and death is very complicated…so she messed up accidentally.”

“Don’t make excuses! So what do you mean? Is Emilia actually not dead yet?”

“Yes, she’s not dead. To be accurate, it should be near death, but the soul was forcibly hooked by the senior. So, if you don’t hurry back…”

Then Eris looked at Emilia with pity.

“I’m so sorry, Miss Emilia. Because of our mistakes, you suffered such…”

“…”

Eris hurriedly bowed her head to apologize to Emilia, while Aqua just watched quietly.

Emilia, as the person in question, closed her eyes.

“Hey, that, though I don’t know very well…what is going on?”

“In other words, Miss Emilia, you can go back to the original world.”

“You can go ho…”

According to Eris’s elaborate explanation, Emilia seemed to understand at least. Be able to return safely-back to her original place in Lugnica, back to Roswaal’ mansion, once again to see Puck and everyone.

It was a happy news. Emilia has a lot to do…

“…No, no, Emilia. Go back to such a place.”

“Ah?”

“Senior?”

Hearing Aqua’s speech, Eris and Emilia raised their heads at the same time.

Then Aqua went behind Emilia.

“Isn’t it all because of Eris’ mistakes? Although there may be a reason for me, isn’t Emilia already here? It must be an error, an error.”

“Lady Aqua…”

“Right after finally getting the Adventurer Card, is the adventure going to end as soon as it starts? So utterly…”

Aqua suddenly grabbed Emilia by the sleeve, preparing to escape.

“It doesn’t matter if it’s useless! Because, in this child’s world…she must cover her ears and hair to go out! She can’t walk freely, and worry about it everyday. It’s pitiful, isn’t it?”

“…”

Eris lowered his head in silence. This is the proof that Aqua cannot be refuted.

Then Aqua looked at Emilia.

“Emilia, just like that, don’t go back and stay here. Although I really want you to defeat the Demon King, let’s forget it. I will tell Kazuma to let Emilia join us.”

“Lady Aqua.”

“Although she can’t match me, Emilia is also very cute. Be careful and true. If there is anything, you can call on me any time, and Megumin and Darkness can tell about it! Surely you will become good friend with those two soon. Megumin may be awkward because there will be one more arch-wizard, but I think you will get along well. Although it’s just a feeling!”

“Lady Aqua.”

“Although Darkness may be a little weird at times, she is basically a serious person, so don’t worry. There are a lot to say about the room, although sometimes…something weird happens…”

“Lady Aqua…”

Emilia interrupted Aqua.

Aqua, who noticed Emilia’s tone, did not go, but waited for Emilia’s words.

“Lady Aqua, thank you very much…I’m sorry”

“If you dare to defy the goddess, you are not qualified. Off, fired, you are fired…”

“Ok. thank you very much.”

…This is the end of the brief encounter between those two.

9

“Miss Emilia has returned to her original world without incident. She should have woken up now.”

“Mm-hmm, right? Thank you.”

“…That one, senior, you know.”

“Since I said I knew it, just don’t keep talking.”

“…”

“Don’t keep talking. Yes, I got it! After that child goes back, if she still remembers what happened here, it might have some bad influence on her. After all, she is a kid who is not good at hiding.”

“…Yes, so, the memory of Miss Emilia.”

“No need to confirm it. So what? Is there anything else? Okay?”

“Well, I’ll try to hide it this time. Senior Aqua, please stop.”

“Yeah, yeah.”

“Senior, also.”

“Anything else?”

“…Please, don’t be too upset.”

“…”

“Humph! How could I be upset? There are so many lovely axis cultist in this world who are waiting for to be redeemed by me. It’s just a reduction of one believer, how can it be upset!”

“Senior…”

“Moreover, Eris is too naive. Just erase her memory will not stop the blessings I bestowed on that child.”

“Sorry, do…”

“Hey, don’t you know? Poop - poop. I don’t even know if you’re a goddess, that’s hilarious! What a shame, Eris!”

“Spot, spot it, senior! I’m really angry!”

10

Freed from the painful struggle, she finally start to regain conscience. After slowly opening her eye, there was a black-haired teenager in front of her.

“…Subaru?”

“Oh oh oh oh oh ah! Emilia! Emilia-tan?! Are you okay?? Can you breathe?!”

The boy who was called by the name Subaru talked to Emilia with tears in his eyes. Then, when he was about to hug Emilia…

“…Yahahah…”

“Puff…”

The kitten flying over magnificently from the side suddenly kicked Subaru, and after a cat kick his face, Subaru fell out of the bed.

It was a cat-type spirit at the size of a palm: Puck.

After Puck shrink, he slowly flew to Emilia's eyes.

"Are you okay, Lia? You almost died."

"Hey, what's wrong with me?"

"Oh, I made mochis because I wanted to reproduce the cuisine of my hometown. I wanted Emilia-tan to taste it. I didn't expect it… Sorry! I am so sorry!"

After seeing Subaru hurriedly apologizing, Emilia looked at Puck terrified, as if confirming whether it is true or not. Puck held his shoulder helplessly.

"It's true. What should I do if anything happened to Lia. Anyway, it seems that Subaru needs to be punished as well."

"Don't say such odd things. It was also because of my carelessness… I'm sorry, I worried you two. How long did I sleep?"

"Rather than being asleep, I was basically in a comatose state, and it didn't take long…"

"Is that so? However, I'm feeling that I have had a long, long dream…"

She didn't have the memory of the dream at all, but she had a strange feeling, so Emilia raised her hand and took a closer look.

After seeing Emilia's behavior, Subaru and Puck tilted their heads.

Then Emilia said to them:

"Can you take a look at my right hand?"

The two people who were full of doubts had no choice but to do what Emilia said.

Then, Emilia closed her eyes and said as they paid attention on her hands.

“…Nature’s Beauty!!”

So the screams of the two echoed through the Roswaal’s mansion.

…Also, Emilia’s cheerful laugh.

The Butterfly Dream

The former location of the April Fool's Day EX.

Have you ever heard the story of the "Butterfly Dream"?

One day, a man found himself in a dream, in which he was a butterfly fluttering through the sky. The dream held no profound significance on its own, but upon waking from the dream, the man mused, "Hmm, did I just wake up from a dream in which I was a butterfly? Or perhaps, it is the very man that I am here and now, who is merely a dream that my butterfly self is dreaming!"

An intriguing notion, is it not?

This concept, however, is not limited to the butterfly. The crucial point lies in the way in which we define who we are in the present moment. When you find yourself in a world that feels as if it were someone else's "dream," do you question whether the person standing there is indeed yourself, or if perhaps it is the world of your ideals? When you encounter such a world, can you really resign to call it a dream? Alternatively, perhaps it is this kind of thinking that pulls one toward the dream world. That is to say, where one has lost sight of the line between dream and reality.

No no, this tendency of mine to beat around the bush is a regrettable habit. Allow me to summarize what I want to say with more clarity and brevity this time.

After all, although it may have lasted for but a moment, the landscape of the dream was certainly there. It was a world far removed from the natural passage of time. And although I am uncertain whether or not it truly did occur…in the end, it is one's own cognition, not that of one's surroundings, that determines whether or not it was indeed a world in which you danced as a butterfly or a reality that you only wish to label as a dream.

The world he observes presents him with different perspectives over and over again. It is his mission to select one of those worlds and navigate that reality for himself.

Then, what becomes of the worlds that he does not seize?

It is a blessing for me to contemplate these unanswerable questions. How will he eventually decide whether to embrace his dreams or discard them? Or whether the world in which he walks is a dream or reality? What a shame that I cannot be present to witness this unfolding. What a truly uncharacteristic failure.

The Butterly Dream

1

Recently, it had become the norm for Subaru to be awoken by the blinding sunlight on his eyelids.

“Come on now! It’s morning~! Rise and shine, Your Majesty!”

He considered himself a morning person, but this sort of awakening made it all but impossible for him to be instantly awake and alert. The sunlight beckoned his mind from the world of sleep, albeit slowly.

He had been sleeping particularly deeply recently. Perhaps it was to be expected: after all, he had been pushing both his mind and body well beyond their limits during the day. Such deep slumber was proof that his days were fulfilling.

“You really, really need to wake up now! Wake! Up!”

“Shut up.”

“Gyah!”

The owner of that voice persisted in trying to wake Subaru, cruelly ignoring how comfortably he was curled up in the bed. She was close enough that they could share the same breath, close enough for him to take his revenge by grabbing her and holding her close. She let out a cry like a frog being stepped on as she was dragged into the bed with him.

It was still the time of year when the mornings were unpleasantly chilly, so another person’s body heat was just the thing to warm him up. “Ahh, I’ve been revived,” he said. “It would be nice to just drift back to sleep while we’re like this… Don’t you think so?”

“Mmph! Well, I… I’m not opposed…”

Her voice had been so full of purpose and vigor just seconds before, but she wavered, swayed by Subaru's sweet words. Though they had known one another for a long time, when he treated her sweetly, her softer, childish side peeked through her normally serious facade. That part of her was irresistibly lovely. He was bringing out such a side for selfish reasons, though.

"There's a good girl. It's time for a morning make-out session, don't you think?"

"But…the Duchess is in charge of making breakfast this morning. Won't she be angry…?"

"Ugh… I forgot about that." After being reminded, Subaru's enthusiasm sank. Surrendering to the siren call of sleep again will carry dire consequences. Resigning himself, he gave the girl in his arms one last tight squeeze before throwing the blankets off. "Guess we gotta get up now. Oh shit, it's a pretty nice morning!"

Subaru stretched, bouncing on the bed springs. He looked down at the girl, still sprawled on the bed he had pulled her into. "Hey hey, you're all disheveled… It's really sexy. Aren't you always saying that girls shouldn't be so immodest, Petra?"

Petra Leyte, now old enough that her maid uniform suited her quite nicely, stuck her tongue out and smiled sweetly as she whispered, "It's alright. I can let my guard down in front of you, my liege…you and you alone."

He reached out a hand, pulling her from the bed. "Well then, let's head to the dining room. Everyone is probably already there."

Petra smiled and nodded. She rose from the bed, still holding his hand.

"Yes, let's go," she said.

The two of them walked leisurely through the red-carpeted hallways of the royal castle of Lugunica, hand-in-hand.

"You're late."

Subaru was greeted by a dignified voice, cold with displeasure, the moment he entered the dining room. He felt a bead of cold sweat trickle down his back at its menacing undertone. He forced a smile and raised a hand in greeting, trying to conceal how nervous he truly was. "My bad. Man, I guess I'm more worn out than I realized. It's so hard to get out of bed in the morning."

"Spare me your weak excuses. Do not forget that I can discern easily what is truth and what is mere ceremony… I bet you and your would-be awakener of a maid were fooling around."

Subaru turned his head, whistling in what he hoped was a nonchalant way in response to the sharp glare aimed at him. They did fool around, no denying that. Well, whoever went to wake him would be the target of some flirting, no matter whose turn it was.

"The reality is that you neglected the promise you made to me… I suppose I should expect to be treated as such."

"No, I didn't mean to…"

"No need to console me. I am fully aware. Aware that…I'm no lovely young lady. Unlike the other women surrounding you, I put no effort into anything but my swordplay. I know little of proper dress or makeup. Of course, I am unable to satisfy you, sire…"

The uncharacteristically self-deprecating words just kept coming. Surely this feeling had been building, day by day, and this morning had finally overflown. Even a single drop was enough to cause the whole dam to burst when it came to this sort of thing.

Her insecurities had piled up one by one and now manifested as self-doubt. And it was a failure on the part of Subaru that he had not noticed her discontent thus far.

"—What are you planning?"

"If you can see inside my heart, don't you already know what I'm up to?"

"Don't tease me." Caught within Subaru's embrace, she turned her face away. She refused to look him in the eye, and her shoulders jerked, as though she was ashamed of being held. But her half-hearted resistance began and ended there. "All I can see is the mood of others. Though I can sense the general nature of the inner workings of the heart, I cannot see all of its contents… So I won't be able to understand your true intentions unless you state them plainly."

"That's an embarrassing thing to ask."

"Are Your Majesty's true intentions something to be embarrassed of…? Yet another thing I failed to see."

He felt her wry smile rather than seeing it, wrapped in his arms as she was. She glanced up at him, and her gaze caught inextricably with his. Their faces were close as they embraced, close enough that the distance could be closed in a moment. So Subaru decided to answer in a way much more efficient than words.

"—Mm."

He felt the silken touch of her tongue, extending hesitantly from where their lips overlapped. The hot brush of the breath that escaped from her lips, the way she pressed into the kiss, almost begging for more—he could feel the heat rising in him, all the way to the tips of his ears.

After a moment, they pulled away from one another, slightly out of breath. The normally dauntless young woman was disheveled, her eyes slightly wet and her expression open and lovely. Subaru felt a scorching heat at the sight. It grew hotter at the surety that he was the only one who got to see such an expression from her. He reached for her again, desiring to feel her touch once again—

"—That's enough for this morning."

But she interrupted him, blinking away the haze in her eyes as she blocked Subaru's outstretched arms. Having had his lustful momentum cut short, Subaru's rebuffed hands grasped for her, reluctant to change course. The young woman gave a familiar, dignified smile at the look of reproach on the other's face. "If we do not stop, it will disrupt many of today's plans. What is more, it is no longer appropriate for me to keep you all to myself, sire. And so we shall stop here."

"…It's cute to lose yourself in the moment every once in a while, I think."

"I believe I already said that I am a woman devoid of 'cuteness.' Although, the thought of forgetting everything and wasting the day away with you does appeal to me."

"—You only show your feminine side at times like these, it's so unfair."

Subaru stretched out his hand in his last hopeful attempt but was quickly slapped from above. Shaking his hand to dispel the impact, Subaru directed his eyes toward the woman who quickly and gracefully turned her heel.

"Now, let's eat. I'd stake my reputation on this morning's meal. I would of course never give any less than my utmost in serving Your Majesty, but I am particularly confident in this meal."

"You're much more romantic when you're not trying to be, you know that? Guess that's in character for you, Crusch."

Subaru slumped in defeat but was pulled from his dejection by the mouth-watering scent from the table.

The young woman gestured broadly to her work, confident in its quality. "I know you're busy, but when we're around the dining table, at least, I'd like to keep you all to myself—I'm sorry if that is selfish of me, my husband."

"If you think that makes you selfish, that's quite adorable, my wife."

He sat down at the wide dining table, Crusch immediately by his side, just like always. She snuck a glance at him, surreptitiously watching him as he began to eat.

As soon as the first bite passed his lips, Subaru exclaimed that it was delicious. The hint of unease in those dignified eyes faded away at his cry. As he crammed another bite into his mouth with his fork, praising its flavor once again, Subaru thought to himself that this side of his wife was ridiculously lovable.

3

Subaru sat at his desk, struggling in vain against the veritable mountain of official paperwork in front of him. “No matter how much I work, there’s no end in sight. Stuff like this happens in anime and manga all the time, but I guess it can happen in real life, too…”

“Here’s more work for someone who likes to mutter to himself, Barusu. No lengthy breaks. Get back to it, you dullard.”

“Dullard? No respect for the crown, huh?”

Having finally vanquished one of the mountains, only four heaps of documents remained—at least, until a whole additional mountain range was plopped cruelly onto the desk. With four fresh, snowy peaks looming over him, Subaru thrust his quill pen forward, declaring, “How long are you planning on looking down on me? Do you know how much power I hold in this country right now? It’s about time you stop treating me like your subordinate, capeesh?”

“Oh, and do you understand your position, Barusu? Don’t forget that you can’t stand on your own. If Ram abandons you now, who will help you defeat this army of documents?”

Immediately eating his words, Subaru threw his body and his pride at the other’s feet, begging for help. “I’m sorry, Sis! Please don’t abandon me! Save me!”

The pink-haired maid let out a snort of disgust. “No matter what title you hold, some things never change. Enough of this same old back-and-forth—at least come up with some better sweet talk.”

“I’m seriously at your mercy here, Sis! I’m literally on my knees! I mean, what if someone else saw this scene? It would be all over the front page: ‘King Wrapped Around His Maid’s Little Finger!’ Can you imagine the scandal?"

"They would only be printing the truth. Ram on top, and Barusu below. As it should be."

"You're right! As always, you're so right, Sis!

As Subaru's voice trembled at her usual arrogance, Ram let out an exasperated sigh. She pulled another chair up to the desk and a spare quill from the pen holder. "Whatever can be written for you, Ram will write for you. Ram will check the content with you, so be prepared to answer."

"Alright! You're always here to save me, Sis. This country couldn't run without you!"

"If you want to show gratitude, change your attitude."

"Any change in particular?"

"Calling Ram 'Lady Ram,' for a start."

"If anyone else heard me say that, it'd blow up in my face!"

In contrast to the way Subaru's hands paused as he prattled on, the speed of Ram's work was extraordinary. According to what he'd heard through the grapevine, she was also doing Roswaal's paperwork for him behind the scenes.

He'd never seen something like that personally, so he was initially surprised.

"I guess you weren't just for decoration at Roswaal's, huh?"

"Ram feels like she is being disrespected."

"Perish the thought! I'm complimenting you. I'm just saying that appearances can be deceiving, y'know?"

"Uh-huh. In revenge, this proposal by the radicalists is now approved."

“STOP!!”

Despite saying she would approve it, Ram processed the request properly—a fact that Subaru didn’t bother to point out. Though she talked a big game, the fact that Subaru didn’t feel the need to correct or reprimand her was a sign of his trust in her.

He glanced at Ram’s profile as she worked through the documents.

Her face was tense and expressionless, as it always was. Her features were soft and youthful, as they had been since the two had first met. She seemed to bloom like a flower when she smiled, but it was a blossoming that seemed to come only once a year.

“…Your hands have stopped again, Barusu.”

“Aah, sorry. I was just looking at you, Ram.”

“—Tch.”

“‘Tch?!’ Rem would get all flushed and adorable if I said that to her!”

“Didn’t Ram tell you to stop comparing her and Rem? Ram will cut you.”

“Cut my what?!”

“One can only wonder…”

The sideways glare she shot at him chilled his blood, a sudden feeling of dread rising from the depths of Subaru’s body. He hadn’t brought Rem up maliciously, but it seemed that he’d struck a nerve. It was a sore spot, as Ram often said bitterly that Rem should be prioritized over herself.

“It’s not a competition, but you know I’ve already fallen for you, Ram. After all, you’re super cute when you don’t talk or move, and if we ignore your personality.”

“So listening to someone, seeing the way they move, and learning more about their personality is not as important as how ‘cute’ someone is. Noted. Ram will tell Lady Emilia."

"Hey, I didn't say that! And I wasn't even hitting on you!"

She thought much of herself and little of Subaru, just as she always had. However, Subaru had finally come to understand by now that it was just a front: in reality, she had little self-esteem and acted superior in order to compensate.

So, he felt that he could forgive her very un-cute remarks if he thought of them as her way of hiding embarrassment.

"You've got that unpleasantly sentimental look in your eyes again, Barusu."

"Do I…? Sorry."

He dragged his gaze from Ram's profile and back onto the paperwork at hand. As much as he enjoyed little distractions like this, if he didn't get this done he wouldn't be able to follow through on any other plans.

Work is work, after all, and you gotta work before you can play.

Subaru, finally absorbed in his work, did not notice as Ram glanced at him and muttered to herself. "Ram…does not want you to compare her and Rem like that, Barusu. Because it's like you see Ram and Rem the same way."

They fell into silence, the sound of their quill pens scratching across the white parchment filling the office.

4

"I'm bored," declared a young woman as she violently threw the door open. Subaru gave her a weary look. He pretended to not have heard her, trying to return his attention to the items lined up on the table in front of him, but… "Mineself knows you heard me," she pressed. "Don't be so rude."

"Hey! I didn't throw anything of yours, bitch!" In revenge for being ignored, the intruder kicked the table Subaru had been working at over, scattering the objects atop it across the floor with a loud clatter. He scrambled to right the table and pick up the fallen items. Luckily, none of them were so fragile that they'd break by simply getting dropped on the floor, but this sort of thing was not good for his heart.

After confirming that everything was intact, Subaru let out a sigh of relief, and then leveled a glare at the culprit. Priscilla stood there, wearing her signature crimson dress and expression of self-assurance. "I have a lot of work to get through today, you know. Didn't I tell you to send word before you come and visit? That way I can tell you not to come."

"Don't be ridiculous. I never know when mineself may have free time, or when the mood may strike me to visit. So why must mineself bow to your arbitrary rules? Think about your position before you speak."

"Hey, you're one to talk! Why am I still treated like trash by all the egotistical women around me, no matter how much my standing changes? Am I only the honorary king or something?"

"Shut your mouth, rather than spout such drivel. With your manner and behavior, of course no one will accept you as king. Someone so lowly and pathetic usurped the throne from mineself… It makes me want to draw and quarter you."

"So gory!"

Priscilla turned her sadistic, crimson gaze toward the quavering Subaru, a look of boredom and disdain painting her features. The young woman was as fierce and egotistical as she had always been. It was exhausting to be in her company, but the most frustrating thing was that there was always a solid basis of truth to her arguments. Maybe that was why she acted so intolerably. Or perhaps it was because Subaru had obtained his current position by crushing her ambitions.

"Still, you have some strange tastes. What are all these toys on the table?"

“They’re not just toys. It’s a series of new technologies that are all the rage in villages and rural areas recently. They’re made of magic ore and other various ingredients. Seeing this sort of stuff piqued my interest in human innovation.”

“Oh? New technology, you say? What sort of function do they serve?”

“Hmm, well, for example…” Subaru selected a palm-sized metal box from the line of objects in front of him.

Priscilla’s eyes narrowed as if seeking an explanation of the function of the box. Subaru lightly tapped the bottom of the box, and with a small noise, a blue flame sprang from the top of it.

“Hoh? A portable ignition device?”

“We called this tool a lighter or chakaman, back in my original world. If these become common, then people could… I don’t know, light a barbecue or summon a little bit of light without using magic, I guess? Oh, and it would make starting a campfire easier, too.”

“It would also bring a wave of new arsonists, I suppose.”

“Ugh…”

She brought up a much more severe option. Priscilla was quite sharp, although her usual behavior and speech did not suggest as much.

She stared at the chakaman in Subaru’s hand. “There must be a small piece of magical fire ore inside. It is stimulated by the mechanism at the bottom into creating fire… However, any defect in it may cause it to overheat, and eventually explode. And magical ores that are used repeatedly are known to degrade in efficacy and speed of manifestation. If the ore requires frequent replacement, it will be quite a while before this device catches on with the general public.”

“Ugh…!” The flaws she listed were one-to-one with the concerns the developer had brought up. The way she was able to identify flaws at a glance mirrored her ability to pick up on a person’s weak points.

“In any case, you must be most confident in this one if it’s the first you chose to show. If this is the exemplar, then the rest must be truly pathetic.”

“Sh-Shut up! Tackling unknown new technology like this is proof of the great human spirit of adventure. It’s that spirit that pushes humanity forward, no matter the era. I believe in this chakaman! It’ll open up a bright new path for humanity one day!” Subaru clenched his fist at Priscilla’s lack of romanticism. He hit the bottom of the box again, looking to show off its blue flame once more, but… “Huh? Umm…? It’s, uh, not really working—”

“Hmph, a defect right out of the gate. I don’t know what this “spirit of adventure” you speak of is, but placing your hopes on this toy is beyond…foolish…!” Her bored expression suddenly tightened, her voice rising in pitch and volume. In the span of an instant, she pulled her fan from her chest and blew the chakaman from Subaru’s palm. The moment it left his hand it exploded.

Subaru gasped at the large flash of red flame it caused in the corner of the room.

“For its worst flaw to manifest at such a moment…the developer must be severely punished,” stated Priscilla. “You are the most important person in the kingdom, after all, and their contraption put you in grave danger.”

“I…don’t plan on going that far. Thank you, though.”

If Priscilla hadn’t made such a quick decision, Subaru may have suffered serious burns. Or even worse, the metal shrapnel from the explosion could have lodged in his face.

Subaru patted his miraculously intact face and said, “I’d really be in trouble if my face got any uglier,” before slumping back into his chair, exhausted.

Priscilla approached him. “It’s not all that ugly. It might even be charming, once one grows used to it,” she said. Subaru could only muster a weak “Oh, ok.” in response to her unusually supportive words. And then, without a moment of hesitation, Priscilla plopped down in his lap.

“Hey?”

“I believe mineself said I was bored. And I just saved your life, so I believe a bit of mutual touching is in order.”

“…I’m given permission to have time to myself only because this is considered a part of my official duties. “

“You were only resting under the guise of official business, clearly. And when you consider the finite amount of time we all have, living prudishly is wasteful. Spend your time with mineself instead.”

She swayed back and forth atop his lap, clinging to him with an uncharacteristically soft touch. Though they had touched one another in this manner countless times, Subaru still couldn’t get used to cuddling with Priscilla like this. The young woman had a strange heat about her, as though every time they did this was their first. It was one of her charming points.

“I must like being tricked by bad women, if I’m thinking like this.”

“Mineself might enjoy being known as the woman so beautiful as to lure the king to ruin… Don’t give me that look. I won’t be going that far, currently. Sit back and lose yourself, just for now.”

So saying, she wrapped her arms around Subaru’s neck.

The touch of her fingers dried Subaru’s throat, making him long for something to moisten his lips. He found an oasis in the other’s mouth.

5

“Oh? You’re lookin’ pretty tired. You been gettin’ enough sleep?”

“I’ve been sleeping enough, but also working non-stop from the moment I wake up. I’m crazy busy with work I’m not used to all the time, and my private life is exhausting, too… No, I chose this life.

This is no time to complain."

Anastasia, sitting on a couch opposite the one Subaru rested on, smiled sweetly as she said, "I think your work ethic is one of yer best points, Natsuki."

He gave her a listless smile before dropping his gaze to the table between them. Numerous documents were scattered across its surface, and Subaru was beyond sick of looking at them. Even so, the majority were part of his hobby rather than his official duties.

"Thanks to you, the Hoshin Company is now the greatest in all of Kararagi—I can walk into Lugunica with my head held high now. I know people call me shameless, but even I worry about how to present myself in a place like that."

"…I didn't really do much, Anastasia. You, on the other hand…"

Anastasia cut him off, still smiling. "Natsuki."

Her expression didn't change, even as she fiddled with the ends of her wavy hair. But something about her smile felt…different than usual, and Subaru felt his breath catch.

The silence stretched on until Subaru let out a sigh of defeat. "…It's thanks to your hard work, Anna."

"I swear, you're still not used to usin' that name, even after so much time… I wonder if I'm not trying hard enough. Or is it that you can't have a consort who is gone for weeks at a time?"

"That's not it. Crusch and I are still all formal with each other, when the occasion calls for it, even now."

"That's weird in and of itself. Crusch turns all lovey-dovey in front of you. If she thinks she's maintainin' her dignity while acting like that… She's got surprisingly little self-awareness."

Anastasia put a demure hand to her mouth, smiling deeply. It seemed that Subaru had managed to return her to a good mood by calling her by the correct name and changing the topic. He placed a relieved hand to his chest, having avoided disaster for the moment.

"You brought up another woman while here with me… I'm takin' points off for that."

"Whoah, harsh."

"It is considerate to set harsh, uncrossable boundaries in matters of business and of love. I haven't talked about another man since we began our relations, right Subaru?"

Faced with the severity of her gaze, Subaru could only mutely cross his arms in response. His eyes drifted upward as he recalled the time they had spent together. This was one of those times where he should just nod his head and agree. "You haven't, I guess… Damn, you're exacting and precise in everything you do, huh?"

"Hehehe. It's nice to do this sort of thing, every once in a while. Plus, it's been so long." She'd made her way around the table while Subaru was looking away and was now seated beside him. She smiled in an elegant, reserved way as she took his hand, a red blush rising to her cheeks.

Her blush soon spread all the way down to her neck, showing easily beneath her pale skin. He could tell how embarrassed she was, and how much courage it took for her to hold his hand—he fell even further for her in that moment. "…You mentioned that you'd bring my investment results with you today, right?"

"Yes, and it was successful. After all, it was a project involving my first and second most beloved things: money and Natsuki."

"I see that I'm still a lower priority than money is. No matter how much things change, Anna is still Anna."

"It's a close competition between first and second, though. There's a huge gap between second and third, if that makes ya feel better."

She only got that soft look in her eyes when talking about money or Subaru. He wasn't sure if he should be grateful to be considered a near-equal with money or not.

"—Somethin' wrong?"

“No, it’s nothing.” He stroked Anastasia’s fluffy hair with his free hand. It was unbelievably soft, almost like the down of a baby bird. Anastasia nearly purred at the sensation, narrowing her eyes and nuzzling up to Subaru’s chest like a cat.

They nestled together, basking in the feeling of holding someone so beloved close—

“Well, I guess being a close second to something so fundamental to your personality ain’t bad.”

For the moment he was satisfied with his position in her heart.

6

“You’re definitely going to hell for this someday, Bro.” Felt greeted Subaru with those harsh words from her position sprawled across the bed. He removed his jacket and tie, loosened his collar, and unbuttoned his shirt as he made his way toward her. She sat up on the bed, cross-legged. “Hey, are you listening to me?” she asked.

“I’m listening. Also, you shouldn’t lie like that while wearing a dress. Or sit cross-legged, either; your skirt’s so short, I can see everything.”

“So what? It’s nothing you haven’t seen before, at this point.”

“Idiot. It’s amazing to be able to see something like that when I want to, but getting a glimpse of it in unexpected moments is part of the magic. There’s no reward in seeing it on someone as careless as you, in fact, it just makes me a little sad.”

He laid down on the bed next to Felt, who clicked her tongue in annoyance at his comments. After a moment, she laid down next to him. They turned to face one another at the same moment, as if at some unseen signal.

“I know I just told you this, but… I’m warning you, if someone came in right now, they’d be able to see aaallll the way up your skirt.”

“Don’t worry, I won’t let anyone see everything. Besides, how long are you planning on treating me like a child, Bro? It’s been so many years since we first met.”

“Hey, if you want to be treated like a woman, try acting or thinking like one even a little bit. You still talk like a little punk, calling me ‘Bro’ all the time.”

“Haah? You’re the one who told me to call you bro. When we were makin’ out that one time, you got all hot about it…”

“Stop stop! That was just the alcohol talking! Damn booze releases the beast within me and exposes my true feelings!”

“So it’s how you really feel.”

Felt cackled as Subaru covered his face with his hand in shame, and she gave him a playful punch to the chest. He wrapped his hand lightly around the offending fist, and Felt let out a small gasp.

As they held hands, he said, “ I know we’re having fun here, but I actually am worried. It’s not like I can watch out for you 24/7… And I worry that I’m doing stuff that makes you uncomfortable when we’re together like this.”

“I was way more uncomfortable in that first month after we met… I guess things were pretty rough for a while after that, too.”

“It wasn’t my place to help you out back then… I’m frustrated that I couldn’t do anything, but now that I can do something to help, you know I will.”

“…Ah.”

With a jerk, he wrapped his arm around Felt, rolling so that she rested on top of him and holding her close. She wore an off-the-shoulder dress that day, and he could feel the heat rising under her exposed skin.

Embarrassed, she lifted her flushed face. “I-It’s not even dark out yet…”

“The time of day doesn’t matter, as long as we want to do it… But that's not why I'm hugging you. I mean, if you want to though, I'm not against it or anything…"

"N-No! I'm good, thanks!! I mean, I'm not ready! Emotionally, I mean. And I need to eat a good meal first…!"

"Hey, do you prepare like that every time you pay me a nighttime visit?"

"W-Well…"

Subaru was surprised by this revelation. Felt, for her part, was as red as a lobster.

She tried her best to argue back, but all she could manage was to stutter and waffle a few weak objections.

"You have so many other partners, Bro… I only get my shot every few days, so I would hate to…underperform."

"…"

"You're surrounded by amazing women, so I probably can't be number one. I definitely lose against girls like Emilia or Rem, and Priscilla and Crusch have me beat in the, uh, ch-chest… department… I'm beating Anastasia though, I think." She placed a hand to her chest, which was somewhat more developed thanks to her growth spurt. Then she continued speaking faster and faster. "But, even if I can't always be your number one, I… I, um, want to be number one when we're alone like this, at least. So I want to put at least that much effort in."

"Felt."

"…What?! Wait, is it weird for me to think like this…?"

"You're so, so crazy cute!!"

"…Gyah!"

The way she kept making excuses was just so ridiculously adorable that Subaru couldn't help but squeeze her even tighter. He rained kisses down on her, covering her face, forehead, and neck.

Felt was completely and totally overwhelmed by Subaru's overreaction and the deluge of kisses. Her eyes rolled frantically in her skull, her face oscillating rapidly between pale and scarlet.

"Wh-Wh-Wha…!"

"I already knew you were cute, but damn! That was just so adorable! Wow!! Even the time you abandoned me in that alley seems so, so cute now!"

"I did that?!"

"Shh, just forget about it. It's dust in the wind, water under the bridge… I've been taking the bitterness from that time out on you in the bedroom, but tonight I'm going to be real gentle."

"So that's why… Well, it's not like I mind it a little rough… Ah, no! You didn't hear that!!"

Felt let slip that tidbit, maybe because the feeling of Subaru's hands on her made her let her guard down. Noticing her mistake and the smug smile on his face, she shoved him away, springing out of the bed. "Ah, shit! I really shouldn't have said that! You're never hearin' that again, got that?!"

"I see, I see. So you like it a little rough, huh? I'll keep that in mind, my wife!"

"Shut it!! You're going to hell, you know that?!"

She flipped him off and made to turn her back to him, but Subaru grabbed her hand, holding her back. "Wait, Felt. I know I said this earlier too, but don't show your defenseless or rough sides to anyone else, okay? I'm afraid something will happen while I'm not there to protect you."

"Worry not. I can be quite charming for strangers, you know," Felt demonstrated by slipping into an uncharacteristically honeyed tone, placing a delicate hand to her mouth, and giving Subaru an elegant smile. Subaru was disproportionately shaken, to which she slightly tilted her head. “What is the matter, sir? You’re looking ever so unweell.”

“Don’t do that in front of me. Be as defenseless as you want, just stop that.”

“Whatever you say, Bro. Yeah, putting on that schtick in front of you felt sort of horrifying. I’m not doing it again.” Felt chuckled and then pointed a finger at Subaru’s still-ashen face. “So you don’t have to worry.”

“Worry about what?”

“About me, like…laying down in a skirt in front of other people and stuff. I… I only do that kind of stuff in front of you, Bro.”

“…”

Trying to leave it at that, Felt spun around towards the door and made to walk out, but Subaru had no intention of letting her. He quickly grabbed her arm and tugged with all his might—

“Gyah-!”

“Felt, you’re SO CUTE! Adorable!! Amazing!!”

And the downpour of kisses began pouring once more.

7

“I embarrassed Felt too much and she decided to kiss with her fist. She’s still cute, even when she does stuff like this… I think I got a little carried away.”

Rem gave him a gentle smile as she spoke. “Please be more careful. You’re not a bachelor anymore, after all.”

It was late at night, and Subaru had come to her room for a visit. He shrugged off his thoughts at her smile and moved to stand next to her. Just as she was about to surrender her seat to him, he stopped her by grabbing her hand. “You should be careful, too. It’s true enough that I need to look after myself for the sake of my family, but that applies to you even more.”

“Rem is sorry. You’re so busy, so she should be working hard to support you, but…”

“Don’t misunderstand me. All you should be doing is resting as much as possible, so you’re strong enough to show me your best smile when we’re together like this. That’s the best support I could ever ask for. After all…” He knelt in front of where she sat as he spoke, reaching for her. His hand landed gently on her previously slender abdomen, now slightly swollen with the beginnings of a new life. “The fruit of our love is growing here. Do you know just how much strength just knowing gives me?”

“Rem is happy that she can support you emotionally, but she wants to support you physically, too. She’s a little frustrated that Petra gets to take that role, hehe.”

She stuck her tongue out playfully, trying to mask her frustration at her current lack of mobility. Most of her maidly duties had been ceded to Petra, who took to the role of all-purpose maid magnificently. Meanwhile, Rem spent the majority of her time looking after the child growing inside of her. Maternity was taking more and more of her time recently.

“You’ve made a lot of socks, recently.”

“Rem didn’t think she was any good at knitting, at first, but it became more enjoyable the more she did it. And when she thought about how her child will grow, she couldn’t help but make larger and larger pairs. First, they were the size of a thumb, then a fist, an open hand, an abble, a melen…”

“Hey, why would our child ever need such giant socks?!”

“Well, Rem hopes they’ll grow up big and strong, so…”

“They’d have to be bigger than the biggest, bulkiest old man I’ve ever met! I don’t even want to imagine that!”

Subaru was sure he would love their child, no matter what, but this was too much, even for him. Rem chuckled at his straight-man routine, assuring him that it had all been a joke. “Rem realized halfway through that she made them too big. She’s going to unravel them and try again. The ones she made for you, too.”

“Oh, you made some for me? Thanks, that makes me super happy. I know you put love into every stitch… I’ll never take them off!”

“Please do. And have these gloves, and these socks, this haramaki, scarf, earmuffs, hat, underwear, jacket, shoes, shin guards…”

“Did you leave any yarn for our kid’s stuff?!”

She pulled knitted, colorful items out one after another. If he wore all these at once, he would become overheated in under ten minutes, even if he was just doing paperwork. He’d left such a skillful person alone with her hobby for such a long time, so perhaps this result was inevitable.

“It would be really hard to get any work done wearing all these at once… Mind if I rotate them out?”

“That’s fine. Rem is very happy that you accepted them at all. That makes all the time she spent knitting worth it.”

“Rem…”

“So you’re free to do whatever you wish with your gifts. Even if they gather dust in the back of your closet, or if you use them to clean up spilled milk, or if you use them to cover a dirty chair so you can sit on it… Rem would be fine with anything.”

“I’ll cherish and wear every one of them! Don’t even bother thinking up ways I could defile them!”

He demonstrated what he meant, putting on each and every item she’d given him. Rem clapped, delighted by the sight of him, unbearably warm as he was. “Look how kind your father is, little one. Rem wants to let you meet him soon, so you can show him how lively you are.”

“If they met me like this, they might not recognize me when I’m not covered in yarn. Dad’s a little worried about that.”

“Don’t worry. They’re Rem’s child, so they’ll love you just like she does. So of course they’ll recognize you, no matter what you’re wearing.”

“Yeah, but they’re half my child, too. I’m worried about recessive genes here!”

“You’re always so wonderful, Subaru. If they’re anything like you at all, our child will be wonderful, too.”

Subaru was pouting, but Rem spoke in the same gentle tone as always as she rubbed her belly. Her opinion of him was unrealistically positive, as it always had been. He felt a burst of motivation to keep working harder so that he could live up to her expectations one day. She inspired great strength in him.

“Hey, Subaru. Do you want a boy or a girl?”

“That’s a hard question… If they look like you, they’ll be super good-looking, regardless of gender. If they inherit these eyes of mine, though… Well, I’d feel too bad for a girl.”

Subaru had gotten his eyes from his mother, and those eyes had caused a lot of problems for her as a kid. Her eyes were so harsh, the girls in her class were terrified of her and used to give her candy as tribute. She was always full of sweets.

Knowing his mom, she’d probably never noticed how problematic her eyes were… But Subaru guessed his theoretical daughter wouldn’t be as oblivious as her grandmother.

“These mean-looking eyes of mine are highly heritable. My mom had them, and so did her dad and grandpa, apparently. So our kid will probably get them, too.”

“So you’d prefer a boy?”

“Well, on the other hand, we have this saying back in my original world: ‘Princess first, prince second’… it means that having a daughter and then a son makes both kids easier to raise, or something like that."

"Geez, which is it? Rem can't tell what you want!"

Rem's cheeks puffed up in annoyance at the way Subaru was going back and forth between the options. He grinned, poking her cheeks and sending air puffing out her mouth.

"I'm saying that it doesn't matter which it is. No, I'm saying that no matter which it is, I'll love them just as much."

"Subaru…"

"If it's a girl, I'll treat her like a princess. I'll spoil her absolutely rotten, give her whatever she wants whenever she wants it! I want her to be like 'Papa, I wanna marry you someday!' until she's in middle school. If I can have my daughter love me that much until middle school, I'm in the winning group among all the dads around the world. Well, I guess, I'm already a winner to have such an adorable wife." Rem turned red as he gushed. Seeing her flushed, lovely face, Subaru suddenly raised a finger. "But if it's a boy, I'll be his greatest obstacle, his most difficult rival, his partner in crime! Just like my dad did with me. I'll continue the tradition: I'll be merciless, like a lion throwing his cub into a bottomless ravine over and over again! Aahh, that sounds fun, too!"

"So that's why," he continued, "you don't need to worry about the gender. Just put all your strength towards delivering a healthy baby, Rem. Everything will be just fine, I promise. I love you, and you love me just as much. There's no way any kid of ours would be anything less than incredible."

"Yes, you're right."

Rem blessed him with a beautiful, content smile in response to his exaggerations. The itch under his skin became too much to bear at her loveliness.

"Rem."

"…"

All he had done was call her name and bring his face closer, but Rem knew what he wanted. She closed her eyes, and Subaru brought their lips together.

He felt the soft, hesitant brush of her tongue.

They held one another close, love filling their every movement.

8

"Phew, another rough day…!"

Subaru had finished tidying up his paperwork and returned to his room, rotating his stiff arms as he walked. There had been a delay at one of the related departments, so a bunch of paperwork that should've been delivered earlier in the day had been dumped on him all at once. What was more, they unreasonably wanted all of it done the same day.

"Man, I feel like they're taking advantage of me. The Japanese inability to say 'no' is really screwing me over here… I guess I should start refusing people outright, huh?"

But if he did that, he could delay things, and the inconvenienced parties would surely crawl out of the woodwork. When he imagined that, he doubted he had the courage to reject anyone. King or not, the timid lower-middle-class man inside him lived on.

Is it really ok for a king to be this helpless?

"Well, too late now. I'm king already. Even if I wanted to complain and cry my eyes out, no one would want to listen…"

"I can be your shoulder to cry on, Subaru."

Subaru was talking to himself, absorbed with thoughts of the exhausting day behind him and the challenges the next day would bring. A young woman sitting on the sill of the open window greeted him as he entered the room. Her silver hair swayed in the night breeze, glimmering like liquid silver in the moonlight. She turned toward Subaru with a smile. "Welcome back. You did some amazing work today."

Subaru momentarily forgot how to speak. Partially at his shock at her unexpected visit, and partially because her smile was such an instant balm on his overworked mind. But primarily, it was because—

“What… What am I…?”

Emotions suddenly welled up behind his eyes. Something hot spilled down his cheeks, and he brought a sleeve to his eyes, trying to withstand the sudden torrent of emotion.

He tried to hold back; It would probably upset Emilia if he burst into tears as soon as he saw her face, but he simply couldn’t help it.

“Ah, shit… Emilia-tan’s here, but I can’t stop…”

“Subaru.”

“I-I’m fine. Completely and totally fine. I’ll stop soon… I just have something in my eye…”

“…”

Subaru made every excuse he could think of and turned his face away. He didn’t want Emilia to see him ugly crying. No, he didn’t want anyone to see him like this. It was far, far too late in the game to show this sort of weakness. He had come so far to get here and pushed so many people aside. He couldn’t be so soft.

The women around him didn’t resent that he’d taken their goal for himself. On the contrary, they showered him with affection. Their forgiveness was enough to keep him going…or it usually was.

“I…I…”

“Geez. You’re as stubborn and childish as always, Subaru.”

“—Ah.”

Emilia stopped the bluster spilling from his lips with a finger to his mouth. Subaru’s eyes were wide as she leaned in, bringing her lips to his.

Her touch hit him like a bolt of lightning. A numbing sensation spread from the tip of his tongue to the rest of his body, wiping away the emotions that had been overwhelming him.

Their lips parted. Subaru's eyes still swam with emotion, and Emilia held his head to her chest. She began to rub his back slowly as if to comfort a child. "Is it too much?" she asked.

"…No, I can keep going."

"Do you want help?"

"I'll try to tough it out."

"You're not pushing yourself too far, right?"

"I might be, a little bit. But now is the time to push myself."

He'd been comforted by her like this once, long, long ago. He'd clung to her then, sobbing with mucus dripping down his face, spilling all his weaknesses and complaints. The memory of that time made his cheeks hot—but not just from embarrassment; there was a sense of pride, too. He was powerless back then, unable to do anything except curse his weakness. It was different now: he was mature enough to keep pushing himself forward.

"I was just a boy back then, really. But now I'm a proper man."

"…Were you thinking something strange, just now?"

"You smell amazing, Emilia-tan. Can we fool around?"

"What? No. I haven't bathed, and I just came in from outside…"

Emilia suddenly returned to her usual attitude, pulling away from Subaru's embrace. She combed her fingers through her hair and wrapped her free arm across her body, as though hiding it from his gaze. She was oblivious to the fact that such a gesture only served to excite her partner further. It was that naivete that made her so enchanting.

"Besides, it's not my turn tonight."

"It's not anyone's turn tonight. It's my night off—Ferris said that if I don't sleep alone every once in a while I'll definitely die young. Hence the night of rest."

"That's another reason for me not to stay," Emilia said reservedly.

"Well my heart is pounding, I'm wheezing and panting… But I'd be happy to endure all that and just snuggle up with you in the futon," Subaru suggested as he put up a finger.

Emilia looked at him, doubtfully. "Can you really hold yourself back, Subaru?"

"You wound me! I'm a man of my word. If I say I won't do anything, I won't… I can do it! I definitely won't do it!"

"Sorry, you've lost me."

"I've lost myself, too. But what I want to say is that you're safe from me. And what about you, Emilia-tan? Are you sure your affection won't explode if we sleep in the same bed?"

"Ah, you don't need to worry about that. It's completely and totally impossible."

"Ouch, what a strong denial…"

"That's not what I meant…" Emilia muttered, seemingly upset with herself at Subaru's hurt expression.

She never seemed to consider how much the things she said would affect him, a trait that hadn't changed from the time they met. He really wished she would think a little more before she spoke.

Of course, everyone has some faults that will never improve, no matter how many times they're talked to.

Well, no point in lecturing her tonight. Anyway…

"I think I'll hit the hay soon… How about it, Emilia-tan? Want to snuggle under the futon with me?"

“Eh? Well, I am tired, and it’s been so long since we could spend time together… Very well. I’ll sleep with you.”

“Alright then.”

Emilia took his outstretched hand elegantly. He guided her close, as though leading her in a dance. Her delicate body nestled against his, and for a moment they just held one another in silence.

The pair slowly, easily slipped into bed together.

“Goodnight then, Emilia-tan. I’m sure you’ll see me again in your dreams.”

“Yes, I’ll try my best to find you… Hey, Subaru?”

“Hmm?”

“…Love you,” she said, and then pressed her face into the pillow, hiding from him. He could barely see in the darkened room, relying on the moonlight for illumination—

“Emilia-taaan.”

“W-Wait…! Didn’t you just say you would hold yourself back?”

“I said that I would hold true to my word, but I never actually promised to control myself.”

“That’s just a technicality, and you know it…Nn!”

It was lucky that they were already sharing a bed. Subaru covered her lips with his own before she could object further, using his whole body to express his love for her. Emilia, though she objected at first, gradually lost the will to resist. “I swear, you’re so immature, Subaru…!” she cried, embarrassed even in the darkness of night.

※※※

This was an April Fool’s scenario. It’s a route that will never be realized in canon, a harem route. Petra, Crusch, Priscilla, Anastasia, Felt, Rem, and Emilia all worked together here. (Note: He forgot Ram!)

The idea was that all the candidates for the royal selection married Subaru as a reward for his good deeds, and he became king. This will definitely never, ever become canon though, sorry!

Accumulating Life in Another World From Zero
(Web Novel)

1

A dream, I saw a dream.

A dream that wouldn't fade, a dream that kept repeating, a dream with no end, a dream that wouldn't end—

Over and over again, many many times over, repeating mistakes over and over, correcting them more and more. 1000 times, spinning. 10,000 times, connecting. 100 million times, overcoming them. And before knowing it, losing count.

Agony, terror, turbidity, ruin, hatred, madness.

Exhausted, shaken, twisted, corrupted, contorted, decayed, anguished; a heart smashed to pieces.

And yet, there was still a place I wanted to reach.

And yet, there was still a wish I wanted to protect.

Even if no one knew about the endless tragedies that repeated over and over, I will not forget. Even if no one notices, only I am unable to forget.

—Even if the people I want to save wept, I still want to save them.

So, even now, I don't regret having taken that hand. If there is something I regret, it would be that I was hesitant and indecisive in taking her hand, and the frustration towards my own weak, fragile heart that I couldn't steel.

—Waking up from the empty dream, the first thing he always felt was a throbbing headache.

Subaru: "…"

Opening his eyes, trying to stave off his sleepiness, he blinked rapidly in an attempt to wake himself up. Though his consciousness hung in a bleary haze, his sluggishness only lasted for a few seconds. Immediately after his consciousness came to from his sleep, his waking brought energy back into his body.

Subaru: "Ah, Aaah"

In contrast to his body being awake, all that escaped from his mouth was a dullish voice. At a glimpse, it seemed like he was still half-asleep, but this was one of the most important rituals he did in the morning. By lying on his back with his head up whilst he let out that voice in that manner, a lot of information could be conveyed through to him.

The tone of his voice, the establishment of consciousness, the safety of his limbs, sorting his thoughts out, what he'll do today, and the existence of his life—

He made sure to undertake each of these actions every morning.

This was the proof that Natsuki Subaru had reached the morning without making any grave mistakes.

Subaru: "yawn"

Taking off his blankets as he yawned, he lifted his body up, swiveling his feet down off of the bed. He roughly scratched his head as he looked around the room he was in. It was a room he had become used to seeing—it was luxuriously furnished, and included a canopy bed in the room in which he entered from. But, where Subaru had woken up was not the canopy bed, but rather a sofa placed further within the room. He passed the nights as of late there, wrapped up in a futon, curled up into a ball.

—Actually, no, this had been a bedtime habit of Natsuki Subaru's in these years.

Be as it may, there wasn't any big reason for him not to sleep in his bed. It was just that he'd end up laboring to try and prepare the environment so that it'd be as comfortable to sleep in as possible. As a result of trial and error, he had learnt that he felt more comfortable by lying down and sleeping on the sofa than sleeping in a bed. And ever since, he'd kept doing that. That's all there was to it.

Subaru: "…"

Rubbing his eyes, Subaru got off from the sofa that he had made into a bed and went to the bathroom so he could get dressed. As he washed his face in the bathroom that was adjacent to his bedroom, he deliberately looked at his soaked face reflected in the mirror. His face looked tired, and gave the impression that he was about to collapse. His face looked frayed with dejection. These three things sapped at his morale.

In an attempt to stiffen that expression, Subaru clapped his face with both hands using all of his strength. A dry sound accompanied the tears that welled up; in order to wash away them, Subaru poured cold water onto his face. Once again, he looked at his wet face in the mirror. And whilst carefully kneading his face, eyes and cheeks, he said,

Subaru: "Smile…you gotta smile, if you can't, then… die."

Chanting this incantation, Subaru bent his mouth into a terrible, crooked smile. He flashed his white teeth, his smile narrowing his eyes so the whites weren't visible all around anymore. His own countenance was like that of a villain's he had been friends with for a bit more than 18 years. He could camouflage his eyes, his facial expression, and his countenance with no issues.

Subaru: "Oookay, okay. Keep it like this."

After checking his smile, Subaru dried his face with a towel and hurriedly changed into his clothes. When he spent time at the Mansion, Subaru's appearance was not garbed in a servant's uniform… rather, he wore the formal attire of a noble. Even if he took off his jacket, he would keep snug in a casual white shirt with its sleeves rolled up. However, such appearances were now naturally required. They were quite stuffy, but he really couldn't do anything about it. He was obligated to have an appearance appropriate to his position, because it was the position Subaru himself wanted.

Subaru: "Soon it'll be the usual time."

Straight after he had changed into his clothes, he looked up to the Magic Hour Crystal that had been furnished above the room's door. It had a dark green hue, signifying that it was morning. It showed that his time for getting out of bed was soon. In some way, it seemed like this morning he had spent just a little bit too much time in practicing his smile. In a few minutes, a punctual girl would knock on his door as scheduled. Before that, he needed to finish everything he hadn't done yet.

Subaru: "…"

Shifting his attention, Subaru unbuttoned his shirt down. There, attached by a thin chain was a pendant fastened to the "Black Crystal" which he never removed, even when sleeping. A mysterious, sparkling black crystal. Squeezing it in the palm of his hand, Subaru closed his eyes. The crystal stone was cold and hard to the touch—when it tucked into the palm of Subaru's hand, its presence grew stronger as if firing up; it started to pulse as if it was a living thing.

Naturally, he started to unconsciously count its strange beat's rhythm and frequency as it rested in his palm.

With a stronger beat as it reached its full power, the crystal stone's beat grew stronger, and faster. Without even realizing it, its pulse perfectly overlapped with the pulse of Subaru's own heartbeat, until the beat of his heart and the beat of the crystal jewel became equal. When his mind realized that, Subaru's consciousness was released from the yoke of his body and was invited to another area which could not by any means be real.

And in that moment, there were no sounds or signs from the world; instead, a dazzling light enveloped his consciousness.

Subaru: “…”

His consciousness that was formed by the light was slowly guided to his awakening. Sunshine pierced into his eyes when he opened his closed eyelids. What he saw in front of him as he blinked his eyes was a beautiful grassy plain with the wind blowing through it.

It was a vast green plain which spread out as far as the eyes could see. The sea of grass stretched on and on further than his eyes could see. Short blades of grass gently swayed in the breeze. Up overheard, the sky was clear with not even a wisp of cloud present. The sunshine glistened like a gemstone. The blue of the sky and the green of the earth went on forevermore, up until they hazily intersected in the distant horizon. It was appropriate of a dreamworld that lacked any semblance of reality; there was a certain stillness there that seemed eternal.

Splendid, perfectly clear, empty space. —There was just one part that was different to that in this world.

Subaru: “…”

Right at the heart of the plain, when Subaru stood there and looked back, there was a gently sloping hill immediately behind which continued to form the shape of a slightly elevated hillock. Up on the hillock, there was a modest garden full of flowers. Right next to those beautiful flowers that were basking in the sun, was a parasol and a white table.

Without speaking even a word, Subaru climbed up the hill, and squeezed himself under the parasol. Steaming cups had been placed on the white table, their ceramic interiors filled with a warm, amber liquid. Two cups had been set upon the table, and a white chair had been left set next to the table.

Since she had prepared it for him, Subaru sat down on the chair without confirming it. Though the tea had just recently finished brewing, he held the cup to his mouth, wetting his throat with its amber goodness.

—As always, it was an unusual tea which tasted neither delicious nor unappetizing.

Nevertheless, without fail, he always drank this tea from the moment he sat down. It had been an agreement he'd made with the mistress of this place, the tea was a substitute for introductions in their strange relationship. Even so,

Subaru: "Ah, I drank it, I drank it, thanks for the drink. Alright, let's quickly move onto the main subject."

???: "Of course, I did say that the first sip worked as a greeting. However, I don't think that means that you shouldn't ever give me a simple hello, mhm?"

Finishing his tea, Subaru placed his cup back on the table with these few words. And to what he had said, the one who sat opposite to him at the table gave him a weak smile, whilst voicing out her complaint. Receiving her complaint, Subaru scratched the tip of his nose whilst saying:

Subaru: "…There's no real reason to greet you, is there? After all, since you're prying inside my head day and night, there's no meaning in saying hello or goodbye to you."

???: "This and that are different matters, you know? First of all, day and night, I'd like for you not to speak of it in such a scandalous manner. Even if it is true, even I am still a shy, young maiden girl, as delicate as a flower. Wouldn't my reputation become all the more worse if it became known that I am always staring into a boy's mind?"

Subaru: "A shy, young maiden girl as delicate as a flower… Did the meaning of those words change without me noticing?"

???: "How scathing of you. Well, maybe it is unreasonable at my age to insist on calling myself that."

Saying that, the girl relaxed her mouth into a smile; quite in contrast to the contents of her complaints. Completely used to these sorts of exchanges, the girl was quite tolerant towards Subaru's impolite behavior—or rather, it seemed as if she was enjoying herself exchanging these sorts of conversations with him.

Subaru's heart cannot help but feel the distorted feelings of guilt in his heart intensify when seeing that smile. In any case, he doesn't know which way of acting is the right one. Only with the person right in front of his eyes, can he find the optimal solution.

Subaru: "As I thought, you're such an unpleasant woman."

???: "That makes me glad. For you, who is kind and greedy. Rather than being kind towards everyone, rather than being someone so apathetic who doesn't find any value in having others help him, I always take great delight in becoming someone who cruelly wounds your heart, or the unpleasant someone who lodges an immovable thorn in your heart."

Neither sarcasm or irony worked against her. Before she had answered him, Subaru made quite an unpleasant face, but that only resulted in making her more pleased.

???: "Now then, any more of this and my heart will get pained for being hated and buying into your antipathy. Let's try and achieve what we set out to do for this morning's meeting now."

Subaru: "You weren't hoping to be hated?"

???: "It was a girl's cute bluff, you know? This is what I want you to see and accept."

Subaru: "Cute…?"

Subaru doubted this from the bottom of his heart. He leaned his head in doubt. As for his companion she merely gave a ironic smile. And then…,

???: "You're truly a man who never at all feels any bashfulness. As the "Witch of Greed", I'm pleased with that part of you. —Natsuki Subaru"

Suited to be a contractor, the "Witch of Greed", Echidna narrowed her eyes with a sweet smile, a smile that rose from the depths of her heart.

3

Subaru: “Today’s the 14th of Kisdam……right?”

Echidna: “You can rest assured. You fell asleep last night without any issues, and you woke up this morning without anything eventful happening. The worst case scenario didn’t happen whilst you were asleep overnight. So you don’t have to worry, everything is okay.”

Subaru: “Those are foolish words. If I went to sleep thinking nothing would eventful would happen, I’d end up waking up dead. I don’t know when and where I’ll die, or when it’ll stop.”

Clicking his tongue at the optimism of the witch, Subaru recalled the desperate feeling of loss of his “Deaths”.

Without aim or direction, he had no doubt it could visit him even tomorrow—When the fact is that he abruptly “Returns by Death”, deprived of it without any premonition. The fact is that the time he spends with people will be forgotten, the fear and despair that it had brung him would never be forgotten.

Echidna: “That’s correct. I was being rash right now. My apologies for that.”

Subaru: “…Aren’t you being terribly meek right now?”

Echidna: “I apologise if you thought of it as a bad thing. I am not that bad of a woman… even though I show myself like that.”

Seeing the discomfort in Subaru who had replied with hurt in his voice, the girl garbed in black gave him a wink as she said that. When talking to that girl, the first thing he noticed was how captivating her eyes are, and how her devilish beauty seems as if it would steal people’s hearts.

It’s amazing that just two colors express this beauty.

Long, beautiful white hair like snow cascaded down to her back, and her slender limbs are garbed in a black dress, typical of one seen when mourning. Sitting on her chair, her long legs were crossed together; a somewhat degenerate feeling floated around in that. On her thin lips that were drinking from her cup, there was a strangely arousing gloss to them.

She was a perverse, demonic figure that exuded a sensation of inescapable ruin and destruction were you to provoke her— Regardless of this, there are anecdotes of those who have tried to approach this Witch of Calamity that brings about the end.

That was the identity of the white haired girl, who was completely garbed in black, Echidna. She, who had forged a contract with Subaru.

Subaru: “Hmmmm…”

Echidna: “…? What’s the matter? You’re staring at my face. Do I have something on it?”

Subaru: “Aaah, just hair, and ears, and a mouth, and a nose, and eyes…”

Echidna: “…Hm why? Even if you’re saying something completely obvious, I feel rather insulted.”

Echidna frowned, furrowing her eyebrows at Subaru’s answer. Seeing that, Subaru lifted his hand up and said: “Waitwait,”

Subaru: “I didn’t really mean to insult you. I was just thinking, that for someone who has the reputation of being a witch, I don’t think you’re that scary.”

Even if up until a moment ago she had expressed all kinds of degeneracy and perversions, in reality, she did have a few bad habits, but she was still an ordinary girl who you could even go as far as calling good-natured.

Of course, this doesn’t deny that there were crooked, warped parts that were witch-like.

Echidna: “Hehe, that’s quite an unusual opinion huh?”

Saying that, Echidna relaxed her lips, and gave a little smile upon hearing Subaru's thoughts. Placing her cup on the table, she shifted her long legs and fiddled with her long white hair.

Echidna: "Even though I might look like this right now, I was one of the witches that left behind such stories, in various places 400 years ago. Were you to catch me, that version of me was unpardonable."

Subaru: "You're speaking like you're a middle schooler looking for special treatment."

Echidna: "If we were to add from you to that then we'd be getting a lot closer to how I feel, wouldn't we. But, it isn't just that. I should have talked about this stuff when we first met."

Subaru: "Ah… what was it you said…? Certainly, if you were a person without any tolerances, you would have vomited the first time you saw me…"

Echidna: "When you're cutting it down to just that, I feel that my nature is greatly misunderstood"

The majestic witch's appearance completely changed. Echidna looked annoyed hearing Subaru's answer. To that reply, Subaru replied suitably with N-Now now," to deal with the shift in topic. Nonetheless, what they had spoke was enough for the morning routine.

Subaru: "It's not like us to delve down into idle gossip. I'll be going back to reality soon."

Echidna: "Are you leaving already? Stay here a little more, no one will mind if you do so. As you know, the time you spend here does not affect reality. You can rest all the time you want… that's what I hope"

Echidna said this so to restrain Subaru who had stretched up and stood from his chair. Subaru cracked the bones of his necks at hearing the witch's cajolery.

Subaru: "That's right. To be honest, I know you're trying to help me in offering me to stay here, but…"

Cutting off his words there, Subaru turned his head to look down towards Echidna. The black irises of the witch and Subaru met each other. However—

Subaru: “It’s not my plan to depend on you all the time. You should know that it’s not that kind of contract.”

Echidna: “Good grief, you really aren’t being honest with yourself. Even when I am the only one in this world that can be your accomplice in helping you bear your anguish and sorrow.”

Subaru: “I don’t intend to entrust my anguish and sorrow to anyone. This is something that’s just for me; it’s how I overcome them. That’s the reason behind the contract between me and you. Isn’t that so?”

With a low tone of voice, Subaru declared this firmly to the still annoyed Echidna who was shrugging her shoulders. To that reply, Echidna cast her eyes down, drinking from her cup in silence.

When she stopped talking, it was a declaration of her intention that she had lost her reason to continue conversing. Making sure of this, Subaru turned his back to the woman, and started to walk down the hillock. But first, he stopped and turned his head back to look at the witch.

Subaru: “By the way, just a moment ago, you didn’t deny that you’re always spying on me day and night?”

Echidna: “… Hm? I thought I’d said ‘even if’?”

Subaru :…Even if that’s true, I think it’s in my capacity to recognize the context in that implicit way of speaking!”

Echidna: “…”

Subaru: “…”

Being hounded by Subaru, Echidna let out a small sigh. And then she put her cup to her mouth again. It was a declaration that there was no meaning in continuing their conversation—

Subaru: “I guess you thought I’d just leave it if you kept doing that, right? Are you going to ever stop doing such an unethical thing? Hmph, so are you?”

Echidna: “Is it not normal? I am not so vulgar to spy on you when you’re taking a bath or using the bathroom. It’s just that unless you’re convinced that nothing will happen in these vulnerable situations, I think that it’s impossible for me as your contractor to avert my eyes. In the end, it’s my obligation as the “Witch of Greed” to faithfully uphold the contract—”

Subaru: “From now on, I’m removing the pendant when I go to the bathroom or wash myself.”

Saying this to the witches rapid-fire excuses, Subaru went down the hill, all the whilst biting down his embarrassment. At the bottom of the hillock, in the place in which Subaru first entered the grassy plain, a door materialized without warning. A single door free of any support. It was the only door that allowed him to go in and out to the outside world.

Subaru: “…”

Arriving in front of the door, Subaru placed his hand on the doorknob, turning himself so he couldn’t see anything. Echidna was looking at Subaru’s back, her hair fluttering in the wind all the way on the hillock.

When seeing Subaru looking down away from her, with only a slight bit of hesitation, she gave him a small wave. And without giving anything back, Subaru went through the door, leaving behind just a sigh.

—And straight after, his consciousness that had been captured by the dream world was released and returned back to reality.

Subaru: “…”

When his consciousness came back to reality, Subaru was still standing in the middle of his own room, holding the black crystal. Breathing out a long sigh, he looked towards the Magic Hour

Crystal on top of the door. There was no change in its green hue. That was proof that the time he spent in the dream world was only a few seconds.

Subaru: “Still, I’ll never get used to it…”

It was routine every morning to go to the dream world to spend some time at Echidna’s tea party. But from there, when he’d come back to reality, he still hadn’t become familiar with the discomfort that was produced from the gap of these two worlds. It was a feeling that differed from Return by Death . Subaru sighed, and Echidna: “What would you say to changing your mind and getting used to not getting used to it? Even if it’s no more than for your peace of mind, maybe it’ll make you feel a bit more at ease?”

As if it was a whisper in his ear, the voice of the witch he had said goodbye to a moment ago rung out. Well, in fact it wasn’t whispered into his ear. That voice came from his contractor; the thoughts of the witch flowed via the crystal stone which hung from his neck.

Both of their paths were entwined by the contract even when he wasn’t in the dream world. That made it possible for the witch to talk directly to Subaru from the dream world.

However—

Subaru: “I thought I told you not to speak to me without thinking when there’s nothing important. “

Echidna: “There’s no one around. I don’t think anyone is going to care you if you’re directing your attention to me when you’re alone in the room.”

Subaru: “What would you do, if you did the same thing in public without thinking, and people saw me speaking to someone who isn’t there and thought I was a weirdo?”

Echidna: “I feel like that’s a new evaluation. But, besides, it’s not unusual for spirits to converse their thoughts with their spirit-user. That isn’t really suspicious.”

Subaru: “With spirit-users, both use their thoughts to communicate. In my case, it’s just you and I’m stuck speaking aloud to myself. If you look at it from that way, it’s pretty annoying”

Echidna: “Yeah yeah, I get it. As you wish, I’ll be silent except for when necessary. You managed to make a witch obey… you’re a master at this.”

Subaru: “SHUT THE HELL UP”

Echidna: “My my. Please don’t hesitate to call me if you need me, contractor-dono.”

With both anger and mockery in her voice, Echidna slinked back leaving behind those theatrical words of farewell. Even so, the witch should still be peeping into this world via the pendant, however, for the moment, Subaru pushed the notion away from his head and he breathed out a long sigh. From now on, he would definitely shove the pendant into his back-pocket when taking a bath or going to the toilet…

???: “… Subaru-sama, are you awake?”

There was a knock on the door from outside, which informed him of his usual wake up time. Subaru cleared his throat as he heard the gentle voice that had asked him that. Then, clapping his hands to his face, and making sure he was smiling using the mirror, he gave a very dispirited reply of: “Coome in”,

Hearing that, the door slowly opened, and a young girl entered the room.

???: “Good morning, Subaru-sama. Today is once again a splendid morning y’know.”

Saying that while smiling, was the little girl in her maid uniform—Petra Leyte, Subaru’s personal maid.

When he had met her, she had still been a young bud yet to flower. But now she was entering the growing season, and was in the process of blooming beautifully. Her height, and arms, and legs had grown a lot compared to before, and she was increasingly becoming more and more suited to her pretty maid dress too.

That behavior and conduction was not lost against her cute dress. From the start, she was a good girl who was well-taught and quick-to-learn. And now, as a maid, Petra had reached top notch levels.

A 14 year old flower… Seeing Petra's matured smile, Subaru replied with a smile.

Subaru: "A good morning to you too, Petra. I agree, it's indeed a splendid morning. Today too, I was able to see Petra's cute face in the morning. I'm pretty satisfied too."

Petra: "Subaru's still saying such things. …Ah, but there are clouds hanging over the sky beyond the forest, it seems that the weather may get worse this afternoon. I have plans to go shopping this afternoon, I hope it'll stay sunnyyyyyy."

Inclining her head towards Subaru's greeting, Petra turned her eyes towards the window and muttered that out. In those words, there was a trace of her childish immaturity in them, and Subaru gave a small chuckle.

Petra: "Ah! No, Subaru-sama."

Subaru: "Nono, just now, the beautiful shell of a Maid was broken just a little. How very like you, Petra."

Petra: "Jeez, please stop treating me like a kid like that. I'm totally grown up. I've been a maid already for two years… cuz of that I've become an adult!"

Shaking her auburn hair, Petra's cheeks blushed and her lips tapered in embarrassment. In front of the figure of his cute little sister, Subaru stroked the smiling girl's head. Petra narrowed her eyes in happiness and let out a reluctant sigh as Subaru stroked her head.

Petra: "So, what will you be doing this morning? It's still early for breakfast, but…"

Subaru: "Ahh, for the time being I'll just finish my usual routine and then if it goes well, we can have breakfast with everyone. If it doesn't go well… then, the usual."

Petra: "…Okay"

Casting her eyes down slightly at Subaru's reply, Petra's face turned quite serious. Shedding silent tears at making such a young sweet girl make such a face, Subaru stroked the cute girl's head as she made this face,

Subaru: "Anyhow, thank you for today as well. Especially for coming to wake me up."

Petra: "…"

Subaru: "Petra?"

Petra: "Subaru-sama really is clumsy."

Saying that to Subaru, who was trying to awkwardly change topic, Petra gave an exasperated sigh. And then the girl shook her head, putting on a smile like a bloomed flower.

Petra: "No, even this is my job. Besides, it's far better because Subaru-sama won't sleep too much… Even if he shouldn't be so careless."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Petra: "It's nothing. Well then, I'll see you later. Excuse me."

Every morning, after acting as Subaru's alarm clock Petra would give him a curtsy with her skirt. And then, after seeing off Subaru, she'd leave the room. The door would close, and Subaru would nod his head in satisfaction seeing Petra's growth. .

Subaru: "Petra has become splendid as well. As a big brother, I am proud."

Echidna: "But from her side, she doesn't seem to think of you as a big brother."

Subaru: “Didn’t I tell you to be silent except for when I need you? Witch-sama sure is quick to break promises.”

In her monologue, Subaru was struck by the witch’s persistence and weakness to not be able to tolerate the silence. But, leaving behind a resigned sigh, he turned around to look at the door Petra had disappeared through.

Subaru: “I’m that girl’s big brother, you know? So, Petra’s my cute little sister. That’s why I will make that girl happy. —That much I will absolutely do.”

Echidna: “You’ll absolutely make her happy you say…? Those words might unexpectedly become terrible words.”

Hearing Subaru’s firm tone, Echidna said that without poking any fun at him. Ignoring the words of the witch, Subaru left the room, lightly stretching himself. The mansion’s corridor had become quite cold as a sign that it was early morning . Shivering, Subaru walked out.

—His everyday “routine” was about to start.

4

Since a few months ago, mornings in the Roswaal mansion had began with an intense “Slaughter.” Though, calling it “Slaughter” may have been quite surprising when it came to the people concerned.

Still, as far as Subaru was concerned, who witnessed it, the exchanges were violent enough to be called “Slaughter.” In fact, there was no doubt that one of the two who clashed together was challenging the other to the death. But unfortunately, the other person who was challenging them evaded that ferocious fighting spirit with ease.

The disparity of power between the two of them was completely evident in the eyes of anyone who cared to look. Of course, there was no doubt that they’d keep up this dangerous routine every morning because of this,

???: “RHHHHHAAAAARRRGH!!”

A fierce howl of rage, accompanied by an explosion at the feet that blew away the lawn on the courtyard. Digging his foot in deeply, with that tempestuous propulsion the golden silhouette charged forward, his beastly claws driving straight toward the figure of his opponent.

It was a blow that could rend thick steel plate, a blow which could turn a human body into mince meat—The claws of the beast delivered a myriad of violent attacks, assailing its prey in an attempt to forbid it from escaping. However,

???: “I am sorry, but the gap is too great.”

???: “GHHA—?!”

The other silhouette easily avoided the downpour of fatal attacks coming from the claws of the beast. And immediately after, the long legs which were jumping up gave out a loud yell, and the body of the beast was pierced from below.

The beast raised a cry in anguish at receiving that blow, and the side that was stuck arced upwards—

???: “GHHAGHK—?!”

—Or rather, that was what should have happened, but it didn’t happen like so.

The body that was launched skywards was intercepted by the opponent’s heel which swung downwards like he had waited in ambush, and sent him down crashing into the ground. The impact produced a circular crater upon the lawn’s surface, leaving the beast perfectly silent, spread-eagled on the floor unmoving.

???: “Do you want to continue?”

???: “Aurgh”

The victor asked him whether he wanted to continue as the loser let out a groan. There was neither sarcasm or cynicism when asking that; they were words spoken only towards the battle. That's why those words deeply wounded the loser's spirit. Thus,

Subaru: "You probably don't even realize it, but words like that are demeaning you know. Stop with the damn Samurai's pity."

Entering the scene in which victory and defeat had already been decided, Subaru said this as he scratched his head. Hearing those words, the young man who had been overlooking his spread-eagled opponent turned to look back at him with a smile appearing on his face.

The young man with hair of red flame raised his hand towards Subaru.

???: "'ello, good morning, Subaru. You're up early this morning, huh?"

Subaru: "Not as early as the two of you. Even so, don't you get bored or have enough of doing this everyday…… You don't have to always act so frank, Reinhard."

Reinhard: "There's nothing wrong with his ambition burning strong. Besides, it's also true that he's getting stronger and stronger each day. Before long, won't there come a time where he will catch up with me?"

Subaru: "Is that so? I'm having a bit of a hard time picturing that."

The red-haired youth—Reinhard's words didn't give off the feeling that they were either a joke or an act of humility. Closing one of his eyes at this estimation, Subaru looked down at the figure that was still lying down on the ground.

A boy with short golden hair was rolling in pain there. Wheezing in anguish, he was still not at a level in which he could wage battle, but still, the fighting spirit dwelling in his green eyes had not wavered at all.

Though his body could not obey his intentions, all he could do was grit his teeth in frustration. Grasping the feelings of bitterness he was feeling, Subaru extended his hand to that boy.

Subaru: “Hey, can you get up, Garfiel. Don’t give up just yet. You’re…”

Garfiel: “…Don’t touch me so casually. ‘ don’t need t’ stand by yer fuckin’ hand y’know.”

Not taking Subaru’s outstretched hand, the blonde haired boy, Garfiel, bared his fangs at him. However, it was obvious in anyone’s eyes that it was just a bravado. Pain was etched on his face, and his breathing was rough. Nevertheless, Subaru was not so childish as to point this out.

Slightly shaking the arm that had been brushed aside, Subaru sighed at the Garfiel who climbed to his feet.

Subaru: “Well, if you say so, do as you like. But, go take a bath before breakfast, and try to clean yourself of the sweat and mud. Otherwise, Ram will come to dislike you.”

Garfiel: “… ut yer trap. ‘ know wi’out you needin’ to tell me.”

Shaking his head at Subaru’s suggestion, Garfiel knitted his eyebrows into an angry scowl and stood up. His knees were still trembling, but it wasn’t to the extent where he couldn’t walk. Having recovered with his amazing resilience, Garfiel glared at Reinhard who was standing there as unperturbed as ever.

Garfiel: “Nex’ time, ‘m gonna fuckin’ beat ya.”

Reinhard: “I will be looking forward to it.”

Garfiel snorted at Reinhard’s reply which had no traces of a lie in it. And after that, the boy started to trudge away, and as he passed by Subaru, he gave a fleeting glance his way.

Garfiel: “—Hmph.”

Smacking his lips in irritation, he continued to trudge away from the courtyard to the mansion. With a wry smile on his face, Subaru watched him walk away like that; he shook his head.

He must be feeling quite hurt with his pride wounded. Still, his sour feelings should go away along with his sweat when he washed himself before breakfast. Really, he was at a troublesome age.

Subaru: “That guy, sorry for leaving him all to you. You must be tired too, feel free to go wash up… Speaking of which, running in to him in the bath would be troublesome.”

Reinhard: “That’s right, it’d be tough for him. Fortunately, I didn’t move enough to break out into a sweat, so I’ll refrain from doing that. It would be a shame to put Garfiel caked in mud in front of Ram-san.”

Having seen Garfiel walk off, Reinhard smiled at Subaru who had raised those words. Just as he had thought, the effects of the morning sparring couldn’t be seen on the Sword Saint . He was dealing with a child, Garfiel, who challenged him in ‘anger’; he was perfectly capable of killing him if he so desired. And to make matters worse, he was making a nonchalant face whilst pushing down his feet on the part of the lawn in which Garfiel had been knocked down on. And, by some way, the grass returned back to how it had been in its original, clean state.

Was this also one of the countless Divine Protections he possessed? —More and more, the thought of him as an enemy brought chills.

Therefore, doing as much as having made him leave his own camp was probably Subaru’s greatest achievement.

The Sword Saint Reinhard Van Astrea.

Where he now belonged, was the camp supporting Emilia as king candidate, backed by Roswaal. Shortly after the Royal Selection had started, the Sword Saint had become Felt’s knight. He had been the greatest adversary he would’ve had to contend with, and because of his distinguished prominence in the kingdom, he’d have been their greatest threat… but—

Subaru: “—All that said, but, if Felt were to return, we’d once against stand as friends who are enemies, the thought of it brings shudders.”

Reinhard: "…"

Subaru: "What's the matter?"

Reinhard: "No, nothing, I understand your concern, but I dare say I would be unable to go back to being Felt-Sama's knight. That lady judged me as unworthy. Were it not so, she wouldn't have tossed me aside to vanish to whereabouts unknown."

Reinhard shook his head, turning away from Subaru's words. Closing his eyes to that reply, Subaru concealed his innermost thoughts and let out a long sigh.

—Already, nearly a year had passed since Reinhard's master, one of the Royal Election Candidates, Felt, had disappeared from her knight.

The feline girl left the Astrea House, taking with her only the old man she regarded as family, and ran away from the Royal Selection. Thus, she cast aside the Sword Saint who had pledged himself to her.

Those were the rumors circulating around the country, and was almost identical to the truth.

In fact, Reinhard had heard nothing from Felt, before being driven from the Royal Election. The fact that the master he'd sworn his loyalty to had vanished without word, brought an immeasurable sense of helplessness to the Sword Saint .

Subaru had extended his arm out to this, and had dragged him over to this new camp. With his conscience sullied, and him feeling a great sense of responsibility, Reinhard had taken Subaru's desperate plea, and offered his sword to Emilia as his new king.

And since, the Sword Saint had become the sword of the Emilia camp. He was playing a big part in the Royal Selection. As the descendant of the Sword Saint who had sealed "The Witch of Envy"up, he joined to support the much despised Emilia, the Half-Witch. The implications of that was greater than he imagined.

Besides, Reinhard being around helped a lot in more things than just the Royal Selection. By belonging to the same camp, Reinhard helped out with the rebellious Garfiel.

Subaru: “I can’t raise my head to you and Ram. I can’t imagine how many times Garfiel would have crushed me by now.”

Reinhard: “There’s hardly any such thing. Indeed, on the surface Garfiel is harsh, which is in fact an indication that he recognizes your strength. But, your strength is not one he can understand, and this, no matter what, he cannot find himself able to accept.”

Subaru: “Well, no one would particularly enjoy being confused by so many cheap conjurer’s tricks. Though, there was no other way, so it’s not like I’ve dwelled upon or regretted it.”

Shrugging at Reinhard’s defense, Subaru recalled the events that had transpired in the Sanctuary. Back at the Sanctuary, the residents’ escape had been impossible due to the barrier connected to the graveyard. Then, there was the threat of the Sizeable Hare Witchbeast swarming there—to break through those issues, Subaru had used a lot of tricks.

It could be said that the one who feared the Sanctuary’s liberation the most was Garfiel, and that he was the one who did his utmost to stop Subaru. Whereas Emilia and the others were the ones who picked up the fruits of his Return by Death with all his soul.

That was precisely what originated the contract between Subaru and Echidna. Subaru had chosen to take the witch’s hand, and repeated his ‘Return by Death’ an unimaginable number of times, and went through all possible trial and error back at the “Sanctuary”.

And the result of that was Subaru had been able to take control of the actions of everyone staying in the Sanctuary and by placing Garfiel outside the mosquito net he prevented him from interfering with the events.

He overcame the Graveyard’s Trials and broke the barrier. Meanwhile, Roswaal made the necessary preparations concerning Ryuzu, and led the evacuation. The inhabitants were set free before the threat of the Sizeable Hare had assailed the Sanctuary. Meanwhile, Garfiel struggled to keep the time of release at bay, but his struggles were in vain.

After all, it was after everything had ended that Garfiel understood everything that happened. Even when he knew that it was too late to help, after the evacuation of the inhabitants of the Sanctuary had ended, Garfiel had still tried to resist leaving the Sanctuary.

However, the Sanctuary was attacked by The Sizeable Hare and the young man would have been driven to the verge of death if he hadn't been saved by the hands of Subaru and Roswaal.

Lacking strength and making misjudgments, the problems that had weighed stubbornly on his young heart for more than a decade had been solved by outsiders, excluding him entirely. Garfiel's willpower was greatly wounded.

After that, his feelings of depression became rage, and it was only natural that he come to bear hatred for Subaru. Without the persuasions of Ram and his big sister, Frederica, Garfiel may not have made the choice to join the Emilia camp. The newcomer Reinhard became an outlet of anger for Garfiel.

In the end, it was probably his own lack of strength which Garfiel couldn't forgive the most. By understanding the strength of the Sword Saint as his objective, little by little, signs of change were born in Garfiel, who continuously worked to become stronger.

Through this way, perhaps he would arrive at the answer that he couldn't acquire back at the "Sanctuary".

Subaru: "Well, I'd be quite happy if he were a little more open with me."

Reinhard: "One day he'll understand your feelings. There's no need to be impatient."

Reinhard shook his head in a gesture that looked like consolation at Subaru's half-hearted conclusion. And then, the red-haired knight turned his eyes towards the mansion.

Reinhard: “I want you to leave Garfiel to me for just a little while longer. …That’s if you still have any expectations from me, I, who was not even able to acquire Felt-sama’s trust.”

Subaru: “Don’t be so pitiful. I don’t think there’s anyone who doesn’t believe in you. Yeah, I have expectations of you.”

Reinhard: “Understood. Then, you too should do what is expected of you… That is the duty of a best knight.”

It was only in those last words, in which Reinhard had shown some kind of emotion in.

The “Best Knight”, that term was permitted only in master-servant relationships which were tied together by the strongest of bonds. Reinhard had not been able to become that for Felt.

He didn’t wish to become so to Subaru, that’s what he felt.

Reinhard: “Well, I’ll see you later.”

Without even revealing a bit of those emotions on his facial expression, Reinhard gave Subaru a clap on his shoulder and left the garden. As he walked, there were no signs of the fight which had taken place a few moments ago, on the lawn underneath his feet which should have been dented.

Whilst standing on lawn that had gone back to normal, Subaru made sure that Reinhard had completely left the garden and let out a long sigh.

Subaru: “I left Garfiel to… you, huh.”

Echidna: “My, what skilled acting. Your skin grows thicker by the day.”

Subaru: “…”

Once again, he heard the voice of the witch who kept breaking her promise. But, Subaru didn’t say anything back. Taking his silence as an acknowledgement, Echidna transmitted her thought-waves from her crystal stone, Echidna: “Pitying Garfiel is your prerogative. But let’s discuss the solution of “Sanctuary”. Repeating attempt after attempt, you found the optimum solution. Keeping anyone from hurting, from dying… and finally saving everyone’s life. Isn’t that so?”

Subaru: “I know. That’s why I didn’t say anything.”

Echidna: “Reinhard as well, absolve yourself from guilt. Originally, that girl—Felt wasn’t interested in the election in the slightest. So, you pointed out an escape path for her, so she would need not trouble herself. And now, she’s living peacefully with that old giant in Kararagi.”

Subaru: “…”

Echidna carefully affirmed Natsuki Subaru’s choices, as if caressing old wounds.

Garfiel’s stagnation, Reinhard’s anguish—all of these were as a result of Subaru’s choices. Garfiel’s situation had been okay. It had been the necessary process for resolving the problems in the Sanctuary without having to sacrifice anyone. But, Reinhard’s situation was different.

It was a plot of Natsuki Subaru to completely separate him from his master. He wouldn’t be able to avoid blame and disdain if they knew the facts. It was that kind of a plan. But even so—

Echidna: “In order to drive away the malicious Witch Cult targeting Emilia, you need real power. Just charm isn’t enough. So in the end, you made the right choice.”

Subaru: “Enough!”

Echidna: “Successfully saving Priestella, was allowed only because of that choice. Dealing with the disaster that swept the Watergate City, how would your odds have been without Reinhard?”

Subaru: “…”

Echidna: “Of course, if you’d concentrated your fighting power there, you may have found a way to repel them by some other means. However, to be able to defeat Sin Archbishops in the plural with no victims, was precisely because you had Reinhard available to you.”

Repeated and relentless were Echidna’s words, and yet that attempt to console was met with the opposite effect. An attempt to justify his deeds, falling hundreds upon thousands of times was that blade known as words. Using this method to cut his heart into jagged pieces was not her goal, but it certainly felt so. Using a blade of language, she condemned the deeds and deceits of Natsuki Subaru.

No matter how many times, no matter how many dozen times, no matter how much she repeated it, it was never enough.

His strength was overwhelmingly insufficient. And that power never compensated for the experiences of Subaru, who kept repeating Return by Death several times.

Memories and experiences of the future, in this world there was despair that could not be overcome with that alone. Still, maybe the difficulties could have been overcome if he had committed himself. But Subaru regretted that he could not be neither strong enough or weak enough to allow sacrifices.

It’d be meaningless if he closed his eyes to people falling victim, it’d be meaningless if he accepted condolences, it’d be meaningless if he allowed compromises. If he stopped putting his life on the line, he’d lose meaning in having taken the witch’s hand.

Therefore, he did everything he could to get the necessary power and the necessary fighting strength. As a result, he had caught the strongest sword, Reinhard van Astrea and made him into an ally.

When it came to Felt’s withdrawal from the Royal Selection—It was not possible to describe all of his tries, and all of his errors that he had repeated so that this would have been realized.

Under Reinhard’s enmity, under that sword, falling even ten or twenty times was insufficient. Still, finally he had accomplished it quite peacefully without sacrificing anyone. Only that outcome was salvation for Natsuki Subaru.

It didn't matter how many times his heart would be wounded, as long as he could save their lives—

Subaru: "There's life, if there's life, there's a future, if there's a future, there's hope, if there's hope, then there are possibilities. If there are possibilities, then—"

Echidna: "Then people will be saved. You're in the right. You aren't wrong. I promise so."

Subaru: "I don't particularly need your guarantees, you know…"

Subaru spoke out his innermost thoughts to both cheer himself up, and to caution himself. The witch affirmed, understood, shared and admired that.

While responding aggressively to his words, it was a fact that the witch's words helped him.

Life, was life.

If he was alive, he could start over. He had possibilities. It yielded hope.

Sacrifices were things that were different to Subaru's life. It was worth continuing to keep using Returning by Death all the time if it protected everyone except Subaru's own life, which was no longer included in his calculations.

—Even if those who I want to save weep, I still want to save them.

That was the salvation that Subaru had decided to receive by taking the witch's hand.

5

Having received the witch's cruel comfort, Subaru left the courtyard. Witnessing the morning exercises of Reinhard and Garfiel, had in fact nothing to do with Subaru's daily routine. He just happened to pass by the scene, and he had no choice but to call out to them. Subaru's proper daily routine started in the mansion's library.

Subaru: “—Heya, Beatrice. Sorry to intrude.”

Deep within the easternmost part of the mansion, stood a neat library. When you pushed open one of the heavy double-doors, the first thing that leaped out from the inside was the overwhelming scent of paper. In the dim light of a magic crystal, the narrow shelves were completely filled, drowned under thick stacks of heavy books

The amount of books could be said to be no inferior to what once existed in the “Forbidden Library.”

So, in that case.

Even while knowing that this place wasn’t the Forbidden Library that she should be guarding, the little girl remained here, able to see the fragments of her old home within the debris.

Beatrice: “…”

In the depths of the dark room, in a corner of the library rested the figure of a young girl who hugged her knees to her chest. As soon as he entered the room, he saw her sat on a wooden stepladder. This still vivid memory of her squatting posture, that sense of violation would not vanish, continuing to burn and erode through Subaru’s heart.

Beatrice had pressed her forehead into her knees, still wearing her same dress. Scrunched up like this, the little girl didn’t stir, react or even say anything to Subaru as he entered her room.

But she was not asleep, that much was clear from the fingers of her little body, which were clenched with so much force that they were whitened.

Back then, she had greeted Subaru with poor temperament, but at least when she had greeted him then, it had been with the dignity of a librarian. There were no traces remaining of that frigid expression which had been sustained by the pride of her responsibility.

Scrunching up his eyes at seeing the girl in such a sorry state, Subaru rapidly blinked his eyes to get rid of the emotions that had flitted there for just a moment. Then after putting on a ridiculously animated smile, he threw open the curtains of the library.

Unlike the forbidden library, the room had a physical existence. Naturally, since there was a window, the door couldn't act as a barrier to prevent trespass. Therefore—

Subaru: "Heyy, Beako. Today's a splendid morning. There's a pleasant wind blowing by. You should stop hiding in this musty old room; don't you feel like playing outside?"

Beatrice: "…"

Subaru: "If you don't want to muddy your dress up by playing outside, then at the very least let's eat together with everyone. Come to the dining hall like before. It's not too much to ask, right?"

Beatrice: "…"

The curtains of the library were torn wide open, and sunlight streamed into the room. Just like the streaming sunlight, Beatrice kept her silence, tilting down her head to Subaru's requests, who was still smiling quite openly. It felt to Subaru that her arms that were still clutching her knees were as if she was punishing herself.

Subaru: "Hey, Beako…"

Beatrice: "… just shut the hell up, in fact."

Subaru: "…"

Unable to bear looking at him, Beatrice spoke this out quite loudly as Subaru tried to approach her.

Her voice sank heavily, as it grew hoarse. But, after hearing her voice, Subaru felt relieved. Because recently, just hearing her voice was a rare occurrence.

When she was depressed, the days were quite many in which he couldn't exchange even a single word with her. Even words of rejection and denial pleased him.

Casting aside what Subaru was thinking, Beatrice continued without lifting up her face.

Beatrice: “Betty is tired. I’ve already given up, I suppose. I went against mother’s instructions… I broke the contract… and despite that, I’m still alive… why?”

Subaru: “Beatrice…”

Beatrice: “If only you just ditched me back then… Why did you come to help me? Clearly, you’re not… you’re not ‘They’!”

It’s a resentment that will never disappear, a resentment that can never fade, a penitence that she could never forgive—

In her four hundred years, Beatrice had bore those feelings alone, her heroic consciousness that had refused to relinquish such thoughts had been trampled upon, naturally bringing hatred.

Within the Forbidden Library, was a spirit who had given up her life for her mission, with no room in her heart for hope.

Her eternal life had stripped hope from her, and all she had been given was time to live a life devoid of meaning.

When the Forbidden Library burned down along with the mansion, the place in which she had been indicated to stay was lost forever.

But even so, Beatrice had never once forgotten her responsibility, the one that been abandoned. Her heart which had bore such a relentless sense of responsibility, had been scarred by permanent wounds, steeped in misery.

That is why ever since the night when the Forbidden Library had burnt to ashes, all she could do was crouch in a corner of the library, endlessly sobbing in helplessness.

But still—

Beatrice: “—hk! Go away! Let go of me, I suppose! Don’t you touch Betty… —tch!”

Unable to see her small figure, Subaru had wrapped her small body into a hug. Shouting at him when she felt his arm hugging her, Beatrice made no attempt to hide her disgust and rage, scoring Subaru's neck with her nails. Caught in her merciless attack, drops of blood oozed out of his wound. But still, he didn't let go.

He hugged her in an attempt to comfort her shivering body. But maybe it was actually Subaru who was looking for comfort by doing that.

Beatrice: "Why did you come to see me, I suppose…! You're so… you're so…!"

Subaru: "I'll be like this no matter how many times you vent your anger at me, it's fine. Even if the flames of regret don't seem like they're vanishing right now, if you keep pouring them out maybe they'll vanish someday."

Beatrice: "They're not… supposed to vanish…! Betty is!"

Subaru: "I'm so glad that you're alive. So, I'll always look forward to the day where you'll once again get sulky in front of me. —Because that hope still lives in me."

Beatrice: "—hk"

Quietly, after those sincere words were exhausted, Beatrice's resistance subsided. Making a surprised face, Beatrice started to sob, there in body but not in spirit. It was a sign that he couldn't continue this conversation anymore.

—Once every two weeks, Subaru and Beatrice would exchange anger and stillness like so.

After letting go of her, Beatrice once again buried her forehead into her knees. And after that Subaru couldn't say anything more to the girl who had retreated into her own shell. Subaru's words still weren't able to manage to open the door to her stubborn heart.

Nevertheless, if he beat relentlessly against those doors, maybe one day, they would open. —The mere possibility of this hope, was hope itself.

Subaru:… Back then, I wonder if I should have told her I was “They” even if it was a lie.”

Exiting the library and leaving Beatrice behind, whilst keeping his back to the door, Subaru recollected this.

Beatrice had been broken clinging to the hope that Subaru was the “They” in question back during the attack on the mansion. She had been prepared for the end of her long, long mission, but both her fragile hopes and her sorrowful acceptance were smashed to pieces.

Would Subaru have been able to lie to her who had longed for the visit of “They” for 400 years about being “They” just because he could? And in that case, could her heart have been protected without burning it along with the burning Forbidden Library?

Echidna: “The fact that the Forbidden Archive was lost can’t be undone. Accepting the irretrievable loss of all the knowledge without inheritance is quite painful for me, but it couldn’t be helped. Though for you, compared to that knowledge, that Beatrice’s life was saved is what matters most.”

Subaru: “It’s inappropriate that you’d say so. It should be that you alone, have no right to say this.”

Echidna, who was still in the dream world, protested to Subaru who had mentioned his regrets in passing.

But, hadn’t it been Echidna who had entrusted the Forbidden Library to Beatrice, and let her have such a lonely existence for 400 years?

As a result of Echidna setting this duty out to her, Beatrice’s heart had gradually crumbled to pieces. And despite that—

Subaru: “If you hadn’t told her to wait for “They”…!”

Echidna: “Wait a second. No matter how you look at it, isn’t that sidestepping logic? I had my own reasons, and there was a need for it to be done. Of course, responsibility for Beatrice’s long solitude does have to do with me. But, my intent was certainly not one of forcing misfortune upon that child. I do hope you understand.”

Subaru: “Ghg…”

Receiving Echidna’s objections, Subaru hesitated in bursting out in anger. The witch’s words were correct. In the end, when he blamed Echidna, he was just shifting the responsibility from what he couldn’t do himself.

Subaru: “…In the end, who was “They”?”

Echidna: “Regretfully, I can’t let that slip from my mouth. Since the Forbidden Archive is lost, discussing it would be meaningless. Even if we were to find out who it is, he wouldn’t know about that anymore.”

Subaru: “Him… so it’s a man?”

Echidna: “—Did my mouth slip? But, every way of finding him is gone now. In the first place, say you found them, what would you do? Let Beatrice see them? Or do you intend to impose a sanction on them? In that case, what crime would it be under. The party in concern would certainly be unaware of it, a crime that doesn’t exist can’t be sanctioned. Moreover, it’s not like you have the leisure.”

Irrefutable were Echidna’s conversational tactics, leading Subaru to click his tongue.

As a matter of fact, everything spoken from the Witch were probably correct. He couldn’t find any errors. He couldn’t judge them. Subaru didn’t have the time to do such a thing.

Echidna: “Beatrice truly did spend that time in pity. But, that isn’t to say the future would remain so, and there’s no indication we should think thus. How unexpected, it’s just as you said.”

Subaru: “…”

Echidna: “Even if devastated by regret right now, there will come a day where that child will be freed. At the time, someone will come to accept that child. Perhaps someone that is you, perhaps someone that isn’t. That is the possibility that living offers.”

It was sophistry.

It was merely a front of benevolence.

But, that doubtlessly was also hope.

It seemed like cajolery from Echidna, but if there was that possibility, Subaru had no choice but to believe them.

Thus, the witch he was contracted with, no matter how clearly he could see that she cajoled him, he could not deny what she was saying. He could only cling to her, rely on her. As his only accomplice, keeping Subaru from forgetting his sins, was her constant presence.

Subaru: “Just like parallel lines”

Echidna: “Ah, like parallel lines indeed”

In the end, finishing their conversation thus, were Subaru and Echidna’s manner of confronting their sins. They entrusted hope to the future, believing in the paths to possibility, awaiting the arrival of the ideal day.

It didn’t matter how many chances he had, Subaru would always find himself back in this place. He had dragged out the despairing Beatrice as she tried to stay in the burning mansion, even if she’d lost her Forbidden Library, even if her every day were to be met with relentless tears; he still had wanted her to live.

Even with repeated trial and error in many thousands repetitions of this world, Subaru hadn’t found a way of rescuing Beatrice without letting anyone to die.

Thus, clinging onto hope, he kept walking forward through thick and thin, through thick and thin.

I saved them, I saved them.

Today as well, he made these words his motivation for the future; he wanted hope to flourish.

???: “Oh myyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyy! But if it isn’t Subaru-samaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa! Did you come from visiting Beatrice?”

Subaru: “………………”

Suddenly, he heard a voice from behind him as he walked through the corridor. Subaru reflexively stopped in his tracks. He immediately realized who it belonged to from the tone of his voice. It was because of that he regretted stopping, but he couldn’t ignore it because he had already stopped walking. Reluctantly turning around, the other figure stood leisurely, directly behind Subaru.

Subaru: “Is that you, Roswaal?”

Roswaal: “Mhhm. That’s me of course. Good morning. How was Beatrice today?”

Subaru: “…It had been a while since she’s treated me so haughtily. Well, anticipate some progress from now on.”

Roswaal: “I see. …Looks like you took quiiiiiite the beating, though?”

Roswaal narrowed his differently colored eyes as he received Subaru’s dispirited reply. He was looking at Subaru’s face and neck. On them, were the painful scratches Beatrice had given him with her nails a short while ago.

Roswaal: “Unfortunately, I’ve never been skilled at treating injuries, and I won’t be able to treat those wounds. The ones who can use Healing Magic are just… Beatrice, Garfiel and Emilia-sama.”

Subaru: “It’d be a little difficult to ask it from the first two. I could ask Emilia… well I’ll think about it.”

Roswaal: “If you ask her, I am sure she’ll definitely heal you up. Or perhaps, could it be that maybe your aching wounds give you some comfort right now?”

Subaru: “…”

In place of the reticent Subaru, each of Roswaal’s discursive words were as painfully sharp as a razor. It was especially so when Roswaal spoke his last words; Subaru narrowed his eyes to it, and Roswaal shrugged his shoulders up in a clown-like gesture.

The clown's makeup and exotic attire, Roswaal's appearance and attitude had in no way changed, but he was also decisively different.

Behind the way he addressed Subaru and his attitude towards him there was a certain respect. That served as Roswaal's, toward the unpredictable existence of Natsuki Subaru, proof that he recognized his utility.

Roswaal: "But, please don't worry about it. If you make use of your time, I am sure you'll find a solution; no matter what the method, you will dedicate yourself in finding the optimal way. If your desire is to save Beatrice's heart, such a method will one day fall within your grasp. There's no need at all to feeeeeeel anxious."

Subaru: "It's hardly as easy done as said. There isn't anything so convenient."

Roswaal: "You're too modest. —Besides, I don't think that it's easy, yes? But, that mere fact doesn't cloud all of your achievements so far, that's all I was saying."

Respectfully giving a bow, Roswaal gave thorough praise for Subaru's achievements.

As a matter of fact, only Echidna who was contracted with Subaru knew about his ability of Return by Death. But, Roswaal had an understanding of his ability to be similar to "Redoing." Roswaal evaluated that fact and his achievements together.

As Echidna didn't have any realistic power in the real world, it it was no exaggeration to say that Roswaal that valued Subaru the most in the truest sense.

Roswaal: "At the Royal Capital, at my mansion, and once again at the Royal Capital. And then, at "Sanctuary", at Priestella. —You survived those without fail, without loss. Indisputable, are the feats of your achievement. There will come a day, when you will fulfill my long-cherished wish, and for that I will do my utmost to support you. Please make use of it.”

Subaru: “You sure are optimistic. …Don’t be so sure that you can grasp me in the palm of your hands.”

Roswaal: “But, you need the blood of the dragon. Without it, that girl—Rem will never awaken. Having reached that conclusion, you need Emilia-sama to become king. Isn’t that right?”

Subaru returned the stare with a sharp, cold look to Roswaal’s searching expression,.

It’s a relationship of mutual cooperation established on choppy waters, in which both of them knew each other’s critical points.

Roswaal would accomplish his goal by utilising Subaru’s Return by Death as he put Subaru in situations whereby he could achieve this. And though Subaru knew of those intentions, he didn’t have any choice but to advance by them for the sake of saving Rem, who was still sleeping.

Roswaal: “In no way is it a bad deal. You do you, I do me, and in any case we’ll both have our desires become reality. That’s why we make use of each other to that end. That’s all.”

Subaru: “…”

Roswaal: “My strength should be useful. I devoted about 400 years awaiting this time. And to me, your power is the same… isn’t that so?”

Subaru couldn’t give any objections to Roswaal’s conviction. That was the answer that came out from when he found out about Roswaal’s treachery way back at the “Sanctuary”. Whether for the sake of the Royal Election, or as a means of blocking against coming hindrances, being without Roswaal’s presence, was absolutely unallowable.

Even if he was just planning on using Subaru to make his own wishes come true.

Subaru: “If you were honest about your true intentions, and you told me what you wanted, I wouldn’t be so stubborn, I would maybe even be willing to help.”

Roswaal: “What a shame, I’m afraid that’s impossible. You’ve already lost that choice.”

Slightly easing the sense of urgency, to the approaching Subaru, Roswaal gave him his rejection. Roswaal gave a ostentatious smile towards the Subaru who heard that with widened eyes.

Roswaal: “Being conscious of it would be a disaster, you must always exalt your sole priority. Any obstructions, reasons for stumbling, everything will be judged, and no matter what can be discarded without second thought. And if done, that would be the end. This was all already decided, hence why you’ve become my trump card.”

Subaru: “…”

Roswaal: “Isn’t this wonderful? I’ll take care of my side, you’ll take care of yours, freely fulfilling our wishes. If it’s impossible even like this, that merely indicates the desire to reach the wish was insufficient.”

Subaru: “…Ah, is that so?”

Crazed dedication, was why Roswaal supported his, that much had already been clear. Then, where the root of it came from, his refusal to speak honestly about it was also thus. With this in mind, Subaru ended the conversation with Roswaal and finally started to walk away. With a posture that showed just how much Roswaal was detached from his heart, Roswaal stopped walking,

Roswaal: “Ahhh, yes. Right about now, Ram will be in Rem’s room. I’m letting you know, just in case.”

Subaru: “…”

Unable to respond, Subaru turned the corner and escaped from his gaze.

7

Ram: “Thank you very much for taking the trouble to visit my lonely sister, Natsuki Subaru-sama”

Ever since the agreement in “Sanctuary”, or perhaps, it might be more accurate to say ever since Natsuki Subaru decided to do things this way.

Ever since that, it was inevitable that numerous changes had occured in the mansion, and on the outside, but amongst them, the biggest change was perhaps hers.

The one who had greeted Subaru as he entered the room was a pink-haired maid who had given him a most profound bow. The one who had spoke this greeting was most certainly Ram.

Though she had been a girl with that had been the very picture of arrogance, after he had overcome the events of “Sanctuary”, she had a sudden shift in her attitude towards Subaru.

Subaru: “No matter how much time passes, I never get used to your attitude.”

Ram: “Again, I am really sorry for how rude I was in the past. Ram’s ignorance and discourtesies caused great inconveniences to Natsuki Subaru-sama. But since Roswaal-sama and Emilia-sama have ordered me to show Natsuki-sama the highest of respect, it won’t happen again; please rest assured”

Without changing her expression, Ram replied to Subaru in a manner dignified as any maid would be. There were no traces of familiarity or a sense of closeness which could be interpreted as friendliness in her behavior, as there had been once before. There was a wall—No, if there was a wall he’d be able to climb over it. Here, there was no way of overcoming it; more precisely, it was a distance between worlds than a wall.

Ram held Roswaal in high esteem and adored him. When Roswaal had changed the way he acted towards Subaru, Subaru’s value also greatly changed for Ram. The result was that she now regarded Subaru as someone she showed respect to.

Turning his attention away from that Ram, Subaru walked towards the middle of the room—the reason why he had came to this room was the blue-haired girl who was sleeping in the bed.

She was lying on her back, her figure unchanged after 2 years—that girl, was Rem. He had vowed to wake her up, and now he still hadn't reached the conviction that he'd fulfill that vow. Just time was cruelly leaving the girl behind.

Subaru: "Are there any changes in Rem?"

Ram: "No I'm afraid. She still continues to sleep… There are a lot of problems on your mind, Ram doesn't have the time to give any attention to her little sister."

Subaru: "Don't say such things. There's absolutely… there's absolutely no futility in thinking about Rem. Never say that again."

Ram: "—Understood sir."

Ram responded curtly to Subaru's firm order. Neither dissatisfaction or complaints were there, and neither was relief or gratitude. In regards to her younger sister called Rem, Ram had no actual feelings or appreciation for her. She recognized formally that Rem was her sister, but in the depths of her heart she probably had no room for Rem.

Her heart was completely based on loyalty to Roswaal. Having involved her in Roswaal's plans, having decided to curb the wishes Ram clung onto, the effects of Subaru's actions were strong indeed.

Even if Rem were to awaken, would her heart once again have room for her little sister? Would those sisters go back to being the much loved big sister, and her cute little sister.

Subaru: "—Ukh. Ram, sorry, but let me be alone with Rem."

Ram: "…as you wish. Please call me if you need anything."

Grinding his teeth at the shuddering thought, Subaru felt terrified at being in the same room as Ram. Miraculously, before his trembling voice was let out, she had left the room. Fortunately, Ram had left gracefully, leaving him behind only an elegant curtsy without giving any objections to Subaru's words. And so, only the two of Subaru and Rem were left in the room.

Subaru: "…Rem."

"…"

Lying on the bed, the girl simply breathed over and over again in a manner which could not be mere sleep; she doesn't reply. The fact that her chest was gently rising and falling, and that the blood in her body was warm were the only signs of life within Rem.

All that Subaru could do for Rem when visiting this place was to take her hand and check her weak pulse. And that's all Subaru can find comfort in, in this moment.

Subaru: "…Echidna."

Echidna: "For you to call me, is truly a rarity."

Echidna replied to his call as he sat down by Rem's bedside, gently holding her hand. The witch who seemed to know all too well about how she would speak without necessarily being called, silently waited for Subaru's words to be submerged in the warm water of his emotions. The silence would end after ten or so minutes.

Subaru: "The way to wake up Rem is like you told me before, right?"

Echidna: "Yeah. You could question the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony that put her in this sleep. But, I have to say, the likelihood of that is quite low. Finding those guys is next to impossible, and even if you do catch them, finding a way to beat their secrets out of them… Even if you were to just able to find a way to talk to them, maybe it would be easy to find a way to make them open their mouth, if you had the power…"

Subaru: "Ah, that's right. That's right of course. If I manage to find them, and catch them, and beat their secrets out of them to reawaken Rem, I can challenge them ten thousands of times. Even so…”

They were nowhere to be found. The Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, those despicable blasphemers never showed up anywhere. Even when the Sin Archbishops Wrath, Lust and Greed gathered in the Watergate City of Priestella, the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony did not show up.

Why, why, why, why, why, why, why—

Subaru: “If tracking down Gluttony is hopeless, what about the Sage’s tower? If the Sage, Shaula, knows everything, then…”

Echidna: “As a witch, I will say this. Even if you do go to the Pleiades Watchtower, you’ll just be going on a fool’s errand. The Sage will not correspond to your expectations. On the contrary, there’s even the possibility that the Sage will not allow your presence. Even you should not wish to drop in there to die in vain, right?”

He was denied once. He was denied twice. He was stuck. Getting help from the Sage was a no go. The Archbishops of Gluttony were nowhere to be found. Subaru’s wishes were denied politely by the “Witch of Greed”. Then, what on earth should he do—

Echidna: “So, you have no choice but to get the blood of the dragon”

Subaru: “With the blood of the dragon, we can wake up Rem.”

Echidna: “I refer to the Divine Dragon’s. Using its omnipotent power kept in its blood, I think you should be able to release the girl’s soul from her sleep.”

Echidna’s words were no more than a conjecture. But it was a convincing conjecture. Though she had said them with an air of avoiding them as being fact, the witch’s words were fairly encouraging. Thus for now, Subaru believed that this was the way to save Rem.

The blood of the dragon was considered one of the treasures which the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, granted to the Kingdom of Lugunica. It brought plentiful harvest to the lands, and kept away every disease, and had the possibility to grant miracles.

It could only be used by people with the highest pedigrees of social status in the kingdom. In other words, it was those who—

Subaru: "You get it if you ascend to the throne."

Echidna: "Of course. That's why you have to make her… You absolutely must make Emilia king."

Subaru: "…"

Echidna: "Back Emilia, back her and make her king whilst you help the people you wish to save. And when you get ahold of the dragon's blood, you will be able to save Rem."

Echidna's words pour into Subaru's mind like poison. He has to make Emilia king in order to save Rem. Making Emilia king was one of Subaru's aims that he wanted to meet to fulfill Emilia's wishes.

It was of utmost importance. Supporting Emilia would lead to saving Rem.

To make Emilia king, to save Rem. As a result, Rem would be saved thanks to Subaru wanting to make Emilia king. Therefore—

Echidna: "Therefore…"

Subaru: "Stop, you idiot. …Don't try and swing my determination like that every time you can. Why are you trying to place Emilia under me like that?"

Echidna: "But that wasn't my intention?"

Subaru: "You're not very convincing. We've repeated this conversation many times, tens of times, hundreds of times."

The witch often times poured poison into his mind similar as if she was brainwashing him. In a way to change Subaru's aims, and lessen the value of Emilia. But that was something that Subaru could not let go. It they differed in this, Natsuki Subaru would lose his qualification to step on his own corpses that have been slaughtered so far.

Subaru: "You shouldn't jam us between your own selfishness. No matter what you harbour against Emilia."

Echidna: "You're misunderstanding me. Well, it doesn't matter how much I say, you won't believe it… just like parallel lines."

Subaru: "It's better to say that we never agree with each other, like parallel lines, even if it's a conversation that we repeat a lot."

There were things which could not be relinquished in his cooperative relationship with Echidna. The witch claimed to be Subaru's accomplice, and by lending Subaru her wisdom as a contribution, she planned to use not only Subaru's Return by Death, but also his way of life. Although, thanks to her ingenuous side, those poisonous fangs did not reach him, and thus they were in a state of stalemate.

Subaru: "I'll get my hands on the dragon's blood. By making Emilia king. —But it's not something I'm doing just while saving Rem. Making Emilia King is intrinsic with saving Rem, so my original intentions haven't changed. Make no mistakes there."

Echidna: "Mymy. As if I have any complaints dancing to your tune from time to time. You know, I need you to let your guard down a little, otherwise I won't be able to save face as a witch."

Subaru: "The way you execute your endgame is soft. Or rather, perhaps, when it comes to you, I'd say you're soft at the core. You're not suited to be a complete villain. That's how I am saved."

Echidna: "I see. I will try to keep that in mind."

Echidna admitted her defeat with no great objection. Even if she could made use of this lesson next time, she probably wouldn't be able to. To ask why, the answer would be that. Because it's not something that can be changed.

Natsuki Subaru was Natsuki Subaru no matter what befell him.

The Witch of Greed Echidna could only be the Witch of Greed Echidna.

Using the nature that they could never be capable of changing as weapons.

Because in life, victory or defeat could only be found in the cards they were dealt.

Subaru: “—Wait for me, Rem. For sure, I will wake you up. That’s why…”

—No matter how many times he dies.

His resolve was no exaggeration, the stakes he presented were quite trivial. Regardless of how many times he threw it away, he would continue giving his inextinguishable life away. If that eventually led to her waking up, he would feel no regrets.

Just that much, just that much, just that would be good enough.

8

—After returning from visiting Beatrice’s library, and Rem’s bedroom, he had now reached the end of his daily routine.

Subaru knocked on the room’s door with a rap-rap-rap. Then there was a knock from the inside that returned the knock. Without replying, they knocked. Replying to it, Subaru once again gave another knock. And that was met by the other person immediately knocking back. Knock knock knock knock knock—

???: “—Jeez, how long are you going to do that for! It’s making me reaaaaally anxious”

The one who had lost their patience just a few moments ago was the one in the room. The door opened from the inside, and the face of a beautiful girl with amethyst eyes and silver hair could be seen

—she was the embodiment of supreme beauty that forever continued to encaptivate everything.

If she showed her face whilst puffing her rosy cheeks, she would give an impression of tenderness rather than of beauty. Suddenly, Subaru started to laugh.

Emilia: “Ah, what are you laughing for? Ugh, Subaru’s such a twit.”

Subaru: “Twit… no one says that word anymore these days. It was Emilia-tan that started to return the knocks just before. I just went with the flow.”

Emilia: “You say it like that. Hmph, whatever. Then if it’s like that, I just won’t let Subaru into my room.”

Emilia tried to close the door, her face etched with annoyance when she heard Subaru speaking through his laughter. Seeing that, Subaru became anxious and put his hand in between the door—

Subaru: “OWWW”

Emilia: “Ah! Subaru, are you okay?!”

Emilia jumped at Subaru’s over-exaggerated shriek of pain after having had his fingers jammed in the door. Quickly jumping out of the room, she hurriedly grabbed Subaru’s aching right hand, and,

Emilia: “Nom nom nom”

Subaru: “Ehh, Emilia-tan?! Isn’t that a little bold?!”

Emilia: “Mmphphnn, mmhmhhmhpphhnomnomnomnomnom”

Whatever he was saying was muffled by Emilia’s angered reaction, and by her sharp amethyst eyes. Emilia’s soft lips wrapped themselves around the sore fingers of Subaru’s right hand. In between her soft lips, he realised that Emilia’s warm tongue was gently tracing the numb pain which racked Subaru’s fingers.

A sensual shiver traveled up Subaru's spine.

Emilia: "Mhm…that should be fine I think. Subaru, it must've hurt… Hey, why is your face bright red?"

Subaru: "I can't help acting like a young teen, or how should I put it… it was such an unexpected development… uhh, well, I'm okay. Thank you very much. This should be good enough for me."

Emilia: "—? I'm not sure if I understood that, but I should start using my healing magic, right?"

Emilia's face broke out in confusion as Subaru bowed down his head, sticking up his fingers which had been licked. However, she immediately changed her awareness, and began to heal Subaru's fingers with a light blue surge of magic. She completely cured the pain that had been softened by Emilia's tongue.

After that…all that remained for Subaru was how he would clean up his fingers which were drenched in saliva.

Subaru: "I'll wipe them on my clothes… Wait no, that would be gross. Having said that, I'm not advanced enough to lick them so majestically…?! But, if I let this chance escape…"

Emilia: "Ah, sorry. I got them covered in my drool. Yep, all clean now."

Subaru: "Damnit—?! It was a choice with a time restriction—?!"

Not even taking note of the astonished Subaru, Emilia wiped Subaru's fingers with her handkerchief with great delight. And after that, she suddenly looked at Subaru's neck; her eyes blinked rapidly.

Beatrice's scratch marks had been left there without curing them. Emilia had noticed them with her sharp eyes, she gently placed her white fingers on those wounds,

Emilia: "Subaru, that looks painful. What happened here?"

Subaru: "Ah, Aaaah, This? I just got my neck caught on something on the way here…”

Emilia: “Liar.”

She interrupted Subaru’s words as he had been trying to smooth over the situation; Emilia spoke just that one word. She opened her eyes wide open and stroked Subaru’s wounds with her fingers over and over again. And then, she muttered just one thing.

Emilia: “It was Beatrice, wasn’t it?”

Suddenly saying that, Emilia’s voice was frozen of all emotion.

In an instant, a large quantity of pure white strength surged from Emilia’s body. It swept down the mansion’s hallway in one fell swoop and Subaru’s skin was caressed by a great burning cold.

The air froze, the chill caused the air to crackle, and Subaru said in a panic:

Subaru: “Emilia! Emilia, calm down! Everything is okay, everything is okay!”

Emilia: “…”

Subaru: “Emilia! Look at me!”

Emilia—Ah”

He forcibly stretched his arms out and hugged the girl’s trembling body as he called out to her. He called out Emilia’s name many many times to her ear. He was pressed up right next to her as he shouted with his own reflection visible in her amethyst eyes.

To his voice, Emilia’s eyes shifted out of focus and a small whimper leaked out of her voice.

In an instant, the cold air that was spreading out all around the mansion’s top floor vanished. And even the overwhelming pressure surrounding everything vanished. Things went back to as they were before.

Subaru: “Th-That was dangerous. A little more of that, and Reinhard would have come rushing in…”

Emilia I… I… n-now… eh…?”

Subaru: “It’s okay, it’s okay. Emilia-tan is a good girl, a good girl, everything is okay.”

Rolling his eyes, Subaru sat down to face Emilia who had sat down on the floor. As she clutched her head, unable to digest what had happened, Subaru patted her on the back many times in an attempt to calm her down.

Gradually, Emilia’s breathing regained its composure, and then she looked at Subaru’s face timidly and said: “

Emilia: “S-Sorry? I.. acted weird again…”

Subaru: “It’s alright. Because any troubles hoisted by Emilia-tan aren’t troubles at all. That’s the role I want to take. Don’t worry.”

Emilia: “Y-Yeah.”

Emilia nodded happily at Subaru’s words. Subaru would not let go of her body until her heart truly settled down.

—Emilia’s emotional instability was influenced by the fact that she couldn’t surmount the Trials of the “Sanctuary”.

In the end, he didn’t know what she saw in the First Trial which showed glimpses of one’s past. Nevertheless, whatever memories she saw broke Emilia’s heart into pieces and crushed her strength to stand up strong. And as she couldn’t overcome the trials, Subaru completed them himself.

Therefore, Emilia’s progress was probably still trapped in the graveyard even now.

But, no matter for how long she rejects everything, and no matter how long she mourns, time kept going on. And neither the world, nor her surroundings, nor anyone would let her off with her stagnation. That’s why Subaru continued to take Emilia by the hand, even when she'd halted to a stop.

Emilia: "Sorry, Subaru. I'm still causing Subaru trouble…"

Subaru: "It's okay, it's no problemo, no problem at all. Rather, it makes me feel welcome."

Emilia: "…hehe, aww, Subaru. Mhm, thank you. I'm okay, I've calmed down."

With a brief hug, Emilia lifted her face from Subaru's chest. The girl's warmth left his chest, and Subaru stiffened his lips with a regretful look.

Subaru: "Damnit. I wanted to enjoy Emilia-tan's softness just a little while more."

Emilia: "Huuh, would that be better? If Subaru says so, I will do so."

Subaru: "Nononono, it's fine. You see, this is a trick I use quite often to cope with dissatisfaction. Gorging yourself until full is for cattle. I think rather than a pig in its sty, I'm more like a wolf who is chasing after its prey."

Emilia: "That may be so. I also think Subaru is closer to a dog than a pig."

Subaru: "But, isn't it a whole different story when it comes to dogs and pigs?!"

Subaru calmed down Emilia with this absurd exchange. She now had a smile back on her face. Luckily, it seemed like she had forgotten the anger she had shown just a few moments ago at his wounds.

Echidna: "I can't bear to look at this."

Subaru: "Shut up."

Emilia: "—Huh?"

Subaru: “Ah, I wasn’t saying that to Emilia-tan. Sorry, I was talking to myself.”

Subaru instinctively replied to Echidna’s sudden thought waves, surprising Emilia. Naturally, the thoughts through the crystal stone reached only Subaru. Echidna’s contempt and disdain, who openly expressed her dislike for the state Emilia was in, also only reached Subaru.

Emilia: “W-Would it be better for me to shut up? If that’s what Subaru wants, I will do my best to stay quiet…”

Subaru: “It’s not like that! It’s fine, so let’s talk a lot, okay? It’s okay if you talk.”

Emilia: “…Really?”

Emilia’s amethyst eyes started to swell with tears. And when Subaru nodded, Emilia let out a sigh of relief, once again taking Subaru’s hand.

Emilia: “Well then, tell me Subaru. —What should I do today?”

Subaru: “…”

Emilia: “Yesterday, I finished studying in my room as you told me to do. If it’s something Subaru says, there’s no doubt I will do it. So, can you tell me what should I do today?”

—She does what Subaru says, if it’s Subaru she will make no mistakes, she believed in Subaru.

Subaru struggled to keep his fake smile from disappearing from his face when he heard those words slip out of Emilia’s mouth. The efficacy of his smile which he had practiced in front of the mirror was shown here. Thanks to that, Emilia didn’t harbor any distrust or suspicion; she was just waiting with her eyes shining brightly for Subaru’s response.

Emilia, who had been setback by the Trials of the Graveyard was trying to protect her heart by completely relying on Subaru.

It was quite natural.

By using the power of Return by Death, Subaru had completely eliminated all the obstacles that stood before Emilia. He had understood that Emilia had not contradicted how she had gained his trust—he had gotten this far doing that. Emilia's heart clung to Subaru, and having recognized that she was in such a terribly unstable state he had tried to Return by Death, but no matter how much he tried, he couldn't return back to the "Sanctuary".

But still, Subaru didn't think this situation was the worst.

Subaru: "Well then, I'll please ask this of Emilia-tan. Today, just like yesterday, keep up your studies! If I do something important again, I'll let you know beforehand."

Emilia: "Like in Priestella?"

Subaru: "Yeah, like in Priestella. Until then, you need to keep learning. Preparing for an emergency, and boosting your own morale, those are assuredly the most important things Emilia-tan can do now."

Emilia: "Mhm, yup, understood Subaru-sensei. I will do as ordered. So could you—"

Emilia enthusiastically agreed with Subaru, who had put on this dramatic spiel. Emilia had accepted his command with something resembling a salute trailed off her words at the end…

Emilia: "So could you stroke my head, if I do that?"

Subaru: "…"

Emilia said this with embarrassment and a trace of anxiety in her eyes which were peeking at Subaru. Subaru gulped seeing her figure, and just for a moment he stood stock still. If that moment continued for any longer, it'd be easy to imagine the despair creeping into her eyes.

But, luckily Subaru had put on a smile before that could happen.

Subaru: “Of course? But what if I ask for permission to touch Emilia-tan’s silver hair?”

Emilia: “—? If Subaru wants to touch it, he can touch it any time he wants…”

Subaru: “S—i—n—c—e! Since it mustn’t come as a reward. When good things happen, then I can promise to. I will stroke Emilia-tan. Okay?”

Emilia: “Mhm, oookay”

Emilia awkwardly nodded to Subaru’s confirmation as he gave her a thumbs up and smiled showing his brilliant teeth. And then, still holding Subaru’s hand without wanting to let go—

Emilia: “Alright, I’ll go back to my room.”

Subaru: “Aaah, since Petra will bring the food up, let’s eat together.”

Emilia: “Yeah, I’ll be waiting. Well, I’ll see you later!”

Moving her hand away, Emilia went back into her room. —Seeing her silver hair which had now been cut short which moved as one, Subaru resisted the urge to let out a long sigh. When the door shut behind her, Subaru and Emilia’s connection was physically cut away.

Echidna: “Good grief, there are bounds even for ugliness.”

Subaru: “…”

As soon as Emilia’s figure disappeared, Echidna started her abuse. Subaru does not deign to reply to her words smeared in revulsion. He had learnt to never say anything about it from the time he had entered this relationship with Echidna, it was a way to cope with how Echidna treat her.

Don’t talk back, and she won’t talk back to you.

By maintaining that stubborn attitude, the witch would perceive it as a waste to open her mouth and would stay silent.

Only when it came to Emilia could Echidna absolutely not be counted on. And when it came to the relationship between Subaru and Echidna, though it didn't seem as if it had changed from before, it was still different, and right now he didn't have time to fix it.

Echidna: "It would be more convenient for you if she was a doll who would just do what you said, isn't that right?"

Subaru: "—hgh"

His throat clogged up at her cruel observation, Subaru regretted that he had shown a reaction to it. They were words he shouldn't give any reaction to; however, they were words that he wasn't able to deny.

Protecting their lives, protecting the future, protecting hope, and protecting the possibility.

That's why he was sacrificing Emilia's heart of "now." Because Subaru was aware that he would not stop at just Emilia.

9

He declined to join breakfast at the dining hall with the Emilia camp, Petra who had been on meal duty looked disappointed but, she carried the meals up to the room for Emilia and Subaru.

While they eat, Subaru followed up what the mentally unstable Emilia had been doing and when finally dinner came to an end, Emilia obediently headed to her desk as instructed by Subaru.

Emilia: "I need to do what Subaru says to become a good king."

Saying that, Emilia psyched herself up, and Subaru left her room. Having delegated some of Roswaal's Official Work to her, Emilia's knowledge for the Royal Selection was a lot better than the first time he had met her. The fruits of her effort were proven day by day.

However—

Echidna: “For anything that happens, in the end she’ll always come to seek your approval. An awfully interesting way to raise a king.”

Subaru: “Shut up”

Echidna: “You’re harboring unease for it, allowing her to sit on the throne in that state, you know it’ll always be turbulent. However, you have no other choice but to do so.”

Having left Emilia’s room, Echidna’s words dripped poison into Subaru’s ears as he walked down the mansion’s corridors. It was true that Emilia’s soul had become unstable, and the willpower she had at the start of the Royal Selection had been greatly shook. But still, she would definitely sit upon The Kingdom of Lugunica’s throne.

And Natsuki Subaru will make sure he does that.

Repeatedly Returning by Death and removing every hardship that crop up in front of her, he will be able to dismiss any kind of impediments in her way and make it so that Emilia’s ambitions are fulfilled.

And doing so is not just related to Emilia’s desires, but also to saving Rem. Supporting Emilia, saving Rem, keeping the people close to him away from pain. —Wasn’t this exactly the very future Natsuki Subaru wanted when he made the contract with the witch?

—I’m sorry, Natsuki-san. This is farewell.

Subaru …”

Suddenly, a voice rang out, not within his eardrums, but within his mind. Subaru stopped in his tracks. Turning his head back, he saw no one in his surroundings. He thought it may have been the bad tastes of the witch, but that couldn’t have been her thought waves. It was something far different, it was a call from his own memories.

The voice continued to speak.

—I uhm, Natsuki-san. Even though things are like this, I thought of you as my benefactor. I thought of you as a person I owed a great debt to which I wanted to pay as soon as possible.

The voice continued to speak.

—But, I saw your decision and I understand it. You don't want anyone's help, and on the contrary, you're going to try and somehow do everything by yourself, and you can do it.

The voice continued to speak.

—Therefore, this is my way of returning the favor. Since you probably will try to protect everyone who you are close to, I will take my leave.

The voice continued to speak.

—Well then, goodbye, Natsuki-san. Take care of yourself.

The voice continued to speak.

—I thought of you as my friend.

The voice continued to speak.

—You wouldn't have thought that though.

Subaru: "—HK!"

Just as the last of his words resounded in his mind, Subaru punched the wall next to him with all his might. A dull clunking sound resounded throughout the corridor, and Subaru's hand cracked pitifully. As blood spread down his fist, Subaru breathed out a ragged sigh and put his other hand to his head.

Those were the words that Otto Suwen left behind that he would never forget. Subaru made it through the Sanctuary, chased away the Sizeable Hare Witchbeast, took Beatrice out of the burning mansion and overcame all of these events. And then Otto said that to him and left the mansion.

And even if more than a year had passed since then, his back in the moment he left never disappeared from Subaru's mind. It seemed as if he'd condemned Subaru for choosing to save everyone.

Echidna: "But, you didn't stop him. The fact that there were fewer people to protect would have been a blessing for you."

Subaru: "No. Such a motive spurn from just calculation wasn't the reason why I didn't stop him. It was just because I respected the guy's intention. From the start, he was a guy who had no reason to stay here."

He was trying to repay him for purchasing his cargo and saving him from the Witch Cult. But, he had already repaid Subaru by having driven the Dragon Carriage to where Emilia was about to be blown up.

And when it came to the cargo, even when they had exchanged the right amount of money, it hadn't been a loan.

Otto Suwen had no reason to cooperate with the Emilia camp. If he had stayed here without reason, he wouldn't leave the place anymore, and would continue being a merchant only for himself here.

Therefore, he did not stop him when he decided to leave. Besides, even though Otto's "Divine Protection of Soul Language" was useful, it was not indispensable to win the Royal Selection.

In the first place, if he continued to be associated with the Emilia Camp, he'd still be in the danger from both the Witch Cult and the Royal Selection. It was better for Otto to have left here. After that, he didn't ever hear of him again. They had talked to each other only for two weeks, so it wasn't that that big of a deal.

Natsuki Subaru had others he had to protect by throwing away his life.

Subaru: "…"

Stepping on the blood that was dripping down his shoes, Subaru shook his head and started to walk. Recently, a number of thoughts had been perturbing his thoughts. It was frustrating. It was irritating. More than anything, Echidna was taking advantage of it.

There were countless things to think about. He had no time to remain shut within his own mind.

He must choose the best, the very best, the ideal, the optimum choice.

And despite that he—

Subaru: "…"

He came out of the corridor at a brisk pace, and found himself back at his own room. He couldn't let anyone see his face right now. Natsuki Subaru was calm, Natsuki Subaru was rational, Natsuki Subaru was optimistic, there was nothing different about him than usual. As things are, everyone in the mansion must believe these things. Otherwise, he wouldn't be able to protect those he wanted to protect—

???: "Oh my, it seems like you came back in a hurry."

He went into the room, and closed the door behind him. Subaru lifted his head up towards the voice that was coming from within the room. Gazing at Subaru, the "Dark-haired Woman" was sitting on his bed smiling sweetly. She gently brushed her hand across her long, braided black hair.

Dark-haired Woman: "I should have been back on time, seeing you here, it seems I'm in quite the pickle."

Subaru: "—Elsa."

Elsa: "Yeah, that's right. The Bowel Hunter, Elsa Granhiert; I immediately came running, as Master ordered. —I wonder, is there trouble?"

Saying that, the beautiful woman clad in a rather revealing black garment that exposed her feminine body alluringly tilted her head towards him—It was Elsa, the alluring assassin whose figure emitted a poisonous aura.

Subaru easily accepted the woman who had entered the room without giving off any sounds or traces; he was not at all surprised.

And that's because it was…

It was natural. She was not an enemy. Even though she wasn't an ally he could relax his guard around, she was still an ally.

In any case—

Subaru: "I helped you out of the burning mansion. I give you work because of that."

Elsa: "I understand. I don't have any issues with you now that you're my employer. I request only that you chose things that don't go as far as being against my hobbies …but for now, I have no complaints."

Pulling out her Kukri Knife holstered at her waist, Elsa burst out laughing, emitting a rather dark radiance. She was currently collaborating to provide information for the camp by working behind the scenes.

Emilia who stood as the head of the camp, an incorruptible symbol.

Reinhard who was the Sword Saint, subject to unwavering public opinion.

And, Natsuki Subaru, who had surmounted and stopped many difficult situations with zero damage.

Unlike those three, who couldn't act freely lest they tarnish their reputation, Elsa had many opportunities to get her dirty hands dirty. Of course, although you could call it dirty work, the work she did wasn't necessarily evil—

Subaru: "So, how did it go?"

Elsa: "I'm sorry to report, but, it seems like Gluttony was nowhere to be seen at the place you sent me to. There was nothing but rabbles of ordinary Witch Cultists there… although, I did set them all free."

Subaru: "Aah. You can do as you like. …But… In the end, it was a dud?"

Subaru frowned, and sighed at Elsa's report who had delivered it whilst licking her red lips. Again, he hadn't been able to reach the limit. Even if he was trying to capture the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony, he couldn't reach them no matter how much he tried.

Subaru: "In the end, only "Greed" has been killed."

Elsa: "That, and Wrath was captured. I think that was a success, but I guess it might not be for you."

Subaru: "…Anyway, I understood your report. For now, stay on standby until I need you again. I will get in touch with you from here once more when I want to request something of you again."

Elsa: "Okay. —Well, I suppose I'll have to wait."

Without further replying to Elsa's words, Subaru quickly gave her his instructions. Receiving his instructions, she stood up without any particular care to them, and walked towards the window.

Since Subaru's room was on the third floor of the mansion, she had probably came in through the window. Subaru felt no surprise at her acrobatics—

Subaru: "Ah, wait, Elsa. There's one more thing I want you to tell me."

Elsa: "—? What may that be, I don't really know anything of much importance."

Subaru: "This isn't anything too important. If you came from outside… how was the weather beyond the forest? Was it raining or was it clear?"

Elsa: "The weather? Eeh, there was no particular issue with it. Although there are clouds out, there's no need to worry about it getting worse. Is that all?"

Subaru: "No…"

Cocking his head to the side, Subaru gazed at the Magic Hour Crystal in his room. Right now, it was already the time of fire—It had already gone past 7 O'clock Solartime and was now way past noon.

To make sure of this, Subaru walked towards where Elsa was, her feet placed on the windowsill.

Subaru: "I want to ask you to do something. —Please lop off my head with that knife."

Elsa: "—Your head… I wonder… have you lost it already?"

Subaru: "Are you calling me insane? I'm just asking you to do something that has to be done."

Elsa curiously widened her eyes at Subaru's remarks, and then let out a ferocious presence. But, Subaru's attitude remained unflinching as the sun's rays bathed him. Seeing that, Elsa shrugged her shoulders.

Elsa: "As a rule of thumb, people who have their heads lopped off typically die you know."

Subaru: "I suppose I also apply to that rule. I don't know about you though."

Elsa: "I think I would also die if my head were to come off. …Are you sure about this?"

Subaru: "I should have said this when I helped you. —I will ask for a single unrelated thing, so listen to what I have to say then. Right now's the time."

All of a sudden, Elsa narrowed her eyes at Subaru repeating himself. And then, picking up her arme de guerre, she started to twirl the sharp blade of her Kukri Knife around the palm of her hand,

Elsa: "Any last words?"

Subaru: "Make it painless."

Elsa: "…"

Subaru: “Ah, also, after I die you can do whatever you want with my guts, but don’t lay a finger on anyone in the mansion. Well in any case, that’s why I have Reinhard arou—”

Before he could finish his words, Elsa’s arm cut through the wind. For a moment, Subaru’s field of vision was toppled over. As the view around the room spun around, he saw blood splashing in the familiar room, and —Aah, cleaning the room is going to be hard on Petra.

As he thought that, Subaru’s life blinked out.

10

—When he woke up from his empty dream, Subaru always experienced a suffocating sensation.

However, his release from there was too early. Perhaps, it was because Natsuki Subaru was reconstructed in a different way when waking from his sleep.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru jerked up violently, placing his hand against his forehead which was drenched in sweat. It was colder than the sweat you get when sleeping, closer to the cold sweat he’d get when losing his life.

In any case, Subaru’s body was on top of the sofa in his own room, and the sunshine was streaming in from the window.

Subaru: “Is it… morning?”

Touching his neck which should have been cut, Subaru rose slowly. Cocking his head, he checked to make sure that his head wasn’t lolling about somewhere on the floor, he checked the time using the Magical Hour Crystal which was above his door.

The crystal was glowing a light green, showing that the time was early morning. Then the question that remained was “Which” morning was it?

Subaru: “…”

To find that out, Subaru touched the pendant he was wearing. The black crystal was fastened by a chain which connected Subaru’s reality with the Dream Castle.

A warm sensation and a pulse streamed through the crystal which he held in the palm of his hand. When Subaru’s pulse coincided with it, and when the white light appeared, it was proof that the world had completely changed.

Subaru: “………”

When he opened his eyes, Subaru once again was standing in the middle of the vast grassy plain. When he turned his head back, the hillock was there. Right besides the flower garden, underneath the parasol, on the other side of the white table, he could see the witch garbed in black clothes facing towards the white table sipping from her cup.

Going up the hill, he headed down towards where the witch was.

Subaru: “Hey, what day…”

Echidna: “…”

Placing his hands on the table, he snarled this at the witch who was gracefully continuing her tea-time. However, she didn’t say anything back, she simply silently pointed at the seat across from her. That chair was empty, and a cup of tea had been prepared for the visitor. That was the minimum condition for participating in her tea party presented to Subaru—

Subaru: “Damn it, I’ll drink it, I’ll drink it!”

Grabbing the cup whilst smacking his lips, Subaru gulped down all of his tea in one swig. And just when he opened his eyes wide open from the warmth of the freshly prepared tea,

Subaru: “Ghhhuaa—?!”

Echidna: “Whoaa—?! Just a second, just a second. You do know that you didn’t really have to do that?”

Subaru: “Shut up! Playing the part of a witch that’s difficult to please, this only happened because you insist on such problematic processes… —Ghha, ghhk gh”

Subaru was choking on his tea which had gone down his windpipe, even Echidna stood up from her seat in a rush. Then she put her hand on Subaru’s back and continued rubbing his back until his cough subsided. Whilst spluttering, Subaru said,

Subaru: “Eh, what about the tea?”

Echidna: “Hh, it’s fine this time. Also, the tea I worked so hard to brew, was puked out by you, I really can’t put anything past you. And the table too, letting it stay dirtied like this is a pity.”

Echidna shook her head at Subaru trying to correct his transgression whilst he wiped his mouth. The witch looked at the table that had been stained by the tea Subaru spat out and lightly clicked her fingers. And then, the table started to come apart as if it was melting, until it vanished into dust.

Echidna: “Come now, you even dirtied the chair a bit. A man who’d dare to make me stand while talking is rare indeed… truly, you’re a sinful man.”

Subaru: “Choking and spitting out the tea is no big deal!— Compared to that, we have more important things to discuss.”

Casting aside his banter with Echidna who teased him, Subaru pointed his finger up. What he had to confirm was just one thing.

Subaru: “What day is it today? It must be.. The 14th of Kisdam, right?”

Echidna: “…”

Subaru: “Echidna?”

Echidna: “I just wanted to make you a bit anxious. If you are too impatient, things will escape from you.”

Subaru: "—Echidna"

He had no time for the witch's games. Echidna responded to Subaru with a shrug of her shoulders and said,

Echidna: "That's correct. Don't worry. Your Death brought you back to the morning of this day. It looks like your latest starting point was affixed to the morning of this day. Were you sure of that?"

Answering Subaru's question, Echidna counterattacked it from her own side. On the other hand, Subaru was relieved that he had confirmed it was the same morning that he had Returned by Death to. And with that peace of mind, he shook his head at Echidna's question.

Subaru: "No, I wasn't particularly sure. At the worst, I thought I'd gone back to the previous save point."

Echidna: "Your previous one was set at two months ago. You did so many good things using your powers."

Subaru: "Maybe. Even Elsa is surprised every time, what an unfathomable feeling."

Nonetheless, even the assassin Elsa questioned the sanity of her employer, when he asked her to kill him. Even so, she immediately put aside her indecision and obeyed; she was an excellent means of using Return by Death in an emergency.

Subaru: "It's just that my Return by Death led back to this morning."

Echidna: "That's right. So it seems… If that's the case, it looks like problems may soon spring forth again."

Closing her eyes, Echidna agreed with the frowning Subaru's remarks. The starting point of his Return by Death, and the shift of his new save point. That was the harbinger of hardships ahead which couldn't be overcome without having Return by Death.

In other words, that meant—

Subaru: “I’ll still have to borrow your strength, right?”

Echidna: “It’s nothing, that’s our contract. Besides, to date, lending you my strength hasn’t done much. —At best, I can try and meddle for you from here with all of my might.”

Subaru: “With all your might… it’d be nice if you could help me with just that”

Echidna: “…A witch wouldn’t fall under someone’s palm. If I simply do as instructed, it’ll set a poor example for the other witches.”

Averting her gaze, Echidna let out her words in with something like embarrassment as she streamed her fingers through her long white hair. Although Subaru didn’t remember perceiving in her figure something like the ringing of her chest, he felt as if he had seen something nice before the eves of battle.

Subaru: “Anyhow, I will count on you, Witch of Greed.”

Echidna: “I am sure you will. I will wait here for you to affront the impending turmoil. If you are able to, being more cooperative in satisfying my endless curiosity would make me happy indeed…”

Subaru: “I refuse to do that. If I went along with satisfying your endless curiosity, it’d be just a matter of time until the human parts of me wither and die. Who would try to satisfy you in trying out infinite choices?”

Echidna: “Truly a pity.”

It seemed that, with Echidna’s light-hearted gesture, the tea break before the upcoming battle had ended. The point of Return by Death had changed unexpectedly, but in a sense, this meant he had gotten a chance to give the first strike.

Subaru: “If I use Return by Death to make the first strike, could I make a surprise attack?”

Musing about this, Subaru went down the hill and moved towards the door that would take him back to reality. Echidna softly raised her voice to him, behind his back.

Echidna: “Come to think of it…”

Subaru: “Yeah?”

Echidna: “If you hadn’t grasped that the point of Return by Death changed, why did you expressly use Return by Death?”

Subaru: “Aah, that was because—”

Because—

11

Going through the dream world’s door, Natsuki Subaru consciousness spiraled back towards reality.

Subaru: “…”

Looking up at above the door, the time shown by the Magical Hour Crystal hadn’t changed since before. As always, Subaru headed towards the bathroom. He washed his face, brushed his teeth, took the trouble to put on his fake smile, and finally quickly changed his clothes. And, just as he finished…

???: “… Subaru-sama, are you awake?”

The sound of a knock from outside his room reached him, and Subaru got up from the sofa on-time. Then, putting his hand on the door, he opened the door.

???: “I—”

Subaru: “Hey, good morning, Petra. You look cute this morning too.”

The door opened abruptly and Petra stood on the other side, her eyes wide open. But, after realizing that Subaru was just teasing her, she laughed.

Petra: “Jeez, please don’t surprise me like that.”

Subaru: “I’m sorry I’m sorry. Well, Petra. Aren’t you going to greet me?”

Petra: “Really, you can’t regret it even a little? Hmph… okay, good morning, Subaru-sama. Today is once again a splendid morning you know.”

Without mentioning Subaru’s frivolous attitude, Petra continued to give him her lovely smile. Her words were exactly the same as the morning before “Returning by Death”. That being so, the next things she would say be exactly the same.

Subaru: “I agree, it’s a splendid morning. Today too, Petra looks cute, I don’t even need to say it.”

Petra: “Subaru’s still saying such things… Ah, but there are clouds hanging over the sky beyond the forest, it seems that the weather may get worse this afternoon. I have plans to go shopping this afternoon, I hope it’ll stay sunnyyyyyy.”

He listened to the girl talk about what she wanted to do, speaking in a manner which befitted her age. Subaru started to laugh. Seeing that, Petra puffed out her cheeks, but Subaru hastily replied with a, I’m sorry, I’m sorry” and continued to speak,

Subaru: “But, rest assured Petra. Today will stay sunny. The clouds give off a false impression and won’t be a problem. I can say that for definite.”

Petra: “Huh? Really? That’s super helpful. …But, how do you know?”

Subaru: “Well, that’s because…”

Petra inclined her head in doubt and widened her eyes at Subaru’s assertion. Giving her a full-toothed smile, Subaru answered the girl’s query.

Subaru: “—Because I just returned for this, putting my life on the line for it.”

A meadow of green, a garden's fragrance drifting through the hillock, a white parasol and white table in fixed position, a black dress as if in mourning, a girl with white hair elegantly tilting her teacup.

As she relished the warm taste of the tea, the witch allowed an insouciant sigh to escape.

Echidna: "Using one's own life, to save them, to protect them, to keep someone from them, contributing it thus. How virtuous, how noble, surely deserving of everyone's exaltation. Furthermore, not just the once, but challenging an endless cycle of hardships, is the impression it can't help but give."

Pressing her hands to her chest, the witch considered the boy with whom she'd had a contract.

Desperately seeking his ideal, pressing onward despite being struck endlessly by reality. Possessing the most wretched power of Return by Death as his own, all in order to love someone.

Echidna: "—However, dedicating life to Return by Death, to protect one's surroundings, is a double-edged sword. Too disdainful of one's own life, too stubborn about the value of other lives. Because the value of one's own life can no longer be seen, the lives of those precious others become too desperately consequential. This time, anything that isn't the lives of those precious others "aside", is unseeable. That is, downright…"

No matter when, no matter where, that singular attitude of clinging to what could absolutely not be scoured, was downright foolish.

Echidna: "—You truly are, someone who can satisfy me."

Cheeks reddened as if a maiden in the throes of infatuation, the witch longed for the absent boy.

Through the crystal gemstone, he crossed the gate, bringing absolutely everything of the world into her palm. And when the afflictions and hardship shattered him, every time, he unconsciously came to rely on the witch.

To keep his spirit afloat, enduring the temptation of a witch, even if he became a marionette.

In order merely to check the weather, adapting a mentality which was unhesitating to use Return by Death, even that had gone unnoticed.

Echidna: “But, I want you to rest assured. The lives of those who you prize, I will also wholeheartedly gamble my very wisdom on protecting them. So, for this you too—”

—To satisfy this inexhaustible curiosity of a witch, I want to continue as your accomplice.

Suffering and unreasonable fate, from now forth would equally descend endlessly upon the boy.

Though the hardships be arduous, though the heights be insurmountable, the boy with the witch’s aid, lending one another strength and wisdom, found themselves able to cross.

Presented by the Witch of Greed was that love of scorching flame.

Echidna: “Ah, even so—”

The boy crossed the grand gate, the boy sprinted to offer protection, the boy’s guardianship bore fruit; feeling many scarred hearts resulting from the boy’s protection, the witch sighed.

A proposition that would remain sempiternally unsolved, and yet an enigma that would eternally enthrall her, even in death.

Ah, even so—

Echidna: “—Why does love, always fade?”

Pride IF: Life in Another World Erring From Zero

1

—What pervades his mind is the violent HEAT at his stomach.
“Ghhgg! Hot!”

With his face suffering the hard surface of the floor, Subaru knows that he has fallen prone. But his limbs won’t get him to his feet, and lie motionless.

It’s as if he’s no longer himself, as if his body has been stolen from him.

And still the inferno burns Subaru persistently. So nothing about the situation is fallacious.

—Hot, hot hot hothothothothothot.

He opens his mouth, and instead of a shriek out flows rivulets of blood.

In pain and in anguish, almost drowning in his own blood as he is subjected to the pinnacle of agony.

—What on earth did he do?

He pleads escapist pleas as means to flee from the suffering, the whiny complaint repeating through his head.

What on earth did he do?

He knew that his life was not one meriting unabashed praise. But that statement applied to more than just Subaru. Nobody could live a life so pure that they could brag about it to all of humanity. People felt guilt, people felt remorse, people feigned ignorance, and people made compromises.

So why did he alone have to suffer this?

Why was the fate that all other people could ignore forcing itself onto only him? “Ahh, fuck…”

Spills the whisper from between streams of blood.

It carries his remorse, his loathing for his powerlessness, his hatred for fate—

—and his exasperation with himself. “…”

Even with all this injury, even with all this agony, even with all this deathly suffering. Even if the fire scorches him, even if the pain breaks him, even if it threatens his life.

The girl ingrained in his mind will, smiling, face inexorable repeats of woesome death. So, “I,”

One again, he voices his resolve. Voices his resolution. Voices his rue, and his regret.

While seeking a future that, with innumerable attempts, innumerable scrambles, and innumerable wishes, he will regardless never reach.

The PAIN and the HEAT and totality all grow distant, and like the simpering dog he is, he howls.

“No matter what, I—”

The flourish of a blade looms heartlessly down on his last dying ember of life. But not even that blade enters his view. He has already reached his decision.

—Will save you.

The instant he renewed that wish, Natsuki Subaru lost his life.

2

—Witnessing the familiar scene makes Subaru feel strangely relieved, and exhausted. “You have safely made it back, there is no need to fear, I guess.”

While gazing at the traffic of the Royal Capital, Subaru draws multiple tallies of ‘||||’ in the ground with a stick. He continues doing this until he is satisfied, then erases them with his foot and sighs.

Natsuki Subaru hails from the Third Planet From The Sun What Is Earth, his station being a run-of- the-mill third-year high school truant.

Should anyone observe his casual getup of track suit and sneakers, and the plastic convenience store bag in his hand, surely they would not doubt the fact.

However, that principle only applies to those from regions familiar with such concepts as ‘track suits’ and ‘sneakers’ and ‘convenience stores’.

So, getting to what he was truly trying to say—

“—This whole ‘summoned to a parallel world’ thing’s rougher than I thought it’d be.” A carriage drawn by a horse-sized lizard kicks up dust as it zooms past Subaru.

Such a sight was of course impossible in the world Subaru knew. So you could suggest that it had been a horse dolled up in special cosmetics, like some kind of theme park character. But Subaru would not agree.

Because the lizards amounted to more than one—the city’s streets teemed with them—and the people commanding those lizards also presented a massive demographic of special cosmetics. Anthropomorphic animals—people wearing the trappings of so-called beast-men or demi-humans. Perhaps twenty or thirty of them were present Subaru’s visual field. Naturally, there were also many others around who shared Subaru’s make, but the mayhem inflicted on the ‘individual’ half of ‘individual appearance’ drowned them out and generally blocked them from Subaru’s attention.

But he can't stay here trying to escape from reality forever.

Neither the beast-men nor the lizards are any part of a movie shoot or production. This scene is an ordinary one in this place, and the alien here isn't them, it's Subaru.

—After the ten-or-so days Subaru has spent experiencing this, he understands that fact to a painful extent.

"…Time to go."

Done with his useless contemplations, Subaru pats his rear and stands up.

He keeps the stick in his right hand as he meanders down to the street—not the main street where he'll disappear into the crowd, but into the backstreets.

Unlike the bustling main street, the backstreet is unpopulated as it rests crammed between tall buildings. The place could aptly be called a back alley, simply a single lane isolated from the outside world with its silence.

Put short, something could happen here, and the screams would not reach the main road.

So if a blatant outsider like Subaru wandered into here, villains targeting him would naturally appear.

"Hey, buddy. You come play with us for a second."

Subaru turns toward the voice, to find three silhouettes blocking the alley.

They come in a neat all-purpose set of a big, medium, and little guy, and Subaru can sense their abilities of examination. No idea what they're examining though.

"…"

Subaru tilts his head to look at the path opposite the three. The alley hits a dead end behind Subaru, so the only exit from this backstreet means having the trio let him pass by.

And if we’re asking whether or not the trio have any intention to let Subaru back onto the main street—

“Hell’re you looking so spaced out for?”

“He don’t understand what’s goin’ on. Say we make ‘im find out.”

Subaru’s remiss behaviour prompts the three to smile obscenely, ideas for abusing him clicking into place in their heads. From their perspective, Subaru is an obvious rookie.

You can’t fault someone for licking their lips when faced with such easy pickings.

But they are absolutely and utterly wrong.

True, Subaru lacks any real experience with fighting, and he has no secret history where he learned martial arts. Rookie, was the part of their estimations where they weren’t wrong.

But if we’re talking in terms of fighting these three people specifically, then Subaru is already a veteran.

“—Huh?”

At the inattentive giant—Tom of the Tom Dick and Larry trio—Subaru thrusts out his arm.

In Subaru’s grasp remains the stick he picked up before, and although it lacks any sharp point, it wedges into a soft portion of Tom’s throat and with only minor resistance spears into his neck.

“Wha?”

Tom’s eyes shoot open at the instantaneous affair, while Dick and Larry freeze rigid. Tom can no longer fight. While the others are still petrified, Subaru’s free hand shoots for the medium one—Dick. He grasps him by the hair and the ear, swings him. Subaru allows no resistance. Riding the momentum, he smashes Dick’s head against the wall.

Something solid crunches, cracks, and Dick draws a trail of blood down the wall as he crumples.

Simultaneously, Subaru jabs his knee into the impaled Tom, whose eyes bulge open as he topples over. The direction he falls in is poor. He falls forward, and so the stick plunges into him deeper.

Now two of them can no longer fight. Only one left—"Eep."

The small one, Larry, pales as he watches the instantaneous defeat of his two allies.

If he proceeded to abandon the others and sprint for the streets, it'd turn into a contest of his leg strength against Subaru's and he might have a chance of surviving.

Instead he looks at the fallen duo and hesitates on whether to flee. Unaware that it is already too late for them, he wastes the single second of time he has.

Idiot. Imbecile. He'd get his reward for that moronic decision.
"Ghau, ghhg…"

Subaru closes his hands around Larry's skinny neck, squeezing down as he presses Larry's back against the wall. Larry struggles as he is lifted up against the wall, the force on his neck compounding as Subaru strangles him.

He is raised until he is on even eye level with Subaru. Larry's eyes bulge as he is choked, his mouth flapping open and shut in search of oxygen. But his windpipe has been forcibly blocked, and Larry will not be saved.

"Now do you realise how many times I've met you guys total?"
"Khhg, hgh…"

"Eighty-eight. Good for you how your share's always increasing. You're meant to laugh."

Says Subaru as he glares at Larry's face—growing bloodier, and running with spit and tears. Larry has no leeway to say anything, of course. Actually forget about leeway—having lost any capacity to resist, his body falls limp and Subaru dumps him to the ground.

After looking down at the defeated trio, Subaru starts stomping their necks just in case. Once he feels the crunch of something breaking beneath his sneaker's heel, he can relax.

Tom has such a big neck that it takes five good stomps to do it. Subaru just can't get the trick down for this guy. Though every so often his luck is good and he does get them all in one go.

"Wasn't smart to strangle him Feels gross too, won't do it again."

After having that moment of reflection, Subaru loots two knives from Dick. Then he drags their their corpses to the end of the alley, leaves them there, and exits the backstreets as if nothing happened.

Both entering the alley and encountering Tom Dick and Larry happened rather quickly. Taking care of the trio did take a little time, but still ultimately less than a minute.

Subaru hurriedly travels down the main street in pursuit of his destination. "…"

After observing the street, he puts his hand to his chest in relief. Made it in time.

This is a primary street called the Shopper's Lane, chaotic and bustling with people just as the rest, tasked with the job of demonstrating the Capital's health and prosperity.

You can just stand on this street doing nothing, and it'll be more than enough to earn your ears a flood of cacophonous noise.

But a shift comes to this bustling scene. "—Wait! Ah! Please wait!!"

It is the enchanting voice of a silver bell which shreds through the market's din.

Although teeming with desperation, the voice cannot conceal the kindness of its owner, its addressee being a small silhouette which dashes out of the crowd.

“Hehehee.”

Laughs the blonde girl as she weaves through the mob, grinning like a feline. In her hand she clutches something sparkling, and her demeanour clearly attests that she has completed her job. Aiming at that girl, a shimmering blue light—a spear of ice—soars down the street.

“—!!”

Surprised by the unanticipated attack, the girl hops and bounds to avoid the icicle.

That magic attack had been cast in a street teeming with people. The sudden happening creates chaos as the people of the Capital instantly open a path, raising their arms to show that they do not want to get involved in the fight.

It’s the predominant response. Getting caught up in tussles is an everyday thing in the Capital—would be one hell of a statement, but perhaps it’s not too far from the truth.

Regardless. Sprinting down the path opened by the crowd is the person Subaru has been looking for. “…”

The instant he lays eyes on HER, Subaru feels that the whole world has frozen.

The wind, people’s voices, even time falls out of his perception as absolutely all of his focus is redirected onto her.

Her long, silver hair flutters behind her and her amethyst eyes gleam with strong volition. Her slender, pale arms and legs come donned in white attire so mythical it could have been crafted for a pixie—

In this world stopped of time, she alone is permitted motion, as she utterly passes Subaru by. Her objective is the blonde girl who just ran past, Felt.

Felt has stolen something from her, and now she is sprinting around the Capital in an effort to retrieve it. Which will lead her onto a track of nigh unavoidable doom.

But Subaru will not let that happen.

He will never let a fate of DEATH ensnare her.

“I, no matter what, will save you.”

As he watches her grow distant, Subaru swears his pledge for the eighty-eighth time. Being that he’s broken the pledge so many times, it’s unclear exactly how persuasive it is.

Unclear. But if keeps on without surrender, if keeps fighting, if he keeps wishing to save her—”Be waiting for me. —Satella.”

3

Return by Death. The power to reverse time upon death.

Subaru has used this power to redo the world eighty-eight times now.

He’s already getting close to breaking one hundred attempts, and all of it has been spent on saving the silver-haired girl, Satella, from the dead end of fate.

“I mean I’ve done some trial and error on this one…but it’s not going to work like with Tom Dick and Larry.”

Is Subaru’s conclusion regarding his greatest adversary in this fate: Elsa Granhiert.

The person who commissioned Felt to steal Satella’s insignia is this shadowy woman named Elsa. She is a hazard who has brought Satella to her death countless times.

Subaru has tried inordinate times during these past eighty-seven attempts to remove Elsa and secure Satella’s safety, but he always suffered the loss when confronted with Elsa’s transcendental combat prowess and has died with his belly slashed open over fifty times.

This sadist who enjoys disembowelling people is not someone

Subaru can beat in a fight.

When the opponent is someone like Tom Dick and Larry, Subaru can figure some degree of a pattern in their movements and devise plans for absolute victory. But when they're as strong as Elsa, it's rather reasonable that Subaru's head be lopped off the second he tries to do anything.

And although it's not his head, he truly has been instantaneously disembowelled many times.

Subaru cannot fight her and win. Neither can Felt, or Rom, or Satella. Having reached that conclusion, the strategy that Subaru chooses is—

"Wonderful! Beautiful! Although I'd be happier if you could let me enjoy myself more!" "GhhhaaaaAAH!!"

Every time the blades slice through the air, blood spouts.

Too many fallen bodies litter the streets to count on your fingers as blood-soaked Elsa transcends ecstasy, seeming to be relishing in steady doses of rapture.

Although in such a gruesome situation, Elsa's sensuality only compounds the more blood she bathes in.

There are anecdotes about women who bathed in virgin's blood to maintain their own youth who were called vampires, and Elsa presently does appear exactly like such a VAMPIRE.

"…Another failure, huh."

Sighing, Subaru narrows his eyes as he observes the grisly scene from a rooftop.

He's in a ward of the slums which is particularly run-down and abandoned. The stage for the conflict is a space you could maybe call a square, where the massacre escalates unilaterally. Those trading blades with Elsa, and consistently being felled by her knives, are the Capital's guardsmen.

Information from a virtuous city person led them to detect the dangerous Elsa Granhiert, and following their attempts to arrest her their lives lay scattered and slaughtered—being that he is the virtuous city person, the sight does pain Subaru's heart.

"Didn't think there'd be this big of a power gap between normal guards and Elsa…" This was just presenting Elsa with lambs to gleefully slaughter.

Subaru had expected that, being that they are guardsmen who protect the Capital, they would empower themselves with some kind of magic first and then fight on even par with Elsa. But it looks like his hopes were too high.

So yes. Elsa is overwhelmingly powerful even by the standards of this world.

Subaru's resentment for Elsa compounds. But no matter how furious he is, Subaru will never be strong enough to stop this wicked woman.

He doesn't think for an instant that the guards will get a lucky hit in and defeat her either. "Pointless to just keep watching."

He does feel bad for the sacrificed guards, but Subaru will be ending this experiment here.

He has no intention to hold back, but if Subaru ultimately fails and loses his life, those who died here will resurrect in the reset world.

For now Subaru will swallow his tears and let the sacrifices stay dead. Next time he won't expect the slightest thing from them, so they can go back to preserving the Capital's harmony without worries.

Having reached that conclusion, Subaru moves to start leaving the scene—when. "—Oh my."

Freezing still with her kukri raised high, Elsa licks her bloody lips.

The crazed delight and bloodlust overflowing from her proves best that Elsa, having grown bored of slaughtering the guardsmen, has found new prey. The identity of this hapless victim is—

"—Go no further."

A pillar of fire is standing there, hallucinates Subaru. "…"

Swallowing his breath, straining his eyes, taking a closer look, Subaru finally recognizes that it is not flame but a person standing there.

A young man with fiery red hair and eyes as blue as pristine sky.

He may look lean, but his frame is muscled and limber beneath his white regalia. At his waist sits a sword which is probably larger than what is custom.

One hundred out of one hundred people would turn to glance if he walked by, and his looks are so attractive that this work of god would charm any beholder. Chaos resultant from beauty transcendent of gender—is not what he produces, perhaps because of his calm bearing.

Just one glance is enough for Subaru's soul to inform: this man is different from the usual riffraff. "Sir Reinhard!"

"Everyone, please withdraw. That woman is the GUTHUNTER. The sacrifices already number far too many. I don't want that count to increase."

Says Reinhard, his eyes lowered, in response to the trembling voice of a surviving guardsman.

It sounds like he's pitying lives that were butchered like rats, and like he's indignant at the murderer, Elsa, who did it.

Even Subaru as he watches from afar can perceive the nature of this young man, Reinhard. His reasoning is just, his conceptions are just, his mentality is just, hence he is angry.

Mourned death, detested murder, lamented failure, overwrote his remorse with his conviction. That was this man Reinhard's—this knight's—way of being.

“Reinhard Van Astrea. From the SWORD SAINT bloodline. Wonderful, excellent!” “I often feel crushed by the expectations. And you are the GUTHUNTER?”

“Yes, I certainly am. Oh, goodness. What am I to do? I need to be doing my work, but now I’ve come face to face with you.”

With a fevered, passionate breath, Elsa looks ardently at Reinhard.

But Reinhard’s expression is the definition of serious, his eyes filled with duty, not a speck of frivolity in him.

Both are facing the other with antithetical stances, but their hearts lead them to the same answer. They must slay each other and achieve their goal.

“Fundamentally speaking, this is where I would advise you to surrender, but…”

“You’re faced with this slaughter, and you’re telling me this? Very kind of you. So kind that it’s cruel both to me and to them.”

“—No, I share your opinion. It is impious to their deaths if I am lenient on you. I cannot ask for you to surrender.”

Elsa cheerfully kicks one of the fallen corpses as Reinhard slowly shakes his head. He reaches out to the guardsman at his side and promptly states, “A sword, please.”

“Please do accept it.”

The guard presents a sword, which Reinhard takes. He confirms its feel in his hands while Elsa furrows her brows, looking to have qualms about this.

“You’re not using the sword on your hip? But I wanted to feel the cut of the fabled Dragon Blade.”

“Unfortunately, this sword ascertains which opponents it ought to be drawn for. It is a rather troublesome trait, and it doesn’t seem that you’ve earned its graces. Instead, I will oppose you with this.”

“Hrmpf.”

Elsa sighs at Reinhard, who has readied not the sword at his waist, but the one he accepted. But Elsa’s displeasure only lasts for an instant. She immediately changes gears, and feeling premonitions of battle and bloodshed, licks her lips.

“Elsa Granhiert, Guthunter.”

“Reinhard van Astrea of the Sword Saint bloodline.”

They introduce themselves, both becoming wind as they charge at the other. The fight concludes with this one bout alone.

A completely banal slash births a maelstrom of light, the shockwaves destroying this section of the slums.

The slash from the man called the SWORD SAINT is the exact definition of POWER.

Natsuki Subaru, eyes wide, observed this scene.

With a tear on his cheek, his knees shaking, and utterly ignorant as to why.

4

Things went a different way from what Subaru arranged and expected, but it’s safe to say that the primary goal of defeating Elsa has been accomplished.

He didn’t predict Reinhard’s participation, but being that it granted his wish he’s more than fine with it.

Now the trouble surrounding Satella’s insignia will be safely resolved. And so long as Felt and Rom fail to reconvene with their hirer, Elsa, it shouldn’t be asking the impossible for them to keep Satella’s insignia stored. Subaru doubts that Satella will succumb to rage and kill them.

This story revolving around the Loot House will be completed using the bare minimum of characters.

It's a desirable outcome for Subaru as well. And so—

"—Why could you be helping me?"

"I mean you don't need to trust me. If you're fine with being surrounded by guards and losing all possible chance of revenge, just kill me and run away."

"…"

Spits Subaru as he leans against a wall, speaking to a crouching Elsa.

She is covered in blood, her black outfit torn in places and her white skin exposed. That said, her flesh is coated with horrible wounds which leave Subaru no room to feel the slightest bit bashful. And Subaru has no sexual interest in Elsa anyway.

He just thought she could be useful and wanted to capitalize on the opportunity.

"The guards' eyes're bloodshot looking for you. I misdirected them to be somewhere else, so it'll be a little while before they notice us. Your wounds?"

"Hurt very much. Very, very much, I could die. Huhu, it's wonderful."

"There's a sentiment I don't understand. Gonna be a problem if you die on me, kinda looking to do something here."

Subaru has gone out of his way, risking danger to misdirect them so that Elsa may live.

If he is felled here or gets wrapped up in the guards' search for Elsa, this spontaneous route where Satella survived will turn to dust.

Though, if that happens, it just means more rolls of the dice to get these events to unfold again.

"Can you make a path to the south-eastern section of the slums? I'll be able to reunite with my younger sister if you do. She'll treat my wounds and prepare an escape route."

"Sister! Hah, you have a sister, that's both on point and a complete tragedy."

It's probably not that she trusts him, and if she does trust him that's still disgusting, but either way Elsa's information means Subaru can calculate ways to overcome this predicament.

Their flight has already brought them rather considerably south. It shouldn't take them too long to relocate to this place Elsa's talking about.

Using the holy golden coins in Elsa's possession, Subaru bribes residents of the slums to interfere with the guards' search and lead them on an incorrect course. No problems.

"What I don't understand is your goal in this."

"Just wanted to put you in my debt. It might be helpful to have you around one day." "A debt. How strange. —When you are so eager to kill me."

Is what Subaru has to hear while lending Elsa his shoulder and helping her run away. Elsa's dark eyes look up at Subaru, trying to peer into his emotions.

But she already nailed it and there's no need to peer. The answer Elsa gets from Subaru's dark eyes is exactly what she stated.

Subaru would like to kill Elsa right now if possible. But he will not manage to beat even a dying Elsa if he fails to consider the possible branches, and besides that it's a hasty idea.

Subaru feels that he's been placed on a hideously lopsided side of the board.

It's a battle which presupposes that he consider every method possible, undergo trial and error, and make the optimum moves.

Think of it like shogi, where no amount of randomly moving pieces around will procure you any victory.

If it’s possible, swap out foes and allies. If there’s opportunity, don’t hesitate to alter your circumstances.

For this he must utilize even those he abhors and would rather murder. “I do want to kill you. And I will kill you one day. But not now.”

“I see.”

It’s not even worth hiding. Subaru reveals his true feelings to Elsa.

If Elsa were someone more prudent, she would kill Subaru right here to quell some future anxieties. But Subaru is confident that she will not do that.

It’s a blood-soaked confidence, which Subaru gained through more than eighty deaths to Elsa.

“Wonderful. You and I are bound by loathing. One day, yes. You will prove yourself right. And it’s very, very lovely.”

“…”

Elsa’s blood-soaked lips relax, smiling like a girl with a crush.

With her smile right beside him, from the very depths of his heart, Subaru thinks: repulsive.

5

“Let us meet again, yes?”

“See you, mister. Thanks for helping Elsa.”

The blue-haired girl they meet up with takes charge of Elsa, and Subaru breathes a sigh of relief. This girl waiting in the hovel Elsa mentioned is very young, in her tweens. Though her age shocks Subaru at first, she does tend to Elsa’s wounds in a practised manner, promptly completes arrangements for them to flee the Capital, and speedily vacates the shack.

He just barely manages to secure means to contact Elsa, which serves as his payment. Though it’s not clear whether that payment truly compensates for the danger he risked.

“Guess what happens from this point on depends on how I move.”

Subaru takes off his bloodstained tracksuit jersey, ties it around his waist, and starts walking.

His course leads him away from the slums and towards the Loot House. Elsa had failed to ever reach the place, but had Satella managed to safely reclaim her insignia? The question plagued him.

“…”

After some time, Subaru reaches the Loot House. His eyes go wide at what he sees. “Didn’t expect that.”

What unfolds before him is the sight of a frozen Loot House.

Or rather, ‘sealed inside ice’ is a more accurate description than ‘frozen’. What on earth happened here? Subaru quickly interrogates a nearby resident, and:

“The loot house’s old-guy boss and his granddaughter got nicked by the guards. Something about them making enemies with a scary magician…don’t wanna stick my nose in it.”

“Are the old man and his granddaughter safe? The magician?”

“They’re saying no one’s hurt, but I didn’t get a good look at either of them. Look, enough, okay?”

Perhaps unnerved by Subaru’s eerie intensity, the man pushes Subaru’s arms away and briskly escapes into an alleyway’s darkness.

Subaru ruminates on the man’s words as he watches him go, then puts his hand to chest in relief.

He doesn’t know how accurate the man’s statements were, but at very least his account couldn’t be confused with a hypothetical situation where people died.

That the guards arrested Felt and Rom is inevitable considering what they do for a living. They ought to enjoy prison for a while, and reflect on their occupations.

And now that Subaru knows Satella is safe, as he hoped—”—Alright. What do I do now?”

Subaru scratches his head, aware that he has completely exhausted himself of goals.

He was summoned to a parallel world, given RETURN BY DEATH, utilized it, and saved an adorable kind-hearted silver-haired half-elf.

Though it took him eighty-seven deaths to achieve it.

“Ah, crap. Maybe I better’ve died, reset, and had Elsa tell me why she was trying to steal Satella’s insignia…?”

He really ought to have asked this while transporting the wounded Elsa but lapsed.

However, if Subaru asked questions deeply involved with Elsa’s affairs, and that led her to discover that Subaru was sentimentally on Satella’s side, he’d have no idea how Elsa would react.

In the end, both Subaru and Satella are alive now. We’ll assume it’s the correct solution. “Though really, I’d like to know more about Satella if I could…”

Where did Satella come from? Where was she going? Would he meet her again? He didn’t know. Though, he could always repeat things until he did know.

But assuming there were some other method—”—So, could you guys teach me?”

Standing before the frozen loot house, Subaru shoves his hands in his pockets and turns around. No one feels present. But Subaru’s eyes see the several silhouettes standing there.

All mundane looking people, with a moderate jumbling of ages and sexes, an incoherent group. If there was anything about these people that did cohere, it’d be their eyes.

All their eyes were dead. Good for being steeped with madness and pursuing crazed ecstasy. And Subaru suspected that, if he looked in a mirror, his eyes would be the same.

“…”

His cheeks relax at the sentiment. And he looks to the sky.

An eerily lustrous moon gazes down, at the frozen loot house, and the madmen.

6

It happened almost two months later that Subaru learned more about Satella.

“In the Royal Selection! A silver-haired half-elf! Backed by Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers! Not Satella, Emilia—!”

Swooping at the sudden rush of detailed information after a period of radio silence, Subaru claps his hands, looking overjoyed.

This unexpected procurement of information resulted from an official announcement from the Royal Palace, giving news not only in the Capital but all through the country about the competition for the throne.

When Subaru first saw the bulletins posted around town about it, he mocked them as just being some stupid country election—when his eyes shot open.

The candidates consisted of five women—and one of them was the girl he was seeking.

“Royal Selection, the Royal Selection…if she’s a candidate for ruler it means she has pedigree. Of course she does. Think of how graceful she is when she’s just walking around. Emilia, she’s Emiliaaa…”

Learning her real name makes Subaru’s heart feel light, as if it’s sprouted wings.

He'd figured out ages ago that Satella was an alias. And also figured out why she—Emilia—had introduced herself to Subaru with a fake name.

After all, if a silver-haired half-elf introduced themselves as Satella —

"People'd think she's involved with us guys and stay away from her. It was a desperate measure to keep me from danger. Her face's so adorable, her thoughts are so adorable."

While speaking sadly about being a half-elf, and looking scared of being rejected, she showed consideration for others and utilized her lineage in an attempt to distance them from harm.

What a noble, piteous girl. So emotional it's squeezing his chest. When,

"—Natsuki Subaru! Beloved of disciples! Are YOU PRESENT?!" "…"

A shrill voice like a strangled fowl echoes unpleasantly through the room, calling Subaru's name. Subaru grimaces, puts the bulletin he pinched from the Capital on his bed, reluctantly opens the door, and exits his room.

He leans against the closed door, waiting, when an unhealthily pallid man comes into view down the poorly lit hallway.

"I had been SEEKING YOU! Why, why, why is it that you were here, INDULGING IN SLOTH?! When!

We! Must! Follow the Witch's auspices, and answer to her love with diligenceeeeeeeeeeeeee!!"

"Cut it out with the false accusations, Bete-san. I'm just obeying the gospel's instructions. Gospel's telling me to spend my time here."

"What! The gospel so instructed you?! At this juncture, at this opportunity, in these circumstances, what cogitations must the Witch have, to instruct a disciple as devout as you to idle, even that slightest conjecture lies beyond! MY! FACULTIES!”

Not only is his screaming noisy, his movements are obnoxious too.

Indeed a madman, this Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti. It truly does take an effort not to sigh.

He’s an unlikable lunatic, but definitely a conductive character for Subaru.

After all, everyone in the group of Subaru’s affiliation is a selfish portrait of egotism, and it’s questionable whether the normal disciples have any sense of self-consciousness.

Subaru’s arbitrary speculation is that the normal disciples’ dull emotions might be due to something operating on their consciousness, so their affiliations won’t leak while they’re doing everyday things.

But who cares about supposition? The important thing is what Petelgeuse, in a position of authority very different from the normal disciples, is trying to achieve with this visit.

Subaru has been part of this group for two months now, and life’s been generally alright. Though, while the living’s alright, movement- and mental health-wise it’s a nightmare.

Having frequent interactions with madmen and religious crazies is, being that Subaru’s humanity cannot depart the realm of the commonplace, entirely agony.

His dwelling is a cave hidden in the mountains.

It’s a surprisingly liveable spot, and hospitable enough that Subaru can fashion a section as being ‘his room’, but stuff like how it’s far from civilization, and has hard floors and cold walls is something that generation Z Subaru has to endure.

But that said, he isn’t a good enough actor to succeed in hiding his connections to this group. As a compromise, he’s living here, being productive by learning and stockpiling information about this world.

"So, you have some business with my hermit self?"

"Are you NOT AWARE? Of the foolish event being conducted in this country!" "Stuff happening in this country'd be…you mean the Royal Selection?"

"INDEED! The Selection! HOWEVER the problem does not LIE THERE! The Selection itself offers no importance, it is the one participating! That being, the silver-haired half-witch!"

So that he can lecture the ignorant Subaru, Petelgeuse presents the official notice for the Selection—the exact same thing Subaru has decorated the room with—and jabs his finger at it.

Naturally, on that flyer is the face of a girl so cute that Subaru's staring has burned holes into it. Petelgeuse's bony finger, quite expectedly, points at her.

"WITNESS! This visage! This stock! Twin blasphemies against the Witch! This being is not one we may overlook! The time of the TRIAL is UPON US!"

"TRIAL." "EXACTLY!"

Screeching, Petelgeuse slaps the flyer flat against the cave wall before slamming his fist into Emilia's personal description, sending blood flying everywhere.

This self-harming madman, intoxicated on pain and blood, has desecrated Emilia's paper image.

"If it coheres, take her! If not, forsake her! Should she be verified as a suitable vessel for the Witch, we shall accept her into OUR FOLD! The Trial must commence!"

"And you're asking for my help?"

"Yes, CORRECT! I have contacted others, but doubt those nonbelievers will respond! WRATH alone may present possibility, however she is presently distant from this nation…thusly! We alone shall depart!"

With duty in his heart and a torrent of tears streaming down his face, Petelgeuse shoves his bloody fist into his mouth, sucks his wounds. The corners of his mouth tear as his teeth bite down on his hand, wounding his skin and flesh in a gruesome and repellent display.

But Subaru instructs himself to withstand the sight with ironclad will and dons a cool facade. “Mind if I come along, then? I don’t exactly know the details though, Cardinal.”

“So you are kindly accompanying! Aaah! AaAaAa! How so very so very so very so very very veryveryveryveryveryveryveryveryveryveryveryvery…JOYOUS!”

“That’s getting way too enthused when I’m just saying I’m going with.” The wry smile Subaru gives is legitimate.

After nodding so many times his head could practically fall off, Petelgeuse snaps his legs back into proper posture and whips around, his back to Subaru.

“We DEPART IMMEDIATELY! I have already given my fingers instructions along journey here…we will reunify with them, and travel to Mathers’ Domain. Then we shall follow the GOSPEL’S LEAD!”

“Roger And also, what’s the Trial?”

“A SOUND QUESTION. It is a test to ascertain suitability of the Witch’s vessel namely, a trial to determine whether the receptacle possesses the strength, the quality, and moreover the qualifications to host the WITCH’S SOUL!”

Subaru replies to the unhelpful explanation with a knowing nod.

He knows none of the specifics. But compared to his time spent in agony not knowing anything about Satella = Emilia, it’s inestimably preferable.

And it sounds like this means he’ll get to be involved with Emilia again. Though it also involves—

"—Now, now now! Now now now! WE DEPART! WE TEST! Should the vessel be suitable, then upon us now is the WITCH'S ADVENT! A chance after these many centuries that we may fill all of our seats!"

"If the Witch Satella descends here, does the vessel…?"

"MARTYRED! HOWEVER, that is VENERABLE! So venerable that I would take the role were it possible! Were my person capable of befitting Satella's spirit, I would endure all iterations of inestimable suffering for my desire to SEE HER AGAIN!"

"So she gets erased. Does she now."

Mumbles Subaru as he follows behind Petelgeuse, who has begun walking.

It doesn't reach cackling Petelgeuse's ears, secluded in his own world as he is, that faint and quiet murmur—

"Oh, does she now?"

—Neither does the madman notice Natsuki Subaru's dark smile.

7

He thrusts the sword into their skinny body, twists.

The feedback coming from the point of the sword informs him that he has just severed something vital.

And with a thin rasp of breath—

"Don't think you're gonna believe me when I say this, but." "Wh, y…?"

"I thought you were one of the better ones out of a group of unlikable people, Bete-san."

His eyes are wide in shock as they look down despairingly at Subaru's.

Surprise remains with him as he slowly topples backward, Subaru unsheathing the sword from his chest. The momentum makes Subaru stumble backward. He breathes deeply.

At Subaru's feet lies Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti in pool of blood. Petelgeuse, dying, his heart destroyed at Subaru's personal doing.

"It was a real effort setting this whole situation up. For how crazy you act, you're just a little too meticulous. Seriously, I got stuck so many times."

"What, are…YOU…SAYING?"

"I'm talking about all the trial and error it took for me to get here. I mean this goes for planning out my strategy too, but getting my trump card and stuff was seriously dicey. You have no idea how relieved I am."

Petelgeuse crawls, forcing strength into his powerless limbs. But he lacks the strength to get to his feet, merely creeping backwards, as if retreating from death.

Subaru doesn't have to do anything. Petelgeuse doesn't have long to live.

"I couldn't see Unseen Hand at first, was panicked about what the heck was going on. Dealing with your fingers was posing a bunch of trouble too…right now, I really feel like I accomplished something."

"Ghh, auhhh…"

The blood flowing from Petelgeuse is the last dregs of his life.

It shows no signs of stopping as it instead compounds in intensity, Subaru watching him bleed out while he reveals everything, mastermind style.

The black, invisible Unseen Hand.

Petelgeuse's confidants and reserve stock of bodies, the Fingers.

And the ability to migrate to those bodies, his life-extending Possession.

Making full use of all three, Petelgeuse had been the very picture of his beloved ‘diligence’ as he attempted to corner Emilia. Downing him had truly been a back-breaking effort.

In fact it took Subaru over four hundred runs of trial and error to get here.

“Which makes you the person I’ve spoken to most in the world. I know how crazy lopsided this is, but I feel like you’re kinda a friend. Watching how you do everything you can to reach your goals, playing all the cards you have, I mean I have to say I was touched.”

“What are you saying…what are you saying what are you saying are you saying areyousayingareyousaying!!”

At the very end of the end, livid strength enters his moribund body. Focusing absolutely all of that strength on himself, Petelgeuse uprights his dying form.

He spits blood—literally, as it spills out from his mouth, his bloodshot eyes shooting open as he turns toward Subaru.

“Betrayer! Traitor who spurns the Witch’s love! You cannot be, you cannot be, FORGIVEN!!” Petelgeuse reaches out his blood-soaked hand.

He’s not doing it to activate Unseen Hand. There’s no point to an invisible arm when it’s perceptible. What Petelgeuse is clinging to is — —The terms for evil spirit, Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti, to hijack another’s body. The process for him to possess the bodies of those with groundings as spiritualists. There is only one person here who meets those qualifications—

“Your body is—!!”

Mine! Is what Petelgeuse intends, but Subaru just sighs.

He leisurely walks over to Petelgeuse and slams a kick into his dying face. The force of the blow dislodges some of Petelgeuse's teeth—stunned, Petelgeuse recoils.

He hadn't been able to transfer to this supposedly-pilferable body.

Subaru's response comes not in words, but upon his raised left hand—where there, upon his fingers, floats a dim, red light.

It's an entity called a minor spirit.

Which has entered a contract with Natsuki Subaru who has groundings as a spiritualist, a cute tool for lighting dim pathways.

Evil Spirit Petelgeuse can only possess the bodies of spiritualists who lack contracts. Who could guess how many deaths it took Subaru before he figured that one out.

"It's been the longest three days of my life. Though from your perspective we didn't know each other very long at all…"

"NATSUKI SUBARUUUUUU!!"

"You targeted Emilia. —Regret it."

Petelgeuse spits a shriek of enmity, when Subaru kicks him in the chest and swings the sword down on his face. The blade plunges into Petelgeuse's skull, demolishing his brain and his life.

The grating death-wail comes to a pause. Subaru leans his weight onto the sword in Petelgeuse, sighing.

In reality very short, but by Subaru's perception incredibly long, the battle with Petelgeuse is over. Feelings of both accomplishment and despondency flood into him.

"Hmmhmm? Looks like you're already done too." After a period of silence, a voice addresses Subaru.

He turns around, to find a massive silhouette skulking through the shrub and bush—belonging to a black-pelted beast with a lion's head and four horrible limbs, approaching him.

Naturally, the one addressing him is not the beast. It's the girl mounted on its back, giving Subaru a flirty glance.

"Yeah, I'm all done. Thanks, Mei Lee."

"No worries. You're paying us, and you looked after Elsa. But are you sure about this? I thought they were your pals."

"Have to wonder. If he hadn't tried to kill me at the end then maybe you could've called us friends with an age gap, but he tried to kill me so…unfortunately disqualified from friends, I guess?"

While using his sleeve to wipe away blood that rebounded on him, Subaru shrugs at the girl, Mei Lee. She puts her finger to her chin.

"Hrmmm. I'm not trying to kill you, so does that mean we're friends?" "Following the logic, it does. You and me are friends, Mei Lee."

"Ahh, yay! Now when you count Petra-chan and the others too, I have lots of friends!"

Clasping her hands together, Mei Lee happily rocks her shoulders as she sits atop the beast. Her childish attitude makes Subaru raise his brow, and her statement about having friends astonishes him.

"Huh, I'm surprised. It's one hell of a thing to say this, but you actually have friends." "I doo. I killed them all though."

"…"

Says Mei Lee, smiling slightly, and not looking guilty in the least.

Killed them. So they were probably people she was involved with through work. He had been thinking that Mei Lee had some childlike aspects to her, but yeah her morals are twisted.

Well she's Elsa's sister so what do you expect.

“Either way, it was a serious help that you filled in where I couldn’t. If you weren’t here, I never would’ve managed to kill all the fingers by myself.”

“Don’t worry ‘bout it. But, did you really need to go out of your way hire us? You could’ve asked someone more proper, like the Knights.”

“Wouldn’t be able to realise part of my goal if I did that.” “Goal?”

Mei Lee tilts her head as she attempts to probe Subaru’s thoughts. But Subaru gives no further explanation, just crafts a smile and,

“Rest of this talk’s for the adults. Children such as yourself would not need to hear of it, Mei Lee.”

“Ahh! Geez, you’re treating me like a kid! I don’t care ‘bout you anymore mister, I’m done, I don’t caaaareeee!”

Says Mei Lee angrily, for the beast to growl as if set off by her anger.

She’s siccing her pet on him. After all the effort he went through to finally kill Petelgeuse, he’d really rather not have this attempt end in failure.

Labouring to repair Mei Lee’s mood, Subaru toils his best as her bootlicker.

A few days after the Royal Selection began, a rather large change came to the territories of Lugnica.

The biggest change was that the front-running candidate for Ruler, Duchess Crusch Karsten, dropped out of the running—although the only one who understood the whole truth of the situation was Subaru.

Because all traces of this so-called ‘Crusch’ have been erased from the world, eliminated alongside the fact of her having ever existed, revised by the world as having never been there at all.

Which means that the Royal Selection had now always been four people, that the memories of Duchess Karsten's supporters have been twisted, and they became allies of other squads.

"Man, the White Whale's fog's terrifying. Just going off erasing records of people."

It's a mystery why it's ineffective on just Subaru. But, being that Subaru doesn't feel any particular sensation himself, it's just a pain with how weird inconsistencies keep popping up when he's having conversations with people.

He wishes he could just forget about this stupid Crusch Karsten.

Someone who died because they fought an enemy they couldn't hope of rivalling would never get opportunity to come back.

The only person in the world who could get that opportunity is Natsuki Subaru.

And so the defeated do nothing but act as reminders: don't do the idiotic things they did.

But a change other the one irrelevant to everyone except Subaru also occurred. Which is—

"Royal Selection Candidate, Emilia. Who subjugated perennial tormentor of the world, the Witch Cult's Cardinal of Sloth!"

The Kingdom is alive with the news, and apparently even foreign nations know about the achievement.

Even Subaru is surprised at what effective propaganda it is. A victory dovetailing from 400 years of death, claimed by Natsuki Subaru—which he transferred in entirety to the shady clown man supporting Emilia.

The question of how the Margrave would respond to negotiations to give Emilia the achievements was honestly a bet on par with subjugating Petelgeuse, but—

"He was so cool with it it was gross."

Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers received Subaru's proposal, easily consented to it, and immediately announced that the Petelgeuse subjugation was Emilia's achievement.

Although feeling something fishy about him, Subaru has no qualms about Roswaal's actions.

This world disparages Emilia for stupid bullshit reasons. And still Roswaal announced himself as her supporter, became her patron and promoted her participation in the Selection.

Perhaps it was simply whimsy, or more likely he was hoping to benefit should the one-in-a-million chance occur that Emilia takes the throne.

The way he swooped in with spit trailing everywhere in response to Subaru's Petelgeuse report made good proof of that.

"No issues. Do whatever you want, Mister Margrave. So long as you're on Emilia's side, I'll dump myself on your side too. Just as you expect, the Ruler will be Emilia."

Subaru will do everything he can with his death-defying power to achieve that.

But if it happens that Roswaal has some foul desires or unbecoming thoughts about Emilia, then—"All it means is another gravestone erected for Emilia's sake."

If he's going to keep operating in the shadows, unknown to Emilia, then he has no choice but to entrust the more public activities to Roswaal.

In exchange, Subaru will bring every single possible plan into fruition from behind closed doors. And for that purpose—

"Went out of the way to salvage you. Gonna be getting your help, Blue." "…"

In the back of the cave sits a metal-barred prison.

Chained inside that cold space is someone wearing dirty clothes.

Cat ears sprout from the head of this dainty, knight-uniformed girl—ish man, apparently.

While Subaru was running around putting things in order after Petelgeuse's death and the White Whale's rampage, he found these spoils and took the tool home.

But as of present, Subaru has had very few chances to behold the healing talents of the fabled Blue. Hell, he's not even healing his own injuries, just staring at the prison floor and weeping without end.

"…Someone, tell me. Tell me. Why am I…where's His Highness? What was I for? There was somebody. There had to be somebody. Everything's strange if there wasn't. But…"

"Man, I'm stuck. Gonna take some time for this one."

Subaru scratches his head as he withdraws from his chest pocket a note. It is the notice which informed about the start of the Royal Selection, which Subaru has been keeping zealously and unfailingly on his person.

The notice no longer looks like what Subaru's familiar with. There are supposed to be five candidates listed—but now there's four, and the descriptors have diminished.

Change owing to the abolishment of Crusch Karsten's existence had affected the notice.

But Subaru remembers. He may have been utterly ignoring her, but he has reread this thing more than countless times. Crusch Karsten's Knight is named Felix Argyle.

Which should be the same as this healer here, Blue.

"My guess was that when someone's erased by the Whale's fog, your memories compensate by changing in a way that doesn't feel awry, but…just look at this."

"Someone, someone tell me…His Highness, His Highness? His Highness, and, someone else…?"

“When they’re so huge that you can’t compensate for the missing memories, guess this’s what happens to you.”

When the missing person is such a massive part of someone’s character, of course they’ll collapse when that person disappears from the world.

Which is why Blue has wound up mumbling over and over like a broken doll.

Unfortunately, not even Subaru knows how to mend Blue’s broken mind.

Subaru never interacted with the one who safeguarded Blue’s heart. And even supposing that he does go back in time, it’s not certain where he’d return to.

And so Subaru does not know what story had been spun between them.

“But still, I did find a nice pawn here. Everything’s fine. I’ll fill your heart’s fractures in for sure.” “Someone, please…tell me. I, why am I…”

Blue shows absolutely no reaction to Subaru.

It might look hopeless, but Subaru proceeds with no alarm. He’s prepared to take his time.

A Knight healer bereft of his support. You don’t get pawns as easily manipulated as this very often. And so, Subaru earnestly, wholeheartedly,

“This time, I’ll definitely figure out how to keep you from killing yourself.”

I’m ready to die any number of times challenging you, he asserts.

9

All entrances to the mansion are boarded.

The doors are nailed shut from inside, and planks of wood cover all windows. Should he have been attentive enough to find the state of this shut-curtains mansion strange, perhaps he would have noticed it.

Though naturally, Subaru arranged these operations with confidence that he wouldn't.

A raging inferno swallows the whole of the mansion, steadily burning it to cinders.

The flame which started this fire knows no pause, blazing furiouser and furiouser as it consumes the whole of the mansion, screaming frenzied demands that everything return to dust.

The furniture and ornamentations of the inflamed manor aren't the only things getting charred. The many women who have spent a long time in agony in this mansion, too, lose their lives in the embrace of flame and smoke, their forms disintegrating into soot, indistinguishable as having ever been a person.

A gruesome deed. Anyone would think so of this barbarity.

But this was in fact the what the burning women desired! Is what you could claim, but who would believe you?

"Fuck, fuck, fuck this inanity!!"

Tongues of flame compound in intensity, buffeted on further by the wind. Through this blazing mansion echoes the sound of a man cursing.

His voice is so strained it's pathetic as he yells inside this burning, collapsing building.

He screeches in utter frenzy, the situation beyond his belief, unaware of what the hell has happened.

"#99! #114! Even #123 would suffice! Where are you?! Where'd you run off to?! Who do you think I am?! Leaving me behind while you go off and expire, what kind of irresponsible, selfish women are you?!"

His voice breaks as he screams like a child throwing a tantrum, this white-haired young man. White clothes garb his form, his banal face grisly like a demon's as he raves.

He makes for a very strange sight inside this disastrous mansion fire.

A sane person would be doing everything they could to escape the blaze.

But the man shows no indication of doing that at all. In fact it's like he hasn't considered for an instant that he would die, operating off some kind of dogma that transcends mortality.

He's insane, or rather not.

—No, it's incorrect to deny that he's mad, but in truth he is soundly confident.

This fire cannot kill him, he believes.

And so the man's screaming and cursing has absolutely nothing to do with fear for his own life. It's due to the inestimable rage he has towards his wives, who probably committed the arson.

"All of these accursed people, taking my limited assets and disparagin—" "—I'd appreciate it if you could close your unpleasant mouth."

"Nuh"

The frenzied man's face eats a kick from the foot which comes crashing in through a blazing wall. Dizzied by the unforeseen angle of the strike, and moreover by the unforeseen attack, the man flies easily down the hallway. Even burning wall turns brittle, unable to withstand the collision with him as it shatters.

He tumbles to stop spread out on the floor and stares up at the burning ceiling in dumbfounded shock.

"What, is…"

“This fire is the parting letter from your many wives. Spoken plainly, it seems that this is the end to these terror-born fetters of love.”

The voice that replies to the astonished man is the same one he heard when he got kicked.

The man jerks himself upright, crawls through the broken wall—for a woman garbed in black to come entering the burning room.

Her smile is resplendent, and her long black braid is characteristic.

But what speaks most of her identity is, held in her right hand, her kukri—”Burglar! Who do you think I am?! Your tomfoolery is what you’ll…”

Regret, prattles the man as he swings up his arms in an attempt to attack the woman.

But a light impact and the sight of his arms, severed at the elbows and flying through the air, foils him. He looks down. Observes that his arms are missing.

Impossible. What on earth is happening?

“Immortal? Invincible? I forget which it was, but I know the trick to how it works. Now all you are is a very unpleasant insect of a person.”

“—! A strumpet like you—” “…”

Forgetting about his missing arms, the man attempts to swear at the woman. But she doesn’t let him say a word of it.

She swings up her leg, sweeping in between his legs as he sits on the floor and proceeding to kick him in the crotch. The blow is strong enough to shunt him into the air as the woman flourishes her blade of death.

She now severs his arms at the shoulders and butchers round cuts of meat out of his legs from his feet up to his thighs. His toes, his ankles, his shins, knees, thighs, all subject to slashes, blood abounding as the man’s body swiftly turns into something atrocious.

“—My”

The woman plunges her foot into the man’s torso, now a considerable smaller target, which blasts him through the supposedly-boarded window and outside the burning mansion.

Alongside shards of broken window glass does he fall, incapable of catching himself with his missing limbs, to the earth. It’s fortunate that he only fell from the second floor, which lets him escape fatal wounds from the fall.

Though, his lack of limbs and overwhelming blood loss is already plenty fatal.

“As if I could stand this abject idiocy I, I am the most perfected being in the world. Wanting of little, conscious of adequacy, humble and without avarice, that’s how I live my life and so, why do

I, of all people, have to face heckling from human failures of your “

“When you insult people like that on the regular, of course you’re gonna get hit with the divorce papers, Regulus-san.”

“Hauh?!”

Even turning around on his side is an arduous task for this man, when the sight of someone new cuts into his vision.

A boy with dark hair and dark eyes who dons a dark robe—Natsuki Subaru. It’s pitiful how little the man has grasped the situation. Subaru sighs at him.

“I never wouldda thought everyone’d collaborate so well to pull it off, Regulus-san.” “Why’re, you here no, then, you devised this?”

“Could anyone else?”

The man, Regulus, finally catches up with what's happening as Subaru shrugs, mouth twisted into a grin. Belittled, Regulus's eyes house fury.

"Curse you, bastard scum! Do you comprehend what it is you have done?! Took my wives, my beloved wives! And in my presence, burned them dead along with my mansion! Do you comprehend the immorality and wickedness of your deeds! Wife-murdering prat!"

"Man that angle's so unexpected I'm too stunned to speak. Just saying, your wives offered their own lives for the anti-heart strategy." "—Im, possible."

Subaru picks his ear, looking astonished as he informs Regulus of this. Regulus falls speechless. It's this thing where Regulus finds it so utterly unexpected that Subaru finds incomprehensible.

Regulus kept many women so dubbed 'wives' in his mansion, extolling the greatness of a married life where he threatened to violently murder them if they ever disobeyed him.

If that was all it was, then it'd just look like a horrendously malicious kind of harem, but the Cardinal's repulsiveness doesn't end there. The scoundrel entrusted his own heart to his wives, rendering his own body stopped in time, immortal, and invincible.

The only way to kill the Cardinal of Greed Regulus Corneas is to return his heart to him.

This means killing all of his targets for housing his heart, his wives, and robbing it of anywhere to hide.

Even Subaru agonized over calling the decision.

But it was Regulus's imprisoned wives—no—the imprisoned women who resolved the conflict for him.

"They were content with dying so long as it got them payback on you. Man even I haven't really heard of verbal abuse bad enough to drive people to do that."

"Who would possibly believe that, nonsense…I, I loved my wives!

And so they ought to love me back! Yes?! You don't think it's strange otherwise?! And still! Why have those damn women inflicted such suffering on me, that would indispose them as wives!"

"…You're being serious. That's the terrifying thing about you guys." Mutters Subaru, looking irked as he averts his gaze from Regulus.

What his gaze lands on instead is the black silhouette which leaps from the burning mansion and lands in the garden. Elsa. She brushes the soot off herself before noticing Subaru's look.

"Goodness, you were worried about me? Rest easy. I wasn't injured anywhere at all."

"I'm not worrying about you. Anyway, the heck's up with this. I didn't tell you to do this tasteless crap to him."

Subaru's lips twist into a frown as he points at the limbless Regulus.

Regulus had limbs the last time Subaru happened to see him, so it's definitely Elsa who did this. She shrugs.

"It felt like he'd be obnoxious if he had them…And wouldn't you want to convey what they said?" "…Yeah. You're right."

Surprisingly, looks like Elsa can be considerate to people.

It is wrong to let Regulus die without communicating to him how the sacrificed women resolved themselves as they caught him in this trap.

And now that they've communicated that, "GghaaaaAH!"

Elsa stabs her kukri into Regulus's chest, using it to slowly raise his light body aloft. It's like he's some kind of food on a stick, blood streaming from him as he unremittingly thirsts for life.

"Instantaneous?" "No…"

Subaru puts his hand to his chin as he replies to Elsa's question, in thought.

He might not be Elsa, but Subaru does have a heart which feels sympathy and indignation just as anyone's would. And that heart is demanding that he repay the women who yearned, crying, for death.

And so, Subaru orders Elsa:

"Throw him into a weaker part of the fire. We'll watch him burn."
"Very well, understood."

Elsa nods to Subaru's cruel instructions, not looking conflicted in the least.

She proceeds to throw the cursing Regulus onto a pile of smouldering woodscraps at the edge of the blazing mansion.

"…"

His body burning, to be roasted in flames until death, the man's shriek echo through the night sky. Without their expressions changing in the slightest, Subaru and Elsa watch him die.

"An insect, for how their noise is calming, would be preferable to him."

Once the long, long, death wail comes to its end, Elsa gives her thoughts. And Subaru does agree.

10

—To Subaru, the shattering glass carries the sound of shattering trust.

"This, is…"

"I'm sorry. I'm so sorry. I didn't want to do this. I really, really didn't."

His voice trembling in shock, the man presses his elbow to the countertop. But that fails to support him and his upper body slips off the counter, toppling his chair over as he collapses on the shop's floor.

Caught in the fall, the glass and bottle on the countertop drop, shattering against the floor and dirtying the man's white uniform with an alcoholic reek.

His limbs fail to operate properly, his life slowly slips away. His lips fade to purple, his vision grows blurrier as he blinks and blinks and blinks, trying to drive away his impending demise. Subaru watches the man's frantic scramble for life from his seat at the table.

The man's face is a refined one. His body is lithe, and both his bearing when he entered the store and use of speech while addressing his friend abounded in elegance. Indeed the knightliest of knights.

"Can agree with you being called Impeccable, Julius Euclius-san."
"You, cur…"

"But, if you were thinking more about your position, you would've best paid to be a little more mindful of others. You're the Knight of a Royal Selection candidate who's sitting at peak popularity. You gotta factor in that it's not just your master, you're gonna be targeted too. Though…"

Subaru stands up, pontificating at Julius who is panting in agony, and reaches out. His hand's course heads for the person in the chair beside the fallen Julius.

Flax-brown cat ears and loveable features. Subaru gently draws their dainty shoulders closer to him, deigns to pat their head. By that alone, Blue's eyes relax in drunken ecstasy.

"Fhel, is…you…"

"You know it took me some pretty good effort to capitalize on his grieving? Never thought I'd ever wind up putting in so much trouble for anyone's life except hers. Did pay off though."

"What, scheme are you…"

"Has nothing to do with you anymore. Relax. My guess is, if you're gone then your master won't suffer any damages and things'll go good for her. Dunno what'll happen if she rallies herself though."

Julius's yellow eyes race through a chaotic medley of confusion and rage, sorrow and turmoil, grief and suspicion.

But not a single one of those breakneck emotions means anything.

"An old friend calls you to go drinking, and on the first sip you get this. Trust is sure a sweet poison, Mister Impeccable. You drowned in it, and miscalculated."

"…oi, son."

"It sure is nice to be someone anyone can be proud of. Life's so easy it's enviable. You're dead though."

Subaru squats down and peers at Julius's face. He isn't even looking at Subaru. He isn't hung up about the man who ordered his death.

What does rest in his eyes is his concern for his friend, made to commit murder against his will, and his penitence toward his absent master—

"…"

"A knight to the end. Abhor it."

Spits Subaru as he looks down at Julius's dead face, silent forevermore.

The nauseous feeling in his chest is probably coming from the fact that Subaru had absolutely no reason that he needed to kill the Knight Impeccable.

This is about the first time that Subaru has ordered a death without justification.

It did not pain him to have cultists or Cardinals die. But this time the killing purely results from Subaru picking the easier one to torment.

He is less cautious than Anastasia Hoshin, always surrounded by guards, and more importantly the Blue he wheedled into dependency is usable on him.

"Did I do well, Subaru-sama?"

"You did great. Sorry for forcing you into it."

Blue quietly inquires of Subaru, standing at his side as Subaru watches Julius's death through. Subaru shrugs at him and gives him another pat.

If doing this is enough to calm his unstable mind, then he'll pat him however many times.

"It's fine, so long as it helps you, Subaru-sama. After all, doing this was necessary for crafting the future that yourself and His Highness desired, right? Right?"

"Yeah, it is. That's why we couldn't have your friend stay alive." "Yes…"

Blue's face is dull of emotion, but still his friend's death seems to fracture his mind as he clings to Subaru's sleeve, as if filling the void in his heart.

The aroma of death hangs thick in the air. When, "—Oh, are you occupied?"

The entrance to a place nobody should be entering opens, and a delicate-looking man enters the store.

For a moment Subaru does think about silencing the witness, but fortunately, there's no need to silence this man. He's an insider.

"You're sure on time."

"I am. Time is finite, and us merchants believe that time is money."

"Look at you still calling yourself a merchant, audacious. More of a death dealer." "I truly have no reply to that."

It is a thin, grey-haired man who scratches their head in response to Subaru.

With his slick black suit and black tie he could look like someone returning from a funeral, but a closer inspection reveals the unobfuscable scent of death upon him.

His features are gentle, as are his eyes, but the way he casts his gaze around his surroundings reveals clear wariness of others, and signals that he has survived slaughters.

But most of all, Subaru likes his dreary eyes. Those were the eyes of someone who found no benefit in staying alive, had lost sight of all purpose for living, and nevertheless chose to keep being alive as an animate corpse. Eyes of a similar nature to Blue's.

"Your name's…don't think I ever caught it."

"I've never introduced myself, and neither do I intend to. Naturally, I have no inclination to ask for your name either, esteemed client. This way we can both relax."

"Well, you're right. Since it's not like we could ever be friends."

"Exactly. We'd become enemies the instant that something happens. And isn't what we see here the result of calling such people friends?"

Banters the man as he gazes at Julius's prone corpse, and at Blue who latches close to Subaru. Both acquiring the poison and the afterwards clean up are things that Subaru arranged while collaborating with this man. Because currently, Subaru is walking some pretty dangerous tightropes. "Tell Russell thanks for me. Counting on you again for it. I mean you are his right hand."

"That man's right hand is at the end of his arm. What I am is a slave."

He sure thinks in clean rationalizations, thinks Subaru fondly of the man's realistic reply. While also feeling some regret.

If they could be friends, they'd surely be good ones.

Subaru repeats his secret operations to whittle away at the candidates and at the Cardinals getting in his way.

A mysterious group, a hive of dangerous people, and more importantly, not a place where anyone interferes with each other too much.

The Witch Cult has been a very convenient masquerade for Subaru.

A masquerade that he'd eventually have to extinguish, yes, but utilizing them with that precondition in mind means he can throw them away with so little guilt it's refreshing.

He felt not the slightest trace of camaraderie for even the Cardinals.

He constantly watched them for openings, meditated on ways to kill them, tested, and if the plan felt fruitful then he would set up the groundwork. Even if he failed, Subaru had the power to reset the world and try again.

Even Subaru, with his situation, managed to form relations which could perhaps be called accomplices.

Even though he knows that not a single cultist should be trusted, and that he shouldn't be getting more people in on it.

"But haven't we been working together all the way, ever since the start? It makes me happy when you let me help you out with all this fun stuff, mister."

"I don't particularly intend to support you unconditionally, but even now, you're thinking to kill me should you get the chance. For some reason, I truly find it pleasant."

"His Highness's dream will come true if you're here, Subaru-sama. And so I'll always stay with you.

…But, huh? Subaru-sama, when, where did you and His Highness become…"

"Our relationship is surely just requests for dirty work. Accomplices? An asinine idea. The two of us are filial bankrupts who can't show their faces to their family. It'd be nicer to die if I could."

"I've come far enough that one more step, just one more step remains before the wish might be granted. Iiiiiiiiiiif that's what I'm doing it for, then I'll sell my soul to a demon. A demon called you, thaaaaaaaaaat is."

—Subaru does not think his actions praiseworthy in the least.

Regardless, before he could even realise it, there appeared people who are endorsing his deeds. And perhaps that fact was his solace.

Using Return by Death's power, Natsuki Subaru struggles on, wishing to save Emilia. He thought the battle would be a solo one, always fighting only ever on his own.

And perhaps the fact that, at some unknown juncture, it stopped being solo was—

12

Inferno engulfs the Capital. Subaru gasps in pain, staring up at the sky. He feels very awake.

The pain stings, but it leads his mind to sober rather than blur. Everything, from what happened to his reason for being here, is vivid.

In his arms, Subaru cradles a motionless Mei Lee.

Her open eyes are devoid of life, staring at somewhere absent in this world. Her cheeky attitude, her unfittingly sugary voice, her tantrum-like behaviour when treated as a child—nothing Subaru will ever see again.

—After all. This is where Subaru arrived after Returning by Death.

Return by Death's spawn point can change, but Subaru has never gone further back than a previous spawn.

This is where Return by Death's spawn point shifted, and being that the Mei Lee in his arms is a corpse, her life is beyond saving.

Aware that he is only comforting his own heart, Subaru gently shuts Mei Lee's eyes. He has no right to pray for the dead's posthumous happiness. These hands of his are far too filthy with blood.

And it's the same for Mei Lee. She committed so many wrongs that she could not possibly hope for peace after death. Piling sins upon sins, the chains linking Subaru's group to hell will never come undone.

"But, still.."

A meeting with death cannot be reason to give up.

Did he not get here by dying multiple times? Over one thousand, ten thousands times has he already disparaged life and desecrated lives, greedy to grant his own wish, and so got here.

He bordered on breaking beneath the agony of death many times. But every time he did, a fire scorched his heart.

That very first inferno, the touch of those fingers, is what let Subaru reach this point. He is only one step away from realising his deepest desire.

He made victims, sacrifices, to finally get here. And still—

"—Go no further."

The voice descends, vicious, from on high.

'Fire engulfs the Capital' had not been a figurative statement. The visage that appears atop that hill, as if amassing the furious blaze into themselves, looks dazzling.

"Reinhard, van, Astreaaaa "

"It seems that I don't need to introduce myself. I don't have much to say to you, either." Reinhard's blue eyes pierce the kneeling Subaru through.

The gleam in his eyes differs from what Subaru saw long ago, fraught with emotion as they are.

This man, who had remained calm when facing a butcherer, was, at Subaru—

—the emotion so intense as to be nigh indescribable, glaring with hatred. “So you were capable of hating people after all, Sword Saint!”

“It surprises me as well. I didn’t think these feelings were in me.”

“So you found a new you. Congratulations. Happy birthday, Reinhard.”

“Unfortunately, today is not the day of my birth. But it will be the day of your death.”

Subaru can prattle affected lines all he wants. A man of Reinhard’s calibre won’t be put off. Hit with Reinhard’s own breed of death sentence, a smile arises on Subaru’s face.

Destroyed that unflappable face of his and drew out the emotions buried in there. Subaru knows that it’s utterly pointless, but it’s the only thing he can boast victory about.

“Don’t make me laugh, Reinhard! Sword Saint! Sword of the Kingdom! You’re a knight who protects the Kingdom of Lugnica?! Did you protect any kingdom at all?! How about telling me that!”

“…”

Subaru shouts, arms spread wide, spit flying.

The two are facing each other outside the palace gates. Everything of the Capital visible from this vantage point is engulfed in flame—or no, it isn’t just the Capital.

This inferno is raging over the entire territory of the Kingdom of Lugnica.

No matter how strong Reinhard is or how superb a knight he is, what can he do on his own? He can do nothing. So is Subaru's conclusion.

"This is my gift to you! A trap I set to kill you!" "To kill me ?"

"How many times! Do you think I've tried to kill you?! How many times, tens and hundreds and thousands of times, do you think I've faced you?!" "…"

Subaru's incomprehensible yelling leads Reinhard's cheeks to stiffen in confusion. He wouldn't understand. Nobody except Subaru would ever understand.

Subaru has already gone through every conceivable form of trial and error to kill Reinhard.

He studied Reinhard van Astrea, researched him extensively, tested every idea he could think of, fiddled with his plans, used every possible track he could imagine in attempts to kill Reinhard. But no matter what methods Subaru used, Reinhard bested it. As if Natsuki Subaru's hideously weak brain, as if his very presence, could not effect him in the slightest.

Subaru sacrificed Elsa, sacrificed Mei Lee, sacrificed Blue, sacrificed the man who perhaps could've been his friend, sacrificed the clown who proclaimed to be his co-conspirator, sacrificed the Witch Cult, sacrificed the Cardinals, committed every conceivable crime and injustice and iniquity there is, and still couldn't kill Reinhard.

And so. Having no means to sever Reinhard's lifeline, Subaru decided.

"I'm killing who you are as a knight. I'm dropping your ostentatious name of Sword Saint to the earth, stomping my feet all over it, spewing spit and mucus on it!"

"All of this, only for that."

"Only for that! Yeah, I did, only for that! Only for that I used the lives of everyone there was, dropping you to the earth!"

Subaru sets Mei Lee's body on the ground. Jabs his finger at Reinhard. Reinhard cannot hide that he's shaken. Feels nice.

"You're a hero, Reinhard. It's not possible for me to kill you. But I can kill a hero. —This is how to kill you, Reinhard."

"…"

Subaru boasts, his voice unhinged, at the silenced Reinhard.

Worked his hardest, tried so many plans, sacrificed people, shed blood, accumulated deaths, and finally.

With Mei Lee having protected him and drawn out his survival, finally, Subaru has managed to confront Reinhard like this.

After piling so many sacrifices, finally, he has managed to stand on the same stage as Reinhard. "…Why?"

The hot breeze blows away Subaru's previous momentum. His voice when he speaks is frail.

"Why are you so strong? Why are you so strong, that I had to let them die, to match it?" Trembling voice, laced with sobs. Hearing it makes Reinhard's face stiffen.

He surely has no idea what on earth Subaru is thinking. Of course he doesn't. Subaru doesn't even have any idea any more.

He doesn't know why he's crying. How long has it even been since he last shed tears? Surely. That day, when he was brought to this world, was the last.

The tears from the day that brought Natsuki Subaru to this sight of flames were the last.

"I wish I'd been like you. I wish I'd been honest like you, been strong enough to save everyone like you. I think you're enviable. I think you're contemptible."

"You…"

Flowing out alongside his tears come Natsuki Subaru's true feelings.

Back in that very first loop in the Capital, when Natsuki Subaru witnessed the man who freed him from an endless cycle.

—Back then, Subaru was jealous of Reinhard.

Disembowelled times upon times, suffered death, but still unable to change anything, Subaru's heart grew swiftly ragged, its outer skin peeled away, and then, practically by coincidence, as if kicking a pebble off the road, he altered that fate so easily.

Subaru aspired to have that strength, envied it, begrudged it, loathed it. "—I wanted to be you, Reinhard."

"—I don't understand you."

Reinhard discards Subaru's honesty as worthless codswallop.

And he's correct. Reinhard, you hero, you are just always, always correct.

—Where did the mistake happen? At what point did Natsuki Subaru err?

He doesn't know. Though actually, he does. But nobody would be capable of understanding it. Which is why. Which is exactly why.

Natsuki Subaru has, for a long time now, been an unempathizable madman. "…"

Reinhard narrows his eyes and stoops down. He isn't reaching for a sword. Meaning that not even he thinks a weapon is necessary to defeat Subaru.

He's right, he's absolutely right. One strike from him will leave Subaru's flimsy body disintegrated. So at the very least, and the very absolute least—

"—You don't think it too soon to be giving up?" "You!"

The instant that Reinhard begins his charge, a black silhouette swoops in from aside. Discordant noise peals out as Reinhard meets the silhouette's slash with his hand, held flat and open like a blade.

It’s stupid. How can he meet a knife swung with that much momentum using his hand? The knife shrieks, shattering to bits. It’s stupid. Why is the knife the one breaking?

“You truly are outside the norm, aren’t you.”

Elsa, covered in blood, spins through the air before making touchdown on her hands and fete. Subaru thought she was dead. He thought he had used her as a chess piece to create this situation, believed that her life had burnt to nothing, and had been acting with consideration to that. And yet.

“Apparently I didn’t die. Though in this situation, it feels that I’ve arrived to visit death again.” “Elsa…”

“Then Mei Lee is dead. Her poor sister.”

Noticing Mei Lee resting on the ground, Elsa mutters a shade sadly.

But she switches her gears in the blink of an eye, turning to face Reinhard properly. “It seems you’re my sister’s enemy as well. Shall we dance?”

“You’ve already lost your weapon. And do you understand who exactly you are protecting?”

“Difficult subjects aren’t my favourite. I do the things I want to do. This man behind me lets me do what I want to do. That makes him a prized customer.”

Licking her lips, Elsa gives a reply based in logic that only murderers would understand. Reinhard swallows his breath, and poises to take Elsa as his opponent.

“This will be the last chance for it. I had fun. It was wonderful.” “Elsa! I…!”

“Farewell.”

Ever like her, the goodbye happens smoothly and without any consideration to Subaru’s ideas at all. Immediately following, Elsa leaps with animalistic dexterity in a dance toward Reinhard, the hero and butcher engaging in furious combat.

To be concluded in only a short time, Elsa Granhiert's last blood meal.

"—Fuck!"

Subaru cannot die here.

Averting his gaze from Elsa's battle and Mei Lee's corpse, he breaks into a run down the hill.

The spillovers of battle echo behind him, distant.

Buildings collapse one after another throughout the blazing Capital, shrieks and wails echoing through this hell. Children calling for parents, parents calling for children, men calling for women, women calling for men in the screeching pandemonium of this hell.

Yes. This is the hell that Subaru created.

Created this hell, destroyed Reinhard's false image, and achieved his goal.

All that's left is—"Y-You're "

"—σσσσ"

Subaru stumbles, almost trips and falls—when a massive beast grabs him in its mouth and flings him onto its back. Subaru clings on desperately as its black pelt bursts into his view, alongside the sight of its ferocious lionlike visage as it runs.

"You're…but Meili's already dead."

It is one of the witchbeasts Mei Lee controlled, carrying Subaru in this dash through the burning Capital.

Ferocious Guiltilaw sprints with Natsuki Subaru on his back. He no longer has a master, and has no obligation to obey him—but still Guiltilaw carries Natsuki Subaru, wholeheartedly.

“Please, find her. She has, to be somewhere “

Subaru prays, wishing for Guiltilaw to pull off a miracle.

What to call this feeling in his heart? Relief? Resignation? Constricted by cryptic emotions, Natsuki Subaru’s mind wavers between consciousness and unconsciousness.

But what truly makes him hit is limit is what happens next. “—That’s enough.”

The sharp ice projectile skewers sprinting Guiltilaw in the side.

Guiltilaw shrieks, tripping over his own feet before crashing to the ground. Caught in the beast’s fall, Subaru also bashes against the stone roadway.

“Ghau…what, was “

His vision blurs in pain as he forces his eyes open, looking around to see what happened.

He finds that Guiltilaw has uprighted himself, countless icicles speared into his left side as he faces off against a silhouette engulfed in dim light, just about to begin charging.

Guiltilaw raises his vicious paw, roaring. Perhaps this was his dignity as a witchbeast, or his pride as the last animal which obeyed young Mei Lee to the end.

His strike is more than strong enough to shred a human being to bits should it hit. However, before the blow can land, a single sharp icicle goes plummeting—

—to invade Guiltilaw’s open maw, spearing down his throat before again entering through his chest, piercing out his behind, transforming him into a witchbeast on a stick.

Immediately following the ruinous but nonlethal attack, the air echoes, crackling as white frost spreads across Guiltilaw’s whole body, transforming him into an ice sculpture.

Having watched Guiltilaw's demise, Subaru slowly stands up.

He can't raise his left arm. Maybe he dislocated in the fall. He should be in intense enough pain that he breaks into tears, but his brain isn't feeling it.

After all. If Subaru starts bawling now, here, it will ruin everything.

"—That's enough, villain."

The two face each other, burning city townscape on either side of them, a frozen witchbeast between them.

Amethyst eyes blazing with duty and indignation meet dark eyes fraught with irrepressible joy.

Silver hair of lunar hue, eyes of finest-cut amethyst. Her celestial countenance electrifies Subaru's heart without end, and the silver chime of her voice sounds to him as a pixie's aria.

What he has pursued, sought, craved, never stopped loved, her visage, is here. "—Emilia."

"You know me?"

Emilia's brows shoot up in surprise. Seeing it makes Subaru laugh.

Exactly in line with his envisioning's—no. Exactly in line with his impression of her when they first met and ventured around the Capital together.

She doesn't have a single clue how much national attention is focused on her, being a Royal Selection candidate. It's not that she's lacking in self-awareness, it's that she has low self-esteem.

Despite being known worldwide as the hero who took the Witch Cult's Sloth, Greed, Gluttony, Wrath, and Lust, evils which tormented people for eras, and exterminated them.

And her track record would, on this day, in this instant, reach completion. "Is something funny?"

“No, I’m sorry. Just, how to say, I’m happy. It’s that thing, where you’re, well. You haven’t changed a bit, so it feels like I’ve been rewarded.”

“What do you mean? When did you and I ever…?” Emilia attempts a frantic search of her memories.

But Natsuki Subaru does not exist anywhere in her recollections.

Of course not. Their momentary tryst only remains in Subaru. And that momentary tryst alone, that final pledge of penitence alone, was what brought Natsuki Subaru here.

“You’re…”

“Lia, it’s no good. Don’t take anything he says seriously.” “—Puck, huh.”

Emilia searches for some clue in her memories. But she is interrupted but the grey cat that appears on her shoulder—a spirit, which Subaru remembers well.

His memories from that day are distant. But that’s exactly why he spent even more time endlessly thinking about that day than he did individually recollecting it.

It’s inconceivable that he would forget about someone who occupied a part of that memory.

“How nice of you to call my name so casually. With how flamboyant your crimes are, how are you thinking of paying compensation enough to settle them?”

“I’ll be paying compensation. Exactly what you want. —There’s no way for me to escape anyway.” “—? That’s rather sporting of you. Suspicious.”

Subaru unzips his track suit jersey and spreads his arms wide, displaying non-resistance.

Track suit. Yes, the track suit. He has taken that track suit which, until this very day, he kept sealed and now is wearing it. He had it in his head that if he was going to have a reunion with Emilia, this'd be the best.

All while yearning for the day he would wear this outfit, and stand before her again. "Everything I'm about to tell you is a crazy person rambling. Please don't remember it."

"—Huh?"

"I'm the one who set the Capital on fire. And it's not just the Capital, this fire's meant to burn down the whole country. No one could safeguard against it. That's the nation, and knights who protect this nation, mishandling the situation."

Subaru's choppy speech confuses Emilia greatly. Puck looks lost on whether to stop Subaru's talk, but does abort his attack after seeing Emilia's situation.

Grateful for that, Subaru continues.

"Reinhard's prestige as Sword Saint's fallen to earth. Since we don't know what started the covenant which's meant to be protecting the Dragon's Kingdom of Lugnica, the Dragon's no rescue either. That's something I tested heaps of times so it's definitely right. In the end, Reinhard and the Dragon are equal."

"Burning the country? You're burning the country? To try and destroy this nation?"

"No, wrong. I'm doing this to make you the Ruler. It's the only single way how."

"…"

A smile arises on Subaru's face, while Emilia's eyes shoot open, thoroughly shaken. There is no way that anything Subaru's saying could be making sense to her.

Being that he's prefaced this as being rambling, he doesn't mind if it doesn't communicate properly. It comes to Subaru's deepest wish, should it produce results.

"Flames of demise driving the nation to its destruction—the one to slay the culprit behind it won't be Reinhard, won't be the Dragon, it'll be you. None of the Selection candidates left can achieve anything to top this. The hero who broke through four centuries of standstill and saved the world is you!"

"That, isn't…what on earth are you saying?! Stop it, I don't understand! I don't understand anything you're saying!!"

Emilia clutches her head, blocks her ears, trying to keep Subaru's words out. Tears well in her eyes, and as he sees one trail down her pale cheek, a sweet shock strikes Subaru's chest.

Part of it is guilt for making her cry. Part of it is from seeing that his actions have shaken her heart, and his consequent dark cheer.

"You don't have to understand. It's fine that you don't understand. Everything that comes next'll be settled when others boost you up of their own accord. Then you just have to grant your wish. That is the only reason I set the country on fire. All of it was for you."

"Liar, liar, liar! I mean, I… you, how come, you…"

Emilia wails at the devotion she never anticipated, and at the offerings she never desired. It's inevitable that she's sad. It's inevitable that she can't understand.

Subaru knows that he is erring. Subaru knows that he is incorrect.

Subaru knows that this method will not bring joy to Emilia.

But this was the only method he had.

Grant Emilia's wish, make Emilia Ruler, and demonstrate his feelings for Emilia.

With these things in mind, and knowing from the very beginning that he was wrong, Subaru got here.

And so Natsuki Subaru laughs. Snickers. Smirks. "—Watch me, Emilia. See me, detest me, remember me." "Who, are you? Who in the world, are you…?"

Asks Emilia, her voice trembling, as Subaru slowly approaches her with his arms open wide. Subaru closes his eyes.

It feels like he's been yearning for this forever.

Yearning to answer that question in Emilia's presence, forever—"—My name is Natsuki Subaru."

"Su, baru…"

Just hearing that weak call of his name is enough for a flood of emotion to surge through him. Emotion so great that, by that alone, Subaru is completely satisfied with having come here.

With those feelings in his heart, and praying that he'll finish this sentence without his voice shaking because of them—

"—Witch Cult Cardinal of Sin, Bishop of PRIDE, Natsuki Subaru!"
"Cardinal…!"

Giving the greatest introduction he can, Subaru puts all his strength into his legs and kicks off the ground.

Natsuki Subaru focuses all of his scattered strength into one point in his body for the final sprint of his life.

Sacrificed many people, maltreated those who could perhaps be his accomplices, found solace in those he perhaps had bonds with, and now finally arriving at this darling girl—

"I'm the man who burned the world, rocked the country, killed the hero, and—"

"…"

"—you will kill."

Feeling the impact spear through his chest, Subaru smiles.

He falls to his knees, unable to support himself before collapsing, tumbling down. He never reaches Emilia as his body gracelessly pitches across the stone.

“Why?”

Subaru closes his eyes, ready to accept the end, when something prompts him to raise his eyelids. Emilia is standing right as his side, looking down at him. One of the tears streaming from her eye’s lands on Subaru’s cheek, making him open his eyes.

“Why?”

Repeated, overlapping questions.

What on earth could this ‘why’ signify, wonders Subaru.

Why did you do this?

Why did it have to be like this?

Why did you come here to die to me?

There are definitely many ‘why’s in that question.

And he would like to answer all of them, but Subaru only has the scarcest of time left. So he lets his final breath carry his answer.

“—I love you.”

13

Death draws near. Old, familiar death.

Every time that Subaru meets death, he is taken to a dark, lonely, unknown location. And it truly, truly is a lonely place, somewhere unbearable to be on your own.

Every time that Subaru met death, he was sent out of this place.

Into that world of blood and anguish, tears and woe, and a very slight presence of love.

But it is fine now. He is satisfied.

“…”

Subaru gets the sense that someone in this dark world has whispered something to him.

It is comforting, it is encouraging, it is confirmation, it is confession.

But why? This isn't the lover that Subaru sought.

His lover is somewhere else, somewhere where he isn't, with her dream coming true and efforts being rewarded.

Subaru had sacrificed many people, and in the end himself, for that purpose.

And so, it's fine. He doesn't need to be saved. Solace and a saviour are what he already got, at the very beginning.

"…"

Definitely calling him.

Calling his name with kindness, with mercy, with love.

And so, Subaru separates himself from the spiral of death, while accepting that distant presence. While accepting them, he answers to that □□□□'s words.

"…"

—Even if you reject me, I will never forget you.

END

Wrath IF:
Drowning Life in Another World From Zero

1

—I heard a voice ripe with hatred.

—A sound which would not leave my ears.

—Words imbued with rage followed me.

—It was frightening, so frightening that I could not bear it.

—I was being crushed by the pressure of this noise which did not obscure its murderous intent.

—It gripped onto my soul, and would not let go.

—There was myself, and with the more I clung to my life, the more I would hurt others.

—First and foremost, I was sorry, so sorry, and yet I was still drowning.

2

—A neck, was being strangled by a great force.

Straddling them, a light body was pressing down on someone, disabling all movement.

Shoulders were being held down by both legs and knees, small in size, the body floundering underneath without freedom. Before their eyes, white arms covered in vermilion abrasions were pressing down on their neck. An out-of-place thought flashed, that it appeared like blossoming flowers, —Chokechoke, chokechoke, such was the great force with which someone's neck was being throttled.

???: "…"

Right in front of their eyes, was a pair of pupils glowing with passion.

Endless fury and hollow despair stretched deep, deep in those large round eyes.

A blank thought that falling into those bottomless eyes, passed through their head.

???: "Ah, kah… Uh."

—Badumbadum, badumbadum, such were the sounds of their legs flailing wildly.

That they were struggling in an effort to escape, was not the case.

Things such as thoughts to escape, had already disappeared long ago. So, the struggle of those legs were not an expression of a will to live, but merely a tantrum born of sheer physical suffering.

The brain was lacking oxygen, the mind had lost its will to live, but the body was still writhing in protest.

Everything was discordant, an unbalanced way of being such as that was unsightly.

Can't I just die quietly? I want to just die quietly.

As peacefully as possible, like I'm simply going to sleep, that'd be the most enjoyable way to die for me.

Alas, such a wish was not to be. Far from being granted, their fate was really to be the complete opposite of that.

???: "Buh, kuh, kuh."

With wide-open eyes bulging from their sockets, biting down hard and foaming at the mouth, with a body grown emancipated after only a few short days, it was in this state that they twisted and groaned like a wounded beast.

A fitting end, or so ought to be said.

A fitting fate, or so ought to be said.

What, why and how was it that they had come to be in this kind of situation?

???: “—What’s so funny?”

Suddenly, a voice was heard.

One unlike these animalistic groans, it was a cold yet clear voice.

The owner of those eyes laden with fury, their lips pressed thin as they squeezed their throat, looked up at the sound of the voice.

???: “…”

Even when asked what was so funny, they were unable to find the answer.

There was nothing funny here, in the first place. There really was not, so why even ask?

The question was confusing. Some rude kind of nonsense, a riddle.

Even if someone forced them to reply, they would not have any answers. Yet despite that, the time waiting in silence still felt like lying on a bed of thorns.

How many times had they been flung around like this, by the force of some divine providence, so absurdly and unreasonably?

???: “—What’s so funny?”

There was nothing funny about it.

???: “Huu, he, hehe.”

Then, was it that the person asking was directing it towards the wrong party?

Or, was it that this person was enjoying this moment without even noticing it?

Were they enjoying the situation of having this woman mount them like she was on horseback strangling away at their neck?

If that was it, then it was detestable; their rational thoughts escaped.

Woman: “—What’s so funny?”

There was nothing amusing here. Even though there was nothing, this question would be projected repeatedly, over and over again.

Not even projecting. She was not that far away. It was not even projecting.

Close enough to feel each other’s breath, gazing up at the beautiful face of the girl opposite him, they were surrounded by her voice. Blanketed in it.

She had, without words, without hurtful abuse, shown clear hate in her voice.

Woman: “What’s so—”

Funny, and then.

The question seeking an answer was expected again, but suddenly faded away like mist.

Woman: “—Guh.”

Tilted, the face of the girl in front of them suddenly tilted to the left.

Like that, her leaning body could not rise back. Her posture collapsed, and that girl’s body crumpled onto the white snow. Of course, as the thin arm formerly wrapped around his neck had also come loose, their path to suffocation had ended halfway through.

???: "—Geh, ah."

Coughing, the bitter taste of blood ascended their neck.

Collapsing lungs inflated before receding again, sending much-needed oxygen through their body in turn. That was also a reflex, from survival instinct. A proper human being would not just refuse to breathe and die.

Questions like whether that would be something a proper person would do or not, were something they did not wish to discuss, at this juncture.

???: "…"

The feelings that had been present within their heart up to this moment, that of resigning oneself to death, now faded away. They had been replaced with a desire to live dubbed oxygen, an obsessive desire that could not be let go. Frantically, earnestly, they greedily coveted more to the point of looking pathetic.

While like that, ceaselessly filling his lungs with cold air on every breath, they had come to realize.

???: "…"

Amidst the accumulating fluffy white snow, before him, lay a girl collapsed on her side.

Through the poor complexion of her face and lips, the woman's unrealistic beauty was raised to even greater heights. With her faint breaths turning to white mist, an omen of her life withering, her violently glistening eyes made for a strong impression.

Looking carefully, it was a sight that did not seem well-fitted for the snow.

Her uniform revealed bare shoulders and thighs; the thickness of its cloth was wholly insufficient for warding off the cold. The neck, the ears, and other areas easily chilled were exposed to the wind, a painful sight to witness.

They were only the clothes she happened to be wearing—although, it wasn't just the woman, but themselves too, that were in the same condition.

???: "…"

—Clackclack, clackclack, such were the sounds of trembling mismatched teeth striking.

Whether it was the cold, or the strong melancholy in their heart that was the culprit, they did not know.

In this situation, rather than worrying about the anomaly of their body, instead they could not take their eyes off the girl in front of him.

Woman: "—Em."

Even fallen over in the snow, with half her face buried in it, she still looked beautiful.

It seemed that unquenchable hate and fury was inflaming that slender body and keeping it alive. Covered in wounds to such an extent, it was a strange situation that the girl yet survived.

???: "…"

Countless corpses were lying around them and the girl, in that pure-white snowscape.

Those beasts that consumed life, indulged in it, and destroyed the soul, before the wind of this girl had all turned to corpses. So, in this place, the survivors amounted to only two. Themselves and the girl, only two.

That, too, in a moment, could immediately become one, become zero.

???: "…"

What is it, so the girl delicately mumbled as they slowly stood beside her.

The fingers on both their hands were numb due to the frost, having taken a dark-red coloration. With body temperature having dropped immensely, there was no feeling remaining in the cold fingers. Weak itching was the only evidence that the fingers were still attached to the their body.

Shaking about those fingers that could not be relied on, they lifted a stone as big as a human cranium.

Without any reason or purpose, it was only a stone that just happened to be there.

The fact that they had raised it secretly brought them much relief.

They compared the stone in their hand with the collapsed girl.

For a moment, that stone held by their fingers seemed to quite resemble the face of the collapsed woman.

They did not know if they were laughing. However, the look that was ultimately seared into their mind, was severe like that of a demon violently projecting onto them murderous intent and hostility, and nothing more.

As to shake that off, in both hands they lifted the rock skyward.

Gazing upwards at that action, the owner of those pink irises spoke with a faint, yet unquestionably clear voice,

Woman: “—I will definitely kill you.”

—The sound of something hitting something hard, in the snow-blanketed forest slowly, slowly echoed.

It echoed.

3

—That day, the mansion of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers’ collapsed with a whimper.

Ironically enough, the first to notice the collapse was the woman who, more than anyone else, had desperately struggled to maintain the mansion. And because of that, her actions had been ruthless.

???: "…"

At its genesis, she had received from the master of the house, from Roswaal, a great benefit.

So, hearing that the maid sisters who had taken care of the mansion no longer held their positions, knowing then that the owner had nobody to take care of him, she immediately rushed to that owner's side.

The change in the appearance of the owner brought a most terrible pain to her chest.

Those two suspiciously glinting, brimming with confidence, differently-colored pupils; the eccentric and frank way of speech; the pale makeup of a clown that could be said to be the epitome of bad taste; the choice of fashion that appeared to be clawing at other people's aesthetic sense; just about every light had disappeared from Roswaal.

After receiving such a reunion with him, the woman—Frederica, clenched her fists tight.

Frederica: "It cannot end like this. For the sake of those girls, I will…"

Earnest in thought, she would guard that place of belonging.

Rather than thinking on whether something could be done, focusing on hope and wanting to do something, for that reason she had started to act.

To uplift the mansion once again she toiled, taking the hand of the girl who was collaborating without even knowing she would drag the master who had sunk into languor, in apathy, busily going around every day.

There was no time to stop and fret for Frederica.

Even though sometimes she would grow disheartened with her state of mind in that difficult situation, she always raised her head with fervor.

Were she to falter at any point, she would not be worthy to gaze upon the faces of those precious to her.

At some point, she had forgotten how to smile. At some point, she had forgotten to welcome night with a relaxed mind.

Even then, Frederica did her utmost to protect that which she loved, to surround the bubbles spreading away on the water's surface with her arms so they would not escape. Even so—

Frederica: "—Ah."

By the time Frederica finally realized, it was already too late for everything in the mansion.

White, the soles of her shoes frozen to the hallway, she lost sight of where her own self was.

The sight of the once-familiar mansion had become distinctly different from what she knew.

The carefully-cleaned corridor; the kitchen where she had cooked; where she had run ragged for those that needed her care; all that Frederica knew on a daily basis had, in front of her eyes, now become a clouded white world.

And as for who had done all this—

Frederica: "Great Spirit-sama…"

???: "Sorry, Frederica. You're not to blame—it's just that, if I'm to protect my most precious thing, then this is the best decision to make."

Saying this, showing its face and floating in the air, was a small cat with gray fur.

Its size only that of a fist, yet a supernatural existence carrying immense power in that small of a body—it was the Great Spirit, Puck.

She did not want to believe. But now there was no reason to doubt.

That was the one who had wrapped the mansion in this white demise, transforming it.

Frederica: “Why, do this…”

Puck: “I said it already, all my actions are for Lia—Lia agreed left the forest because it was what she wanted to do, and also for her safety. Or so I thought. But there’s no worth here anymore. I wonder where it all went wrong.”

Frederica: “…”

Puck: “Roswaal was my miscalculation. That pitiful thing’s just your everyday guy.”

Shaking their head, Puck shot at her with voice devoid of any emotion.

At those words, Frederica’s breath hitched. And soon afterwards, clacking her sharp denture,

Frederica: “—Insulting the master of this house in front of me, a maid, cannot be forgiven.”

Puck: “You, too, are a pitiful child. Only you are desperate to protect this fallen place.”

Frederica: “Please stop talking as if you are referring to the past, it is not over yet.”

She called sharply. Without having a chance, towards the Great Spirit.

Faced with Frederica’s words of defiance, the kitten narrowed their round eyes and gazed with pity on their face. Reacting to that existence’s movement and expression, which to some extent smelled human-like, Frederica leaned forward and lowered her body.

Frederica: “Emilia-sama would be sad.”

That one brief hesitation from the small Great Spirit might give her the win, this was what Frederica was hoping. But—

Puck: “Unfortunately, I’m weak to Lia. I cannot move on from my child, I’m a momma bear.”

Even a moment’s hesitation, some small opening, from that Great Spirit did not appear.

As the world of difference between her and Puck reflected in her eyes, Frederica firmly smashed her molars together.

Whether it was the beginnings of regret or grief, it was too late to be felt.

Just a simple white breeze blew, and with that alone the woman named Frederica was frozen.

That marked the beginning of the collapse of Roswaal’s mansion.

4

By the time the warlock noticed the signs of collapse, it was all already too late.

???: “…”

With ghostly footsteps the warlock in their own mansion walked.

The frozen mass of air underfoot broke with a clatter, and a chill breeze tickled their nape.

His neck drew away from it, and immediately, an odd physiological reaction to that unpleasant cold was felt.

Nowadays, applying makeup to his face and choosing clothing had both been left to Frederica.

That diligent and enthusiastic girl was, no matter how, trying to pay back the grace she had received from this place, but it was too late. His heart that should not have have felt anything ached a little.

—The path to Roswaal's dearest wish had, at some point, been severed.

Roswaal: "Ram, Rem…"

Maybe it had been triggered by the loss of the oni sisters.

The existence of those two was a key part in the path towards Roswaal's utmost wish. With them having vanished, Roswaal had been left alone.

Four-hundred years later, upon realizing the road to his long-held hope had been broken, Roswaal could no longer stand on his own.

Roswaal: "—Ram."

A short, mumbled name, it was the name that conveyed the biggest regret.

—The possibility that it would become like this, he had already considered it previously.

Quite the opposite, the likelihood that it would end badly like this was much higher. It was because of this that Roswaal had taken insurance on his own existence.

When his end finally arrived, he wanted someone there that could receive it happily.

Her, dying before him, had ruined the last remaining cogwheel in his plans.

Roswaal: "…"

So then, it was strange for Roswaal, to find himself wandering through the frozen mansion.

He had lost his reason to stand already, and his reason for walking was already gone from him.

Frederica: “Master, please return yourself to how you were before. So the two of them—”

Many times, Frederica had so appealed to Roswaal.

With Roswaal falling into despair, his spirit weakened, Frederica had taken up the task of patiently and devotedly uplifting her apathetic master.

Henceforth, the power to walk in this now-frozen mansion remained in him.

Henceforth, in the middle of the hallway he was wandering in aimlessly, his sight now turned to the scenery beyond the window.

Henceforth, he saw that frozen world of white, and the form of the blonde-haired girl attempting to resist it.

Roswaal: “…”

He perhaps thought, that to not protect her here would not do.

Or it could simply be acting on reflex, he did not know.

Enough remained of his mind in the body for him to decide on reflex that he must do so.

So now, Roswaal slowly spread his arms wide, readying himself to pour out a vast amount of Mana—

Roswaal: “—Kh!”

At that moment, Roswaal barely avoided the bright flash of a blade targeting his neck.

???: “—Oh my, to be able to dodge this is outside of my expectations. Perhaps the Head Magician of the Court isn’t only skilled in magic, but is someone holding some level of skill in martial arts as well?”

From behind Roswaal’s back called out a light voice.

His zori attaining speed that could scorch the frozen corridor as they glided through it, it was the voice of a young man sporting dark-blue hair.

Blue-Haired Man: “That movement just now, it wasn’t something someone can just do on the fly. I’m honestly impressed.”

That terribly out-of-place person was clad in a blue kimono, wearing zori on his feet, and had two swords strapped to his waist. One of those had been unsheathed, and he was now tapping his shoulder with it.

A face with a neat appearance, donning a well-fitting smile. The bright eyes that gave a striking impression of a young mischievous child, and the long hair tied up both somehow offered him an androgynous look.

But from him emanated an aberrant yet transparent fighting aura—just by being bathed in that ghastly gaze, visions of myriad deaths from a sword surface, so that anyone would be rendered unable to make rational comments.

Blue-Haired Man: “If you’re a person confident in more than just magic, my heart’s relieved of a burden, it really is a great help. After all, something that’s so one-sided doesn’t fit my sense of aesthetics. No, I’d do it if told to do so, but I wanna avoid getting the villain treatment if possible.”

Roswaal: “Like in the rumors, you’re quite talkaaaaaative…”

Blue-Haired Man: “Oh, a rumor about me? It can’t be helped. Am I a celebrity even in such a place? Hehehe, I wish it wasn’t such a strange rumor, though.”

The young man fluently spoke as he scratched his head with a shy smile.

While looking at this scene, Roswaal reignited his sluggish thoughts to stir again, as to solve the situation he had found himself in.

What played a part in that blaze, was the burning sensation at his left arm.

Roswaal: "…"

Blue-Haired Man: "By the way, if you don't do anything about your arm soon, won't you die of blood loss?"

Roswaal: "Your advice, I'm grateful for it."

With that argument made by the young lad, Roswaal loosened his lips lost of the color of blood.

That Roswaal's left arm had been amputated near the shoulder, and what had used to be attached there was almost unrealistically rolling on the floor, like the limb of a doll.

Alongside the first strike to his neck that had been dodged, his arm had been lopped off.

After hearing this advice to act, Roswaal grasped his wound, and an instant burst of fire directly stopped the bleeding. Horrible pangs of pain tore through his brain, but with rigid cheeks he bore it.

At that his extreme emergency treatment, the young man's eyes widened ever so slightly.

Blue-Haired Man: "I'd imagined that mages'd be far more timid. Anya's like that… Oh, by the way, Anya's someone I'm acquainted with."

Roswaal: "I know, Cecilus Segmunt-kun."

Cecilus: "…"

Roswaal: "The most powerful warrior of the Vollachian Empire, top-ranked among the Nine Divine Generals, correct? Being given the rank of First General, the name of the Blue Lightning is famous even in Lugunica."

Cecilus: "Oh, that's the biggest of honors."

At Roswaal's low voice, the young man—Cecilus Segmunt responded with an elegant bow.

There was no reason to hide his identity. There was no reason to hide his name in the first place, so he may as well act coolly dignified and confident.

Watching those mannerly ways with their dramatic productions, Roswaal sighed.

Roswaal: “But that aside, what’s happening now, I wooonder~? Ahh, it couldn’t be, at this time when the new Monarch of the Kingdom of Lugunica is being decided, the Vollachian Empire is moving in violation of the treaty?”

Cecilus: “Oh, that’s a misunderstanding. Right now you could say I am on break from being part of the Nine Divine Generals, or you could say I am unemployed. Anyway, this business has nothing to do with the Empire, now I am professed as the strongest ordinary… vagrant swordsman.”

Roswaal: “…”

Cecilus: “This is no poor joke. My actions, the Empire’s not involved in them at all. Of course, loyalty to His Excellency still lies in my heart… But, I got my reasons for doing what I do.”

With a grand gesture, Cecilus emphasized that he and the Empire were not working together. It was difficult to believe it unconditionally, it was fact the plans of the Empire were incomprehensible.

For this reason, Roswaal narrowed both his dual-colored eyes, and inquired of Cecilus,

Roswaal: “Then it’s even more curious. That you’ve even abandoned your position of General at the Empire, and come here. What exactly is it that can move you to such an extent, I wooonder~?”

Cecilus: “It’s easy to understand—A step in the path towards the Heavenly Sword, was promised.”

Roswaal: “Path towards the Heavenly Sword?”

At that reply, Roswaal frowned his handsome brows.

Cecilus, witnessing that, nodded deeply in reply, and a murmur, “Yes”. The expression was just as if he was smiling, but a crucial difference lay in the emotion of the pupils.

With human emotions like that of joy and pleasure, the Blue Lightning severed human lives.

However, what lurked in the eyes of Vollachia’s strongest at this instance was not joy and pleasure, but a deeper hue, a more fervent hue—

Cecilus: “It’s a most important wish I’ve never spoken of to any living person. Someone guessed it correctly, and went on to say they could assist with it… There wasn’t any choice but to accept that opportunity.”

Roswaal: “How unexpected, you don’t seem to be type to be another’s puppet.”

Cecilus: “Between being controlled by others and merely accepting the stage provided by fate, isn’t there a subjective difference between the two? I accept the role of this world’s star actor, the leading part on its script. Beyond that, it’s part of an actor’s skillset to ad-lib lines and performances, isn’t it so?”

Cecilus shrugged, the emotions in his eyes returning to their previous state, and Roswaal simply nodded.

Indeed, at the strength of his argument, he gave up fighting against it. “Might makes right”, was the philosophy Cecilus had built over many victories.

To forcefully bend that notion was impossible for Roswaal, who had lived four-hundred years for an obsession of his own.

For Roswaal, who preferred stagnation, that philosophy seemed attractive to him, too.

Cecilus: “I don’t hate you, rather, I quite like you. But because this is also my role… Head Magician of the Court of the Kingdom of Lugunica, Roswaal L. Mathers; I will be taking that head of yours.”

Seemingly acting in his own breed of politeness, Cecilus returned the sword he held to its sheath. And with the sound of another blade being drawn, the blade of a beautiful sword was revealed to the world.

The beauty of the sword was truly arcane, a magic sword imbued with uncanny power—

Cecilus: "—Ranked highest among blades, the Dream Sword, Masayume."

Roswaal: "The sword that eats away at the holder's soul with one swing, is it?—Cecilus-kun, may I ask one thing?"

With the overflowing dreadfulness in front of him, Roswaal with a carefree tone raised a finger.

One-armed and bloodied, faced with a swordsman without peer in all epochs amongst the congealed atmosphere; yet in such a situation he raised a query towards Cecilus. The latter again tilted his head, at that out-of-place light-hearted tone.

Cecilus: "What are my weaknesses? My weak points are that I don't listen to people and I don't really have the composure of someone over twenty years of age. Oftentimes, that'd end up in the agenda of the Imperial Parliament."

Roswaal: "Your employer's name is?"

After that question was posed, Cecilus's eyebrows raised slightly.

He lowered the blade while drawing a foot back. Slowly, he leaned his upper body forward,

Cecilus: "Gossip around has them down as a wretch, a fiend, and I've even heard some speaking ill in their back, calling them the Purge King… But to you, because I've been asked to communicate the correct name to you…"

With that as the preface, Cecilus wet his lips with his tongue.

After a dramatic pause, he revealed.

Cecilus: "…"

With that name as an expression of power reaching his ears, Cecilus disappeared, cracking the floor of the mansion.

That he had vanished from the world, it was fast enough to mistake for that.

On that moment, the moniker of Blue Lightning truly befitted the man approaching like a bolt of electricity.

The distance was crossed instantaneously.

However, at that same instant, Roswaal weakly parted his lips, muttering,

Roswaal: "So it was you, after all."

Even before the sound of those words appeared in the world, the Dream Sword drew an arc.

Just before everything went dark, Roswaal's consciousness thought.

About those girls currently at the mansion, and their safety.

About those girls who had been become collateral damage in the path to his dearest wish, and had ultimately been left with no happiness at all.

—He did not possess neither the qualifications nor the time to apologize in those final moments, and so anything and everything vanished.

Door Crossing's mechanism was a simple one, which functioned by connecting the entrance to the Forbidden Library to another doorway.

Due to that straightforward effect, the versatility of Door Crossing was quite high, and she was proud of this outstanding magic. But just like any other magic, Door Crossing was not wholly flawless as well.

If its method were revealed that useful nature could turn into weakness. Because of this, the existence of the Forbidden Library and the effect of Door Crossing had to be kept hidden from outsiders.

Indeed, outsiders were not supposed to find out about it.

—Henceforth, such a situation was inevitable, she thought.

Beatrice: “What irony, I suppose.”

At the moment the door to the Forbidden Library’s was touched, Beatrice herself already understood that they would be let inside.

That spacious mansion with its countless doors to choose from existed, and yet, Beatrice had forcibly been guided to a single one.

That method was simple—a situation where the other doors could not open would do the trick.

The method to halt Door Crossing was to remove any choice of doors to connect to.

That task had been carried out with diligence, and so the doors that could be opened in the mansion had now been limited to one. And that who had helped in discovering this method must have been her dear brother, she somewhat understood.

Being put off-balance by this realization was inevitable. Because that was a common law for both their existences—

But even taking that into account, begrudging her dear brother was not fitting for her. Because of this, Beatrice, without holding any sort of resentment for her brother, instead quietly faced the door that had been opened.

???: “—Yo, Beatrice.”

Calling out to Beatrice from the other side of the open door, they waved their hand.

That voice and attitude, she remembered it. Because of this, Beatrice's body shivered with fear.

The face from her memories, and the face now seen in front of her, not every detail seemed to match up.

While it was in concordance with the general parts of her memory, they were already almost like another person.

Beatrice: "You, why are you giving me that look, in fact?"

To that dark, dark gaze ahead of her, Beatrice shook her head.

Far from improving, it had changed in a way that drew even more revulsion.

That rare-to-find black hair and black eyes remained, yet the hair had lost its luster, while in those eyes that had lost their shine darkened emotions were dimly revealed.

Surrounding those eyes reminiscent of gloom were deep dark circles, thin and frail cheeks lay underneath, and what could be seen of the fingers displayed a corpse-like pallor.

With long dark clothes wrapping their body, exposure of the skin minimized—among that united uniform of black, what stuck out was a bright orange scarf. Just that, and that alone, was quite strongly betraying their gloomy impression.

Some years had passed.

But despite that, too much had changed. How could a human become so different?

Beatrice: "You, your mood has seriously changed, I suppose."

Human: "Same goes for you, then. Is your growth spurt over? Normally, you'd become a little more mature after two years have passed."

In a blank voice, to Beatrice's words they replied with a joke.

Two years, was it? If that person said so, then certainly that would be the amount of time that had gone by.

Just two years, from Beatrice's perspective, was like the blink of an eye. To humans, especially to the one standing now in her sight, how meaningful would those years be, she wondered.

—Was that stretch of time so meaningful for that boy, who had been near death, to return for revenge like this?

Human: "Do you remember, Beatrice? We ate together here."

Beatrice: "—That memory does not exist, in fact. Eating together with you never happened, I suppose."

At the words of that human, Beatrice crinkled her brows.

The two were facing each other in the dining room, on the first floor of the mansion. White cloth draped the table, and in the center seat was that person, asking Beatrice a mysterious question.

Human: "…Ah, that's right. You, yeah, you wouldn't know that. Yeah, that's my bad. That just now, it was my bad. It's always my bad."

Beatrice: "What happened… No, it's not something that needs to be heard now at this point, in fact."

For a single moment, in Beatrice's heart hesitation brushed past.

But, that girl in the blink of an eye commanded herself to seal away those unnecessary distractions. And then. Towards that troubling human, she pointed her small palm.

There, with her sense of pride as the Librarian who guarded the Forbidden Library—Or rather, it was her fleeting sense of duty, a desire to martyr herself for her part, a part no one wished upon her.

Beatrice: "You might have a righteous right to wish for revenge, I suppose. Even so, Betty has, for Betty, a role to fulfill, in fact. For that…"

Human: "…"

With strength, Beatrice focused on her own role, glaring at him to suppress any violence from that person.

Seeing this, his expression tensed slightly. Something, perhaps an attempt to endure some difficult feeling could be seen, and at the moment Beatrice set down her foot—

Human: "Come on now, Beatrice—Wasn't there a Contract to protect me?"

—At that moment, in Beatrice was born a lethal hesitation.

Beatrice: "…Ah."

Contract, at that sound Beatrice's whole body was pierced with shock, and she grew stiff.

And that rigidness did not unravel itself, unchanging, regardless of what Beatrice's will was. Something of the mind was not the culprit. Physically, her movement had been blocked. That was—

???: "Forgive me. With this, you won't be able to move."

At Beatrice's side, having risen from the shadows, one person had manifested there.

Wearing a disheveled black kimono and biting on a gold-colored kiseru pipe with the sharp teeth that lined its mouth, there stood a beastman—a tall man, with a wolfen visage.

He gazed downwards at her with slitted eyes, as Beatrice only came up to his waist. Finding no emotion in those small pupils, Beatrice's throat let out a squeak,

Beatrice: "That, is…"

Human: "A mysterious shinobi technique of binding shadows, something of the sort. Think of it as a secret art. No need for concern however, it shouldn't be active for very long… You are my benefactor, after all."

Rigid, her body's freedom taken away from her, Beatrice could do nothing but listen to that voice.

There was no trembling in the words he spoke, no mistakes in the memories he shared. Slowly rising from his seat, and drawing nearer to her side, that person's eyes were dark, but any signs of discomfort could not be found in them.

To get revenge, was that person's reason for finding this place, Beatrice had concluded. But the glint in that human's eyes could not be perceived by Beatrice as one of revenge.

In those black eyes filled with dim light, some feeling that was ripping at his chest could be found.

Human: "Back then, you let me run away, and now I'm still here. That's definitely something I wanted to tell you."

Beatrice: "If this is your method for that… You really are an aggravating man, I suppose… Definitely aggravating."

Human: "I'm sorry about that. But, I figured something out, Beatrice."

Interrupting Beatrice's jagged speech, he slowly shook his head. Those lips, drawn in the shape of a smile, silently looked down at Beatrice.

If she thought about it, had she ever seen this person smile like this? Back then, when she had let him spend many hours in the Forbidden Library.

At that recalling Beatrice, he put out his hand, and said,

Human: "—That you and I, we're of the same kind, that is."

Beatrice: "…"

The corners of his eyes sagged, and only now did his eyes return to how they had been before, to how the eyes of the boy had first been.

The boy had returned to how he had been during those few days at the mansion, before becoming this weird being.

Human: “At that time, I had no other path but to die, but you didn’t give up on me, you saved me. Even now, how many times, how many times do the thoughts of that red-glowing sunset come to my mind.”

Beatrice: “You…”

Human: “I’m still thankful for that, Beatrice… Why didn’t you kill me, back then?”

Beatrice: “—Kh.”

Were those words of gratitude, or of resentment?

Regardless, Beatrice had been blindsided by the words spoken by a face displaying both joy and sorrow.

So this was the work of her influence, the all-consuming despair in his heart, she accepted.

As if naturally, that rigid hold on her body which made her uneasy came undone, and her outstretched arm dropped down. But, in this newfound freedom, her willingness to resist was already gone.

That cause and effect had been flipped around was quite easy to understand.

Human: “Beatrice, I’m thankful for you. I think I probably did like you. Within that time, only you truly drew close to me, those are my thoughts.”

Beatrice: “…That is, the lowest confession.”

Human: “I don’t disagree.”

At his words, Beatrice replied with empty feelings.

And then, in that thinly smiling boy’s black eyes, Beatrice saw the truth—the dark emotions within were so familiar to her, she realized.

It was a most foul lesion that would nestle in the hearts of many beings, eventually eroding all hope.

—A disease called despair, within him, within herself, had been quietly nesting.

Human: “Halibel, a kunai.”

At that request, the beastman standing by Beatrice raised his eyebrows.

Silently, looking on at those two’s exchange of questions and answers, the beastman now shook his kiseru up and down.

Halibel: “…Ya sure?”

Human: “A kunai.”

Having been once again ordered, that beastman swung his left arm high.

Then, a black lump of steel pierced the floor of the dining room with a thud. Crouching down, retrieving it, he left its weight on his palm.

It let off a dull gleam, this dark-colored metal. It had a simple form for cutting down life.

Human: “I’m so happy that you remembered our Contract.”

He did take advantage of it, such a thought occurred to her.

However. That it was truly a fleeting view of a distant joy, he spoke with that kind of voice. To blame him somehow, that feeling did not really appear in her.

Human: “You are so lovely, with those colors that suit you…”

Beatrice: “…”

At that moment, Beatrice’s eyes opened wide, and filled with heavy tears.

In her blurry sight, that person gently overlooking her was there. As she blinked, tears began to flow down her cheeks. Shedding tears like that, to gaze at his appearance to the end, was what she wished.

He had stated that himself and herself were of the same kind.

Then, there was definitely a reason, there was a reason as to why he was here for her.

What she had done at that time, it had greatly affected his life unknowingly.

If that was how it had ended up being, then that was how it was going to return to her.

If he, now, for Beatrice, was doing this, to try and save her—

Beatrice: "Are you…"

Human: "…"

With a numbly stiff tongue, shivering and shaking, Beatrice weaved speech.

Those words that came out like a sigh, when heard by the boy standing right in front of her eyes, caused him to cease moving.

He was giving her the time. For bitter words, or whatever it may be, he would accept everything, that kind of resolve could be seen.

To that determination, Beatrice—

Beatrice: "—Are you, Betty's That Person?"

That question's meaning, he would definitely not understand.

That there would be an answer, Beatrice was not even hoping for that much.

It was just, if it was her end, if it was that which had come looking for her, she must try to hear it still.

Human: “Yeah.”

—So, with that smiling, agreeing appearance, Beatrice’s heart was crushed and broken.

There was dearness in that smile, kindness in those words, and a blessing in that raised blade.

Human: “I’m, That Person.”

Once more, a large teardrop, flowing over that girl’s reddened cheeks, fell.

6

???: “There’s a proverb where I used to live, something like, a drowning man will even clutch at straws.”

Facing down towards the floor’s red carpet, a man was listening to the voice.

That carpet, his face was very close to it.

There was also another thing that was close; the intervals between the man’s breaths. The beat of his heart rang in his ears like bell that had been sped-up, the feeling in his body was that of having just finished sprinting over distant fields.

He looked to be reaching sixty, an old man.

Not just his son, but his grandchildren too had grown up, he showed the marks of having lived a long and fitting life.

His position was such that he’d had to deal with many a people. Having had a long and brilliant career, this man had been entrusted with much by those around him.

That he was out of the ordinary, he did not have any thoughts of bragging like that. But having been born with a wit beyond the norm, he had resolved to live a life of abundance.

And that was why, in his current situation, he could not help but wonder whether he was in a dream or in an illusion. He could not believe it.

—He was down on his knees, in front of an opponent no older than his own grandchildren.

???: “Straw, do you know what’s that? Maybe there’s straw like what I’m thinking of here… Like wheat, something like that. The one in the water’s so desperate, that even knowing how useless it is, they’ll grab at it with all their might.”

Old Man: “…”

???: “To put it plainly, dying humans will desperately try to survive no matter what, that’s the meaning of the proverb. It’s different from using brute force in case of a fire. They’re still thinking of turning their fortunes, but to grasp at straws is just a stupid idea.”

Smoothly, the voice above his head gave his words.

Of what was being said most seemed pointless, but not one word, not one phrase could be missed, for fear of somehow raising his ire. Not when repulsive rumors about what harmful things would happen in such a case were piled up like mountains.

Having emerged just two years ago, that boy had been spoken of in cruel and horrific spreading rumors ever since.

All that opposed him, their families, all those involved would be tracked down by any means necessary to be made an example of. With irresistible force he had kept resolutely expanding that association, Pleiades, as its leader.

With his terrifying success and his unparalleled ability of evaluation, people had bestowed the boy with a title.

—The Purge King.

Purge King: “…”

The old man was kneeling in a place where, this organization’s headquarters lay hidden in the shadow of the Four Great Nations, started for the purpose of controlling the underworld society.

Luxurious paintings, extravagant decorations and items had been gathered in this room, the organization's reception hall, a sight most obscene.

As for the location of the King, serving as its leader, he sat on the throne, at the back of the room—it could rightly be called treasure, on that supreme throne he looked down on his guests.

It was a dazzling and opulent setup, and the money spent on it was enough to make one's head spin. That violent fortune transgressed one's eyeballs, for a in a human lifespan, even multiplied thousandfold, no, two-thousandfold, it could not be reached.

That this was a demonstration of the organization's—no, of the King's power, even idiots could understand with a glance. And even if someone incapable of understanding such were to have arrived at this very room, they would never be seeing the light of day again.

Simple displays of power, mere shows of wealth were not worth anything in comparison.

Lining the walls were dozens of men, all possessing renowned names, all either top mercenaries or soldiers. All of this, had it been possible to utilize money to gain their following, and that had been how it had been carried out, what had been the cost?

Even if they only numbered a few dozen, to maintain this army, massive financial power would be needed.

Moreover, among that crowd where only the best of the best had been gathered, motivated by money, there was the pair at the left and right of the throne, those transcendental existences. For the kneeling old man, they were adequately enough to intoxicate his consciousness.

—Those extraordinary transcendentals were the Admirer, Halibel, and the Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt.

Of the Kararagi City-States, and of the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

Each respectively holding the name of the strongest in their countries, those two were present side-by-side. As for how that young boss' violent hold had gone uncontested since this association's sudden appearance, there was no better evidence than this.

Purge King: “Sigrum-san?”

Sigrum: “…”

At the moment his name was called, his state of mind having gone dim, that man's—Sigrum's heart became frozen.

Looking on, resting his chin on his arm, the Purge King, smile gone from his face, was gazing at Sigrum with dark eyes.

As if his heart was being directly squeezed, Sigrum panted.

He must create an excuse soon, something, so his oxygen-deprived lips shivered. However, at that Sigrum's fragile response, the Purge King's shoulders shrank.

Purge King: “Ahh, for making you bored, I apologize. Having my stories get off-topic's a bad habit of mine since long ago, and if I talk in this roundabout way we might never get to the point.”

Sigrum: “I-I am fine… that, is…”

Purge King: “I'm talking.”

Sigrum: “…”

With a finger of his right hand held to his lips, the King's left hand was pointed at him.

His excuses interrupted by that quiet remark, his back became slick with cold sweat. A silence of several seconds, in which his body felt like it had frozen over, and once a time that felt like eternity had passed,

Purge King: “…Sorry. I didn't mean to threaten you. It's just that, these two people her, and these others present all follow me because I hired them, but that's not your case, is it? So, then, how should I say it… I acted in a manner I'm used to, sorry."

Sigrum: "…"

The speaker's tone was quiet and conveyed respect. That made it feel all the more anomalous.

The Purge King was polite, respectful of his opponents, and yet, just like that without hesitation he would also carry out violence on them.

The King's tone in treating others with words, showed none of his hidden intentions to those who listened. The terrified eyes of the boy were bereft of confidence, yet that narrowed gaze actually pierced through to peer at inner thoughts, the entirety of his nerves observing with strong attention to the other party's moves.

Those darkened black irises asked only one question.

—Are you, my friend, or my enemy, I wonder.

Sigrum: "…"

Of course, that he was not an enemy, he must assert.

However, Sigrum's words had been sealed, having just been vocally forbidden from answering.

Making a sound, or responding with his eyes, showing with his attitude, would it wear that person's patience?

With such a fear capturing the elder's heart, those few seconds of his life felt like an eternity, the longest of his life.

Laughing this off as an exaggeration, not a single person had survived trying that.

The organization's stance was merciless, and its tendrils reached the core of the underworld of the Four Great Nations. They already had become an irremovable sore.

To survive was to avoid being entangled in that diseased portion in the first place, as overcoming that illness after the fact was impossible.

And so, the sole method of surviving. Was to offer complete submission and to ready all answers in advance, it was only that.

An incurable illness he had tried to avoid at all costs. But ultimately, unable to escape it, the old man had come to this place.

With all his replies already prepared beforehand, with determination having chosen to submit, he had come.

However, Sigrum had come to understand here how naïve that idea had been.

As if hands and feet had been tied, and he had been tossed in the water while unable to move, his breathing labored, his lips panting in search of oxygen. On land, in this room, he was drowning in that gaze.

Sigrum: "…"

Not a disease. But a curse.

The Purge King, he was ruled over by an indelible curse.

Morbid fear clouded his eyes, and unending doubt gnawed away at his heart.

He was afraid of humans. His opponent was fearing, was doubting, was hating.

He himself possessed the strongest fear buried within him, and with this same curse he was eating away at others, all others that came across it were infected with the same.

Like drowning, the King had said first. It was just as he had said.

Now, if it seemed like a chance, Sigrum would try to grab at straws or at anything.

Purge King: “So, hmm… So, the straw story. A story of desperately trying to survive… Hm, it’s understandable. Sigrum-san came to our place to talk to us, to try and make sense of this idea.”

Sigrum: “…”

Purge King: “I’m fond of reasonable people. People who’re willing to talk are much more trustworthy than those who just punch you in the face out of nowhere. I don’t know what sort of nefarious rumors you’ve heard of us, but I want to request you to not judge us according to those… I prefer to avoid making waves if possible.”

While speaking those words, the Purge King spread his left hand in the other’s direction. And that offering gesture of the hand was like he was yielding the turn to speak.

Sigrum: “Ah.”

At that moment, as if the stiffness had come unraveled, a breath leaked out from Sigrum’s lips.

For a single moment, he was seized by the fear of annoying the King’s senses, but the young man in front of his eyes did not react. That domineering, patient silence, seemed to be leading Sigrum onwards.

Purge King: “Sigrum-san?”

Sigrum: “No..thing… My apologies. In what regards my side, it is as stated in the offer sent by letter. I wish for good relations with all members of your organization, from now on and for a long time.”

With words chosen carefully, taking care to avoid showing excess humility, Sigrum expressed his position on the matter.

Hearing that, the Purge King narrowed his eyes, but after mulling it over for a while he smiled.

Purge King: “…”

Seeing that sudden smiling expression match the age of its owner, Sigrum was surprised.

Having surprised Sigrum, the King proffered a deep nod, and,

Purge King: “Let’s have a nice partnership, Sigrum-san. The details will be discussed with the person in charge later on… This was the best and wisest choice for you.”

Sigrum: “Ah…”

Purge King: “Please continue to treat our association favorably from here after.”

His hand raised, while smiling the Purge King concluded the meeting.

At those words, Sigrum slowly lifted his body. His body had grown stiff from kneeling, and so his posture briefly faltered, but enduring it with difficulty he then let out a long breath.

Sigrum: “Thank you very much. From now on, this side will display favor towards you.”

Purge King: “Hmm.”

Somehow concealing the numbness of his tongue, his final words concluded the talk.

And so, with his task being fulfilled, Sigrum bowed to the assenting Purge King, and turned back.

Sigrum: “…”

In his heart that was bouncing and shifting, a strong sense of relief and achievement was blowing like a storm.

His body that had felt heavily weighted down up until a few seconds ago, suddenly felt like it was floating. And with naturally lightened footsteps, the faces of his family members waiting for him to return home rose in his head one-by-one.

Having braved this violent wave, somehow his wish had been granted.

Sigrum: “—?”

It was at that time.

From behind him, a very faint sound was heard.

A sound familiar to the ear, the sound of a coin.

It was very similar to a single coin slipping from the hand, and hitting the floor.

Purge King: “Tails.”

One short word, a voice was heard saying.

What that was, Sigrum’s mind wondered, and faster than he could understand—

Sigrum: “…”

The elder’s view tilted, becoming even with the floor.

Even more so than when he was kneeling, the carpet had suddenly grown closer—And that was the last he felt.

7

Halibel: “…”

Towards the fall of the man’s decapitated body, Halibel was gazing with narrowed eyes.

Brilliant handiwork.

The limbs of the old man’s corpse had not jerked, and the head, now fallen on the carpet, was still unaware of its demise. The corpse was like a corpse that had lost only its life and nothing more, and it was because of this that it could be called an artfully-created corpse.

But a corpse was naught but a corpse, and to judge it as splendid was not a hobby he indulged in himself.

Purge King: “Oh, ueh… Kh.”

Watching the sight of the bleeding corpse, the boy on the throne held his mouth firmly closed.

He had seen the moment of a person turning into a cadaver many times already, but as his temperament was sensitive, he showed no sign of getting used to it.

???: “Acting like that towards the dead, isn’t it insulting after giving these orders? I wouldn’t ask for you to become used to corpses, but maybe you should at least to aspire to avoid creating them, how about that?”

Purge King: “I’m not killing for enjoyment as well… I’m not. I’m unable to look straight at such a scene, but I’m present anyway. It’s the least I can do…”

???: “That’s being deceitful.”

His employer holding a handkerchief in front of his mouth, fighting off nausea, his colleague’s words held no absolution towards him.

Of course, there at the right side—was Cecilus. That his employer did not show fury at this was evidence he knew his actions had the marks of deception.

While looking at the young boy whose face had grown as pale as the corpse’s, Cecilus, with an offhand “Anyhow”, continued to speak. His gaze was still directed at the corpse of that poor, fallen old man.

Cecilus: “I’m more so astonished at that contradiction of yours, boss. The conversation ended so peacefully, to give a sudden order to kill is quite surprising even for you.”

While speaking as such, Cecilus with dissatisfaction puffed up his cheeks. It was not quite appropriate behavior for a man in his twenties, but considering the immaturity of his mind, it was an action that fit Cecilus greatly.

His human sort of beauty, and his regular behavior was what was allowing this conduct.

Anyway, to Cecilus's point, the boy contorted his cheeks,

Purge King: "And I did tell you, I didn't want to have him killed. Like I told him, I wanted to believe it. It didn't look like he was lying or anything, either."

Cecilus: "Then, why?"

Purge King: "Even if does not seem like they're lying, liars are gonna lie, after all."

The boy that knelt on the throne bit his lip as Cecilus gazed on at him with curiosity on his face.

On that horribly dry way of life, an unshakably strong will could be glimpsed.

Halibel and Cecilus both were unknowing of what had happened in his past.

However, in that person's past, a situation must have happened to make him adopt this belief.

Something akin to, the experience of a person close to him who had hidden away suspicion and self-interest in their heart all while smiling, then spewing hatred and murderous intent with the very same fingers and lips that had been kind to him.

Such a past must have taught this boy.

Purge King: "First cut the buds, then break apart the branches. I'll never be fooled twice."

Tightly, the boy grabbed his own shoulder and pressed his own fingernails over the cloth, into his skin. Those nails ruthlessly clawed into it; that skin was being torn, that blood was oozing was certain.

That self-harm was, to him, a necessary ritual to maintain himself. The subordinates that had been with him for long knew of it, and so, nobody stopped it.

As if soon satisfied with the pain, the boy slowly rose from the throne,

Purge King: “The corpse, make it neat and bury it. And an envoy’s to be sent to their shop. Everything’s to be confiscated, but if they follow along, do not treat them poorly. If they refuse, then purge the family and burn the store. When the takeover ends, have the next one in charge greet you. With that, it’ll be decided whether to destroy them or not.”

With a calm tone, the boy ordered so those in the room could hear him.

Those were rough instruction that someone should follow, but not anyone in specific.

These requests that did not worry about the process, but rather only with the result, made the group successful. By focusing on the accomplishments of the association, not that of any one person, the perfect system of the organization could be maintained.

Everyone possessed reasons and weaknesses, which forced them to undertake them.

And so, rather than risking having everything being taken away from them if someone were to be opportunistic, everyone would do their best—It was a sort of ideal workplace environment.

—As an example of that everything, it could be family, a lover, wealth, life, many other things.

That was the guideline of the boy presenting himself as the leader of the association. To hold onto those things as insurance, to keep things as a safety measure.

This was the cowardly boy’s, the Purge King’s, way of fighting.

???: “Boss, ya forgot yer coat.”

Purge King: “Ah, thank you.”

Standing behind the boy headed toward the doorway, Halibel gently draped a black coat over his shoulders.

Just slightly draping that on his shoulders, he also added a word of reminder—Immediately after that Halibel's whiskers grew numb with the detected faint killing intent. At its intensity, Halibel lowered his eyes.

The source of that intent, he did not have to check, it was the boy in eyeshot.

Probably, it was because he had stood behind him.

Purge King: "…Halibel-san, I do not want to kill you."

Halibel: "Hahaha, then ya can just, not do it. Instead, just use me well."

Purge King: "But wouldn't it be the worst to destroy oneself by having too many tools… That'd be a pretty shitty way to die."

Mumbling to himself, pondering on methods to kill the aide behind him, the boy put on his jacket.

Those grumbling words had been quickly brushed off, but the boy's words were not a joke. He would, if it was possible, try to kill Halibel.

It was simply that, the effort it took to kill, the insufficiency of his preparation to kill, and the trouble brought about after the killing, it was merely that which had inclined him towards not killing, all these were factors as to why he was leaning towards not killing him.

Cecilus: "Boss, boss. These offerings that person brought, where should they be moved to?"

Purge King: "Offered goods… The contents, what were they?"

Cecilus: "Contents were… Ah, there's a magic stone. From where did they learn of boss's tastes? They'd come having paid that much regard, truly, I feel even more sorry for them."

Purge King: “Lopping off his head was Cecilus-san’s idea so…”

At the room’s entrance, the boy, having been stopped, twisted his cheeks in annoyance. And at that breezy attitude of Cecilus, he sighed,

Purge King: “The magic stone, I’ll ask you to put it in my room. Other than that, do with them as you all prefer.”

Cecilus: “Yes, yes, definitely understood. And, boss.”

Purge King: “…What is it.”

The boy let out a moody voice. Cecilus brought a finger to his eye, tracing it,

Cecilus: “Those dark circles are quite severe. Maybe you should sleep softly next to the princess for a while?”

At Cecilus’s words, the boy’s tongue clicked.

Cecilus just laughed it off, but the other men around him froze with tension in their bodies. It was possible that, because of that irritation, Cecilus’s slaying could be ordered.

Of course, if push came to shove, killing Cecilus would be no trivial affair. Using every force available in the building, they would have to try to force a draw with Halibel in the mix as well.

Purge King: “—I’ll think about it.”

Fortunately, the boy did not hastily order this, but with just those words turned away.

With that, relief spread throughout the room, and the men watched the back of the departing leader. That waving Cecilus’s inability to read the mood, had been one of Halibel’s biggest concerns as of late.

Halibel: “Doin’ somethin’ as part of a group really ain’t one of mah strong points either…”

Shaking the kiseru held in his mouth up and down, Halibel gazed at that boy's departing figure.

Firstly, as the most senior associate, guarding and similar duties were handled by Halibel. However, whether inside or outside the mansion, threats meaning to cause him harm were few.

The former because of fear, the latter because his existence was unknown to many.

Halibel: "…"

Carefully, Halibel stared over that boy who evaluated everything with narrowed eyes.

In the building that served as the headquarters, the reception room was not the only section decorated with various works of arts and paintings. The flaunting of that violent financial power allowed for a posture of non-aggression.

The display of wealth, the display of power, served as a last resort, so that unneeded enemies would not be made.

Attaining victory without a fight, as the boy had said, would be the ideal.

Naturally, it went without saying that excessive wealth and power would be subject to the jealousy and envy of others. Ultimately, whatever one did, enemies would appear. The boy's method was then to reduce the number of them, as simple as that.

And, if the quantity of foes were reduced, it would only be necessary to deal with the rest using force later.

Purge King: "Halibel-san… Please watch over Cecilus-san with care, to keep him from going out of control."

Halibel: "Understood, leave it to me. Boss, are ya goin' ta see the princess?"

Purge King: "Hmm."

That he had accepted Cecilus's suggestion perhaps annoying him, the boy replied with a grimace.

And then, those two pairs of legs reached the innermost section of their organization's headquarters—the deepest part of the building named Pandemonium, they had arrived in front of the door of a strictly-guarded room.

—On that door, there were so many keyholes and locks that a person seeing it for the first time might shudder.

The number of keyholes neared fifty, clearly showing the importance of what lay on the other side of this door, as well as the meticulous, tenacious, and obsessed nature of the person that had prepared it.

But, above all, what made the caretaker's obsession most obvious was the fact that, the keys to fit in those keyholes and open the door, not one of them existed in this world.

In other words, this door could never have been opened by any normal method.

To open it, then—

Purge King: "—Puck."

Puck: "I'm called, and so I appear, nyanyanyan."

Receiving the boy's call, with an exhausting voice and excessive flashes of light, a grey-furred kitten suddenly appeared in the air.

Outwardly presenting a silly attitude and cute appearance, but within holding vast power, that Great Spirit—the existence known as Puck, floated down and landed on the boy's shoulder.

Puck: "Yo, you're here again after quite a while. Is Lia the reason you came?"

Purge King: "The door, open it."

Puck: "Hmm, what's with that tone. If you spoil the father's mood he might not let you see his daughter, you know. If you could understand the feelings of a father with a daughter at such a ripe age just a bit better, it would make me happy…”

Purge King: “Puck.”

On top of his shoulder, Puck was stroking his whiskers. The boy called to him.

Seeing that boy’s face marked with deep dark circles, Puck sighed with a “My oh my”, and then,

Puck: “You endured it until you couldn’t anymore again, didn’t you. It can’t be helped. That effort of yours is commendable, so I’ll let it slide just this once.”

Saying that, with a satisfied air Puck gathered his short arms together and pointed towards the door. And, through the many keyholes devoid of any keys, a faint light poured forth.

Puck: “Click.”

Soon after, the faint lights turned into keys made of ice, and fitting inside the door, the sound of something opening echoed.

The method to open a door that would not open—the secret was to create a key that did not exist.

Halibel: “It’s admirable how easily ya find blind spots. If there’s a keyhole, it’s kinda normal to find a key that fits it. But if someone tries to imitate this, then it’d become a problem.”

Puck: “There’s also the question of the magical wavelength. If someone other than me tried something similar, you both, and I as well, would be informed of it. And even then, I’m always there with Lia.”

At Puck’s words, Halibel came to understand and agreed.

Without even paying attention to their exchange, the boy placed his hand on the unlocked door and paused. Behind him, with a face feigning innocence, stood Halibel. The boy gazed up at that face.

Purge King: “Halibel-san, you can go now.”

Halibel: “Is that so? But, I should greet the princess sometimes as well, don’t’cha think…?”

Purge King: “You can go now.”

Those words said without much thought, were flatly rejected.

Halibel certainly accepted that it was an absolute refusal. This was not something worth refusing to budge on, so Halibel chewed on his kiseru and backed off.

Halibel: “If anythin’ happens, feel welcome to summon me.”

Purge King: “…”

That boy was giving him a warning look, his hand still on the door. And so, Halibel turned his back to him.

Until he turned the corner and could no longer be seen, that boy’s sight was piercing into his back.

His employer and benefactor was always vigilant and fearful, rather than cautious.

Halibel: “Ah, if I said it like that, he will definitely not call out for me then.”

With such listless mumbling, Halibel spewed purple smoke from his pipe while looking overhead.

Smoke hit the ceiling, and with nowhere to go, scattered.

—That it was, somehow, a hint of their future, was the thought that came to his mind.

8

That boy’s sleeping face was so quiet, one could believe he’d died.

Purge King: “…”

Having entrusted his head to her lap, sleeping as if on the brink of death, that boy was the target of Emilia’s gaze.

Around his brows, there were dark circles that looked as if painted on with soot. Caused by and revealing the boy’s serious level of sleep deprivation, and the harsh environment he was in.

Emilia: “It looks like he hasn’t been sleeping again.”

Puck: “It can’t be helped, in his position he’s got no room for relaxing, most likely. Except for when he comes to see Lia and act like a baby, every now and then.”

She stroked his forehead, and organized his lashes with her fingertips. Watching that sleeping face made free by Emilia, the floating Puck wrapped his long tail around his stomach and sighed. Just like that he spun around her and examined Emilia’s personal quarters.

It was a white room.

White walls, white floors. A white ceiling, a white bed, white furniture and white curtains, everything in the room was united with whiteness.

Amidst that, Emilia was draped in thin sleepwear that was likewise white, so it was almost pathological.

This room, was the extent of freedom granted to Emilia—A bird cage, which she was confined to.

Emilia herself still wondered whether it was appropriate to utilize expressions such as “confined”.

Puck: “Lia, are you still angry at this child?”

Emilia: “…I wonder about that.”

Emilia hesitated in answering to Puck’s question.

It was not that it was difficult to put in words. She was just not sure about her own feelings.

Well, she had definitely been angry at first, but even now they had not yet made up.

To apologize to each other, they did not even have time for that. Without solving that problem, time had simply passed, and daily life had merely continued on.

Emilia: “But, I’m upset with you, Puck. While keeping it a secret from me, you made the plan for leaving all by yourself.”

Puck: “Sorry. But it couldn’t be helped. There was no way I’d entrust you to a Roswaal in that state, right? Dragging someone into a dangerous situation and place, only to then skedaddle out of there’s pretty irresponsible of him. That said, if it’s for Lia’s safety, here’s easily the stand-out option.”

Emilia: “…”

Puck: “Avoiding harm to Lia, that boy and I were of the same mind.”

So Puck had assented with the secret offer to take Emilia out of Roswaal’s mansion, and had not hesitated with the withdrawal of the Royal Selection and in cooperating with the association.

And with only Emilia unaware of anything, when she finally realized, she had found herself in this white room, a bird caught in a cage—

But that she had no right to criticize Puck’s judgement, Emilia also understood.

Emilia: “Because, in the end, I couldn’t do anything…”

The Royal Selection, to determine the next Monarch of the Kingdom of Lugunica—in that battle, Emilia had clearly suffered a tragic defeat, contented with a loss by default.

The biggest cause for that was that she had refused to attend the Royal Candidate Meeting. As a result, her participation in the Royal Selection had not been recognized. That meant that Emilia's sponsor, Roswaal L. Mathers, and her both had fallen in status; that was the meaning of the latter's unhinged state.

In short, Emilia had not even displayed a will to participate in the Royal Selection, and so her sponsor Roswaal lost his qualifications. The Emilia Camp collapsed before its first task.

And so, Emilia had the ladder pulled from under her, and so been defeated without being able to do anything.

Emilia: "…My wish…"

It was to create a world without discrimination.

Creating a place where the births of half-elves and others would not serve as a definite evaluation of one's future life, that was clumsy Emilia's wish.

However, without even being given the chance to be spoken aloud, that wish had disappeared like a dream's fantasy.

Beyond that wish too, the freeing of Emilia's hometown—the task of rescuing the residents of Elior Forest, still in ice-encased slumber, that too she been unable to do.

Puck: "It'd be better to return to the forest rather that living in a defenseless house like that, but Lia was in a situation where even that was impossible. As you can imagine, when the first envoy arrived I was definitely surprised."

Emilia: "…Reaaally surprised. Because…"

The boy she had come to meet here, Emilia had believed to be dead.

—Her fate of not partaking in the Royal Selection had been determined by the death of the mansion's maid.

Rem, that was the girl who had become the first victim of the ruckus caused by the Witchbeasts. The boy, an outsider who had briefly been working at the mansion, had been a suspect in her death.

The boy could not endure that suspicious, and so had run away. Chasing him, that Rem's older sister, Ram, had also left the mansion —only never to return.

The collapse, probably started from there.

The cause of Rem's death was discovered to be the curse of the Witchbeasts afterwards, once the damage spread to the nearby village. The two disasters had overlapped, this state unrecoverable.

As a result of the chaos caused by the Witchbeasts, Roswaal had lost his position, without even seizing an opportunity to recover. Emilia had failed to announce her participation in the Royal Selection, and had met defeat without being defeated; a humiliation for her. The mansion was steadily declining towards the worse, heading towards undesired collapse.

It was then.

Swept away by the helplessness of being unable to change anything, Emilia was spending her days listlessly. But one day, that boy, who was supposed to have disappeared, had come to get her.

Emilia: "…"

Puck had quickly responded to that. But Emilia was feeling angry at that boy.

Without caring about her feelings, without any explanation, not when first disappearing, not even when he returned, without saying anything, he was suddenly taking her away.

He might even have been the catalyst for the start of the collapse of the world surrounding Emilia. Despite that—

Emilia: "Like that…"

Reunited with Emilia, the boy with a frail face exhausted from fear, even worse than the one he possessed now, had latched on, cried, and begged her for help.

And at that boy bawling like a child, Emilia had forgotten to be angry.

Maybe she was naïve. Maybe she was easy.

And, even then, Emilia did not think herself worthy of scolding him, that boy who seemed like a child, who had eventually exposed his sleeping, baby-like face.

So, the boy would visit Emilia, to find himself salvation.

He would come looking for her, without saying a single word about what he was doing outside her room's door, just sobbing sadly and talking about his own feelings, entrusting his life to Emilia's knees.

Whether she was receiving strong trust, or being looked down upon and being humiliated, that depended on what Emilia thought. And Emilia was not able to give any answer to that.

Emilia: "Obviously, this reaaally isn't healthy…"

That this was not a normal state to be in, even the immature Emilia realized that.

However, Emilia, while accepting that clinging boy's tears, looking on the form of the boy letting himself rest for nary a moment, in her own inner thoughts she was unsure.

Emilia: "…"

Speaking of the intervals in which the boy sought Emilia, it was about once every ten days.

Other than that, he was desperately struggling, even cutting back on sleep-time.

Really, they did not exchange many words.

But in this way, the boy would secretly came searching for her, for Emilia, once every ten days.

Emilia: "…Subaru's such a twit."

—That perhaps she longed for those visits, Emilia had grown aware of that.

—If a tossed gold coin landed on tails, with just that, anyone would be slain.

At that abnormal method of her master, Frederica could not hide her disgust.

Cleaning a headless corpse that had fallen in the reception hall, Frederica then replaced the sullied carpet, next preparing meals for the mercenaries in Pandemonium.

Frederica: "The fates of others, quite literally left to luck… Do you feel like you have become a god?"

Lifting the whole body of a corpse, Frederica, knowing all too well the reason for her helplessness, clicked her sharp fangs against one another, containing her feelings inside herself while trembling with anger.

Frederica Baumann was employed and working there in the organization because the Purge King, its leader, had a princess—Emilia, who had vehemently begged on her behalf.

That day, as the mansion filled with chilled air and frost, she had been convinced she was going to lose her life to that traitorous Great Spirit. Yet, for some reason, she had woken up here.

Since then, having been fitted with a collar around her neck, she was being used as a maid, to serve that detestable person.

Why in the world, how inept had her work been so that she was now subjected with this kind of absurd job?

Frederica: "—Master, pardon me, please."

Her owner's own meals, it was the rule that Frederica would carry it to his room directly.

He did not entrust this task to anyone else other than Frederica, and would not allow in his mouth food cooked by any other than her. That this was some honorable thing, she had no feeling like that whatsoever.

Firstly, it was not because of taste or trust that Frederica had been entrusted with the task. Merely that Frederica would not try stupid things, was the sort of conviction he held.

???: “Come.”

With the sound of many locks coming undone, a rude order allowed Frederica’s entry into the room.

Following those orders, with the food cart in tow, Frederica stepped foot into the room of her master.

Her master’s room, unlike the luxurious decor and interior of the building, was big, but quite simple and dull, a room lacking in humanity.

The room’s four corners held many books that were not distinguished by subject. Messily piled up books were stacked everywhere, and it was a place the orderly Frederica could not bear. But, that person deeply hated having his room cleaned.

Perhaps he was being wary of something being installed in the room.

Knowing that was impossible, but still being on the lookout for it, was not being cautious but rather cowardly—definitely, it was contemptible behavior.

Frederica: “Master, should I do the usual with these fallen documents?”

Subaru: “…Hmm. Yeah, please do. You can show them to someone who looks like they understand them.”

With those words, few documents littering the floor of the room, written down in messy handwriting, were waved away by her uninterested master.

At first glance, they simply seemed to be discarded, messed-up drafts, but they in fact were the source of the organization's wealth —The many mysterious creations brought about by the Purge King.

Subaru: "It might not be very helpful… Engines or things like that, I don't get the mechanism at all. As expected, different kinds of food are the easiest to figure out…"

Mumbling complaints, looking somewhere other than here was her master.

He would speak of knowledge and culture that no one had ever seen, discovered or noticed, be it leads or the ultimate results.

By meeting lots of people, that black-haired boy had repeatedly made great decisions—like he had been marked by fate, he had many unique ideas, and as a pioneer of culture had been granted cleverness.

With those many pieces of knowledge he spoke of, the experts of fields of study that had been in slumber had been lit with a new flame.

Those experts would examine and discuss that boy's joking words, which represented possibilities incomprehensible to ordinary people, with seriousness, and ultimately established them into theories.

And so, with that producing enormous profits, the boy who possessed nothing had been nurtured into a great villain.

Subaru: "At this point, calling it an unparalleled kata made of future knowledge isn't even funny."

Frederica remembered that her master had mumbled such strange words in reply to having his achievements praised, in the past. She also recalled that he had not been smiling at all when speaking those words.

And so, on one hand causing many people to suffer, on the other giving rise to much happiness, her dark-haired master was quite dishonest.

Even as a problematic existence that humanity should remedy, in his brain there was definite value.

This unreachable being, was definitely one-of-a-kind in this world in regards to being difficult to handle, there was no doubt—maybe in that sense, he might have had something in common with Roswaal.

Frederica: "…"

Subaru: "Frederica, the food. First, have a bite."

Even while preoccupied in her thoughts, Frederica was steadily readying the meal to be served.

This boy was only skin and bones, skeletal in appearance. It was not that his portions were lacking, the issue was largely mental.

Having given and taken many wounds, while living comfortably he was comparably quite skinny in appearance. As the manager of his meals, it did not make her feel great, but he probably was not vomiting because he wanted to.

Frederica: "Master, with this."

Why had meals been prepared for two?

All menus were for two, placed on large plates, and set on the table. And from every plate's meal Frederica ate a single bite, as to check for the presence of poison was one of her roles.

She had never thought about poisoning him. But that she wanted to, that she did.

It was just that, for Frederica, the work of a maid had taken up much of her life, and it was precious to her. With the people that had taught her, and those involved with her, in her mind, she did not want to commit acts of violence.

Frederica: “Then, I will be outside, if there is anything please call for me.”

Subaru: “Hmm.”

During meals, her master did not enjoy being seen.

Because of that, having finished with readying the meal, Frederica felt it was time to leave and was withdrawing from the room.

On this day as well, she intended to leave the room and wait outside—when suddenly, something caught her eye.

Spread out over the desk was a written list, holding the names of the organization’s members.

Placed next to that list, a gold coin could be seen.

At that moment, having realized the meaning of that, Frederica could not hide the fear running down her back.

Frederica: “Master—”

Subaru: “Frederica.”

With her turning around, void black eyes were gazing at Frederica, who had called for her master.

Frederica’s breath was robbed by that abyss. In front of her, her master slowly approached the desk and covered that unfolded list.

And then, flipping the gold coin just next to it with a thumb,

Subaru: “—Heads.”

With a carefree noise, that tossed coin fell into the boy’s left hand. Catching it, and having checked the side facing up, that boy smiled at Frederica.

Subaru: “It was heads, Frederica—Your brother and grandmother are safe.”

Frederica: “—Ah.”

Subaru: “Get out. And don’t come back until I say you may enter.”

At her master’s words, Frederica nodded like a doll without speaking.

And so, unable to hide the tears in her eyes welling up, she left the room as her cheeks were moistened by hot tears. Soon after, Frederica began to run while covering her face.

Frederica: “Uh, uhhh… Waaaaah!”

She could not tell, not anyone, not anything. Sharing would not be forgiven.

Why had it become like this?

Why had this happened to her?

Those far-away days at the mansion, with those not-cute-at-all juniors, that cute junior, that hopeless master—Where had those times gone?

10

—Having received word from a secret messenger, Cecilus closed one eye and looked up at the moon.

Cecilus: “Hmm, hmmhmm, hmmhmmhmmmm~.”

Twisting his neck and bending at the waist, low enough that the tips of his long hair could brush the ground, he tilted his form.

By nature, thinking had never been his best attribute. Cecilus had not received formal education, and had lived with no intention of learning things in the first place. In years, his life numbered around twenty, but he had spent it all on one thing only.

Many years he had spent only on swinging a sword, his swordsmanship a point of pride.

Since it was a life of only that, in his heart of hearts he wished to avoid difficult matters.

Cecilus: “Well now, how should this be done. As for me…”

Straightening his bent body, Cecilus shook the dust from his hair that had been touching the floor. And placing a hand on the sword at his waist, then turning back with a dance-like move,

Cecilus: “Hey, Halibel-san. What do you think?”

Halibel: “—What, it’s disgraceful that you’ve found me while I was keepin’ quiet, and ya were bein’ so unashamed.”

On the castle’s—on Pandemonium’s balcony, underneath the light of the moon with the sky overhead, from the shadows the beastman shinobi appeared.

Having been detected, Halibel scratched his head, and approached Cecilus, the latter’s face undaunted.

Retrieving the kiseru from his pocket and inserting it in his mouth, he lighted its tip. Inhaled, and puffed out purple haze.

Halibel: “Just now, who was that messenger sneakin’ about?”

Cecilus: “That?—Let’s just say, that was one of the Nine Divine Generals, but… Well, if it’s Halibel-san, the top shinobi in the world, it’s no wonder they were found.”

Halibel: “Ce-san, y’ain’t suited for secret stuff at all. Haven’t’cha revealed that ya never broke off ties with the Vollachian Empire just now?”

Cecilus: “But, Halibel-san, weren’t you already aware of that?”

Halibel: “…”

Halibel, already with an awkward grin, at Cecilus’s comment smiled even deeper.

That this was not a negative sign, Cecilus was frankly aware of it.

Cecilus: “Originally, working with the boss was as per His Excellency’s order. Of course, that I fell for the boss’s invitation and came to this side isn't a lie."

Halibel: "With the Empire's collar 'round yer neck… Well, Su-san's movements, if used well, it'd be easy to turn them into a profit to yer country. That knowledge from somewhere unknown'd be more readily accepted in Kararagi and Vollachia rather than Lugunica and Gusteko."

Cecilus: "It would, yes."

Drawing his hand into his kimono sleeves, Cecilus acknowledged that he was a spy.

Cecilus's reason for cooperating with the organization's activities, as he had stated, was to follow the orders of Vollachia's Emperor. However, the Emperor, knowing Cecilus's temperament, had not given specific instructions. Not that he could have remembered them even if he did.

Cecilus's role, as commanded, was to—

Cecilus: "All I gotta do is kill who the boss orders be killed, aside from His Excellency. So, it's just the usual."

Halibel: "Ce-san, aren't'cha even more of an assassin than I, a shinobi, am?"

Cecilus: "No, no, definitely not true, I mean, stuff like lurking in the water, or hiding poison on my person, or rising from the shadows is impossible for me."

Shaking his head and hands, Cecilus humbly responded by acknowledging the difference between their respective areas.

As a shinobi, as an assassin, he was far behind Halibel. But, if fighting head-on, Halibel was no match for Cecilus.

Cecilus: "Well then, having just caught me at the scene of me meeting with a secret messenger, what are you thinking of doing? Are you planning on fighting me with your life on the line here?"

Halibel: "That depends on the nature of the message."

Cecilus: “Hmm, you mean its contents.”

Halibel: “If its contents’d mean Su-san’s death, I guess I gotta fight to stop that.”

Holding his kiseru between his fingers, letting out a puff of violet smoke, Halibel’s fur fluttered in the cold night breeze.

Hearing he was ready to fight to the death for his master, Cecilus, with an “I see”, nodded his head.

Cecilus: “I’ve been wondering for a long time now. Why’s Halibel-san acting for the boss? It’s not out of sincerely loyalty to His Excellency like me.”

Halibel: “To repay a grace I received.”

Cecilus: “—What can it be, the sort of favor that Halibel-san received?”

Those unexpected words had come rushing out, and, having listened to them, Cecilus asked with sincere surprise. Depending on the person, this would be brazen enough to be considered rude, but Halibel did not say anything in particular.

Instead, Halibel gazed up at the moon hanging in the night sky—

Halibel: “‘Round the time I first met Su-san, there was a bit of an incident in a corner of Kararagi. That, well, it was an incident that involved the Four Great Spirits… Su-san dealt with it.”

Cecilus: “Huuuh, the Four Great Spirits! I know one of them, but they can’t really be talked with, you know. Can’t believe they were calmed down… Huh, perhaps the boss’s stronger than I thought…”

Halibel: “Nah, nah. It wasn’t an aggressive situation like that. What did… Well, I dunno what was the deciding factor, for sure. But you know how Su-san’s got some weird predications at times? It was prolly that.”

Returning his blade to its sheath, Cecilus with one eye closed listened to Halibel’s explanation.

The reason that felt both convincing and doubtful was because Cecilus appraised that boy, his boss, similarly, in certain aspects.

Halibel had called them weird predictions, but Cecilus did not look at it like that.

To prepare for anything was the weapon of a coward, he thought. And, Cecilus thought it desirable to respect the strong.

That meant that, no matter the method of fighting, one who would greedily use anything to win would be acknowledged as a warrior by him.

Cecilus: “Well, as a strong one among swordsmen, if possible, sticking with a sword fits me the best.”

Halibel: “Ce-san, Ce-san, are ya done with my talk?”

Cecilus: “Yes, that is enough. Anyway, it wasn’t that I thought of suspecting Halibel-san or anything like that. Unlike the Empire, the City-States is more like a mish-mash of heads… If you told me you were working for someone else, I’d trust you a lot more.”

With that declaration, Halibel seemed worn out and disappointed. At that, Cecilus tilted his head, and with an “Ah”, as if he had remembered something, clapped his hands together.

Halibel: “It’s okay to tell me?”

Cecilus: “If I don’t tell you, I think that’d cause a lot of difficulties. To be completely honest…”

Then, Cecilus informed Halibel, a large smile on his face,

Cecilus: “—As the Former Margrave’s murder has surfaced, the Kingdom is coming to destroy the organization in earnest.”

—And so, nonchalantly, the moment of the end would arrive.

???: “Many thanks for granting me an audience with you today.”

Saying this, welcomed as a guest to the reception area, this youth confronted the Purge King with a dignified attitude.

Subaru: “…”

This boy had slain many, erased many lives, grasped many weaknesses.

There had been many situations in which people, to maintain calm, had bluffed by presenting a brave front.

Subaru: “—Somehow, your confidence is remarkable, you do not seem much different from me.”

Young Man: “—Thank you for those sudden words of praise.”

The one who’s head dipped in a bow, was a delicately-built young man, fitted with a black suit and tie.

There was a mild look on his face, but in his eyes, somehow, a dim darkness could be seen. That smile he was making was likely fake. He was definitely aware that it would be seen through.

Not reckless, but full of courage—was the mixed impression of this young man.

Subaru: “Let me see, you must be…”

Young Man: “To be frank, not far off from now, we intend to do much large-scale business here. Because of that, we had been looking for a chance to send our regards to the organization, and present gifts, first of all.”

Subaru: “I see, that’s, well, thanks for your consideration.”

That posture of advancing according to his role without flinching left a good impression.

Emulating that attitude, the boy changed, to intently perform his own role as well.

Young Man: “These are the offerings from our side—We have heard that the leader desired this.”

Subaru: “Huh.”

Having been brought in and the lid of its box opened by a servant, the young man presented the eye-catching offering.

Inside, were a lot of stones—Magic Stones. As if affirming its utmost purity, the concentration of Mana filling the room heightened.

Staring at the offering, the Purge King muttered.

Subaru: “What color is there the most of?”

Young Man: “—?”

???: “Red and blue shades seem to be most prominent, but if you look further inside, there’s also yellow and green… Get the feeling the whole set’s there. Oh, how thoughtful.”

At that question with unknown meaning, the young man showed hesitation for the first time.

Instead of the youthful man, it was Cecilus who had replied, standing next to the King. After receiving that report from Cecilus, the King nodded solemnly.

Subaru: “Is that so, then my thanks for that. I’ll be receiving your consideration. Uhhh…”

Young Man: “This comes from Russell Fellow.”

Subaru: “Hmm, I see. Russell Fellow, is it. If any problem comes up…”

Then, the Purge King cut off his words.

The reason was that youthful messenger, who, to stop him from speaking, had opened a hand.

In that instant, a faint murmur spread in the room. With his words having been interrupted, what response would the Purge King give to that action; the guards were getting excited.

However, in such a situation, only Halibel, Cecilus and the young man involved had remained calm,

Young Man: “Please wait. In truth, the offerings, just this is not their entirety.”

Subaru: “—Huh. Then I’m even more impressed.”

After listening to that man’s words, the King responded as such, and the tension relaxed slightly.

There, in that atmosphere with lessened pressure, that young man gave a deep nod. And so—

Young Man: “—From the Kingdom of Lugunica, this could be called the response to the Purge King’s atrocities.”

—Immediately, an onslaught of white light swallowed up the whole meeting room, shattering it.

An incredible torrent of light engulfed the luxurious reception room of the Magic Castle Pandemonium; as if purifying it, it was transformed into white dust.

Those who had perished due to that white light, without even knowing what had hit them, numbered eighteen—each were warriors of great skill, each had their names known throughout, but this was no longer in their realm.

Even if, to those vanquished men, the truth of what had happened could somehow be told, there were none among them who would have believed it.

—The blow which had vaporized them all, had been brought about with a single slash.

The organization’s headquarters was collapsing.

The place where important things had been gathered, had been blown away by that reigning brilliant existence.

The Purge King had been finally acknowledged as an enemy of the world, having committed a multitude of evil deeds.

The assassin sent by the Dragon Kingdom to subjugate that existence, was none other than—

???: “Reinhard van Astrea, of the Sword Saint bloodline.”

The one who rendered all efforts ineffective, the absurd iron hammer of the divine, had manifested.

12

In that destroyed parlor, a man was standing, serene.

Fiery crimson hair, blue eyes that mimicked the very sky, a white Knight’s uniform left not a single speck of dust, the Knight Amongst Knights stood there, like something out of a painting.

Held in that Knight’s hand, a Holy Sword shattered into innumerable pieces.

With just one swing, a weapon crafted by a master swordsmith who’d left his name upon the world had turned to dust like it was nothing. In compensation, the man who had stacked acts of barbarity upon acts of barbarity and his gang both would be caught in a single blow—

???: “—You’re not a cute opponent at all, you know that, right?

Reinhard: “…”

Like a clap of thunder breaking through the smoke, a terrific sword strike closed in on Reinhard.

And so, with an impact like thunder indeed ringing out, the body of the one labelled the Sword was thrown back. However, his body had not been slashed—The scabbard of his beloved sword had been used to blocked it.

Not with hands, but by twisting his body to receive the slashing strike with the sheath, with movement akin to acrobatics, the young man, Reinhard, then fired a strike of his own—At that Cecilus, let out a whistle.

Cecilus: “Oh, I see you’re still completely beyond the realm of humans… That makes me so happy, Reinhard-san!”

Reinhard: “I believe I am not feeling very pleased about our reunion, Cecilus-dono.”

Carrying the Fiend Sword Murasame on his shoulder, Cecilus kicked some dust on the floor with his zori. Having been greeted with that single blow in lieu of a proper one, Reinhard furrowed his brow.

Then, squinting towards the back of the room, the smoke there clearing up,

Reinhard: “…It did not reach, huh.”

Cecilus: “Ohh, that didn’t reach the boss, did it? Well, it was a blow in a place where Halibel-san and I are guarding, that’s a hard place to get to. But, to be honest, I didn’t particularly move while thinking of protecting the boss, so Halibel-san gets one-hundred-percent of the credit there.”

Saying that, in the inner room, where Cecilus was innocently pointing at with his chin—On the throne shrouded in smoke was the Purge King resting his chin in his hands, and protecting him with his back, was Halibel’s figure.

That Halibel, puffing purple smoke from the kiseru held in his mouth—

Halibel: “Ce-san, a correction. This ain’t my achievement.”

Cecilus: “Well then, it was my hidden power…”

Halibel: “Even that ain’t it. It was, Su-san’s work… This throne’s definitely bein' protected by some sort of tremendous power. Though, we ain't ever heard of it."

At that Cecilus gazing down at his hand while trembling, Halibel shook his head.

Then, behind Halibel, the Purge King who had been seated on the throne until now, rose. And, grabbing the orange scarf he wore around his neck,

Subaru: "—I saw your strike before at the Loot House. To prepare for that's only natural."

Distorting his cheeks, he gave a very grim smile.

This was none other than, the Purge King's—No, Natsuki Subaru's reunion with Reinhard.

Reinhard: "Subaru…!"

Subaru: "You've really drawn a poor lot, Reinhard. Had you not helped me back at the Loot House, it would've have become the mess it is now—But in that case, you wouldn't ever been able to meet your precious master, guess it didn't turn out so bad for you, did it?"

Reinhard: "—Kh."

Peeping out from Halibel's side, Subaru stuck his tongue out at Reinhard.

At that wicked form, Reinhard's cheeks stiffened as if in pain. Swaying sadly, those blue eyes gazed ahead at Subaru, his face wicked and hateful.

But suddenly, that expression disappeared.

Subaru: "—What the hell. After all, you're black and white as well?

Reinhard: "—? Black and white? That is…"

Subaru: "Shut up, you lying bastard—Then, there's no way I'll let myself die to you.”

With emotionless words, Subaru turned away his eyes, having lost interest in Reinhard. And like that, whacking Halibel on the shoulder, then staring at Cecilus as he faced Reinhard,

Subaru: “Cecilus, do what you want, I’ve already lost interest.”

Cecilus: “—I don’t understand much about that, it seems the boss and I see things differently. My thanks for the worthy opponent, do accept those.”

Subaru: “We’re seeing things differently… Haha, that makes sense. Even at the end, you make me laugh.”

As if something about Cecilus’s words was funny, Subaru slapped his knee with amusement.

Then, his smile disappearing immediately,

Subaru: “It was enjoyable in its own way. Cecilus, since you had no weaknesses, you weren’t my favorite.”

Cecilus: “For me, it’d be just that—Mayonnaise is scary.”

Subaru: “Ha~!”

At that cheeky assertion of Cecilus, Subaru laughed as if he was pleased.

Subaru’s appearance, held in Halibel’s arms, sank into a shadow. And like that, Subaru and Halibel had departed from this difficult predicament.

Reinhard: “Wait! Our talk is yet to be…”

Cecilus: “—That’s the end of it, Sword Saint. If you don’t want it to stop there, then please catch up and start over. But before then, this faithful subordinate of the Purge King’s gonna be blocking your way.”

Reinhard: “Kuh… Kh.”

Trying to chase after the disappeared Subaru and Halibel, Reinhard felt something brushing underneath his feet.

Sundering the floor in a straight line, that blow, without a moment of the blade being drawn visible, was an extraordinary flash made viable by overwhelming swinging speed. No more than a sword that had reached the pinnacle of the sword.

Cecilus: “Regrettably, it’s too early to be evaluated in such a manner. I’m still in the middle of climbing that mountain. If I can overcome one more step, I think I can reach it.”

Reinhard: “Reach, where?”

Cecilus: “Of course, the Heavenly Sword.”

At that moment, a sound like the air freezing, like it was being cut and slain, could be heard.

A swordfighter who had truly reached the pinnacle of the sword—no, it was the transparent fighting spirit emitted by the swordsman, which reached a level monstruous enough that it would bring about unfathomable situations contrary to common sense.

That incarnation of the sword standing there; just by touching that blade, even invisible things would perish.

Cecilus: “I was waiting for this opportunity—A chance to cross swords with you.”

Reinhard: “…Cecilus-dono, I have already fought with you before. That match was, to me, of great significance. Why is it you…”

Cecilus: “Of course, if my body can wield a sword—we may only meet in a life-or-death match.”

The second sword, the Fiend Sword Murasame, was unsheathed with gleaming light.

The first sword, the Dream Sword Masayume, desired to cut, the beauty within it reveals.

Of the ten Enchanted Swords, Distinguished Swords, and Holy Swords existing in the world, those amounted to two—Not to mention,

Cecilus: "—The Dragon Sword Reid."

Always besides the Sword Saint, but only ever drawn against opponents suitable for the Sword Saint, that sword shining white exposed its blade to the air.

That the sound of the sword being drawn was being heard, was undoubtedly because the Dragon Sword was ululating.

Cecilus: "You must already know, Reinhard-san. In front of us lies a wall."

With each holding their Holy Sword, their Enchanted Sword, their Dragon Sword, these extraordinary existences faced one another.

Shuffling their feet as to narrow the distance between the two, the world viewed their clash with horror, the atmosphere distorted.

Cecilus: "For those who arrive at a certain realm, the way in front's gonna be blocked by a wall. That wall, which can't be surpassed no matter what, some'll never overcome it and give up. Something like that, it's impossible for me. For if I don't cross that wall, I won't be able to be me."

Reinhard: "…"

Cecilus: "That's when the boss's offer arrived. He offered me a way to get past the wall… Well, it ended up being a way to cross swords with you with lives on the line, setting up a serious fight for one's life—Well, just as he said it, it was to clutch at straws, that sorta thing."

Reinhard: "Straws…?"

Cecilus: "Those who are about to drown do, or so I've heard."

That was the solution that had brought Cecilus Segmunt brought to this place.

Or perhaps, with his desire as a swordsman being guessed correctly, this had been made inevitable?

At that wide-eyed Sword Saint, Cecilus curved his lips.

And, laughed. The Blue Lightning, who with a laughing face would cut down others, spoke,

Cecilus: “I’m drowning, Mister Reinhard van Astrea. Saying it like my employer would; apparently, we, those who deeply desire something, everyone of us, everyone’s drowning. We’re all drowning in an ocyan, or whatever it’s called, which we haven’t even seen before.”

Reinhard: “…”

Swallowed his breath, Reinhard did.

With that, lowering his body, wielding both his swords by their hilt, Cecilus took off his zori.

Cecilus: “—Swordsman, Cecilus Segmunt.”

Not of the Vollachian Empire, not as a General, not as the Blue Lighting—those other titles were unnecessary.

This body, as merely one swordsman, coveted the path towards the Heavenly Sword.

—Lightning, claps of thunder, tore through Pandemonium.

Droplets of blood, danced.

13

—Continuously, Pandemonium quaked.

The aftershocks from the fight, felt as vigorous shocks and tremors, even echoed through Emilia’s private quarters.

The light hanging from the ceiling was violently swaying, dust was falling. While lying in bed, Emilia was being forced to make a choice.

Emilia: “…”

To stay there, that was what had been said to her.

Or perhaps, it had been more of a plea, such as “Please stay”.

Should she believe that and wait, or should she ignore it and rush out?

Her inner thoughts about her situation lost in revolution, she continued to postpone a decision. However—

???: “—Lia, the end has come.”

Emilia: “Eh…”

While that fierce battle’s shaking continued, at the Emilia lying in bed Puck spoke. Her amethyst eyes trembling as they gazed upwards, Puck gave a sniff with his tiny nose, his short arms crossed.

Hearing that it was the end, Emilia gulped.

Yet again, she had been unable to do anything.

Putting off making a choice, then accepting the consequences of not make said choice.

That it was cowardly act she somewhat understood, she, once again —

Had deferred her stance onto Subaru—

Puck: “—Reinhard’s here. It’s Subaru’s defeat.

Emilia: “…”

With that continuation of Puck’s words, Emilia’s thoughts froze.

Emilia: “Ahh.”

Unable to speak but making sounds, unable to form thoughts, Emilia opened her eyes wide.

Even hearing that it was the end, Emilia had been certain of Subaru's victory. That she never for a moment doubted it, Emilia had only realized at this moment.

Natsuki Subaru would not be defeated.

No matter what the opponent, with his selfish excuses and tenacity and abuse of misanthropy, he would always grasp victory. With all under his control, manipulating all subordinates he could think of, no matter the opponent, they would be annihilated.

And, when tired of thinking, and needing a moment of peace, he would come to find Emilia.

Definitely, Subaru was going to come to her room, Emilia had been believing that.

Puck: "Until today, I've never rushed Lia's choices, but that can't be done this time. You have to make a decision."

Emilia: "To make, a decision…"

Puck: "Do you prefer staying here, or leaving here?"

To what extent did he know, for in that plain Puck's voice was conviction.

Puck gazed down at Emilia tightly grasping up her sheets. His usual aloof expression was completely gone, and the compassion for his beloved child was strong instead.

At a dear child that had lost her way and was anxious about the road ahead, a parent's eyes were directed.

Puck: "It looks like, all this time, Subaru had been controlling information properly. There isn't any sign of Lia being involved in the organization's activities. Well, Lia really wasn't involved at all, but having been with them for so long, some people with suspicions will show up for sure. This was a necessary precaution."

Emilia: “Wasn’t involved at all? Then, what kind of position was I in?”

Puck: “From Roswaal’s mansion you were kidnapped, and locked away. That’s how they’re treating you. Then those children attempting to destroy Pandemonium right now, seem more like rescuers who came for you.”

At this unexpected explanation, Emilia was stunned.

That Emilia had been brought out of Roswaal’s mansion against her will was true. And that she had been angered by it, and had disliked Subaru for it, was also truth.

However, she had not refused that clinging, pleading Subaru. It was likewise correct that she had overlooked the fact he had been doing his utmost to protect the time he had spent with Emilia.

And yet despite that, could it really be said that was Emilia wholly unrelated to how things were?

Wouldn’t arguing that just be the peak of shamelessness?

Puck: “Lia, if you just wait here nicely, as a poor princess, your rescuers will aid you, but…”

While speaking as if they were whispering, Puck landed on Emilia’s thin shoulder. And then, with that cat Spirit nearing her cheek, Emilia painfully comprehended the unspoken continuation of his words.

If she waited here, she would be rescued as a victim.

However, if Emilia left by herself, then she would be a perpetrator that had been acting of her own free will.

Faced with that fact, there was not even a moment of hesitation.

Emilia: “…”

Rising, Emilia put her hand on that white room’s only door.

To open it from the outside, a complicated authentication procedure was needed for identification, so Subaru, and her caretaker, Frederica, were the only people allowed to enter or leave.

The moment Emilia's hand touched the door from the inside, however, the system crumbled, leaving no trace behind.

Emilia: "Subaru, you twit…"

Seeking signs of the destroyed technique with the palm of her hand, Emilia murmured in a weak voice.

It had been originally created so it would be broken by Emilia and Emilia alone. In other words, Subaru had made it so Emilia could escape whenever she wished to.

That bird cage's door had been designed to be destroyed by the determination of the bird caged inside all along.

Was it perhaps because Subaru had trusted that Emilia would never escape?

Or maybe, was it Subaru's own kindness, in that he wished to respect Emilia's desire to run away?

That answer, she desired to hear it straight from Subaru's mouth, she thought.

—At the end of a time during which she had not been capable of choosing anything, that was the answer Emilia had settled upon.

14

Having been removed from the reception room, running through the castle along with Halibel, the Purge King, the youth, his boss, his master, he—Natsuki Subaru gave a deep chuckle.

Subaru: "Something like taking Felt as a hostage, I wonder if that might've been a good idea…"

If so, would it have restrained Reinhard's movements?

—No, rather than that, gaining Reinhard’s wrath, and having to fight the Sword Saint powered up with emotion seemed more likely.

This’d be the flow of the simulation till its very end.

In complete honesty, he’d had a premonition that the moment of Pandemonium’s fall would turn out in this manner

Subaru: “Guess posing as a big boss in the underworld was kinda fun…”

He was looking back. At the path towards here.

Just how much suffering had he caused? With the weaknesses of many people in his hands, and all while receiving their hatred, he would lord over others’ lives, receiving hate, ruling over his opponents’ lives, and on a whim taking those lives—

—No, it was definitely never a whim.

If it were perceived as toying, that would a very big misunderstanding.

He had never pondered it over. He had never given it a thought, because there was no point in attempting so, however.

—Subaru was afraid of people. Terribly so.

Outwardly approaching them with a smile, while hiding cunning slyness within himself in truth. That sort of way of being of a human being, concealing the truth, human beings moving as they pleased and move wherever following innumerable ulterior motives, was horrifying.

Whether to believe the people who were with him or not, worrying about that was idiotic.

And so, Subaru had decided on a way to simplify human relationships.

Everyone lied.

And so, with that, even if all human beings detested Subaru, a world devoid of problems would be established.

Every human, no matter who, possessed a weakness. Family, a lover, wealth, dreams, hope. Because of that—

Subaru: "—If only the weaknesses of every human being in the world could be grasped."

Then, only then, Subaru would not have to doubt anyone.

In a black and white world, in a world lacking any hues which could not be trusted, feeding on loathing, he could live comfortably.

Subaru: "…"

With Subaru, aiding in his escape, was Halibel.

To Subaru, Halibel's figure did not look to be their true form—his appearance appeared monochrome. He looked to be in only two colors, white and black.

Subaru: "…"

Appearing in monochrome like that was not restricted to just Halibel.

Right now, the world as it appeared to Subaru had, without exception, lost its colors and changed to possess but two.

People, objects, paintings, tools, jewelry, Magic Stones, fresh blood, water, all were black and white.

Blood and water seemed no different from one another, soup and poison also were not distinguishable.

Everything was monochrome. Black and white.

In such a world, that which looked colorful to Subaru amounted to only a few.

That only those were real, Subaru believed so.

Everything else was fake, Subaru believed so.

Beatrice had been so.

Emilia was so.

Beyond that, there was only one.

Anyway, Subaru could not believe in anyone else.

Everything else other than them, it truly looked faded.

Those fakers could not, only those real articles.

The qualifications to decide whether Natsuki Subaru should live or die were held only by them, only those real articles.

Subaru: "…I had a tad of expectations from Reinhard."

Perhaps those from before those days—in truth, he had expected those he had been involved with before the event that had triggered the loss of color would have remained without those colors fading.

However, he had appeared to Subaru just as monochrome as someone he had just met for the first time. Such expectations had been fleeting, and so Reinhard, despite how vivid he had seemed, now appeared as an ashen mass to Subaru. It looked dirty.

In the end, Reinhard was also a child of man.

There was no doubt that he too would continuously lie while living. That was all there was to it.

???: "Master—!"

As Subaru and Halibel ran through the castle, a sudden loud voice called out to them, intersecting them.

What could be seen dashing from the other side of the corridor towards them, was the long-haired, long in body maid Frederica. Though hard to discern her colors, that face's potent impression was easy enough to remember.

Subaru had secretly found Frederica to his liking. And so—

Frederica: “Prepare yourself—Shh!”

She, rushing in and making an attempt on his life and shouting both in a disciplined manner, appeared to be of a lovable nature to him.

Of course, those actions from Frederica would not be tolerated by the eyes of Kararagi’s strongest.

Frederica “Ah, ugh!”

The dagger in her hand being taken away, Frederica had been pushed up against the wall, her arm pinned. At Halibel, performer of these actions, Frederica could only turn back her head,

Frederica: “Why are you doing this, Halibel-sama? Now, by taking advantage of this turmoil, that man…!”

Halibel: “Ya could kill him. I understand why ya’d think so. Ya children whose weaknesses’ve been grasped, y’all desire for freedom with Su-san’s death. I know, but.”

There, Halibel opened his narrowed eyes, and glared at Frederica. Being bathed in the light of those eyes, from Frederica’s thin throat a quiet sound was produced.

Halibel: “Unfortunately, I don’t follow boss because of my weaknesses. To pay back Su-san’s kindness, that’s why I serve him.”

Frederica: “A kindness?! From this man, kindness? Stop playing around…!”

Held tight against the wall, with bloodshot eyes Frederica looked fiercely at Subaru. Those already sharp fangs grew, and those thin feminine fingers, began transforming into a thick, strong and beast-like state.

Frederica: “No matter what… Hk?!”

Halibel: “Su-san?”

Next to Frederica, fervent, her body distorted, Subaru had at some point come to stand.

Frederica widened her eyes while Halibel called out to him, but Subaru did not pause. Like that, Frederica desperately raised her arm, and grazed Subaru's neck.

At that moment, the scarf wrapped around his throat came undone and fell to the floor—

Frederica: "—Hii."

Frederica, seeing it, from deep in her throat made a sound.

Halibel, too, seeing that for the first time, revealed a faint surprise.

—On Natsuki Subaru's neck, clearly remained marks shaped like fingers.

Subaru: "It won't do, Frederica. I won't allow that black-and-white you to kill me."

Frederica: "…"

At that frozen Frederica, Subaru drew his face close and asserted with certainty.

Perhaps, he had hoped that Frederica may have had some color. Nevertheless, even at this crucial moment, Frederica had remained in black and white.

Subaru: "Halibel-san… Take Frederica, and let her get away."

Halibel: "…Su-san. The insider that dragged in the Sword Saint's prolly—"

Subaru: "I know."

Gazing at that Frederica unable to move an inch, Subaru cut off Halibel's words.

Even without it being said, he understood. It was comprehensible that Frederica had secretly done such things, her emotions, given the extremes of her treatment, were capable of being understood.

—Nay, it was not limited to just Frederica. If not her, that someone else would have done. That it would only be her had been a miscalculation.

Subaru: “You don’t have to come back, Halibel-san. I’ll go settle things, in my own way.”

Halibel: “…”

Subaru: “If you wanna return my kindness, that’ll be enough. In the first place, you got no reason to feel gratitude… I was just being cunning, after all.”

Shaking his head, Subaru smiled lightly at Halibel.

Halibel had, perhaps, regarded Subaru as someone who cared for him. Nevertheless, from Halibel he could not see any color either.

Perhaps, once the color was lost, it would never be restored.

It was because Subaru had lost the right to believe in something.

So was it that not one thing in the world would be colored for Subaru forevermore?

If so, that which was there to cling onto, was only—

Halibel: “With Su-san, I had wanted to be proper friends.”

Subaru: “…If I hadn’t run away, that might have been.”

Accepting Subaru’s intentions, Halibel, with those short words, simply said farewell.

Subaru, too, felt that exchanging more between them would be inappropriate.

But in the end, at that person who could have become a friend, he wanted to look cool.

Subaru: “Frederica.”

Frederica: “…”

At that call, Frederica slowly turned towards him.

At the woman who had lost the will to fight, Subaru was hesitant about how to convey it.

He wished to report to her, because he had been told to do so,

Subaru: “The food was always delicious, they told me that.”

—Perhaps, Frederica did not understand the meaning of that odd sentence.

Till the very end, in her eyes, Natsuki Subaru must have appeared as a monster.

That was fine. Even if it was like that, it did not matter. He had acted as such, he had been such.

He had not obtained the results he wished to see, however.

Subaru: “Then, where should I go, I wonder.”

Halibel had taken Frederica and, fading into the shadows, disappeared.

Left behind, Natsuki Subaru was alone in the collapse of his dreams.

Pandemonium shook constantly, perhaps evidence that Reinhard and Cecilus’s battle raged on. However, the multiple voices he could hear from afar showed that the assault was not limited to only Reinhard; he adjudged that potential foes had taken advantage of the opportunity.

Enemies, enemies, enemies. Nothing but enemies.

Having lived the way he did, it could not be helped.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru had reached a fork, and for nary a moment he hesitated in deciding where to go.

Going right, would have him come across Emilia’s private quarters, the girl who had supported his weak self.

Going left, would have him come across what his weak self had taken as a kind of support, that girl—

Subaru: “—Eh?”

It was at the moment he was faced with the option of where to go.

Someone running up, had pierced Subaru’s left side with a sharp knife.

15

In a strange castle within a strange landscape, Emilia was running barefoot.

Though having spent a year inside Pandemonium, what Emilia knew of the castle was only that white room, her private quarters. Outside her room, and past the inside of the building, had gone completely unexplored by Emilia.

And that still did not change. Emilia’s interest was not focused on this world.

Now, Emilia’s concern was now focused on only one person, only the boy that had sought her.

???: “—Emilia-sama!”

Called by her name, with a startled expression Emilia stopped her steps.

Pandemonium had partially collapsed, losing its original form. In a white corridor, its windows slanted and cracked, Emilia had been halted by a young man with sky-blue eyes and blazing red hair.

Emilia: “Reinhard…”

Reinhard: “Have you been well, Emilia-sama? I am glad to be able to meet you again.”

Even in this place, adhering to a Knight’s courtesy and posture, his attitude was too brave and elegant.

That man had run to Emilia’s side after finding her. Reinhard van Astrea bowed his head. But due to his appearance, Emilia’s amethyst eyes were shaking from bewilderment.

Emilia: “Reinhard, you’re gravely wounded. Are you alright?”

Reinhard: “There is no need to worry. That it is a light wound, cannot quite be said, however.”

Saying that, Reinhard relaxed his lips with Emilia’s words.

But Reinhard’s appearance, to her, was rife with injuries. She had thought it unimaginable.

Covering his body were innumerable cuts produced by flashes of a blade, and with the bleeding having not ceased even now, red droplets of blood were dripping here and there in the white corridor. On those noble and fearless cheeks strands of crimson hair were scattered about, stuck onto it; on his face was a certain hue of fatigue, albeit she had never seen his breathing in a disturbed state.

That white Knight’s uniform was dirtied and covered in blood, not only another’s but his own as well, and what was shocking above all—

Emilia: “Your, sword.”

Reinhard: “That right here right now is a scene for the Dragon Sword to be drawn, has been judged by the sword.”

That never-drawn, never-needed Holy Sword that was passed down through the Astreas, the Dragon Sword Reid with white light shone.

That blade, in this castle, against whom had he wielded it? Against whom would he wield it in the future?

Reinhard: “Anyway, that Emilia-sama is safe is fortunate… Depart from here alongside me. There is a dragon carriage waiting outside the castle. With it, to Lugunica—”

Emilia: “To Lugunica… Where is this?”

Reinhard: “This is at the edge of the Kararagi City-States, a hidden castle at the Crimson Hills Girall… Finding the organization took great effort, but through the efforts of a competent spy and an insider, it was somehow discovered.”

While answering Emilia’s questions, Reinhard was regarding his surroundings warily.

That even now the shaking continued meant that somewhere in this castle a battle was continuing to take place. In Reinhard’s case, he would wish to head towards his allies to support them.

No matter how covered in wounds he was, he was still the Kingdom’s strongest—no, the world’s strongest man.

With him, Pandemonium’s fall was only a question of time.

If he were not here—

Reinhard, “Emilia-sama, right now, we must—”

Hurry from this place, Reinhard might have been trying to say.

However, those words were suddenly interrupted by Emilia’s actions, who had spun in place.

Emilia: “…”

It was but an instant.

From the back, through Reinhard’s abdomen, a sword of ice had pierced. Blood flowed through the blade of frost, his insides being destroyed by the invading cold. The Sword Saint, at the shock he had never felt before, coughed up blood.

Reinhard: “Emilia, sama.”

Emilia: “Ah.”

Reinhard, still unable to understand what had happened, fell onto his knees. Watching that appearance, Emilia blankly stared at her own white fingers.

What she had done, she was realizing that it really had been an unexpected act.

—If this had been a betrayal from Emilia’s true heart, Reinhard could have blocked it.

Were it an attack holding hostility and intent to kill, Reinhard’s intuition would not be evaded. Or, in the case his Divine Protections were working properly, sure enough Reinhard’s defense would not have been pierced either.

But this place was Pandemonium, and Emilia herself could not make up her own mind—That had, in Reinhard, left a fatal gap.

Emilia: “I, can’t…Not that. Subaru is, no. Reinhard, no. Subaru, I won’t let him be hurt. Subaru, needs me…”

Shaking her head in refusal, Emilia’s own actions now corroborated her true intentions.

The reason for that instantaneous act, for the instantaneous assault on Reinhard, was she had instinctively realized that his existence would destroy Pandemonium and target Natsuki Subaru.

And, knowing that, she instinctively did not stop herself, that was what was thinking.

Unconsciously, Emilia, for the sake of protecting Subaru, had no choice but to kill Reinhard.

Emilia: “Subaru is my…”

Only at this point, did Emilia understand her own feelings.

Again and again, Subaru had come looking for her, and she had watched his form on as he had tried to attain peace of mind. During that time, Emilia had also been saved.

—Just as Subaru needed Emilia, Emilia also needed Subaru.

Emilia: "I will, protect him. If, I don't protect Subaru, then…"

Reinhard: "Emilia-sama, that is…"

Emilia: "—Puck! Please!"

A roar, and a cold wind blew, and her silver hair fluttered beautifully amidst the white hallway.

His body bathed in an extremely frigid wind of sublimated intent to kill, at his flesh freezing as it was subjected to severe wind, Reinhard drew a line of blood in midair as he flew far to his back. And, with his coughing mixed with blood, he lifted his sword.

Those blue eyes that reflected the sky regarded the Witch of Glaciation and the Beast of the End, standing side-by-side.

Puck: "Sorry, Reinhard. Lia's wishes are my own. If you're that weakened, even I might win—you can think of it as catlike cruelty."

Emilia: "Please, Reinhard. Return like this. Leave me and Subaru alone."

Reinhard: "—That, is not possible."

With Emilia having caused this situation, yet still trying to find a satisfactory solution, Reinhard shook his head.

Already, negotiations had broken down. He had been taken by surprise from behind—no, perhaps Reinhard himself, even considering his wound, may have accepted the offer of reconciliation if the situation allowed.

But Reinhard's belief, however, was that this was already a situation which did not allow for that.

Reinhard: "As the head of Pleiades, the Purge King, Natsuki Subaru, starting with the murder of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers, among the people of the Kingdom, as well as of the Vollachian Empire and the Kararagi City-States, and among the subjects of the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, has already had one-hundred-twenty-six-thousand-seven-hundred-and-two people killed in total."

Emilia: "…"

Reinhard: "That number only goes for direct damage. When including the indirect damage, the number of victims who have lost their life increases even more. No matter what, it is not an evil that can be left ignored."

Reinhard's words held a serious resonance and held a plea.

From listening to his words and learning of Natsuki Subaru's evil deeds, there was a feeling that he was hoping for a change of heart to be born in Emilia from that.

In truth, Emilia had received a shock. Stuck in her private quarters, having been left only to the role of watching over Subaru's sleeping face, she had not known of any of his wrongdoing. That Roswaal had been killed when she had been pulled out of that mansion, she had vaguely guessed.

Struck by that shock, Emilia bowed her head.

Shock, there was definitely a shock. However, the shock Emilia felt to her core was not from disappointment about the weight and number of sins Subaru had committed—

Emilia: "—Sorry, Reinhard. Still, Subaru is dear to me."

Even having learned about those evil acts her obsession with Natsuki Subaru had not wavered at all, learning that had been the source of her shock.

Emilia's feelings, even knowing the truth, had not changed.

Reinhard: "—Kh."

Faced with such a declaration from Emilia, Reinhard bit his lip. And soon raising his face, and directing the drawn Dragon Sword, Reinhard: “Reinhard van Astrea, of the Sword Saint bloodline.”

Emilia: “I’m Emilia. Just, Emilia.”

Having each named themselves, at that next moment, a white shock destroyed the uppermost floor of Pandemonium.

The captive princess, who had been supposed to be rescued, and a Knight in shining armor who had come to rescue her, would end up killing one another.

16

Subaru: “Damn, it… Fucking… That, damn… bastard…!”

Cursing, Subaru ran, his steps faltering.

Beneath those swaying feet, with a tip-tap droplets of fresh blood trickled—a knife had been stabbed by his left armpit by an assassin at the time of his assault. The pain was performing a Dempsey Roll on his brain non-stop.

Subaru: “That black and white asshole… If there’s a next time, I’ll definitely kill you…!”

Sweating profusely, Subaru leaned on the corridor wall to continue moving along. At the end of it all, the assassin had run away, without delivering the coup d’grâce—the man who was supposed to have disappeared in the reception hall came to mind.

Bastard: “More than this is beyond the scope of my work. So, be careful, Natsuki-san.”

Killing the general lying in the midst of the enemy, then speaking some and escaping could be called splendid—Yet Subaru did not have giving praise to his enemies as an hobby.

To be precise, that man had been doing work he did not wish to have to do. That sense of pure humiliation due to having overlooked a troublesome enemy out of carelessness had his disappointment turn to fury.

However, it was unlikely that this situation would allow him to vent his anger.

Subaru: “Something suitable for the end, something suitable for these last moments…”

Prick-Prick, while touching that left armpit that hurt as if burned, Subaru murmured gloomily.

Given what he had done, he knew for certain that someday he would receive his just deserts. Despite that, to postpone that moment of meeting retribution all the way to hell had been the plan, such was this ordinary person’s petty wisdom—it was a shame that he had gone not three years before having found his limit.

Such was how the dictator would welcome his end.

His distrust at the end had been excessive. There was no doubt that it had spurred on this destruction.

However, he held no regrets.

If he had done this, if he had done that, those kinds of obvious mistakes did not come to mind.

He had known from the start that it was wrong, and never thought to correct it. Merely thinking that his way of life had been mistaken or something of the sort, Subaru had done nothing but flounder.

Much like if he were drowning. As if he had fallen in, only desperate for breath.

Just from that—

???: “—Subaru.”

Subaru: “…”

Leaving a trail of blood, crawling through that hallway, someone called out to that Subaru.

For a moment, Subaru furrowed his brows, not understanding that voice—It was not that he did not know it. But, because he did not comprehend why he was hearing that voice at this place.

Because her private quarters were on the opposite side of this place, and there would no reason to be here if her intent were to escape. Therefore—

Subaru: “Uh, whoa!”

???: “I’m relieved, Subaru… I can meet you properly.”

Subaru: “Emilia…?”

It was not until he looked into her beautiful face from up-close, her having rushed towards him and knocked him down within that corridor, that Subaru came to grips that this was reality.

Together with that world of black and white, there was silver, and there was amethyst, and there were cherry-colored lips.

As if to inform that Emilia, and Emilia alone, remained with color in the world.

Subaru: “—But, why?”

Emilia’s figured was tinted, yet Subaru could not comprehend as to why.

From Emilia, Subaru was receiving definite warmth, her embrace such that it could even be called painful.

After all, Subaru had always sought Emilia out one-sidedly; for what reason, what conditions had made her become so that she would come to Subaru—

Subaru: “…Emilia, you’re hurt.”

Emilia: “—It’s fine, really. Truly, nothing happened. No need for concern.”

Emilia, still embracing him, looked at him again. Smiling, putting on a brave front, she was covered in wounds all over.

Her wonderful silver hair was disheveled and portions had been cut, giving it an uneven appearance. Her thin white nightgown had been torn and bloodied, and on her bare feet several painful lacerations could be found.

To prevent it from being like this, innumerable defensive measures should have been applied to her private quarters.

Furthermore, there should have been a Spirit alongside her, one that would have not permitted her going through any of this suffering.

Subaru: “What has Puck been doing…”

Emilia: “Puck is… Hmm, about that, everything’s fine now. Everything’s fine now…”

Subaru: “—?”

For a moment, hesitation flashed within Emilia’s eyes, but it was hidden quickly, beneath shutting eyelids.

Subaru held suspicions regarding that reaction, but the next time Emilia opened her eyelids, the faintly-visible hesitation was nowhere to be found.

Emilia: “Subaru, let’s run away together. If we do it now, nobody will be chasing after us.”

Subaru: “—Run away, with me?

Emilia: “Yes. Who else would it be with? Don’t say such weird things.”

Her demeanor becoming slightly tinged by anger, Emilia poked Subaru’s nose with a finger. Due to that seemingly way out-of-place act, above Subaru a question mark floated up.

To begin with, Emilia was supposed to be shunning Subaru.

Subaru: “And yet, all I did was presume upon you because you’re kind…”

Emilia: “—Really, did you? I’ve been thinking about something like that too.”

Subaru: “Emilia?”

Her hand on her chest, Emilia ephemerally lowered the corners of her eyes, appearing lonely.

Were the times she had passed alongside Subaru ever since he had taken her away flashing through her heart, through her mind? How many times had she gazed at that abominable companion’s sleeping face?

In those times, Subaru had received salvation, but to Emilia they would have been filled with humiliation—

Emilia: “I do believe was angry with you, Subaru. But, it truly only at the beginning… After that, I thought I was definitely receiving Subaru’s help.”

Subaru: “Receiving help, from me…?”

Emilia: “Because, Subaru, you had been needing me. Nobody would ever need me, that was how I had felt, and you had freed me of that, and so…”

“Codependency”, a word of that sort surfaced inside Subaru’s mind.

Subaru had required Emilia’s presence for peace of mind, and, much in that vein, Emilia’s mind too had arrived at a conclusion of that ilk at the time, that she herself desired those times, that she needed them.

And so, the pair had fallen into a codependent relationship, each in turn relying on the other.

Emilia: “Subaru, I want to be with you. So, let’s run away?”

Subaru: “…You putting it like that makes me happy, but…”

Responding while stuttering, Subaru could not accept Emilia’s confession yet.

His heart was overwhelmed with shock, but taking little notice of that, his mind reached a more realistic answer.

What Emilia had said, running away with her, was not possible.

Reinhard was coming. Even if Cecilus was attempting to hold him at bay, outside the castle a massive crowd of enemies would be gathered to subjugate the Purge King.

No longer did Subaru possess a single ally outside the castle. His numerous tricks for the sake of keeping potential enemies in check, would not function in this situation. Those potential enemies had become concrete ones blocking his path.

Taking Emilia and running away, it was not realistic at all.

Natsuki Subaru was to meet his end here. Here, he would come to an end—

Emilia: "—Then, I'll die together with you."

Subaru: "…"

At that moment, Subaru was stunned. More so than when he was stabbed, or when Reinhard first appeared, or when he realized that this was the end.

The smiling Emilia gazed on at Subaru, and spoke words containing love and definite affection.

If Natsuki Subaru was to meet his end, Emilia as well, in this place —

Emilia: "We'll meet the end together. I don't want to stay in a place where you won't need me."

Subaru: "—Ah."

Emilia: "Please, Subaru. I, need you. I want you to be with me."

Emilia clung closer to his chest. Relishing in her warm droplets and the feeling of her sighs, Subaru got the strong sense that the feeling he needed was the exact opposite of what he usually felt.

Just as he had clung onto Emilia, Emilia was now clinging onto Subaru.

All along, Subaru had been needing Emilia, having been receiving salvation from her.

And now, Emilia needed Subaru, seeking salvation.

Now, Emilia was in need of Subaru, calling for salvation of her own.

That a moment like this would come now, such a thought had not even—

Emilia: "Subaru…?"

Grabbing Emilia's clinging shoulders, Subaru shoved her away.

And, standing up in front of her, motionless, her eyes opened wide in shock, Subaru then stepped back.

Emilia was looking upwards, towards Subaru.

And to Emilia, his lips trembling, Subaru uttered.

Subaru: "That's, a lie…"

Shaking his head horizontally in refusal, Subaru stared at Emilia—with fearful eyes.

Emilia: "Suba…"

Subaru: "No, please stop, stop it. Why me, why now, why! Stop it! Stopit stopit stopit! PLEASE STOP!!"

Fear, it was fear.

There was fear. There was nothing but fear. There was only fear. Certainly, only fear.

Fear, fear, fear, fear, fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear fear

???: “—With so much of the Witch’s stench drifting from you.”

He covered his ears.

He held his head.

Trying to run away from that voice, from that raised shriek, from that audible voice.

???: “—There’s a limit to how much you can pretend to be unrelated to her!!”

As to cover his ears.

As to hold his head.

As to try to run away from that voice, from that raised shriek, from that audible voice, but unable to do such a deed.

???: “—Nee-sama is too kind.”

Subaru: “Do you think I would be aware of such a thing, AHHHHHH—Hk!!”

Screaming loud enough to the point of vomiting blood, Subaru retreated backwards.

Emilia stood up, asking him what was going on. He could not hear it.

With sweet, sugary, tender words, she tried to nestle closer to Subaru. He could not hear them.

Her words, her voice, were not being heard. He did not want to hear them.

Don’t be kind to me. Don’t treat me gently.

For what reason, are you trying to snuggle up to me?

Such a thing should be impossible.

Just how many evil deeds do you think I’ve piled up?

Emilia shouldn’t have forgiven them.

She really shouldn’t.

Was I the one to change that?

Had Natsuki Subaru’s foolishness, by having leaned on Emilia, by having relied on Emilia to sleep at night and get through everything, snot pathetically running from his nose, Subaru leaning, his pathetic nose running, on that pajama-wearing Emilia’s nights having relied on to overcome, been what had changed Emilia?

Did Emilia change as well?

Subaru: “It, would’ve been fine if you hated me! It would’ve been fine if you shunned me!”

Emilia: “…”

Emilia, was fading to gray.

Color faded from Emilia, washing away, plunged into the world of monochrome.

It was a lie, it had been a lie. That deception had caused Subaru's world to fade in tonality.

The silver, the amethyst that composed Emilia, the colors that made up the beautiful Emilia Subaru believed in disappeared from her, her deception causing her to be tainted by black and white.

That reality, he could not accept. Emilia was noble, and that would never change.

Even if she hated them, she could not keep someone who clung on to her away.

Because he had believed that her kindness was the materialization of her inner heart, and that she would never forgive Subaru, Subaru had been able to indulge himself in Emilia.

But, comprehending that Emilia too, changed—

Subaru: "Don't, act kindly towards me…!"

Subaru: "No matter what, you'll come to hate something about me, won't you? You'll come to doubt me, won't you? Because I'm an obstacle, you'll think of murdering me, of hating me, of cursing me, and you'll come to betray me!"

Subaru: "Then, please keep hating me, like it was at the start! If you'd just stayed like that, without changing, it would've been fine! Just do as you did, and hate me. Just do as you did, and hate me …!"

Suddenly welling up, was anger.

He was proceeding to drown in anger, at anything and everything in the world.

In trying to save his drowning self, he had struggled desperately as to try and take repeated breaths. But having finally at this juncture, even Emilia had betrayed Subaru.

—Something that changed would one day come to betray him, and because of that, it was similar to having been betrayed already.

Subaru: “Please don’t you pretend to be in love with me when you’ll just betray me one day!!”

Emilia: “—Hk.”

Shakily, Subaru thrusted away the monochrome Emilia extending a hand towards him.

Pushed back with resolve, Emilia fell over in the hallway, having lost her support. For a moment, hesitation brushed against his chest, but Subaru fully painted it over with fear.

Even Emilia was no longer tranquil.

That this would come to pass someday, it was the very last possibility he had considered—He had not been thinking that she would be in such need of him.

—That Emilia could, someday, forgive Subaru.

That such a day would never come had been his hope, and that was fine, but sure enough, it had surely materialized.

Therefore, Subaru, left in this world of only black and white, could only rely on his last resort, the only thing in his possession.

Emilia: “—!!”

That fallen Emilia, was shrieking something.

Leaving it behind his back, Subaru began sprinting.

He could not feel any pain in his side. He no longer cared about such a thing.

There was merely a wish to end everything. Subaru’s world of color was disappearing entirely.

What remained was, just that.

The last straw on to which the drowning Natsuki Subaru clung onto, was merely——An existence with hatred that would never change, which would not forgive Subaru.

Emilia: “—!!”

That half-mad Emilia’s voice did not reach that half-mad Subaru.

The collapse of that den of wickedness, Pandemonium, much like the collapse of its master’s mind, advanced at increasing speed.

Within that world crumbling, that world devoid of color, Subaru had finally arrived.

Subaru: “…”

He arrived at Natsuki Subaru’s office, still whole.

Firm protections, like those that had been used for Emilia’s private quarters, had been applied to it—Because, in this room, there was something which absolutely should never be damaged there, much like Emilia.

He had kept Emilia away out of a wish for harm not to befall her, but this was the opposite.

That which had been set up at the place closest to himself, was what Subaru opened up.

The door concealed behind the bookshelf, was truly a door that no one, with the exception of Subaru, would be able to open.

Without haste, Subaru opened it.

On the other side of the open door, the sound of chains, the sound of chains linked to the wall, reverberated.

And, while playing that sound of chains, pink-colored eyes gazed at Subaru, and spoke.

???: “—Finally, did you come wanting to die, Barusu?”

—Solely because of her hatred, the girl that desired to murder his own self held a minute smile, with the color of blood.

Gluttony IF: Patching Together a Life in Another World From Zero

1

Patching together, patching together, continuing to form its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to mold its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to fill in the colors.

Patching together, patching together, patching together, and continuing towards bringing himself closer to completion.

Patching together, patching together.

Patching together, patching together, patching together, and even now, as he patched himself together, he was still incomplete—

2

???: “—Hey, do you know my name?”

The little girl, Amue Sears, held her breath at that question.

It was quite an ordinary question, without any real coherence to it. It should have been a dull question that wouldn’t have required much time or preparation to answer. If you know it, you know. If you don’t know it, you don’t. That’s all it was.

Amue: “…”

But, Amue's voice did not come out at that question, even if it were to be seen at face value.

Life was a series of choices. This was the reality which even Amue, who had just turned 14 years of age, was well aware of from her experiences in her short life.

When it comes to life, decisions have to be made in just about everything. It begins from small, ordinary things, or, perhaps it was a variety of the big decisions that affect life. But, setting aside whether they were big or small, life was made up entirely of decisions.

And now, a question which held the greatest weight of her 14 years alive was raised at Amue Sears. Or perhaps, it was the greatest decision of her life. That dull, insignificant question, with nothing special about it, that had been raised just before, was that very thing.

???: "—Hey, do you know my name?"

The repeated question kept tightening Amue's throat. Nevertheless, the one who had raised the question didn't seem to have wanted to cause that. It was even a kindness to repeat the question once again; such a consideration felt like quite an imbalance.

If it was the one questioning that was tormenting Amue, then it was also the one questioning that held the most anxiety for Amue. In truth, she understood that he was just seeking an answer to the question. That's why Amue would have to grope for the right solution amongst the options, without any hints other than what was available from pondering it over within her head.

—What would really be the correct answer?

Know it, or don't know it: which was the one that the questioner was looking for? Or perhaps it would be better to answer that she knew it, even if she didn't? Or, would it be better to answer that she didn't know it, even if she did?—Amue's heart shrieked at the two anguishing choices.

???: “—Hey. Do. You. Know. My. Name?”

Each part of the question that was once again repeated was punctuated in impatience. Even if they didn’t understand each other, would that make him anxious? That fear plucked at Amue’s chest. To be honest, she could be convinced that if she didn’t answer with either a “Yes” or “No” that it’d be unconditionally impossible to meet the questioner’s expectations.

She couldn’t end it still without saying anything, still without giving a response, and still without making a decision. She would not be set free. —Only in that, there was no doubt.

Amue: “…”

Still her voice didn’t come out. She returned the gaze of those black eyes which were right in front of her. Amue pondered. Within those vacant black eyes, the terrible visage of the haggard Amue herself could be seen within them. She really didn’t want to say it out loud, but in her own appearance, she was self-conscious of the way she could be seen; she had become a mere shadow of her former self.

Being absolutely terrified of the dominance of the questioner right in front of her eyes, she cowered.

Amue’s face was drawn out, exhausted, as if she had aged dozens of years all at once. If things continued this way, she’d end up dying by the mere pressure of the question itself; fragilely she—

???: “—Hey, do you know my name?”

The strong feeling of pressure that gave her the impression of death suddenly, quite on the contrary, inspired hope within Amue. Whilst Amue experienced the suffocating sensation that felt like her chest was about to cave in, a premonition that she’d answer the question and then be set free encompassed her. Just as she thought that, she realized that the dismal sensation that been dominating her entire body had started to fade.

A sense of suffocation had come from the strong pressure of her doubts concerning what she should answer. Since she wanted to be set free from this, she would need to bite down her anxiety at the initial question. Perhaps it was a kind of self-defense instinct, but for Amue in this moment, this appeared like a divine revelation. Therefore, with her lips trembling, she once again stared back into those black eyes.

???: [—Hey, do you know my name?]

She would be set free from her current suffocation by answering the question. With all her willpower, Amue finally moved her trembling tongue, and formed some words.

Amue: [N… no…]

In accordance with her heart, Amue replied that she didn't know. She released her thoughts from the choices which had been up until then endlessly spinning around in her mind.

She answered the question with utmost lucidity. In fact, she didn't know neither the name or face of the questioner that stood in front of her.

When it came to her, who lived in a place that ought to be called the borderlands, the so to speak remote countryside, events from the Kingdom, even serious ones, were like rumors from a faraway land.

That's why, no matter how much of a big shot he was, to her, he was a stranger that she didn't know—

???: [—Is that so?]

It was a short reply. She couldn't tell whether deep emotion or dejection had been put into that reply. But Amue's decision had been formed. What came after was the questioner's problem.

If life was a series of choices and decisions, then that was the same for anyone. Since Amue had chosen, the questioner would also have to chose.

Amue: “…”

The 14 year old little girl waited for the questioner’s choice silently.

—She waited for his answer all alone in the middle of a village where no one had been left except for her.

3

???: [Hey, Subaru. Isn’t it time for lunch soon?]

Stopping in his tracks at hearing that call, Natsuki Subaru rubbed his stomach. The time had already passed noon, and now that it had been mentioned, he was indeed feeling hungry. The reason behind why he hadn’t noticed it until now was because he had been concentrating on walking about without heed. The main road continued endlessly on and on to the extent that he had to concentrate entirely on walking. If he were to think about where he was headed to, it’d get to the extent that he’d feel depressed; such was how absurdly long the journey was.

Subaru: “Though, a break is important don’t you think? My bad, Emilia-tan. Did you get tired?”

Emilia: [Not at all, I’m doing fine. But, it was just on my mind that I was worried for Subaru, who’s been walking all this time. If you’re alright, it’s fine, but…]

Subaru: “Nono, that’s right, my stomach was rumbling as well. I’m absolutely starving, almost to the point where my stomach was dangerously close to sticking to my back. Heh, how dangerous how dangerous.”

Emilia: [Is that so? That would be a reaaaaaally dangerous place for them to be, right…]

Having heard Subaru’s answer, who had exaggeratedly placed his hands on his stomach, the silver haired girl—Emilia placed her hand against her mouth and giggled. Her features looked the prettiest in this world, and the sound of her voice was rather like that of a silver bell. As that smiling face drew nearer, Subaru scratched his head and also let his lips split into a smile. And, from beside those two—

???: [Don’t tease Emilia too much, I suppose. No matter how rumbly your stomach is, it’s impossible for your stomach and back to stick together, in fact.]

Subaru: “Oopsy.”

When he turned his head to look at the direction of the voice, Beatrice was there, a composed expression resting on her face and her arms folded. Subaru suddenly narrowed his eyes at the point made by the little girl who was wearing a pretty dress. Seeing that, Beatrice furrowed her well-kept eyebrows and said [What, I suppose?]

Beatrice: [Subaru’s face is a little unsettling, in fact. What’s the matter, I suppose?]

Subaru: “It was so cute when you said rumbly. Say it again!”

Beatrice: [Grrrrr, in fact! Don’t get caught up in such strange things, I suppose!]

With her face flushed, Beatrice snapped back at Subaru’s frivolous words. Subaru and Emilia both exchanged glances and laughed seeing how Beatrice had reacted. She had puffed out her cheeks even more. Seeing her like that was really cute. —There was no mistake about it. If he were to tell her this directly, he would probably dampen her mood. After confirming that, Subaru rolled up one of his sleeves with an “Alright!”

Subaru: “Well then, how about we take advantage of Emilia-tan’s concern and start lunchtime? For the time being, let me show off my talent. Any requests?”

Emilia: [Ah, well then, I want you to use mayonnaise. Hey, look, I imagine Ram just made some mayonnaise again, right?]

Subaru: “Of course, of course, it’s my pleeeeasure if that’s Emilia-tan’s order! Luckily, there’s plenty thanks to Ram’s stockpiles. She finally recognized the appeal mayonnaise has…”

Ram: [—Stop saying such idiotic things.]

Subaru: “Uwaaa?!”

After he placed down the baggage that he had been carrying, Subaru started to make a campsite just off of the main road. Seeing some slender legs standing roughly beside him, pale pink eyes were staring down at the surprised Subaru. The figure stood embracing her own arms, an air of majesticness about her. The girl held a look that showed nary a trace of hospitality as a stark contrast to the maid outfit she donned—

Subaru: “That was quite the abrupt greeting, eh, Ram. At least let me finish what I’m saying!”

Ram: [Hah! Stop making me laugh. I only help out in making mayonnaise because it’s a professional order. Would Ram trust in such a flavoring that’s just sour and white? Disgusting.]

Subaru: “Saying it’s disgusting is such an overstatement! To begin with, you shouldn’t be able to deny the explosive power of using mayonnaise on steamed potatoes! I won’t let you say that the taste is a lie!”

A flavor coated in plenty of mayonnaise on the steamed potatoes that came fresh from the oven which were full of salt. The sweetness of the forbidden flavors which overwhelmed one’s tongue was an Eden that should be savored by any mayonnaise lover at least once—Potatoes and mayonnaise indisputably held the highest compatibility with each other that could never lose its luster.

Subaru’s mouth watered as he recalled that splendid harmony of taste. Were the ones next to Subaru imagining the same taste? He could see Emilia and Beatrice’s eyes shimmering.

Subaru: “Look at that, the reactions of two cute gourmands! Seeing that, can you still slander mayonnaise with your heresy?!”

Ram: […Ah well. It’s as Barusu says. The magnificence of steamed potatoes is such that even strange seasonings like mayonnaise can add value to them.]

Subaru: “It’s not that way, it’s the opposite! No, even me saying the opposite isn’t right, it’s more like you’re being stubborn. Isn’t that right, nee-sama!”

In the end, Ram would never yield to saying that the contribution of mayonnaise was greater than that of steamed potatoes. Even though Subaru shook his fist at that obstinate attitude, Emilia broke into strained laughter, speaking out a “Now now, settle down” to the two of them.

Emilia: [Subaru, calm down. I like both mayonnaise and steamed potatoes, as well as mayonnaise placed on steamed potatoes. Besides, it’s rather just down to the fact that Ram can’t bring herself to be honest.]

Ram: […Emilia-sama, please stop concerning yourself with speaking out Ram’s thoughts as you please. Ram’s target age is going to lower with Emilia-sama speaking like that.]

Emilia: [S-Sorry. But, what do you mean by target age…?]

Emilia was perplexed by Ram’s unreasonable and unintelligible reaction. However, the feelings which had been expressed in the two’s conversation weren’t ones of moodiness, but rather they were feelings of unconcealable deep affection and faith. On the contrary, Emilia and Ram had built up quite an ideal relationship with each other. Calling it a master-servant relationship was quite a delicate issue as from Ram’s perspective she didn’t think of herself as a subordinate, however there were more bonds between the two of them. And only Subaru understood those well. In any case—

Subaru: “I feel bad for Nee-sama, but Emilia-tan’s word of God takes complete priority. That’s the style of this party. Anywho, today’s lunch will have a whole bunch of mayonnaise!”

Emilia: [Yaaay, yippee!]

Emilia clapped in delight, and Ram gave an exasperated sigh. Even so, that was enough for Ram to not cling onto it more than that.

Emilia herself understood its deliciousness. Of course, since Subaru was a true, unbridled mayo-lover, he would be the biased judge for this menu.

Subaru: “Of course, Beako loves mayonnaise a lot just like me. It makes you happy, right?”

Beatrice: [I can’t deny it, in fact. But, the oh so omniscient manner you speak about it in is irritating, I suppose. Betty’s anger isn’t easy to dispel, in fact. I want a delicious meal for that, I suppose.]

Subaru: “Hehe, as you wish.”

Puffing out her slender chest, Beatrice made her cute special request. Subaru gave a bow at the request. After seeing that dramatic gesture, and making sure that Emilia and the others were satisfied, they began preparing the meal. Even so, they couldn’t make such an elaborate meal in the open air. Of course, if they used the power of magic they could use fire and water like that, but,

Emilia: [I’m sorry, Subaru. I can’t really help you out much.]

Subaru: “You needn’t say sorry. Now is my time to shine, don’t you think? On the contrary, it’s fine if you fall in love with me again when I show off my unexpected creative skills.”

Emilia: [Jeez, you’re such an idiot.]

Returning a smile at Emilia who still had a faint smile on her face, Subaru set about on coming up with something to prepare the meal with the ingredients that were at his disposal now. Food was what provided their energy each day; he didn’t want to be shoddy with it. Checking the contents of his baggage, Subaru did everything he could to prepare a meal which could meet everyone’s needs. Everyone that accompanied him would be given tasty food to eat.

He hadn’t thought about it up until now, but it would be delightful for everyone to receive his tasty cooking that he had made to eat. That too served as a motivation for him as he made the food. If he was able to do such a simple thing so well, then that ought to have delighted his mother quite a lot.

Emilia: [Mhmhmhmhm…]

Whilst confining those emotions to a corner of his mind, Subaru peered out nearby at those who were busying themselves cooking and his cheeks relaxed at seeing the cheerful figures of Emilia and the others. He could even hear some humming. It was out of tune.

???: [Oho, the one on meal duty today is onii-sa~n. That's quite worryi~ng.]

Meili had appeared as they were making the preparations for the meal. She turned towards Subaru, giving him a look that was not suiting to her age as she twiddled her fingers through her deep blue braided hair. Subaru returned her gaze with a suspicious look in his eyes on seeing her sweetly smiling figure.

Subaru: "Worrying, huh? What worries. I ain't going to let a girl who says such impertinent things eat!"

Meili: [Wow, that's abu~se. Besides, isn't it Onii-san that tries to soak everything in may~onnaise? I don't really like it at all.]

Subaru: "Wh- what?! You as well don't know the charm of mayonnaise…?!"

Meili: [Don't make a face like the world's about to e~nd.]

Meili gave a sigh at seeing Subaru making such an astonished face. But, the shock that Subaru had received on hearing her reply was immeasurable. Even if it wasn't tantamount to it being the end of the world, the shock he had received was like as if he had realized it was the end of this year.

???: [Even so, I think you're taking it a little too seriously. Miss Meili was just saying that she was not on the same wavelength as you, who tries to mix mayonnaise into just about any ingredient.]

Subaru: "Ugh…"

It was Julius who had followed up Meili's words, as she showed her objections to mayonnaise. He was a handsome man, who embodied gracefulness even in his gait. Julius, who had made his way over to him, grinned at Subaru all of a sudden.

Julius: [If I may add something, I too share the same opinion as Miss Meili. Thought mayonnaise itself isn't that bad, its first impression diminishes when you put it on everything. You have to be careful with it, you know.]

Subaru: "You're such a prickly, noisy guy. What was happening now was an issue between me and Meili. It would have been nice if you didn't come butting in."

Julius: [I guess in my role as one of the members here, it's my duty to preserve the healthy environment of the group. Ignoring the seed of disagreement would result in it budding and on it blossoming, you will repent and lament it all too much. It's my duty to give you advice before it becomes that. And with all that, you're reacting like that?]

Subaru: "You're a guy who always has a comeback for everything I say, aren't you!"

Expressing himself in such a roundabout way, Julius poked at each of Subaru's indiscretions. Feeling like he'd been cornered by his words, Subaru's voice became rougher.

And, having heard their exchange, Emilia burst into laughter with a "Hehe"

Subaru: "Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: [As always, Julius and Subaru are reaaaallly good friends]

Subaru dejectedly dropped his shoulders seeing Emilia's gaze which looked as if she was looking at something pleasant. Also in the same standpoint, Julius closed one of his eyes whilst brushing his hand through his fringe.

Just this time did Subaru and Julius's opinions seem like they saw eye to eye. But, it seemed like there was quite the difference between the way Emilia received that opinion. Since her jewel-like amethyst eyes seemed to view the exchange between Julius and Subaru just now as if it had been an act between two close friends.

Subaru: “Umm, Emilia-tan. I’m always saying this, but that’s a…”

Emilia: [That’s a?]

That was always a big misunderstanding, no matter what the circumstances may be. Subaru tried to explain that to Emilia who had inclined her head in doubt—、

Subaru: “That’s a…”

Emilia: [□□□]

The words he had tried to continue as his explanation, the start of them halted, and Subaru’s lip stiffened.

Just now, Emilia’s movement, who had inclined her head and had been smiling in front of his eyes, came to a standstill. —No, it wasn’t just Emilia who came to a standstill.

Around Subaru’s surroundings where everyone had been in the midst of cooking up until now, everyone who had been speaking stopped in their tracks. Everyone became completely stiff. —It was as if the world’s time had entirely come to a stop awaiting Subaru’s next move.

But, the sound of the wind, the scent of the greenery and the boiling water indicated that it wasn’t so. The world hadn’t come to a stop. —Only Emilia and the others had. It’s as if Subaru was awaiting for the images to catch up with him, to try and make them reappear.

But, just Emilia and the others had come to a stop—

??? “—Master~! Badump, I went to check ahead~!”

Subaru: “…”

Suddenly, an extraneous presence thrust itself into the silent world which had been at a standstill. It moved in front of Subaru’s eyes, who had been kindling the fire sat atop of a boulder. The figure jumped nimbly, diving towards him with great vigor.

???: “Here’s to the quick return of Shaula! Master, please praise me and hug me and love me!”

A tall, beautiful woman, with a smile adorning her features, turned towards Subaru and said that. She was someone who exposed her clear white skin, and had long, tied-up brown hair. She showed off her sexy feminine body without any shame—The woman, Shaula, let a carefree smile float across her face.

Subaru: “…”

However, Subaru’s reaction to Shaula’s appearance was quite poor. That too should have been expected. She had came barging in just as Emilia was smiling.

Her exuberantly lively leap had scattered Emilia, and she had also erased all the others that had stood still. Subaru frowned at that fact.

Shaula: “Wh-What? Wh-What’s wrong, master? Did I maybe mess up again?”

Subaru: “…No, it’s fine. Don’t worry about it. You didn’t do anything wrong.”

Shaula: “Is that so? Well then, I won’t worry! Ah, besides that, Master I’m glad you’re preparing the meal! I’m staaaarving~”

For a moment, Shaula’s face had clouded over at seeing Subaru’s facial expression, but as soon as she heard Subaru’s backtracking, she went to over to embrace Subaru, her face with nary a trace of her earlier anxiety.

Even though he felt Shaula’s body pressing against his arms, and her hellish softness against his elbow and shoulder, Subaru shook her off with a blunt: “Hey, get off of me.”

Shaula: “Ah! Master’s so mean…But I won’t be discouraged. Bambambam, by attacking you in this way, I will snipe right for Master’s heart, soul and male instincts.”

Subaru: “Like, it’s as if you’re aiming right in the middle… Also, don’t go grabbing the arms of people in the middle of cooking. What would you do if I ended up burning my hand?”

Shaula: “If that were to happen, I’d gently lick the affected part! I would lick it and lick it day and night without letting go!”

Subaru: “That wouldn’t stop it from swelling…”

Shaula insisted, raising both of her arms vigorously. Subaru shrugged his shoulders seeing that attitude from Shaula and gave a feeble laugh. Seeing that, Shaula raised her eyebrows with a: “So, so!”

Shaula: “Did Master laugh just now? Did something amusing happen?”

Subaru: “What’s amusing is you, just you.”

Shaula: “Ehh, is that… a marriage proposal…?”

Subaru: “How did you come to that conclusion?!”

He didn’t know how the conversation had jumped to that, but Subaru poked Shaula on her forehead (whose cheeks were squirming, dyed in red), putting into his feelings of denial and his objections to it. Receiving that, Shaula groaned, “Oww~”

Shaula: “Wellwell, doesn’t saying “You’re an amusing woman” act like a legal right for a man and woman to fall in love with each other! After saying that, shouldn’t you just be continuing it with “Be my woman”?!”

Subaru: “Really, where did you hear such one-sided information? That pattern seems to have grown old even from where I am from already; you hardly see it anymore… “

Maybe it wasn’t seldom whereby male protagonists would handle these first-met events in games targeted towards women, or in Shoujo manga. But, Subaru didn't know whether that was still in use now.

In any case, referring to Shaula as amusing was not so he could seduce her. But, as far as Subaru was concerned, Shaula's reaction was—

Subaru: "—The thing you said was unexpected, it was new."

Shaula: "…"

Subaru: "That's why talking with you isn't… so bad. I have no doubts about that."

He wouldn't specifically say that talking to people other than Shaula was painful. But, when Subaru conversed with other people, naturally, it would be often that he would be made aware of his own incompleteness. And that was painful. It didn't mean that someone was at fault. —The one at fault was always himself.

Subaru: "The one who's at fault… is always me. That's why…"

Shaula: "In other words, this time, it's a marriage proposal?!"

Subaru: "What the hell, no!"

The mood that came with that earnest speech lasted only for a second. Shaula let her discontentment rain at the shouting Subaru. She wiggled her hands and feet and said "Eeh~"

Shaula: "Butbut, in the place where I spent my time in idle grey, it was you that blew a new wind into me. It's like that. Doesn't that make it still a legal right within a legal right~?"

Subaru: "Absolutely not. So, where on earth does your biased source of knowledge come from…?"

He had intended to have a relatively serious conversation, but Shaula had completely broken that, and so Subaru abandoned the idea. Absentmindedly slackening his cheeks, Subaru went back to concentrating on his cooking.

Next to Subaru who was cooking by the side of the road, a meal was prepared for the two of them. For the two of Subaru and Shaula —not for those whom should have been enjoying the conversation, i.e. Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Meili and Julius amongst others.

—Realizing that truth once again, Subaru's chest ached in cruel, forlorn anguish.

It was often that he was made aware that he was an imperfect being. And that really frayed at his nerves. It was quite evident that it wasn't a healthy mentality by no stretch of the imagination, but if you were to really be put into that situation, then you'd be able to experience the sensations of his worn soul.

Frankly speaking, there was no doubt that the current Natsuki Subaru's frame of mind was in such a state.

Shaula: "—Master, master, where are we off to next?"

Subaru: "Ah, that's right…"

Shaula was walking right next to Subaru, humming as she went along, in high spirits. Looking up at hearing her question, Subaru pondered about it as he looked up ahead of the main road.

Ram: [For now I think we should head towards the west, right? Are you perhaps looking for civilization? If you want to get away from civilization then turn to the right and you can plunge right into the Great Waterfall, or so I'd hope.]

Subaru: “Don’t make such a scary suggestion, Nee-sama… That’ll be the only feeling I’ll end up getting from it you know.”

Her point wasn’t just candid advice, but rather it was said in typical Ram-like fashion, the kind that was like she was exchanging poison. Whilst keeping that in his chest, Subaru decided to head westwards in accordance with her advice.

Subaru: “I am going to keep on heading to the west… But, what will you do?”

Shaula: “Eh? Well, I’ll be following Master without ever letting go, right? Since the time we were separated from each other was sooo long, it’s gotten hard for me to be away from Master for even one second. Please take care of Shaula, who’s always watching over you from good morning to good morning.”

Subaru: “From good morning to good morning, you say… How Scary! Wouldn’t that be all throughout the day!”

Shaula: “Every day and night too.”

Shuddering at her rather grand stalkerish advance notice, Subaru cast his face down, a troubled expression adorning it. In all honesty, it felt strange that he had ended up walking along with Shaula.

There was Subaru who held shameful feelings of guilt and misery. And then there was Shaula who acted openly without any inhibitions. Though maybe with them as a combo, the balance of tension between plus and minus was kept at an equilibrium. But, in any case, even though Subaru certainly felt like he was helped out a lot by Shaula’s behavior, he couldn’t think of what merits there lay from Shaula’s perspective in accompanying him.

Shaula: “Master is Master; that’s the number one thing for me, y’know”

Subaru: “…Honestly, I don’t really get you. Are you seriously going to keep following me around?”

Shaula: “Of coursssе! Haven’t you heard of something called “Until Death does us Part”! I can’t let the love that built up during the time we didn't meet go dry y'know~ . I won't leave Master's side anymore no matter what happens. I will even give birth to so many children, as many as in a baseball team!"

Subaru: "Don't you go throwing such horrifying fastballs around…"

Stretching out her ample breasts, Shaula looked over at him with shimmering bright eyes. He covered his eyes with his palm. The depths of his heart were complex and hard to comprehend.

He wasn't really sure whether he should call Shaula's rather direct behavior flirting, but in itself, as a man, Subaru wasn't necessarily unhappy. If he placed her eccentricity to the side, Shaula was a beautiful woman and quite attractive.

Subaru: "…"

However, Natsuki Subaru's heart couldn't be shook by Shaula's temptations. Because such human-like emotions were things which could only be permitted in decent human beings. In brief, it was because they were absolutely unattainable capabilities for the current him.

Emilia: [I think it'd be better for Subaru to be a little more kind to Shaula. She keeps giving it her all like that, and even for all of that, isn't it pitiful?]

Suddenly, a chiming voice like a silver bell cut into Subaru's hesitation. Turning his gaze to his side, Emilia could be seen peering at Subaru's face. Subaru closed one of his eyes at her adorable pouting expression.

Subaru: "…Even though it's Emilia-tan saying that, don't you think that was really harsh? And here was me thinking that I knew how I thought about Emilia-tan."

Emilia: [Uhm… I guess. Maybe. Sorry. Of course, I'm lonely too; but I think it's pointless if you're always moping about it. After all…]

Subaru: "After all?"

Emilia: [After all, I'm already—]

As she narrowed her amethyst eyes, Emilia tried to continue her words from before. He'd want to immediately interrupt if there was something he didn't want to hear, but that was difficult. Not lending his ears to this Emilia's words was more difficult than cutting off the words of God.

However—

Subaru: "Whoops"

Even if it was impossible to spontaneously interrupt her, he could still interrupt her due to external factors. Suddenly hearing a noise drawing closer from behind him, Subaru shifted his attention away from Emilia and made his way to the side of the main road. The sound of wheels drawing closer informed him that a dragon carriage was approaching.

At once, he pulled Shaula's arm and the two of them escaped from the path of the dragon carriage.

Shaula: "Yhaa, Master sure is aggressive…"

Subaru: "Get off"

Subaru boisterously avoided Shaula's hug who had been taking advantage of him having pulled her arm. Having been shook off, Shaula crashed against some trees along the main road, and she let out a shriek, "GYAAAA"

Giving a quick glance back at Shaula whose nose had turned red, still crashing against trees, Subaru waited for the dragon carriage to pass by and out of his sight, before going back onto the main road once again—

???: "Hmm?"

Ahead of him, the dragon carriage that had passed by Subaru and Shaula let out a sound and came to a halt. It didn't seem like it was due to any troubles with the carriage body. With that, he couldn't think of any reason for it coming to a stop other than because of Subaru and Shaula.

It was still the peak time of the day, but the road was deserted. Subaru increased his vigilance for a split second as if he'd come across bandits or the likes.

???: "—You wouldn't happen to be Natsuki Subaru-san by any chance?"

However, that vigilance quickly vanished too due to the call from the individual who had descended from the dragon carriage's driver seat. After calling out his name, the tall youth who should have been sat at the driver's seat of the dragon carriage walked over to Subaru, who had now let go of his vigilance.

It was an individual whose age was around about Subaru's, with grey hair that was tied up into a ponytail. Though his gentle features didn't give off any striking impressions, quite unexpectedly, his build was quite robust. He didn't give off the vibes that he performed manual labor, but it did look like his work involved some at least.

Regardless of such a first impression, what mattered the most for Subaru was that this youth recognized him, and that he had called out his name.

???: "Ahh, it's as I thought, it's Natsuki-san isn't it? It's been a long time."

Subaru: "Aaah, well…"

He was a youth that greeted out to him with the familiarity of no doubt an acquaintance, even though there was a bit of a distance. As he hesitated on deciding how he would respond to him, Subaru looked around to his surroundings.

Receiving that look, Emilia, Beatrice and the others shook their heads. They had indicated that they had no clue who he was to Subaru. Emilia and the others, and Subaru as well, had thrown their hands up at that, but he hesitated in starting a conversation whilst pretending to know him.

That was Subaru's signature move, but he didn't want to do it right now due to various reasons. Seeing Subaru embroiled in confusion within his current mental state, the youth furrowed his well-shaped eyebrows and said,

???: “Oh, perhaps you’ve forgotten? It’s me, Regin Suwen…My older brother, Otto Suwen, helps you out. We met once before at the village.”

Subaru: “Regin you say… Ah, that Otto’s!”

Regin: “When you say it like that Otto, it’s almost like you’re saying it like it’s someone else’s business, no?”

Showing a forced smile at that unnatural expression, Subaru clapped his hands together in comprehension in front of the youth—Regin. Unfortunately, he couldn’t remember Regin’s figure, but he did know Otto’s.

Now that it was mentioned, Regin and Otto’s features did have many similarities with each other. There wasn’t any doubts that they were brothers, and also acquaintances of Subaru.

Subaru: “It was my bad, it was my bad. Like you just caught me now at a time where various things are going on inside my head. That’s why your name didn’t come to me right away, or something like that.”

Regin: “Nono, I guess it couldn’t be helped since you’re in such a busy position. The royal selection has reached even my ears living in the remote countryside… Nii-san isn’t causing you any nuisances, right?”

Emilia: [Otto-kun causing you nuisances… what a preposterous thing to say, eh? Everyone of us has been helped out in various ways thanks to Otto-kun.]

Subaru: “Yeah. Otto’s become a great help to all of us in the camp… something like that. If that guy wasn’t there, it’d seem like things would be far more all over the place.”

Regin: “Is that… so? I guess that’s good then…”

Though Regin expressed a vague sense of gratitude as he said that, it seemed that he was quite relieved to be told about the current state of his older brother. And after that, he flitted between looking at Subaru and Shaula who were standing a short distance away from each other.

Regin: “Even so, Natsuki-san, what are you doing in a place like this? I would think it’d be quite arduous walking on the main road without even riding on a dragon carriage…”

Subaru: “Aah, you’re quite right there, or rather, how should I put it… I’d love to make use of a dragon carriage, or the likes if possible, but due a number of reasons doing that would be difficult. And, regarding what you said before about what I’m doing…”

Cutting his words off there, Subaru thought for a second. And then, he found the right words.

Subaru: “The current me is in the middle of reconsidering my own self… you could say ‘A Journey of Self-Discovery.’”

Regin: “A Journey of Self-Discovery…?”

Subaru “Mhhhm, that’s right. A Journey of Self-Discovery… Gh-hahahaha!”

His own words were amusing; Subaru laughed involuntarily. Although “Self-Discovery” was a word which was common with young people, were there any other relevant words which fit this well with the current Subaru? If he thought about it, it wasn’t so amusing.

Regin seemed to have vaguely felt that something was out of place at the state Subaru was in, and he said “Are you all right?” with a manner of concern for Subaru.

Regin: “Is something in your body not quite well? For a second, I was certain that this was the reason behind Natsuki-san recognizing me so late, but since I’ve been mistaken for others often before…”

Subaru: “My body isn’t unwell, really. If you’re talking about how I feel emotionally, then I’m on the confines of the worst I guess. But, it’s thanks to you, Regin, that I’ll hang in there. I was relieved to meet you here you know.”

Interrupting Regin’s words, Subaru deeply bowed his head and expressed his gratitude. Seeing Subaru’s attitude, Regin continued to get more and more bewildered. However, it seemed like he had furthered his conviction that Subaru’s attitude before his eyes was quite abnormal. Regin made a resolute facial expression, and called out to Subaru with a “Natsuki-san”

Regin: “I don’t really get the situation well, but for the time being, please come to the village with me. Let’s talk about it in detail at my clinic. You need to rest.”

Subaru: “Are you speaking like a doctor?”

Regin: “Though my patients are earth dragons, livestock and the likes, I am a doctor. Have you forgotten that too?”

Subaru: “—Forgotten. Aaah, that’s right. I’ve… forgotten?”

Regin: “Natsuki-san?”

If only he had forgotten, then for Natsuki Subaru, things likely would have ended up without him tasting the feelings of isolation that he had felt up until now. However, those feelings that tormented Natsuki Subaru were not easy things to forget.

Subaru: “Your village is further ahead, right? Have I ever stopped by?”

Regin: “Y-Yeah, of course. In the past, when there was a bit of an issue, you, my older brother and that other guy came together…”

Subaru: “—I see. Thank you.”

He had been able to roughly hear what he wanted. He turned to face Regin, who had been daunted by Subaru’s words, and continued.

Subaru: “The way you… and your older brother talk are very similar.”

Regin: “Huh?”

Subaru: “You are quite the good guy. Your brother seems to be a good guy too.”

That’s why from hereafter, their First Reunion would also be terrible. By no means was it something that he’d derive pleasure from or look forward to.

Subaru: “—Shaula.”

Shaula: “Present; what’s up Master?”

Subaru: “Don’t hurt him.”

It was a short, nondescript call. But, by simply guessing his intentions, Shaula nodded with a “Arahorasassā”

And—

Subaru: “I’m sorry.”

Subaru apologized to Regin who was in front of him with a single phrase. The true meaning of his apology this time was far more clear than the vagueness of the one from some time before. However, Regin never understood the real meaning.

—That was because before Regin could understand, his head had been engulfed by light and had evaporated.

Subaru: “…”

Regin’s headless body collapsed onto the main road without him even letting out a cry of pain. An intense heat burned the wound, and even blood couldn’t flow from the cross section of his neck.

Although it was ethically a mistake to praise how the murder had been carried out so skillfully, it was a blow that was so refined that he wanted to reflexively appraise it.

Subaru: “It’s a thing of splendor no matter how many times I see it.”

Shaula: “It’s the technique that I perfected sniping the Witch Beasts from the top of the tower that approached day in and day out, without having anything else to do for 400 years. Now that I think back on it, those are grey days unfitting for a maiden of age, right?”

Subaru: “You’ve lived for 400 years and you call yourself a maiden of age…?”

Without any emotion at the tragedy before his eyes, Subaru tilted his head at Shaula’s words. And then, dragging Regin’s headless corpse along, he approached his dragon carriage, that had lost its owner.

However, when the earth dragon noticed the approaching Subaru and the others, it immediately started to run away, trying to leave Subaru and others behind on the main road.

In an instant, a white light shot past Subaru’s side and pierced through the dragon carriage’s wagon. The attack penetrated into the earth dragon’s flesh as it still pulled the dragon carriage along, burning its insides, piercing through its head and finally snatching away its life.

Though it was a rather skillful blow, it was an unwanted one.

Subaru: “…HEEEY”

Shaula: “Th-There weren’t any hard feelings! It was legitimate self-defense! It’s the result of having braced my legs trying to stop it in my own way! It’s just that my killing machine habits don’t go away so easily!”

Subaru: “I’m not angry. I’m not angry, but we may not be able to get ahold of a dragon carriage again now. When are we going to upgrade from travelling on foot….”

He had no luck at all with earth dragons when he brought Shaula along like this. Thanks to her accompanying him, it’d already been determined that Subaru would be forced to keep walking on foot forevermore.

Shaula: “S—o, isn’t it as I always say? Even if it’s not an emergency, when it’s Master, I will always carry you on my back~ And when I do, I won’t even mind if you carelessly fondle anything strange! How’s that?!”

Subaru: “It sounds like you’re gonna ask for money after or something.”

Evading Shaula’s temptation with his blunt words, Subaru pulled Regin’s corpse into the forcibly stopped dragon carriage. The large body of the earth dragon had also fallen onto the main road having received the same fate as its owner, all the way to the point of having lost its head. Of course, the earth dragon couldn’t be taken away with Subaru’s strength. But.

Subaru: “For now, go drag the earth dragon along with the dragon carriage to the forest’s vicinity. I will try go to the village that Regin spoke of. —Do you get where I’ll be?”

Shaula: “It’s a piece of cake. I should try to make it so they aren’t found, right?”

Subaru: “If they can’t be found for a short while, that’s fine. It’s enough if they can be left hidden for 2 or 3 days.”

Getting off from the dragon carriage, he instructed Shaula to conceal the tragedy that had happened. Raising her hand in a salute of acceptance, Shaula grabbed ahold of the huge body of the earth dragon and easily lifted up its corpse in her slender arms. The dragon carriage also began to be pulled.

Whilst she went to hide the dragon carriage in the forest, Subaru turned to look towards where the village was.

Subaru: “Now then.”

Subaru started to walk, not without purpose, but with a set goal in mind. He walked straight towards the village Regin should have returned to.

How many people knew ‘Natsuki Subaru’ in that village?

Either too few or too many, whichever it was, it made him feel heavy in heart. But, although it was true that it was a matter of unpleasantness, were he to avoid it then he wouldn't be able to pick the right path.

It was a heartless choice, but it was one he had no choice but to do.

If. —If I can at least get back 'Natsuki Subaru' , everything will be alright.

Subaru: "Will getting him back even be effective?"

It's for that reason that Subaru made the choices 'Natsuki Subaru' couldn't take.

6

Subaru: "—hk, hhaa"

Subaru let the book that he had grasped in both hands drop the instant his consciousness spiraled back to reality.

His knees trembled, and his breaths had become ragged. An unbearable sense of dizziness, like the sort you'd get from standing up too fast, overwhelmed him despite him sitting on the ground.

—It felt like he'd never get used to it no matter how many times he experienced it.

Subaru: "Hhaa, hhaa…"

Brusquely wiping away the cold sweat dripping down his forehead with his sleeve, Subaru kept taking deep breaths and calmed his heartbeat down. Was the cause of his irregular heartbeat the chaos that came from the dissonance between his soul and body?

Each time he tackled a book, one after the other, he'd find that within the book, the thing he called "himself" had become hazier.

A sane human being probably wouldn't be able to know the boundaries between themselves and others if this kept being repeated, and they'd melt together. Or rather, they'd probably lose sight of their very self.

Shaula: “Master, are you alright?”

Subaru: “…Yeah, I’m okay, I’m fine. More importantly, have you found the next book?”

Shaula: “Lemme see…I’m still looking. It’s like matching pictures, they’re difficult to find~. I’m really not cut out for this kind of menial work…”

Voicing out her concerns for the roughly breathing Subaru, Shaula crossed her fingers at her own disappointing lack of progress. However, Subaru had no intentions of blaming such a fragile girl.

That was because he was making her help with something unsuited for her, just like she herself was aware of. On top of that, there were bounds even to his inhumanity in going as far to rebuke the girl who’d been doing his bidding without getting anything in return.

What she did, was more than enough. There was a line that should be drawn even for Subaru, who kept running on the path of inhumanity.

Subaru: “I know that you’re not cut out for this, but I’m counting on you Shaula. There’s no one else who can lend me their strength besides you.”

Shaula: “It’d be nice Master, if you could say it as… just me.”

Subaru: “…Right now, the one I’m counting on, is just you.”

Shaula: “Hehe, now that makes me satisfied.”

Puffing out her cheeks, Shaula once again dove back into the sea of books with a satisfied expression on her face. Although presumably she wouldn’t hold onto that good mood for very long, her eyes were indispensable for finding the books.

Her presence was a matter of life or death for Subaru, even insofar to the meaning of her being simple manpower.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru picked up the book that had dropped to his feet that he had been reading before, and ran his finger across the title written on its spine.

The title of the black book was plain and simple; “Regin Suwen” was written there.

That youth, who had happened to meet ‘Natsuki Subaru’ in the past, had unluckily lost his life by meeting the current Natsuki Subaru—Subaru had experienced his life in the book as if he was him.

The memories of his chance meeting with ‘Natsuki Subaru’ had also certainly been there within that vicarious experience. But.

Subaru: “…They weren’t that well acquainted. From Regin’s perspective, ‘Natsuki Subaru’ was a guy that came along with his older brother and it seems he didn’t know him well.”

Perusing the memories that had become part of himself, Subaru sighed, feeling as if he had wasted effort. In all honesty, he did think that the one who most wanted to sigh was Regin who’d ended up as the victim in this. However his disappointment amidst his feelings of wasted effort were also something that he couldn’t avoid.

Regin: [Hey, no matter how much you look at it, things aren’t like that, wouldn’t you think so, Natsuki-san?]

Subaru: “…Sorry. Even though I’ve snatched away all of your memories, the relationship is still far too thin, and reproducing it has become lower. It doesn’t seem like there are going to be many chances where I am going to pay attention to you.”

Staring reproachfully at the book with his own name written on it, between the bookshelves, Regin gave Subaru a rather profound look. Although it was to be expected, a hint of blame lay thick within his eyes.

After all, just about anyone would be in an awful mood if their death was lambasted as having been useless after being killed.

Being aware of that, Subaru gave him an honest apology and said "Sorry." However—

Regin: [Either way, I've got no choice but to accept that I've died. Besides, if your objectives are fulfilled, Natsuki-san, then everything will go back to how it was, right? Let's hope for that.]

Subaru: "Ooh, you have the tolerance of a saint. I'm sorry to be taking advantage of your generosity, but I'm depending on it. I will pay back this debt when I put things back exactly to how they were."

Regin: [Then let's not hope for it, instead, let's await it.]

Shrugging his shoulders, Regin waved and then started to fade from Subaru's sight like mist. After he watched him disappear, Subaru put Regin's Book of the Dead back on its shelf. And then, he picked up a paper that was nearby and crossed something out with his quill. —The paper was a register which had a lot of names written on it. And just now, he had drawn a horizontal line where Regin's name was.

Subaru: "…And that makes 23."

As he counted the numbers he had squiggled out, Subaru cracked the bones in his neck, knowing he had a long way to go.

The library which had the Books of the Dead on show—Taygeta's hostility was still going strong. And no matter how many times he'd visited it, it wouldn't give Subaru a in-library search feature or the like.

Since he used it so frequently, he thought it wouldn't really hurt if the service improved even a little bit. But, it sure was really annoying.

Beatrice: [Betty's forbidden library was quite big too, but it's not at all comparable to this one, I suppose. No one ought to complain about that again, in fact, Subaru.]

Julius: [I agree. It looks nearly impossible to find a specific book in such an enormous library. You have to sit yourself down and deliberately apply yourself to the task. You'll just keep exhausting yourself if you keep on going in blindly.]

Just as the complaints had crossed through his mind, Beatrice and Julius had given him their suggestions as they looked around the library. Their words were kind to Subaru, but that was why he stubbornly shook his head.

Of course, if he chose to devote time to it as had been suggested to him, then perhaps his feelings of wasted effort and anxiety would be eased just a little, but—

Subaru: "Trying to ease them would be a luxury in the first place. I don't have any free time to sit around doing nothing. I have to reach a solution as soon as I can…"

Ram: [What if you don't reach it? Will something change if Barusu hurries up a little?]

Subaru: "It'll change!—Everything will change!"

Ram glared at Subaru as he declared that with clenched fists, with her cold, pale crimson eyes. Turning away from her gaze, Subaru stared down at the list of names he held within his hand.

The list had all of the names of each person from the same village as Regin written down. Judging from what he consulted from Regin's memories, the likelihood that they'd be helpful in getting anything conclusive was quite low. Low, but not zero.

Then, if that was the case—

Emilia: [Will what Subaru wants to do come true if you read the books of those people?]

Subaru: "Emilia-tan…"

Subaru hesitated for a split second at Emilia's question, worry adorning her eyes. But, Subaru nodded at Emilia like he was saying it to himself above anything else.

Subaru: "Of course it will. Ever since… Ever since I forgot everything, I've just been causing everyone unimaginable trouble. This is the only way I can get everything back."

Emilia: [I didn't even consider that…]

Subaru: "—That's not good enough!"

Emilia's expression grew gloomier as if she were unable to bear to look at the angered Subaru. Subaru had raised his voice at her without meaning to.

And as he stared straight at the shocked Emilia's eyes, Subaru continued to speak.

Subaru: "For crying out loud, please don't say that. No matter what it takes… I will try and get 'Natsuki Subaru' back. And after that…"

Emilia: […And after that?]

Subaru: "And after that I'll meet you all once again… I'll meet you all and start anew."

It was after losing everything, that he realized everything was important, far too late. Why didn't people realize that what they had in their hands was irreplaceable until the load they carried on their back got lighter?

Unless losing everything and recovering didn't go hand in hand, then why—

Emilia: [□□□]

Emilia stared at Subaru with somewhat feeble eyes, as Subaru forced those words out into a mutter. Complex emotions filled those amethyst eyes which even Subaru couldn't read.

He should have been able to clearly see everything about her. And yet, his anxiety would be cruelly stirred up in the instances where he didn't understand what lay in her heart.

What did Emilia think? What did Emilia feel? And how did she receive the current Subaru?

Those answer were—

Shaula: “—Master! I found the next book! Praise me Praise me!”

Subaru: “Ah, aaah, well done. You did great, Shaula.”

Shaula: “Huhehehehehe~”

Shaula, who had come jumping in, had forced his dialogue with Emilia to come to an end. Subaru gave Shaula a head-pat; as a result, her face relaxed and she gratefully accepted it.

The book she held in her hand definitely matched the name written on his list.

Subaru: “…How long has ‘Natsuki Subaru’ been sleeping inside you?”

Receiving the book from Shaula, Subaru posed this question at the book that couldn’t answer him back.

Even though it was to be expected, the books didn’t concisely answer Subaru’s questions. However, answers did indeed lie within the books. All of his barbaric acts were necessary sacrifices for this purpose.

Subaru: “Fragmented, objective information is good enough. I’ll scrape it all up, and bring it closer to its completed form…”

Evaluation was something that was assessed and decided by the measure of others.

If that was the case, then if he was able to check everyone’s assessment and if the individual that was being assessed could be checked by the measure of everyone, then he should be able to reconstruct that person.

—And recover ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

That was Natsuki Subaru's highest priority; his entire journey had been for this purpose.

Of course, all of the sacrifices that had been made, along with all the sacrifices which would be made in the future, were all necessary actions so that Natsuki Subaru could get 'Natsuki Subaru' back.

If he could get 'Natsuki Subaru' back. If he at least came back.

Subaru: "…If it's you, I know you would take care of everything possible."

The memories of Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Meili, Julius, individuals other than them and in general, all the individuals who had some relation to him. He desired memories like those.

Because, that strength should be in 'Natsuki Subaru'.

Because, with that strength—

Subaru: "—Save me"

I'm counting on you, 'Natsuki Subaru.' If you're a hero, then save me.

—"Murder becomes a habit."

That was one of the phrases the famous detective, Hercule Poirot, left the world with.

The meaning of this phrase didn’t refer to a person who had killed a human being and then suddenly woke up with a preference for murdering people, who then kept repeating the crime to satisfy their cravings.

It referred to someone who once solved their problems by murder, and for them, whenever another problem arose, they would think about trying to break through the problem through murder again.

—”Murder becomes a habit.”

But, if killing really was linked to the solution of the problem, could it even be said that it was the result of murder becoming a habit?

Couldn’t it be said that it wasn’t that murder became a habit, but rather that unavoidable circumstances sprang forth.

The situation wasn’t that of adding murder as an option because it had become a habit, but rather such that there was no option other than to murder. Perhaps saying things like murder had become a habit wasn’t possible anymore.

—”Murder becomes.”

To hell with Hercule Poirot. Fictional detectives needn’t talk so pretentiously.

How could he have said it as if he saw through everything?! The reasons behind every situation, behind everything, are tangled together in various complications, with multiple layers of complexity to them.

Don’t disregard those things and make light of them by trying to apply those words to everything.

—”Murder.”

This was the only way when there was no other. It was the most logical when there was no other way to reach the correct answer.

That’s why it wasn’t murder becomes a habit, but rather…

—”Only murder becomes the answer.”

Yeah, that’s right. Of course it was. Only that was the answer. Only that was the correct answer. Only that would cut through the hopelessness of this dead-end; it was a last resort.

Emilia: [Subaru is always helping me out; you’ll end up finding a solution no matter what… My esteemed knight.]

Beatrice: [If Subaru hadn’t been there, Betty would still be completely alone in the forbidden library, I suppose.]

Ram: [Ah well… Barusu is a man with good timing. Even Ram will admit that much.]

Meili: [If Onii-san wasn’t so anno~ying, then I’m sure he wouldn’t have messed up his wo~rk.]

Julius: [Subaru, though perhaps you aren’t aware of it, but I was also saved by you. Your being was a path of hope for me as well.]

Subaru: “I know.”

I know that you all love ‘Natsuki Subaru’ a lot.

I know that you all really care about ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

I know that the ‘Natsuki Subaru’ that saved you all is a Superman.

I’m aware that everything that the ‘Natsuki Subaru’ that saved you all did has been ruined.

That’s why I have to get him back.

If I can at least get him, if I can at least get ‘Natsuki Subaru’ back.

If I can at least do that, everything will turn out well. It’ll all turn out well.

I have to keep going.

???: "—Natsuki Subaru has gone mad, and has killed Emilia, Julius and everyone else who accompanied him. I barely escaped with my life and somehow managed to run away and make it here."

Everyone gathered frowned as they received the report Anastasia had brought back. The meaning behind what was shown on their faces was quite clear.

"Anastasia": "It's natural that all of you would judge this as hard to believe. I also deeply regret that I had to bring back this report. But, if we take into account the danger he poses, we cannot afford to look away from reality."

???: "Anastasia-sama, even if you're saying that, I don't thi…"

Echidna: "—I am Echidna. Ana is still sleeping inside this body even now. Though, perhaps staying like this may be a blessing for her."

???: "…It sounds like such a far-fetched story."

The one who had cast his eyes down and then replied as he stood in front of Anastasia—No, Echidna, was a red-haired knight; it was Reinhard van Astrea.

They were in the Watergate City Priestella—Those that had gathered there were those who were involved in the Royal Selection. The battle for the city had ended quite some time ago, and each one present was awaiting the report regarding the return of Subaru and the others who had headed to the east.

Emilia and the others had headed to the east to borrow the Sage's wisdom to find a means of restoring the calamitous damage the Witch Cult had caused as a result of the Sin Archbishops having appeared in Priestella.

They were embroiled in anxiety. But, they were awaiting good news.

The grounds to make them believe that lay in one of the members that headed to the east. Those grounds were in none other than Natsuki Subaru himself. —That would show how he had gone mad, amongst other things.

Reinhard: “If I completely understood everything you said, then I can’t just nod my head at this story.”

Echidna: “Even if you can’t believe it, it’s the truth. He is not the same person you all knew. Natsuki Subaru has lost his memories, and is obsessed with getting them back. He has chosen the worst way to get them back.”

Reinhard: “What would the worst way be…”

Echidna: “The Books of the Dead that are in the Pleiades Watchtower… Within them are the impressions and memories of those who have died. The books can be read and understood. Unfortunately, since I haven’t read any of them, I don’t really understand the full extent of their power.”

Further confusion ensued after they received Echidna’s reply informing them of the strange power that the books held.

Of course, the threat that memories could be lost had been shown more than enough already. That too was one of the effects that Subaru and the others had gone to try and do something about.

But, who would have been able to predict that their journey to find a solution to that had ended up causing something of the same ilk.

???: “—I didn’t think Natsuki-san could do it alone. If his aim is reading the Books of the Dead , then how is he going about it?”

Reinhard: “Otto, do you believe this?”

Reinhard widened his eyes and turned to look at Otto who had let loose this coldly resounding question. With a glance at the Sword Saint’s blue eyes, Otto nodded with an “Indeed”

Otto: “Anastasia-sama… or was it Echidna-san now? There’s no reason for her to lie to us like this. It’s too abnormal, and it doesn’t make sense. In fact, I can only think that something unexpected must’ve happened for her to have came back alone like this.”

Reinhard: “That’s…But”

Otto: “I don’t want to believe it either. I don’t want to believe such a thing.”

Clenching his fist, Otto said this with a trembling voice to the persistent Reinhard. Anyone who heard that trembling voice would grasp just how much emotion was overwhelming the pit of Otto’s stomach.

Seeing the regret etched on the one he viewed as a big brother’s face, Garfiel, who was standing next to him, anxiously said: “Brotto…”

Echidna: “…Otto-kun’s guess is correct. Even if in losing his memories, Natsuki Subaru’s behavior pattern changed… If he was alone, Emilia and Julius and so on should have been able to restrain him with ease. What got in the way of that plan was the one who was helping him… Shaula.”

Garfiel: “Shaula…? Isn’ that th’ name of th’ Sage who oughta be in th’ watchtower? Did that guy do somethin’ to captain…No, this’s confusin’. It’s like in ‘Osmund’s Hesitation’…”

Echidna: “Sorry, but I can’t afford to wait until your confusion has calmed down. As you guessed, Shaula is the name of the watcher in the watchtower. Borrowing what she said, she kept saying that the Sage was her Master all the time. She ended up not being the Sage though…”

Reinhard: “There are various things I want to ask, but… just to make sure, is this Shaula collaborating with Subaru?”

Reinhard posed this question to make sure, and Echidna nodded. The place went into an uproar at her confirmation.

It was an unexpected betrayal from the hero who had tried to save the Watergate City from the Sin Archbishops. And the one that accompanied him in his transformation was the Sage, one of the three great heroes of yore.

Who wouldn’t try and lament the world in this cruel situation which was like a nightmare within a nightmare.

Echidna: "…It isn't because I want vengeance that I brought the truth back here."

Suddenly, Echidna, with her face pointed down, muttered those words amidst the confusion that was unfolding at her report.

Catching her reply, Reinhard raised his eyebrows and said: "Echidna?" As the gazes of several individuals collected on them, Echidna let out a short sigh.

Echidna: "Given Ana's feelings, and the time I myself spent with Julius, I guess it would be justifiable to embroil myself in anger at Natsuki Subaru who killed him …But, I'm exhausted."

Reinhard: "You're exhausted?"

Echidna: "It may be true that I detested him, and that he detested me. But, even if he's just a desperate child who's approaching me shaking his fist, I'm exhausted."

Shaking her head feebly, Echidna slowly stood up.

She had Anastasia's face and spoke with Anastasia's voice, but if she had really been her, then such a frail look would have never floated across her face.

Echidna: "I will leave this stage. The cruelty of ever bringing Anastasia back to this stage is unbearable. We have made undoable mistakes."

Reinhard: "Doing that would…"

Echidna: "I know you have no bad intentions. But sometimes, giving up is the best thing you can do. Persuading me not to give up will only lead to anguish. I am… quitting here."

Following that, not a single person had any words that would stop the completely heartbroken girl. Echidna of course knew that no one here had anything which would stop her.

Since she knew that, she faced away from those who had gathered, and left the place. —And just as she had stated before, she left the stage of the Royal Selection itself.

Echidna: “I’m praying for your good fight, all of you. —Please, I want you all to be careful.”

That was the final report that the only member that had returned back safely from the expedition to the Pleiades Watchtower left behind. All it did was stir up a heavy anxiety.

10

???: “…What’re ya gonna do from here?”

Ricardo, who was walking next to her, asked her that question as they walked on the way back. To that, Echidna closed her eyes.

The wound where Ricardo had lost his arm was serious; the part which he had lost that had once been a thick and burly arm was not attached there anymore. Instead, what had been attached there was something like a hook-hand. It could be said that the attitude of not giving up the fight even as he was now was rather like him, but—

Echidna: “It’s as I said. I give up. It’s wise. From this point on, I don’t think I will try and pretend to be Ana in her body…Though, at the very least, I will fulfill the minimum responsibilities towards the Hoshin Company.”

Ricardo: “What’re ya sayin’ the minimum responsibilities arrrrr…?”

Echidna: “The breakup of the company, and I have to try and help out the Employees with their next job. The company itself will probably do fine if it’s left to Vice-President Chuden.”

Ricardo: “…”

Echidna: “I get that you’re dissatisfied. But, it’s something that can’t be helped.”

Though her true colors hadn’t been revealed then, Echidna and Ricardo had been together for a long time. Though it had been a one sided acquaintanceship, she did have an appreciation for the strong emotions that Ricardo directed at Anastasia.

And that was because they were the exact same emotions that Echidna held for Anastasia.

If Ricardo held emotions like of a father's for Anastasia, then Echidna was the same as well; she probably held emotions like of a mother's for Anastasia.

That's why—

Echidna: "I think that I will part with the Iron Fang as well. From now on Ricardo, you are free to do as you like."

Ricardo: "If I'm free ta do as I like, then I'm gonna search for a way ta wake up Miss."

Echidna: "…If you still have your eyes set on that in this situation where our best chance was cut off, then I can't say anything against that. It'll be best if the young ones of the Iron Fang accompany you, right?"

Echidna couldn't fling away Ricardo's attitude as stubbornness like that. He too was serious about protecting the ones he wanted to protect, and not giving up on the ones he couldn't give up on. There was nothing more cruel than judging his plight as meaningless before he started anything.

There was no need for Ricardo to give up just because Echidna had.

Nevertheless—

Echidna: "Even I don't know whether Ana would be delighted by your attitude."

Ricardo: "…If she scolds me, then ah well. And what's more, how can I give up without first makin' sure?! I'm doin' this because… I'm Ana-bo's actin' foster father."

Echidna: "…"

Ricardo: "Can a father who abandons his daughter really be called a father? No matta' what anyone says, I will… NEVER give up."

There wasn’t a single hint of sarcasm towards Echidna in the resolute Ricardo’s declaration. However, being well aware of her own weaknesses, it stabbed deeply into Echidna’s chest. As a result, Echidna let a dry smile float across her face in admiration of Ricardo’s strength.

And then—

Echidna: “—Ricardo, you are really”

Echidna was about to continue her words by saying, “strong, huh.”

Or, if she had the time for it, she may have wanted to ask whether it was possible for her to get that kind of strength as well.

—But, there was no time for that.

Echidna: “…”

A feeling like a tremor shook underneath their feet, and in an instant, Echidna saw Ricardo stretching out his arm. His thick, hook-handed arm grabbed Echidna by the scruff of her neck and her feet were lifted up into the air.

With Ricardo having hooked her up, she was able to see what was going on, and that was the last thing she did.

The very next instant, a torrent of water rushed towards them with tremendous force, engulfing Echidna, Ricardo and the city, and then continuing on to wash away absolutely everything.

—The flood which the Witch Cult had botched up, now once again assailed the Watergate City which had previously escaped disaster.

11

Subaru let out a short sigh as he gazed down at the city that was being swallowed up by the flood.

The city’s design was built in the shape of a mortar so that if water was poured into it, there would be no way out. It definitely was extremely effective, like pouring water into an ant nest.

Subaru: “As expected of the city used for the decisive battle against the Witchbeasts… the effectiveness of the trap was incredible.”

According to knowledge, the city had originally been erected to bring down a Witch, Witchbeasts, and the like; in accordance with that, the efficacy of opening the watergates was immense.

The water’s violence dragged the city to the bottom of its surface in an instant, and engulfed its inhabitants before they had any time to escape.

???: [I see, it’s a thing of splendor doooooooon’t you think? With this, many of the people that know you were dealt with all at once…I guess I’m okay to think that your self-discovery is progressing foooooward, right?]

Subaru: “…Shut up”

Behind Subaru, who was overlooking the devastation, the tall clownish figure let his unscrupulous thoughts spill out. His facial expression didn’t express delight, though it did seem that he had gotten a suitable response in the results in front of his eyes. As the plan had been put into effect using his knowledge and advice, it’s wasn’t that he didn’t understand his thoughts, but.

???: [Master sure has poor taste…]

The young figure of a maid was looking at the clownish figure with an expression of disdain. The young girl, who adorably gave off a seemingly intelligent impression, snuggled closer to Subaru and sneakily took hold of his hand.

Squeezing her hand back, Subaru gave her a fleeting nod.

Subaru: “Petra, how are things looking?”

Petra: [Ummmm, well, it seems like Shaula-san did everything right. Since all four control towers were used I don’t think anyone’s managed to get away……Maybe in the shelters as well.]

Subaru: “…I see. I’m sorry to make you deliver such a painful report.”

Petra put on a brave smile even when she was asked for her objective opinion.

The girl which Subaru knew was certainly stout of heart, but she was nevertheless an ordinary child with nothing special about her. Of course, that didn't mean he didn't feel guilt for dragging her into this, but—

???: [If you're going to get so emotional, I would have preferred if you didn't start this in the first place. Subaru-sama is still such a half-baked individual, isn't he.]

Subaru: "Ack, I don't even have anything I can say back when you put it like that."

The anger of the blonde haired maid, Frederica, who had brought her condemnations to him, didn't clear up so easily.

She gave more weight to the tragedy that had happened to the people around her rather than the tragedy which she had witnessed. In that sense, it seemed like she'd never forgive Subaru's actions.

This wasn't the only reason why; it was also an emotional matter. Were he to look at this from a logical perspective, and were he to be unexpectedly honest with his feelings, he would be made to feel the kinship by blood she had with Garfiel.

Subaru: "Either way, I only know about Garfiel from others as well."

Muttering it out with a sigh, Subaru gently brushed his fingers into his fringe. Brusquely scratching his head, he heaved out a strong sigh and shifted his attention to focus on the fight.

Clownish Figure: [Well then? What are you going to do neeeeeeeeext, Subaru-kun.]

Leaning forward, he gave a tch at Roswaal who was looking at him from the side. And then, Subaru declared "It's as decided" as if he was spitting out a curse.

Subaru: "It'll go according to plan. —It's best to attack the most troublesome guy to start things off with.”

Otto: “Cough, Ghack…!”

Garfiel: “Brotto, are y’ okay?! Cough the water up! Cough ‘t all out!”

With tears streaming down his face, Otto violently coughed so that he could force out the water that had filled up his lungs. Seeing how dangerous his condition was, Garfiel helped him cough the water out; but, as expected, having his body shaken up and down, dangling upside down by his feet racked Otto’s mind and body in pain.

Though thanks to that, he managed to cough out all the water that had gotten into his lungs.

Garfiel: “Shit! What th’ fuck happen’d…?!”

Otto: “…The city’s watergates have been opened, I think. As a result, the streets have been swallowed up by water. Even though we desperately fought to hold the Witch Cult back, everything has come to nought.”

Otto muttered this to Garfiel, whose fangs were trembling, as they gazed at their surroundings at the spectacle of the submerged city. After hearing that, he took a look at his friend’s green eyes, his friend whom he regarded as a younger brother, and noticed that they were warped by grief. Otto cast his gaze down.

The current state of the city that had plunged into an all-despairing situation could be seen everywhere, even if one were to take just a glimpse. Luckily, Otto had been picked up by Garfiel and hoisted over his shoulder, with them fleeing to a height where the water barely reached. However, how many people in the city would have managed to do the same?

Garfiel: "Everythin's at the bottom of the water…"

Rooted to the spot and wide-eyed, Garfiel was stricken by the enormity of the flood that had assailed the city. Although he hadn't heard the story in detail, Otto got the feeling that Garfiel had experienced quite an impactful encounter in Priestella. The existence of such a desirable opponent would have been something quite important for him.

—This flood had even ruthlessly washed away the people Garfiel held emotional bonds with.

Otto: "…No, not just that."

Though he was worried for Garfiel's state of mind as well, what Otto must have been concerned about was the others who had gotten caught up in this.

Starting with Anastasia—Echidna, who had brought back the unexpected report, and everyone else, including the Royal Selection candidates that had gathered to hear her report would have fallen victim to the disaster.

They had been gathered to warn them about what had happened, but it seemed like it had ended up backfiring.

Otto: "I'm going to say something harsh. Garfiel, please stand up. We have to deal with this situation just like we did the Witch Cult last time."

Garfiel: "B-But… Brotto…Y'see…"

Otto: "WHAT WOULD BECOME OF US NOW IF WE SIT HERE LIKE SIMPLETONS DOING NOTHING?! NEITHER NATSUKI-SAN OR EMILIA-SAMA ARE HERE! PLEASE STAND UP, GARFIEL! IT'S JUST US LEFT!”

Garfiel: “…”

Grabbing him by the collar, Otto shouted at his friend whom he regarded as a younger brother whose face had a look of feebleness etched on it. He knew it had been overly harsh of him to explode like that, but with him being so slow to grasp how things were in this moment, he had chewed him out.

In having had his withered heart be the object of his scolding, a fire was kindled within Garfiel that made him stand up.

If he could achieve that, then he did not care about being deemed as insensitive. —Even if he was hated by Garfiel later, it would be far better than if he wasn’t able to fulfill his duty.

Otto: “We need to search for survivors, and then meet back up with the Royal Selection candidates, the Knights or anyone else who might be left. If the attack on the city is from a hostile individual, then we need to reassemble our forces and fight against them…”

Garfiel: “—Tch! BROTTO!”

Otto: “—?!”

By instructing Garfiel about his compassionless decision, Otto drove that in as a persuasion for Garfiel. Pushing out his chest, Garfiel roared.

And immediately afterwards, a flash of light pierced through straight in front of Otto, who had fallen onto his backside on the rooftop, at tremendous speed, faster than the eye could see.

Otto: “GHAAAAAAAAAAA!”

For a moment, Otto’s entire body was engulfed by burning pain from the light which had slightly grazed his chest. There wasn’t any bleeding. But, there was a scorch mark on his shirt, and his skin underneath it had been charred.

The true form of the white light of now was pure, intense heat. And, that white light was—

Garfiel: “RRRRRRRRRAAAAAAAAAAAA—!!”

Giving a howl of rage, Garfiel forcibly parried away each one of those white light rays, those white rays of death, that hurtled towards them at lightning fast speed.

Wielding the silver shields fitted on his arms, Garfiel challenged that overwhelming force of incredible speed head on. A hyper-dimensional battle which Otto could not keep up with had commenced.

Nevertheless, he did have a decent idea about what was happening.

Otto: “Where did it come from…”

Whilst he endured his pain, Otto looked around his surroundings and concentrated on finding where the flashes of white had been fired from. It was likely that the culprit who had fired those attacks at Otto and Garfiel was also the culprit who had opened the floodgates.

Of course, the enemy that came to his mind was them being a Witch Cultist—

Otto: “—hk, from all the way over there?!”

Far, far away, at the edge of his sight, one of the floodgate’s control towers came into view—A flash of light could be seen from where Otto and Garfiel were, coming from the top of the tower which stood almost on the opposite side of the city.

Immediately after he thought he’d seen that flicker, the light instantly came surging to where they were. Somehow, Garfiel was still fending them off right now, but—

Garfiel: “THINGS ARE GONNA KEEP GETTIN’ WORSE! BROTTO, FIND A PLACE TO HIDE! MY AMAZIN’ SELF’S GONNA BEAT THE SHIT OUTTA THIS BASTARD!”

Otto: “GARFIEL! WILL YOU BE OKAY IF YOU GET CLOSER?!”

Though Garfiel roared that out, by no means was what he was saying a good idea in this situation.

The speed at which the approaching rays of white light moved at was completely out of the ordinary; the distance which separated them from their opponent was such that Garfiel was only barely able to mount a defense against them.

If he got closer, the time he would have to deal with the rays of light would decrease respectively. Even the difference of an augenblick would be fatal in a hyper-dimensional battle.

Garfiel: “EITHER WAY, THERE’S NO OTHER WAY! IT’S JUS’ US TWO! ISN’ THAT RIGHT?!”

Otto: “—. You’re right. GARFIEL!”

Garfiel: “HYYYAAAAH!!”

Repeating what Otto had said before, Garfiel took a mighty step forward and leapt up. Making use of a building which could barely be classed as a foothold in the city still submerged by the flood, Garfiel zealously drove forward, and determinedly made his way towards the city’s control tower where the white flashes of light had been coming from.

Garfiel: “GRRRRRrrrrrrrrrrrrraaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa—!!”

One shot after another, Garfiel braced himself and somehow managed to keep ahold of his footing whilst the shock of each impact racked his body as if paralyzing him to the bone.

The opponent was formidable.

In addition to their attacks’ pinpoint accuracy from so far away, the sheer amount of mana that they put into these potent attacks without missing a beat, was far from normal.

If he considered his position where he had kept his distance from the start, it was a terribly favorable situation for his opponent.

Otto: “Even so…”

His grasp of how skilled his opponent wasn't sufficient enough that he could give this up. And beyond that, what his opponent had done was seriously, completely, completely unforgivable.

It was likely that an unimaginable amount of people had become victims with the Watergate City Priestella sinking to the depths. One after another other, tragedy had engulfed the city which still hadn't completely recovered from the after-effects of the Witch Cult's last attack. —Caught up in the midst of that as well, was the family which Garfiel was tied together with by blood.

Garfiel: "—Tch!"

So to not let his mind dwell on that, Garfiel gritted his teeth, and frantically shook his head.

But, in the end, try as he might, nothing about what was on his mind would change. Sorrow and anger wasn't what mingled together in the depths of Garfiel's chest; rather, his heart was engulfed by a dark fury, as he continued to grow more enraged.

If he put that dark fury into his fangs and claws and struck down the enemy with it, then—

???: "—Garfiel"

Suddenly, a voice reached through to his skull amidst his tempestuous fury. The voice had just called out his name. If it had been just that, Garfiel wouldn't even have taken any notice of it.

However—

Garfiel: "—Captain?"

It was a completely different story if that voice belonged to the person he had long awaited to return. Letting his green eyes spin around, Garfiel looked around in the middle of the hyperspeed battle for the figure which had spoken.

—From the start, Garfiel hadn't believed a word of the report which Echidna had brought back.

To begin with, Echidna was a name which Garfiel couldn't put any trust in. Of course, he had warned Subaru about the dangers of the being that called herself that name, and on top of that, she had forced him to head to the Pleiades Watchtower.

Even so, on seeing Echidna return taking the form of Anastasia, Garfiel had regretted his thoughts as having been shallow, naive and immature.

He had considered following her so to find Subaru, Emilia and the others as soon as possible.

It was just after he had proposed setting up that discussion to Otto that the flood had come rushing into the city. It seemed like Otto was thinking as he usually did, but Garfiel sunk his strength into his fangs and adamantly refused to admit that his thoughts had been wrong.

For Garfiel, it didn't seem like Subaru was the sort who'd screw up.

That's why Garfiel found hope in having heard Natsuki Subaru's voice here. He would turn the tables around in this situation where absolutely everything had come to a dead-end.

He looked around for his figure so that he could cling onto such a convenient illusion—

Subaru: "Your heart can't grasp the most important thing about yourself. —Still, your family's eyes are sharp."

The moment that he came into view, Garfiel furrowed his brows in bewilderment. Not because the mutter had reached his ears. His mutter had been inaudible. What had caused the change in Garfiel's facial expression was purely his surprise at what was in front of his eyes.

Garfiel: "…"

Beneath his eyes, there was a figure looking up at Garfiel, who was leaping towards the white light. His appearance certainly seemed to be the same as the one he knew, but.

Garfiel: “—Who th’ fuck are you.”

When he shifted his attention to his nose, a familiar smell slipped into his nostrils. However, it was his instinct, not his five senses, that tried to deny the familiar figure below him.

A lapse that lasted not even a fraction of a second was born in his thoughts.

Nevertheless, it was a fatal lapse.

Moving towards there was—

???: “—Gotcha! Tah-dah!”

Garfiel: “Ngh”

From in front of him, a black haired woman came plunging forward, and threw out a kick with a semi-enthusiastic cry. Catching her kick immediately with both of his shields, Garfiel absorbed the attack which felt like he had been rammed by a dragon carriage.

Even so, she was not an opponent with whom he could deal with in this situation. He couldn’t afford to direct his attention in two different directions, both in front of him and beneath him.

Black-Haired Woman: “Not so bad, but myyyy love for Master is a 100 times better than that .”

With a smile of satisfaction adorning her face, her palm rose towards the front of Garfiel’s face. In an instant, with all of his hair standing on end, Garfiel tensed his body and quickly moved his face backwards—

“Squelch”

The blow pierced straight through Garfiel’s abdomen and his organs spilled out from his back.

—Otto's thoughts spun rapidly as he looked at the petals of blood blooming in mid-air.

Otto: "—hk"

Clenching his teeth, Otto cursed the cold-hearted part within himself. It was quite the odious thing to him that under these circumstances he was trying to calmly get a grasp of the situation. His friend whom he regarded as a younger brother had been blown away right in front of his eyes. And even then, he still couldn't get emotional at all.

Even in this overwhelmingly unfavorable situation, Otto's attention was focused on his surroundings in an attempt to find a means of escape.

If he used his Divine Protection of Anima Whispering then a faint glimmer of hope would emerge, no matter what the situation was. By putting faith in that mantra, he'd overcome every single hardship he'd come across up until now.

That's why—

???: "It's regrettable, but even rats end up drowning when they're soaked in this much water. Seems that the guy you were talking with is nowhere to be seen."

Otto: "…"

A voice, accompanied by the sound of footsteps, quietly struck Otto's eardrums.

The sound of footsteps slowly approached within the world which seemed to have fallen dreadfully still. Swiveling his head around to look at where the footsteps were coming from, Otto held his breath for a moment.

And then, he let out a short gasp.

Otto: "…You truly are beyond recognition, Natsuki-san."

Subaru: "Is that so? If you're talking about me, then I don't really understand myself well, but…”

Otto: “ I think you’ll clearly see what I mean if you look at a mirror. Ahh, that’s right. Didn’t Echidna-san’s story say you lost your memories. Is it because of that that you don’t understand yourself?”

Subaru: “Hahah, maybe so. More clearly, if I could be different in every single aspect, then well, I’d definitely give this up, but…”

Whilst scratching his cheek, the opponent laughed at Otto’s jabs. What should he call his opponent; what name should he call out? Composure and impulsiveness cried out in unison within Otto’s head. Hesitating on the right choice of what to call that, hesitating on there being no other way to call out to that, he shouted.

Otto: “You’re…”

Subaru: “Even if you don’t say it, I know. My name is… Natsuki Subaru. I’m broke beyond compare.”

Otto: “…”

Subaru: “I’ve heard a lot about you as well. You have quite the reputation. Finally we’ve met, Otto.”

Saying that, that individual—who took the appearance of Natsuki Subaru, but looked completely different to the one Otto knew, laughed.

His lightless left eye had clouded over, and his hair had gone completely white for god knows what reason. As he smiled from ear to ear like he was somewhat off his rocker, Natsuki Subaru kept laughing.

Otto: “…”

Whilst gazing at the vigilant Otto before him, Subaru let out a long sigh.

Telling him he had changed a lot would be precisely describing what was detestable about him. Of course, even were someone to say he hadn’t changed, in his current mental state, Subaru would just receive that as irony; however, were someone to directly say “You’re a different person” then that would be quite hard for him to accept.

Up until now, this blunt manner of speaking hadn’t even been heard from the people who had come across him that had then been added to the patchwork, or even from the people that had been inside the tower.

Subaru: “Honestly, I’m having quite a hard time handling this.”

Otto: “…What do you mean?”

Subaru: “Didn’t you hear about what I’m doing from Echidna? My memories have vanished into thin air, I’ve been running amok with my head all loopy…That’s the gist of it anyways.”

Otto: “Of course I did. I even heard that you’re obsessed with trying to get your memories back.”

Subaru: “I don’t remember saying as much, but… well, it’s a reasonable guess. After all, every single one of you are quite competent. The only incompetent, no-good human being is me.”

Gently running his hand down his left eye, Subaru muttered this as if he was mocking himself. As he looked on at that gesture, Otto gulped.

Otto: “May I even ask what happened to that eye? “

Subaru: “Eye…Aah, my left eye? It does look a little bit hazy, but it’s no big deal. Though, it does seem like I hit my head a little bit too much when these shocking things started. For how my hair got this way, well, I didn’t do anything in particular… it just ended up like this on its own. How laughable. “

Otto: “Hahahaha, how laughable indeed. Are you satisfied?”

Subaru: “Far from it. There’s still a long way to go until I am satisfied. I’m so far away from it to the point that it’s depressing.”

Seeing Otto giving him a dry smile, Subaru also responded by showing him a dry smile.

Originally, it seemed like Otto and Subaru had been good friends, and, indeed he could see that. He got this feeling not only from the eyes of Emilia and Beatrice, or from everyone else in the camp, but it felt like something genuine.

Emilia: [Subaru and Otto-kun always got along so well, they were suuuuuper heartwarming.]

Beatrice: [Well, in essence, Subaru always used to tease Otto, in fact. I get the feeling that nothing much has changed, I suppose.]

On Otto’s left and right, Emilia and Beatrice each voiced their explanations. As he nodded his head at those explanations, Subaru licked his lips and said “Well then”

Subaru: “I’ve been looking forward to having my First Reunion with you for a very long time. Though, I know that you’re one of those bastards that become more dangerous the more time I give you. Sorry, but let’s bring this to an end now.”

Otto: “‘First Reunion’ is quite the peculiar way of putting it, but putting that aside, if I think about your goal…wasn’t it a failure?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Leaning forwards, Subaru frowned. And after that, Otto continued his words with a “How should I put it,” Otto: “Practically, it was quite the effective move. You found the right moment where everyone gathered in one building and killed them all in one go with a completely unescapable attack… I take my hat off at that. If your opponents get caught up in a natural disaster, they can’t strike back at you, regardless of whether they’re master swordsmen or a mercenary band.”

Subaru: “…”

Otto: “At this rate, wasn’t it part of your strategy to have let only Echidna-san escape from the Watchtower? You let her escape, so that she’d gather people who knew you through the report she gave. Following that hypothesis, the likelihood of Priestella being at the center of where everyone would gather was high. There are watergates here.”

Subaru: “…I’m honored to be praised by you.”

Whilst showing an attitude that he accepted the praise, Subaru rolled his tongue back into his mouth. Rather, it ought to be Otto who should be praised.

Otto, who had almost hit the nail on the head, had guessed the truth quite well, including that Subaru had allowed Echidna to escape.

Although,

Subaru: “Well, to tell the truth, at first it was by chance that Echidna escaped, but then I realized that she’d be useful after she’d escaped. It was because of that I didn’t chase after her.”

Otto: “I see. I’d have been surprised if you saw that far ahead. It wouldn’t be any leap of the imagination to say that those who lose their memories become quite shrewd. —But”

Cutting off his words there, Otto glared at Subaru. Recognizing the strength of the resolve within his eyes, Subaru put strength into the depths of his own.

And, putting himself on guard, Otto continued his words.

Otto: “In the end, you’ve completely screwed up your endgame.”

Subaru: “I’ve screwed it up? Me? What’s the meaning of that?”

Otto: “…It’s an expression I still don’t understand well, but there isn’t any meaning to it. You don’t get chances like these where you can strike with such an upper hand often. If you’d been earnest about it, then you should have carried out what you set out to do.”

Subaru: “What I set out to do…”

Otto: “You should have aimed straight for Reinhard-san without getting too greedy.”

Thrusting his finger out at him, Otto firmly declared that to Subaru. Subaru’s eyes flew wide open when he heard that declaration, and taking no note of his astonished face, Otto pressed Subaru for an answer.

Otto: “Weren’t you using the Books of the Dead where the memories of others can be read in? If you’re planning to use them to try and get yourself back, Reinhard-san will become your greatest threat. And if you’re aiming at him, then it’ll be impossible unless you catch him by surprise. From here on out, you’ll have to be on your guard. You’ll never get a second chance.”

Subaru: “So, the moment I clamped my fangs around my prey, I shouldn’t have let go. Is that what you’re saying? “

Otto: “Indeed, that’s exactly what I am saying. So you sh…”

Subaru: “Kh”

Otto: “—?”

Otto raised his eyebrows at the rather abrupt, strange sound that could be heard coming from Subaru’s throat. His reaction showed surprise, bewilderment and confusion.

Subaru wasn’t play-acting or a trick; his reaction was because of Otto. Such a reaction even may have been quite natural in some respects.

Despite having read between the lines of a lot of what had happened, in the very end, he had mistook what his endgame was.

Subaru: “It’s you, Otto, it’s you who’s misunderstanding.”

Otto: “That’s…”

Subaru: “The one I was aiming for wasn’t Reinhard. Of course, a lot of hassle would have been saved if he ended up dying amongst the chaos of this flood, but I won’t make any pretenses in relying on such a happy accident.”

Reinhard’s out of the norm characteristics were generally speaking fully known by everyone. He was the Sword Saint that you always heard about in rumor; the act of killing him would be a herculean one—In any case, it’d be necessary to keep building and building and building a plan to take care of him.

Dying to a casual, lucky hit wasn’t the sort of death that you could expected from a hero.

Subaru: “That’s why I need to try and look for a way to do that if I am kill that guy. I may weaken him, I may surprise attack him, I may set a trap for him, I may even take a hostage. Of course, if I need to kill him, I will do so…… But, he’s low priority.”

Otto: “Then, was the flood simply to get rid of the people who knew you all at once? For certain, the number of people who know you in this city due to what happened the other day has…”

Otto had tried to continue by saying skyrocketed. But before he could say it, Subaru had held out his palm.

Even Subaru knew what he was trying to tell him. The violence of the Witch Cult that had took place in the Watergate City Priestella had been scrutinized from every angle. Certainly, in that sense, that had been one of the ideas behind having used this city as well. However, that was a trivial factor compared to the biggest reason why.

Subaru’s objective behind causing the flood using the Watergate City as his stage was just one thing.

His main objective was—

Subaru: "—It's you, Otto."

Otto: "…Ah?"

Subaru: "This was a way I devised to make sure I could kill you. Anyone else who dies… Well, I guess they're just bonuses."

Otto: "…"

Otto tensed up as if he didn't understand the meaning behind the objective that Subaru had pointed out.

And then, closing his right eye at the astonished Otto, Subaru spun his head around in a circle, looking around at the scene on the rooftop, reflecting the world around him in his hazy left eye.

Otto: "…Why… me?"

Subaru: "Why did I make such a big deal just for you? It was the embodiment of the utmost caution I have for you. Even having Garfiel beside you was added to the plan as a safety measure."

Otto: "…"

Subaru: "Just so you know, this ain't something I thought by myself, since I don't trust my thoughts at all. I've only just realized I've been racking useless wisdom out of my useless head."

Indeed, Subaru's cunning did not amount to much.

No satisfactory thoughts arose in Subaru's mind, with him being naive to the understanding of the rules of the world, disconnected from the secrets of the world, and unfamiliar with the laws of the world.

That's why—

Subaru: "I made sure to consult with them."

Otto: "…"

Those who surrounded the taciturn, stricken Otto were all of his colleagues that were only visible to Subaru's left eye, and remained forevermore unreflected in Otto's eyes.

Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Roswaal, Petra, Frederica; all of his colleagues that made up the Emilia camp surrounded Otto.

Looking at each of their faces one by one, Subaru shrugged his shoulders and said "Isn't that right?"

Subaru: "Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?"

[Otto-kun]

Emilia replied.

Subaru: "Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?"

[Otto, I suppose]

Beatrice replied.

Subaru: "Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?"

[That would be Otto, wouldn't it. How bothersome.]

Ram replied.

Subaru: "Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?"

[It would be Ottoooooooo-kun]

Roswaal replied.

Subaru: "Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?"

[Otto-san]

Petra replied.

Subaru: “Who is… the most troublesome guy from those who know me?”

[It’s Otto-sama]

Frederica replied.

Subaru: “—It’s unanimous. Even if Garfiel joined in with them, he’d probably say the same thing.”

Otto: “Who on earth are you talking to…”

Subaru: “Even if you’re trying to buy time, I should mention that it’s pointless. The reason I flooded the city was to kill you. —Even you won’t find a way to escape from this place, where there ain’t even a single damn rat left.”

This was the reason why Subaru had opened the floodgates and submerged the city in water.

Whether it be water dragon, rat or worm, none of them could get near Otto Suwen. By having been parted from terra firma, he was unable to use the witchcraft he specialized in.

Subaru had orchestrated everything to this point making full use of everyone’s knowledge.

This, and that, and everything was—

Subaru: “—I will not underestimate you. I will not underestimate anyone other than me. You’re all skilled guys. That’s why I will kill you without cutting any corners.”

Otto: “You are…”

???: “—Master”

After receiving Subaru’s powerful declaration of war, a voice interrupted Otto who had tried to continue what he was saying. The one who landed adroitly onto the rooftop was Shaula, half of her body was soaked in bright red blood.

And as she brushed the area around her chest that had become completely stained in blood, she said,

Shaula: “Finally I’m done! Kyaa~ He was so so stubborn. I legit thought he was immortal with how much I knocked about the stuff inside of his stomach and sent him flying!”

Subaru: “You really did take your time… Did you make sure to finish him off properly?”

Shaula: “I even crushed his head, maybe. Except for Master, human beings die if their heads get crushed, right?”

Subaru: “I don’t get why you’re excluding me. Even I’ll die if I get my head crushed!”

Shaula: “You’re full of surprises~”

Frivolously laughing, Shaula pushed her shoulders up in disbelief. From Subaru’s perspective, the way she thought was quite incomprehensible, but it would be uncouth to meddle into Shaula’s sense of values.

Above all else, she fulfilled the duties that were assigned to her. That was good enough for now.

Subaru: “Thanks for the hard work, Shaula. And now…”

Shaula: “I just need to kill Mr. First-Choice-san, riiight? Butbut, was he really an opponent yahaddago to these lengths for? To me, it really seems that…”

Subaru: “If you’re going to speak of stuff just as a matter of raw strength or weakness, then even I’d be able to finish you off with one hand.”

Otto’s strength was contained in a part within him which was hard to gauge by Shaula’s estimation. That was the conclusion he had come to after having pieced the details together from the stories that he’d heard from Emilia and the others.

Hearing Subaru’s response, Shaula replied with a “Mhm~ Of coursse” in agreement.

And on the other side, Otto, with hatred throbbing through the depths of his heart, was looking on at their exchange.

Otto: “No way, being assessed as the most valued in life and having it backfire like this… this feels the absolute worst.”

Subaru: “Valued in life? You’re misunderstanding it.”

There wasn’t a trace of sarcasm in what Subaru had replied to Otto’s words with; he had spoken from his heart.

This was the truth Subaru had seen from reading everyone from the Emilia Camp’s books. There was no mistaking it.

Subaru: “You were always the most valued from everyone in the camp, Otto!”

Otto: “—Eat shit, you phony.”

To Subaru, who had flashed his teeth and grinned, Otto also flashed his teeth and twisted his face into a terrible grin.

Though those words pierced into Subaru’s chest quite a bit—

“…”

—In the very next moment, a white flash of light pierced through Otto’s body, and their conversation was forcibly brought to a close.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to form its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to mold its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to fill in the colors.

Patching together, patching together, patching together, and continuing towards bringing himself closer to completion.

???: “—This is as far as you’ll go.”

Natsuki Subaru slowly opened his closed eyelids right as those words came into earshot.

Below his eyes, at his feet, Otto’s corpse whose top half had been blown away had fallen there. Garfiel, who had died in battle, should be floating away somewhere in the water’s surface nearby.

What Subaru was doing under these circumstances, as terribly hypocritical as it was, was giving them a silent prayer. Subaru held no grudges against Otto or Garfiel.

There wasn’t any reason for Subaru to hold anything like a grudge against those that he had killed thus far. —No, he believed that the original Subaru should indeed keep his grudge against Roswaal, who had been behind considerable crimes; but the current Subaru didn’t know the real intentions of Roswaal at that time.

Other than these subtle matters of unease, Subaru didn’t hold any resentment towards anyone else. The one he always bore hatred for, was himself. He bore hatred for himself, who was not ‘Natsuki Subaru’.

This phony version of himself was of no use to anyone.

It was just the ridiculous Natsuki Subaru that tried to collect the bits and pieces of ‘Natsuki Subaru’. It was just the ridiculous Natsuki Subaru that tried to assemble the patchwork. It was just the ridiculous Natsuki Subaru that tried to form himself from patching himself together in one way or another.

That’s why—

Subaru: “I’d like to apologize, even to you.”

???: “…Subaru”

Turning his head to look back behind him, Subaru gazed ahead of him at Reinhard, who was standing at the edge of the rooftop.

Though he had seen his figure in the memories of a lot of people, there wasn't a single trace of cloudiness in his orderly figure. As a matter of fact, he had even managed to not get any of his clothes wet; how on earth had he achieved that?

Subaru: "I see, you're out of the norm."

Reinhard: "Subaru, did you do all of this? …Otto, Garfiel, and…"

Subaru: "I ordered them killed—if that's what you mean then yes. And not just those two. A whole ton of people in the city became victims in the flood… And all by my doing."

Reinhard: "Why… why did you do this?! You went to save the people in this city…"

Subaru: "To the watchtower, right? I know. I know all too well. As always, my experiences of it are rather lacking, but I do have some vague gist of it like as if I'd read a manga summary."

Whilst soaking in Reinhard's blame, Subaru spread out both of his arms towards the city.

The city was encroached in the turmoil of having been inundated by the water, but he knew that it had gone through a tough time even before this flood. The scars that had been left due to the violence of the Witch Cult and such were more warped rather than deep.

They had snatched away people's memories, they had changed people into inhuman forms, they had used overwhelming strength to forcibly subdue those who wouldn't follow their will, and they had forced their warped thoughts onto others to make them sympathize with them.

It was needless to say the things they did were of the worst nature in the sense that they trampled upon the quintessence of humanity.

But, at the same time, it gave him a certain sort of impression.

Subaru: "—Their plans are full of holes. I'm guessing they go in thinking they can't lose, and that's why they go rushing in with such dumbass plans.”

The Sin Archbishops who possessed supernatural-like strength were all sitting still on their abilities. Hadn’t anyone taught those guys? No matter what sort of strength you hold, if you use it the wrong way, then you will be defeated no matter who you are.

Whether it be wisdom, numbers or great talent, you will always be defeated.

Subaru: “I’m not going to challenge you being only partly prepared. Finding a way of making sure I win will only work with the right timing. That’s why I will consult them.”

Reinhard: “Consult…Is the one deceiving you the girl beside you?”

Shaula: “Huh, meeeee?”

Suddenly piping up, Shaula, who was beside Subaru, widened her eyes in surprise. She stared at Reinhard as she pointed at herself.

Shaula: “Me deceiving Master… If I could pull such a temptress’ move, I’d have done it looong ago! Master’s soo sexy like this since he doesn’t get caught up in my temptations… at all! Though, you’re too sexy for your own good!”

Subaru: “Though her position is that of a collaborator, she ain’t got the head to be able to deceive. It’s not really that I’m being deceived by anyone… No, if I’m forced to say it, I guess it would be a voice from within me.”

Reinhard: “A voice… from within you…?”

Subaru: “The sleeping lion inside of me is seeking the time of its release and is rampaging.”

After intently listening to Subaru’s response, Reinhard quickly realized that what he was saying was nonsense. Whilst gazing at Reinhard’s eyes which were clearly dyed in despair, Shaula nudged her elbow at Subaru’s side, speaking out a “Mastermaster”

Shaula: “Hey, um, that one’s presence is remarkably Reidish. Isn’t that scary?”

Subaru: “Indeed it is. Remarkably scary indeed. It’s because that guy’s Reid’s descendant.”

Shaula: “De-Descendant.”

Subaru: “His children’s children, and their children’s children and so on. That’s the nuance of it.”

Shaula: “Uurgh! He can’t seriously be related to Reid, right?! I wasn’t told about this!”

Shaula complained about her disadvantage to Subaru, her facing looking like she’d been ensnared in a Kaizo Trap. In actuality, the memories of being pummeled by Reid were quite clear for Subaru and the others.

(TL Note: To learn more about the provenance of the term Kaizo Trap, refer to this

It was natural that he wouldn’t be able to beat Reinhard, Reid’s blood relative, in a fair and open battle as well.

Reinhard: “—I’m sorry, but let’s put an end to your acts of barbarity here. Me being able to do that, is proof of my friendship towards you.”

Subaru: “You say such sad things in spite of us having a relationship where we gatecrashed a wedding ceremony together! Well, though it’s me who made you say it, you know, apparently Emilia-tan was delighted…”

Reinhard: “Subaru, stop already. —Just, stop.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru kept his mouth shut at the mournful echo of Reinhard’s entreaty. Reinhard’s expression was warped into something quite pitiful. From it, Subaru received a sharp pang as if his chest had been torn open.

It was the same as Otto and Garfiel, where he had no grudge against them.

Subaru didn't hold any grudges even against Reinhard. He knew that he was someone who bore no fault. He knew that he was a benefactor that was undeserving of being blamed. He also knew that he had been a good friend.

But despite that—

Subaru: "—I also need the piece inside of you to get back 'Natsuki Subaru'. That's why I will come to kill you one day."

Reinhard: "…"

Subaru: "But, not now. Not today. It's a matter for tomorrow's tomorrow."

A trace of bewilderment clouded Reinhard's eyes just after he heard Subaru's proclamation.

Reinhard was trying to settle things here right now. In fact, if Reinhard wanted to do so, Subaru was in a position where he could close the distance with a single step and cut him down in an instant. Even if Shaula made a motion to defend him, it wouldn't really change the outcome.

But despite that, Subaru could still say—

???: [Assuming Felt managed to take shelter in all of this, I think she'd be somewhere at the edge of the city.]

—And turning towards the direction pointed out by the bald-headed giant, Shaula fired a flash of white light towards there.

"…"

In an instant, Reinhard held his breath and flew backwards, following after the soaring blow of light at the exact same speed as it. He hadn't done that to kill Subaru, who stood in front of him, but rather to rush towards the faraway building where Reinhard's master—Felt had hidden after having survived the flood, so he could knock down that flash of white light.

???: [If you keep something important nearby, then of course, that's the same as exposing your weak points. The same thing applies to the Sword Saint Reinhard, dooooesn't it?]

Roswaal, who had given this suggestion let a wicked grin form on his face, and basked in his satisfaction in having outwitted the Sword Saint. Giving him a look from the side, Subaru took a short breath, and said.

Subaru: "Shaula, let's pull back. —That's enough for today."

Shaula: "Ooookay!"

Cheerfully lifting her hand, Shaula wrapped her arm around Subaru's back. She hoisted Subaru up with unbelievable strength from her slender arms, and with a light bend of her knees, she tried to leap out of the city.

But, just before the first jump had began, Subaru turned towards Reinhard, and said.

Subaru: "—You are not as omnipotent or superhuman as you think you are."

That's why—

Subaru: "—I will absolutely kill you too, Reinhard."

Patching together, patching together, continuing to form its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to mold its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to fill in the colors.

Patching together, patching together, patching together, and continuing towards bringing himself closer to completion.

???: “—I want you to tell me once again. What is your name?”

???: “Ah, Amue. Amue Sears…”

???: “I see, that’s a fine name, Amue. …What happened now must’ve been tough.”

Amue: “Hghhgh…”

The red-haired knight, who had seemingly gotten onto one knee to be on the same level as with Amue, spoke those words to her. As soon as she heard those words, the little girl’s tensed emotions snapped loose.

Tears slowly trickled down Amue’s face, and her body began to tremble from the belayed terror that had returned to her.

Then, as he looked on at the sobbing little girl, the knight—Reinhard turned his eyes to look at his surroundings and bit his lip; deep worry was brimming in his chest at the terrible spectacle he saw.

Reinhard: “…”

Two days ago, an incident had occurred at a small village in the northern parts of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

It took awhile for the incident to be known because the village was located in the remote borderlands, and due to that, it lay quite far from both the Royal Capital and the five major cities. Dispatching the knights, including Reinhard, had ended up being delayed by several days.

In that meantime, Amue, who had become the sole survivor in the village, had just been sitting there, holding her knees in loneliness. —She’d been there, surrounded by all of the corpses of her family and the people she knew well.

Reinhard: “Subaru…”

Reinhard pensively muttered his name out as he touched the pommel of his Dragon Sword which he had holstered by his waist

Given the issues in this kind of incident, there was a good chance that this act of barbarity had been carried out by a Witch Cultist. However, Reinhard's intuition naturally saw through to whose hand had carried out this horrendous scene.

Reinhard: "The ones who did this… If I'm not mistaking it, it was a man and a woman, right? Two young people."

Amue: "Y-Yeah… Th-That's right. Ah, but…"

Reinhard: "But?"

As she heaved with sobs, Amue choked up her words as she replied to Reinhard's question. Amue hesitated as Reinhard awaited her to continue her words; his well-shaped eyebrows were furrowed into a frown.

Amue: "I don't know who the woman was, but, the man was…"

Reinhard: "The man was?"

Amue: "I hadn't realized it, but it was like he was talking to someone…"

Reinhard: "…"

Was there a trace of hesitation when she conveyed that vague information? Amue's explanation lacked conviction in it. But, Reinhard closed his eyes and breathed out a long sigh at her words.

Amue's perception was correct. That man and woman—No, Natsuki Subaru was definitely speaking with someone other than the woman who accompanied him, which was as Amue had seen.

Reinhard didn't know whether that someone was someone he knew, but—

Reinhard: "You have my gratitude for providing me this information. The Knight Order should deal with this right away. Do you have any relatives other than your family… ?”

Amue: “—Ah”

Amu’s fingers gently grasped at Reinhard’s trouser cuff as he spoke to her with kindness. As if frightened of him leaving her, Amue’s face had turned to disbelief at her own action.

However, given her mental state, that too was natural.

She had lost her family and her hometown too. How much suffering awaited her from here on out?

If he could be useful in distracting her from her anxiety in the midst of this, then.

Reinhard: “All right. I will stay with you until your safety is ensured. So, I want you to rest assured—Because no one that wishes you harm will get close to you anymore.”

Amue: “S-Sob…S-Sorry, I’m really sorry…”

Reinhard: “You needn’t apologize. —Since, you didn’t do anything wrong.”

Taking her hand, Reinhard silently thought back to the guy who had caused this horrendous spectacle as he watched Amue once again starting to burst into heavy tears.

Reinhard: “Are you… Are you satisfied with this? Does it fulfill you? What on earth do you see reflected in your eyes? I just don’t understand. —Subaru.”

Reinhard muttered out the name of the person who wasn’t here and closed his eyes.

The figure which was reflected behind Reinhard’s eyelids was a friend who would eventually come to kill him. That friend would likely go to any means for that.

He was a friend that eventually Reinhard would have to kill by his hand.

???: [I guess by now that child, Amue, must have been found by Reinhard-san, right?]

Subaru: “She was the only left alive in the village that burnt down, right? If a child of that age sees Reinhard, she’ll become relieved and she likely won’t be able to be separated from him. —With this, he won’t have time to pursue us.”

???: [How cunning, or rather, how crafty, or…Though, well, I’m not one to talk.]

???: [Tha’s righ’. Brotto ‘n Captain really do damn get on th’ same wavelength at times like these.]

???: “Ewwww”

???: [Y’ damn well fit to a T!]

Pushing his way through a thicket using the branch he held in his hand, Subaru, who was following an off-road path, scrunched up his face into a frown. Otto, who was treading through the forest beside him in the same way had a similar expression on his face. And Garfiel, who was looking on at the two of them, clapped his hands together and clacked his fangs, laughing at the situation.

???: [Hehe- But, it’s great that we’re all together at last, don’t you think? It’s all thanks to Subaru being reaaaally busy and doing his very best.]

Subaru: “When you say it like that, even I get the feeling that my efforts were worthwhile and it lets me have peace of mind. If you, Emilia-tan, feel like I’ve done things properly, then I want you to reward me in so many different ways, but…”

Emilia: [You want that, but?]

Subaru: “…Well, with me being an innocent boy, it means I can’t let male instinct do the talking for me.”

Subaru looked at Emilia who had innocuously tilted her head forward. As he scratched his cheeks, Subaru turned his face away from her. A gaze stopped him in his tracks ahead of him; that gaze was Ram's who had turned a look of disdain towards him.

Ram: [Disgusting.]

Subaru: "Cut down in one blow! Generally speaking, I never said that! I want you to praise my feelings since I managed to not say any of my embarrassing desires!"

Ram: [Ram? Praise Barusu? I'd rather heaven and hell be flipped over than do that.]

Subaru: "I'm lower than a cataclysm?!"

Shrugging her shoulders, Ram turned her back from him and began to walk away with grace. Subaru's shoulders stooped down in dejection seeing Ram's attitude. And then a two small hands gently took ahold of his own from his left and right.

???: [Jeez, I can see how glum you look from all the way over here, in fact. If of all people Betty's partner is going to get like this, then I can tell the going ahead is going to get rough, I suppose.]

???: [That's right. Ram nee-sama's always been blunt, it's not like it's something she just started doing now. That's the reason why I'm gonna go easy on Subaru-sama. Good boy, good boy.]

Subaru: "Heyhey, no way, am I in the middle of a little girl sandwich…though now that I think on it, Petra isn't that little anymore. Dammit, time sure is cruel… as it keeps passing by I'll only be left with Beako as a little girl…"

Beatrice: [Little girl…what do you mean little girl, in fact?! That's impolite for a lady, I suppose!!]

Having graduated from being lolimanced, Petra puffed out her chest in delight, and Beatrice teetered between taking it as a compliment and otherwise. Nonetheless, Beatrice seemed to be a little girl by nature, thus it couldn't be helped.

Subaru: "It seems like the mothers and fathers of the world want their children to stop growing at their cutest age; you're like something out of a dream in that sense, Beako!"

Beatrice: [Hmph…By saying that are you hinting that Betty is the cutest in this world, in fact?]

Subaru: "I'd like to gather candidates for the seat of cutest in this world and make them compete with each other; though, the prettiest in this world is you. I'll try give you a medal."

Petra: [What about me? Heyhey, Subaru-sama, what about me?]

Subaru: "Hmmm, Petra is the cutiest in this world."

Petra: [Yaaaay!]

Letting out a cry of mirth, Petra took hold of one of Beatrice's hands and jumped about happily. Whilst being overwhelmed by that vigor, Beatrice also seemed like she wasn't at all in a bad mood.

Towards there—

???: [Well, well, weeeeeell, it seems like you're really in high spirits, doooooesn't it? Putting aside your physical appearance, you should be acting your actual age amongst them, but despite that, this is still raaaaaather adorable, isn't it?]

Beatrice: [Ugh, I suppose…]

Roswaal took a step forward with his long legs, an air of composure rested on his face. Beatrice made an unpleasant face at Roswaal who had made his appearance. Incidentally, Petra, who was holding Beatrice's hand also put on a look of displeasure due to the position of mischief that coated him in her Master's camp. Well, if you think about what he has been guilty of, it was natural though regrettable.

???: [Beatrice-sama, Petra, don't make such unpleasant faces.]

Roswaal: [Indeeeeeeeed, that's Frederica for you. Telling the both of you exactly h…]

Frederica: [Don't you two know that the more you make those faces, the more you’re just going to cause Master to be pleased, right? Since Master’s that kind of gentleman.]

Roswaal: [I take baaaaaack what I said.]

Roswaal lost his composure too on receiving Frederica’s sharp blow.

On the other side, both Petra and Beatrice obediently accepted Frederica’s words with an “Oookay” and an “All right, in fact.”

Subaru: “…Well, I also feel like y’all are too fussy, but I guess this fuss is a page of everyday life, right?”

???: [It doesn’t matter if it’s a page of everyday life, but please, aren’t you forgetting about me and Miss Meili?]

Subaru: “Mhm…”

A little apart from the Emilia camp who were chiding each other as they walked, Julius who was walking behind them, spoke that out. Closing one of his eyes, he reflected Subaru in his yellow eye and said,

Julius: [Though, do you take pride in that my advice was helpful for you when facing Reinhard?]

Subaru: “I ain’t saying it wasn’t helpful, but your evaluation of Reinhard makes him look a bit like a Dream Guy, so its credibility can be shaky. You mustn’t go getting yourself too caught up in your hero syndrome.”

Julius: [That’s not an answer which’ll help you borrow my strength. Maybe I should change my attitude a bit from now?]

???: [Heeeeyhey, sayin’ it like that’s no good, Julius. Should I draw up a propa’ loan for Natsuki-kun instead? It should work well enough even without a contract.]

With a tit-for-tat reply said in a gentle tone, Anastasia broke her way into Subaru and Julius’ exchange, which was prone to break into a full blown argument if it went on like that.

Anastasia, having completely regained her merchant-like attitude, stared at Subaru with her turquoise eyes and after causing him to blanch a little, she said:

Anastasia: [Natsuki-kun, arentcha forgetting? If we cooperate wit' each other well, then Natsuki-kun, when you get back to normal, you'll…]

Subaru: "—Aah, I remember. If I get 'Natsuki Subaru' back and go back to the time where I can restore everything properly, then"

Cutting his words there, Subaru took a deep breath and continued.

Subaru: "Then finally, I can take the time to atone to everyone whom I've killed."

Patching together, patching together, continuing to form its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to mold its shape.

Patching together, patching together, continuing to fill in the colors.

Patching together, patching together, patching together, and continuing towards bringing himself closer to completion.

Bringing himself closer to completion, and if the patching was completed this time around.

If his patching could be patched together as he was originally, then surely.

—Then surely, there was no doubt that he could do everything over again.

—'Natsuki Subaru' had the power to redo fate.

That was Natsuki Subaru's conclusion.

He could get back the lives of Emilia, Beatrice, Ram, Julius, Meili, Petra, Frederica, Roswaal, Rom-ji, Garfiel, Otto, Anastasia, Ricardo, Hetaro, Tivey, Mimi, Kiritaka and Liliana.

It should be possible, if he was 'Natsuki Subaru'

Because, 'Natsuki Subaru' was—

[My esteemed knight.] [Betty's partner, I suppose.] [A man with only good timing.] [A good friend, I'd think.] [We~ll, maybe it's alright if I appreciate him a li~ttle.] [It felt like I could always give my best thanks to Subaru!] [I am grateful for the many times Subaru-sama has saved us.] [Subaru-kun, I've been waiting eagerly for you for many many years…] [Never for a second did I think that such a rookie could do all this.] [Captain! Y'can talk to me whenever if there's 'ny problem! I'll do anythin' 'f it's somethin' I can use my strength for!] [Well, I find it scary that the consequences of repaying my debt come back to bite me, so I would like you to take things in moderation though.] [Mhhhm, busyin' yourself is quite good y'know. Me, Mimi and the others should try'n loosen up a lil' bit more.] [Oh, ain't that a good change Ana-bo's proposin'! Aye Aye, we 'been workin' too much! A buncha days off would hit the spot!] [If Miss takes some time off, I'll start dishing out the work…] [When we get Natsuki-san to help out, Miss will make sure to try get the best out of him.] [Ooo, you're right! I getcha I getcha! Mimi too, Mimi too! Mimi will do her very best with Garf!] [So I can pay my debt of gratitude to you for saving the city… is something I cannot say so easily if we consider what happened to it afterwards, but…] [You're kiiidding right? Could it be that Kiritaka-san you're holding this grudge a bit tooo much? Becausebecause, if Natsuki Subaru-sama goes completely back to normal, then everything will go back to how it was, wouldn't it!]

With the strength of that of raging billows, the companions that surrounded Subaru listed their expectations in 'Natsuki Subaru'.

Subaru nodded as he listened to it, feeling like he was intruding on other people's affairs.

Subaru: "Aah, that's right. That's right indeed. Even though it's quite impossible for me, even though it was impossible, I will."

???: [If it's you, Subaru, you can do it, right?]

Subaru: "Surely I will… No, I absolutely will, don't you think?"

Subaru declared that with his fist clenched tight, and cheers ran out from his companions. As he basked in the din before him, suddenly, Emilia approached him. Subaru raised his eyebrows at her.

She gently beckoned Subaru, and then, she pointed her finger towards somewhere a little apart from the circle of their companions. The one who stood where her white finger had pointed to was—

Emilia: [—Shaula… she looks lonely. That's dreadful, Subaru. She looks so pitiful, doesn't she?]

Subaru: "She's…"

Emilia: "Don't give excuses. All of us absolutely want to try and do our best in any way we can with Subaru, but, the one who is doing their best would first of all be Subaru, and then wouldn't it be Shaula? So…"

Subaru: "…"

Emilia: "So, you have to take good care of her. —Promise."

What Emilia spoke to Subaru, a promise, was something which held really really great significance between the two of them. —No, as a matter of fact, as Subaru wasn't 'Natsuki Subaru' he didn't understand how 'Natsuki Subaru' regarded the weight of it.

But, even if he didn't understand 'Natsuki Subaru' , he understood the trust Emilia had when she tried to make promises with 'Natsuki Subaru' all too painfully.

Subaru: "…All right. I promise."

Emilia: "Mhm, perfect. —Well then, I'll see you later, Subaru."

Saying that, Emilia waved goodbye to him as she smiled.

And immediately after Subaru recognized that, the many figures of his companions that appeared from his ever cloudening left eye's field of view completely vanished. After that, everything went still, no one was there. A stillness that felt like it cut off everything but Subaru was left behind.

The one whom he had made the promise with wasn't there anymore, let alone the vestiges of the promise he had shared.

Subaru: "—Shaula, come here."

Tossing aside those desiccated thoughts, Subaru called out to Shaula, who was walking in the distance. Hearing that call, Shaula's face suddenly lit up and she leaped up and came rushing over to where Subaru was.

Shaula: "Wassssup, Master! Hm, has your fun-time where you're off grumbling to yourself as if you're having fun finished?!"

Subaru: "Don't you go saying it so damn straight! You don't have to say it like you're talking to a loony, there's no damn need to be so hurtful!"

Shaula: "My baaad!"

Slapping the top of her forehead with her palm, Shaula took back what she said all the while sticking out her tongue. Was she apologizing? It didn't feel like an apology, but, well, it was close enough.

In any case, Shaula, who had kept accompanying Subaru all the way here from the tower of sand—Certainly, the main contributor towards Subaru's aims was this woman, and not just because of what Emilia had said.

He borrowed ideas, knowledge and wisdom from his many companions in drafting a course of action and plans. But, what was needed for that each time was the power to carry those things out; to put it more simply, he needed fighting strength.

Shaula’s presence was indispensable in order to make those possible. Even so, Subaru had done almost nothing to reward her.

It felt like she was just a well he could always draw water from whenever he needed it.

It was as if she was saying he could do anything no matter what it was, if it was him, who wasn’t ‘Natsuki Subaru’

Subaru: “…”

Shaula: “Master?”

Without thinking, Shaula questioningly tilted her head at Subaru, who had sunk into silence. Long black hair slowly cascaded down her pale, bare shoulders.

As he paid attention to that, Subaru gulped and set his thoughts straight,

Subaru: “Shaula. What is it that you want to do in the end?”

Shaula: “Mhm~ What do you mean?”

Subaru: “I don’t mean anything! You must understand what my aim is, right?”

Until just before, he had disregarded any thoughts that related to how he would reward Shaula. Were you to pay attention to him, you’d notice that Subaru had begun to speak in a manner that showed traces of rudeness.

To those words, Shaula frowned, and her face showed no traces that she had understood what Subaru had said. She brought her frown-adorned face closer, and as a result of that, Subaru held her back by placing his palm on her forehead.

And as he held her back,

Subaru: “I kill everyone who knows me, and I read their Books of the Dead. If I wipe out everyone who knows me, then the last one would be you. After that, I’ll end up reading your book, and yet…”

Subaru lacked the most important parts of himself by a mile and wasn't able to fill in that gaping hole with his own strength. Subaru had no choice but to build 'Natsuki Subaru' up little by little by collecting all the scraps of 'Natsuki Subaru' from every single people who knew 'Natsuki Subaru' and patching them into his original form.

In its completed form, it would contain all the memories of those who were familiar with 'Natsuki Subaru.' Like Emilia, Beatrice, and so on; Shaula was no exception either.

That's why he had promised Reinhard that he'd kill him someday as well.

She kept openly smiling in front of Subaru's eyes. She kept helping Subaru in his objective without any hesitation. She kept interacting with her carefree attitude. And he had to kill her.

Subaru: "And yet, you accompany me? Shaula"

Shaula: "Are you worried about meeee? Is it because you love me?"

Subaru: "—. Don't joke about. I'm asking you seriously."

Shaula's answer to the sincere question he had asked was in the same tone as usual. And since that had gotten on Subaru's nerves, he repeated his question again a little more crudely.

But, after receiving his words, Shaula called back to him with a: "Master"

Shaula: "I'm really not joking about. Since being loved by Master is the meaning of my life. So, that's what matters the moossst."

Subaru: "…"

Shaula: "If Master loves meeee, then you may make use of me as much as you like. My life is Master's property. Being used as much as you like, Master… that is what I desire."

Still in her usual tone, still with her clingy attitude which had to be bluntly brushed off, still giving off a rather flippant vibe where it couldn't be distinguished if she was being serious or joking about, Shaula ran her hands down her ample breasts.

She ran them down and then turned her dark eyes to look at Subaru before giving him a weak smile.

What was shown there in her sincerity was an attitude that she lived her life earnestly, never ever lying. Shaula always spoke seriously. —And since she did, she had no need to lie.

Shaula: "You may use meee as much as you like until I come to a miserable end. In exchange, I want you to love meee, and I want you to cry for meeee if I die. Since I'm really, I'm really just… I'm really just satisfied with that."

Subaru: "…Why do you devote so much of yourself to me like that? It has to because I'm 'Natsuki Subaru' "

Shaula: "That's not why."

Subaru: "…"

Shaula: "Master is Master; I don't care about anything else. I just love wanting to love so that I want to love the one that I want to love. And, if that person loves me back, well, that'd be perfect. Am I speaking weirdly?"

Shaula tilted her head; it seemed like she didn't hold a single doubt in what she'd said. Seeing that, Subaru let out a small "Hah." And soon enough what had been just a small snort of laughter steadily caused his throat to squeeze up into laughter.

Subaru laughed.

He didn't laugh as either 'Natsuki Subaru' or the play-acted version of 'Natsuki Subaru' he put on in front of Emilia and the others. This time he laughed as the hollow Natsuki Subaru that had forgotten everything about his life in another world.

Subaru: "Ahhh, god damn, don't you guys… don't you people go fucking worrying about my damn self-discovery… Damn idiots."

Shaula: “Huh?! Master, no way, did you get mad?! Did I say something weird?! Could it be that Monday, Thursday and Fridays are the days which all the burnable trash is thrown away?!”

Subaru: “I ain’t angry. I’m just amazed. I’m amazed, and ah, I’m damn speechless.”

Letting out a long sigh, Subaru slightly shook his head and started to walk. Shaula, looking rather unlike her usual self, timidly watched over Subaru’s back.

Subaru gave yet another long sigh seeing the stubbornness in her gaze.

Subaru: “You can do what you want, so, get yourself over here quickly.”

Shaula: “If I can do what I want… then, maybe you won’t get angry if I cling onto your arm, right?”

Subaru: “I guess so if you ain’t gonna cling on with your whole body weight.”

In an instant, Shaula’s face lit up and with a leap she wrapped Subaru’s arms around her chest. Even though usually it would have been a rough experience, only when it came to touching Subaru did Shaula tone down her strength.

It was like she was handling something fragile and important and trying not to break it.

Subaru hated that Shaula would flirt with him—No, he disliked it. Her affection made him uncomfortable.

The one which Shaula wanted to be affectionate to was ‘Natsuki Subaru’. And, since everybody thought that they didn’t care or hold any interest in Natsuki Subaru, other than ‘Natsuki Subaru’

Shaula: “Master, Master~”

Subaru: “Hm?”

Shaula: “I love youuu Master. Love is Over.”

Subaru: “I see. I don’t love you though.”

Shaula: “Guaaaaa! M-Master’s so mean…”

Subaru: “But.”

Shaula: “But?”

Subaru: “…After you kill Reinhard, I will kill you last. I, who am not ‘Natsuki Subaru’ will kill you last. That is what I will do for you.”

Shaula: “…”

Subaru: “That’s all I will promise”

Shaula: “Ah, aahah, ahahahah! Master, Master… really? I’ll be last? Am I gonna be Master’s last woman?”

Subaru: “When you say it like that, it makes me want to break that promise already.”

Shaula: “Ehh~! No! It’s a promise! It was definitely, definitely a promise!”

Subaru: “I was joking.”

Shaula: “Eeeeeh?! A joke? Which part was a joke?! Master, Master~!”

Under the radiant sky, Subaru squints his eyes at the sun's strong rays. A deafening cry can be heard.

The voice belongs to a baby girl, her forceful crying filled to the brim with all the strength her tiny body can muster.

Seeing her express her discomfort with the strength of her entire soul, Subaru wonders how it is that children can be so unbelievably energetic. And while thinking that, he shudders at how lacking in youth his thoughts have become.

"I've had a feeling I've been getting on lately, but it's pretty depressing to be consciously aware. Aren't I still a super lively YOUNG MAN?!"

""Super lively YOUNG MAN" my ass. Try looking at yourself a little more objectively."

While clutching his hands dramatically, Subaru is bombarded with trash talk. Used to the verbal abuse, he sighs lightly and looks to his side. A young boy stands beside him, his eyes level with the sitting Subaru.

Ignoring Subaru's silent stare, he adds,

"Anyways, do something about Spica already! Her crying's seriously getting on my nerves."

"No, I just can't go on anymore. After that last cruel remark, my NAIVE HEART is completely in tatters! Maybe I'll revert back to childhood and cry alongside Spica. Please forgive your useless father!"

"Who the hell's gonna forgive a grown man acting out in broad daylight like that?!"

The boy retorts loudly at Subaru's childish sulking. And, as he yells, the baby cradled in his arms, Spica, sucks in another mouthful of air. As the two men watch on helplessly, she once again explodes.

"WAAAAAAAAUUUU!!!"

"Whoa! She's crying! Spica's crying again! Hey Rigel, do something damnnit, you're her older brother!"

"If you're playing that card, then YOU should be the one doing something about this!"

Among the crowded city streets, in a certain boulevard, two men endlessly pass back the responsibility of calming the baby.

Passing townsfolk look to see what the commotion is about, see that it's these two clowning around, and proceed to casually ignore them with a face that says "oh, it's the same deal as always".

As a result, the tired act of the crying baby, and the two men that make her cry, goes on.

"This girl's crying out her lungs and soul and yet not a single person comes out to help… Damn, what a cruel and unreasonable world! Humanity has fallen so damn far!"

"We don't have time for you to lament about the state of the goddamn world! If we can't stop Spica's crying, when she comes back, what do you think she'll say—"

"When who comes back, and what will they be doing?" "Well that's obvious, it's…"

"Rigel", Subaru calls as they huddle for a moment. Nodding their heads in unison, Rigel first turns around. He stares dumbfoundedly, his jaw ajar.

Subaru follows his line of sight. "Hey, all done with the shopping?"

"Yes, without delay. …It looks like things were tough on your end though."

"Nah, Spica's super energetic today. Once she starts walking and running around, I bet she's gonna grow up to the type that just flings around men at her own insane pace. Such a nefarious future, it makes me both nervous and excited!"

As Subaru chatters casually, Spica, cradled in his arms, slowly opens her eyes and notices the woman now standing before her.

Despite her weak upper body, she opens her small hand and extends her arm out to her. Sensing Spica's desire, Subaru feels just a bit lonely.

"But well, ignoring her until she cries will just bring us back to square one. Here, take her."

"I have taken her."

Despite his rough speech, Subaru passes the baby with incredible care and caution. He handles her like a valuable, transient treasure, bringing a tiny smile to the woman's face.

The woman hugs the baby to her breast and carefully rocks her.

"Yes, what a useless father and older brother aren't they? Spica needs to get bigger quickly so she can scold the two of them."

"Hey hey, let's not feed her ideas like that while she can't understand words, okay?"

Subaru suddenly imagines being scolded on both sides by the two, hands on their hips, after saying or doing something stupid.

"Hm, it actually doesn't sound so bad. In fact, it's such a happy vision of the future that I'm tearing up."

"Well I don't like it. Getting scolded by my little sister would ruin my dignity."

"Ha! The moment someone fools around with me, they have no dignity to ruin. Yes, yes, I can see it… you will adore your little sister and spoil her far too much, to the point where she's scolding and spanking you without reserve. That will be your future!"

“Don’t push some weird future onto me just because you like getting scolded and spanked! There’s no way I’ll be like that!”

Subaru wags his finger tauntingly as Rigel retorts. But it isn’t Subaru who is agitated by the boy’s roars.

It’s the blue-haired woman who was watching over their bumbling. With a calm yet sharp voice, she calls the boy’s name.

“Rigel. What kind of language have you been using out in public. It brings your mother to tears.”

“Yeah but…”

“Your mother also doesn’t like your “Yeah but”s either. Also, what you said just now was mistaken.”

She mercilessly scolds the stammering Rigel. She then turns to Spica, who has finally calmed down, and smiles briefly.

“Your mother does not spank your father. Your father is always your mother’s number one favorite person after all.”

Blushing, she makes a remark even more embarrassing than crying in public.

Against his mother who so proudly makes such a declaration, Rigel finally throws in the towel.

Subaru laughs nervously as the woman who watches over her family so happily caresses her hair.

As if it was a fragment of the clear blue sky, Rem’s beautiful long blue hair shimmers elegantly with the wind.

2

In a small district in the country of Kararagi, at a clearing that may or may not qualify as a park, Subaru lumbers onto a nearby bench.

The boy with short blue hair named Rigel played rambunctiously with his friends. While the way he spoke with his father was awful, Subaru thought in moments like these that he might actually be a cute kid.

“Now if only we could deal with those eyes that make him look like he could kill someone.”

“We can’t do that. Those scary eyes are also a part of Rigel. No matter how much fun he’s having or how happy he is, strangers will always see his eyes and think he’s in a bad mood or that he’s some kind of delinquent.

That’s just who Rigel is.”

“I can hear you. Also, why does mom’s retort hurt even more than dad’s?!”

Rigel was playing “Freeze Tag” (*literally Ice Oni in Japanese), a game that Subaru had popularized recently. Having been frozen, Rigel can only comment from afar. Subaru carelessly waves over to him while Rem waves ever so gently so as not to disturb Spica.

Rigel puffs his cheeks and wrinkles his face in turn. At that moment, Subaru can’t help but think that Rigel looks just like he did in his own childhood albums.

“In other words, he’s pretty much guaranteed to end up just like me. If I was him, I would definitely try to fight it… if I was told I’d be me in twenty years.”

“Skilled in cooking and perfect in housework. Supporting her husband with all her love and care. Having such an ideal and wonderful wife… is what you’re talking about yes?”

“Who is that happy-go-lucky normie, damn he should just explode. Huh? Wait, that’s me!”

Rem giggles lightly as Subaru slaps his head and sticks out his tongue. Rem, trying to calm herself by clearing her throat, glances sideways at Subaru’s face.

“If you keep complimenting Rem like that, Rem might get carried away a little.”

“Hm, was I really complimenting you just now? All I did was not reject what you said. Though everything you said was basically completely true.”

Subaru knew that if he complimented her too freely, he’d get carried away with praise again and it’d be a mess. In such a public place as a park with kids running around, parents and neighbors were everywhere.

Once he started sweet talking with Rem, she would egg him on until their affection was tomorrow’s talk of the town.

That in and of itself wasn’t too bad, Subaru thought as he relished the warm afternoon air.

If he closed his eyes, the comfort of the sun’s warm rays made him feel like he was floating. The exhaustion from working long, late hours felt like it was being washed away as his head wavered slightly from its weight.

“Hm?”

“If you’d like, please rest on Rem’s shoulder. Rem’s lap is currently being occupied.”

Opening his eyes, Subaru finds his body already resting against Rem. There was a noticeable difference in their sitting heights. If he adjusted his neck, Subaru could comfortably rest his head on her shoulder.

As he leaned, Subaru saw Spica lying peacefully in Rem’s arms. Her jet black hair from her father and the pretty shape of her fair face from her mother. A dear existence that lives day to day, ignorant of the world around her.

“Grr, Spica. While you are my daughter, how dare you steal my precious sanctuary from me. I’ll be giving you the tickle treatment later.”

“Dear, please wait until nighttime before monopolizing Rem’s breasts.”

“Hey, let’s be careful about the remarks we make in a public park in broad daylight, okay?!”

Rem’s bold comment caused a wave of panic in Subaru. But when he peered at her face, he saw that she was blushing fiercely. Really now, he thought.

“My wife is just way too cute.”

“Because Rem is loved by her dear everyday.”

As Subaru flirts and Rem flirts in turn, they indulge in each other’s loving smiles. Rem’s giggling and Subaru’s goofy laughter could be heard faintly from afar.

Eventually getting embarrassed, Subaru nervously scratches his cheek. “Then I guess I’ll take you up on your offer” he says as he rests his head on Rem’s shoulder.

The sensation of the wind rustling Rem’s blue hair against his cheek felt very pleasant to Subaru. Its scent wafted to his nose as he rubbed his cheek against her shoulder.

“Dear, that tickles.”

“Oh, sorry. I guess I got a bit carried away because it felt so nice. I’ll learn from Spica and calm down. I’ll leave getting carried away to Rigel. Wow, Rigel’s suuuch a kiid∼”

“I can hear you, stupid Dad! Stop bringing me up all the time!”

“Rigel. Your sister is sleeping at the moment. Please keep your voice down.”

“GODDAMNIT!”

The frozen Rigel screams like a delinquent, but none of his family responds. To add insult to injury, no one’s coming to unfreeze him either. At the moment, Rigel is thoroughly being teased.

While Rigel’s personality, speech, and actions are similar to his own, it comforts Subaru that at the very least the other kids don’t bully him. At the same time, it doesn't feel like they accept him as one of their own, making Rigel's future admittedly not too bright.

"We should make sure Spica doesn't turn out like that. Even though Rigel's like that, you have your mother's looks so your future's definitely bright. All that's left is to pray you don't get caught by a useless guy like me."

"There isn't a person anywhere that could replace you. Rem's dear is the only one in the world."

Laughing softly from his wife's loving remarks, a comfortable silence falls between them. A gentle breeze caresses them as Subaru savors the heat from Rem's body. Eventually, he carelessly drifts to sleep.

Lately, the fatigue from laboring has built up in his body. Yet the precious moments spent with his family filled his days with bliss. Bathing in the bright sunlight, watching his son being teased by his friends, Subaru rests against his wife as he succumbs to a light nap.

—What a wonderful, blissful moment, he thought.

"Subaru-kun—"

Hearing his name, Subaru opens his eyes.

Peering in the direction of the voice, he finds Rem turning her neck to face him. He sees himself in her clear blue eyes as they wordlessly bring their lips together.

"…my name"

"…"

"It's been a while. Lately it's been "Dear" or "Your Father" after all."

Looking on at Rem, Subaru relaxes his face, yet Rem brings her lips to his once more.

Her attitude reminds him of several years ago, the way she was from “when they had just escaped.” While she thought that he wouldn’t have noticed, Subaru had watched over her more closely than she thought.

Closing his eyes, Subaru feels the wind rushing past them.

Today’s shopping trip was in fact Rem’s idea. Subaru had a general idea what her intentions were for this trip. After all,

“It’s been eight years since that day huh.” “So you remembered after all…”

“Of course, to me… No, to us wasn’t that day a huge turning point? There’s no way I’d forget.

“—There’s no way I’d forget.”

The day he lost against fate. The day he threw away everything, the day he ran away from everything. The day when he intended to give up everything, but just couldn’t give up one person.

The decision from that day, and that girl’s love—it was because of those that right now Subaru is able to live like this.

“Subaru-kun, do you…”

That familiar way of calling him, which she intentionally stopped using after the two escaped to Kararagi. In order to prove the bond of husband and wife to themselves and those around them… and also to try to build something distinct from the past they had escaped from.

Until today, Subaru had not asked for the reason, nor did Rem ever tell him.

Among the many things they left behind was this way of calling him. With a troubled face and a mix of emotions, she asks him,

“Do you feel regret?” “Regret?”

“Yes. About running away. About giving up. About throwing away everything. About choos—”

"If you say anything about choosing you, I'm going to get angry. I'll take Rigel and Spica home straightaway. Actually, nevermind about Rigel. He can stay here."

From afar, Subaru sees Rigel make a sour face, but Subaru's face tells him "We're having an important talk right now". He turns back to Rem and continues,

"You know, it's kind of late at this point, and honestly I've probably already told you this many times, tens of times, hundreds of times, so I don't know if it'll even mean much."

"Yes?"

"I love you more than anyone else in the world. You're the only one for me, and I'm the only one for you. And you're definitely not the kind of woman that a guy like me could get from giving up and compromising."

Subaru moves towards Rem and softly flicks her forehead. A surprised Rem holds her forehead as Subaru moves his face in close.

"Just as I promised that day, everything I have is yours. I will serve you. I will devote myself to you. I will live just for you. —And now, I suppose I'll live for our kids too."

With his lips approaching past her nose, Rem closes her eyes as he steals her lips.

Sharing their light kiss, Subaru's face hovers close enough to feel Rem's quickened breath. And with a mischievous smile that hadn't changed even with the passage of time, he says,

"So will this put you at ease?"

"Rem is sorry. Rem is always so anxious. Because Rem keeps falling further and further in love with Subaru-kun. Every time it feels like things couldn't possibly be any happier, Subaru-kun always manages to make Rem even happier. Rem is so happy, and loves Subaru-kun so much, and that's why Rem is anxious."

Tears well in her eyes and her chest shakes as Rem admits to him how happy she has become. Shaking her head, she rests her forehead against his, and they share in their body heat.

“Even though I can touch you right now, I’m always afraid I’ll lose you.”

“Don’t worry. I won’t ever let you go, and I won’t go anywhere either. As long as I have your love, there’s no way we’ll ever be apart.”

“Rem will never stop loving Subaru-kun—”

“Good, then we’ll always be together. I love you Rem.”

While Rem’s head is filled with thoughts and emotions, Subaru once again kisses her. His lips brush against her teeth as he pushes further against the surprised maiden. Their tongues entangle as they feel the sensation of their warm saliva.

They stop there and part their lips. Rem breathes shallowly as Subaru points his finger upwards and continues,

“Also, don’t talk about it as if it was some sort of compromise. That would mean Rigel and Spica were born not from love, but sympathy. Spica is a crystallization of our love that we’ve been planning for years, and Rigel is the result of the fiery passion of our youth.”

“It sure was hard when Rigel was born.”

In front of Subaru who was scolding her with a hand on his hip, Rem fondly reminisced with a smile emerging on her face.

Now deep in the past, Rem waved her finger as if tracing back the memories.

“After moving to Kararagi and finding a home and workplace, we were supposed to take our time getting things together and building our livelihood.”

“Hey but, you know, we were young so we lacked patience and-”

"Even though Subaru-kun should have been exhausted after coming home from work, you always got really lively right before bed."

"Hey but, you know, we were young so we had too much stamina and—"

"When the employment was officialized, Rem became pregnant around the same time. At the time, Rem's face practically turned blue."

"It's kind of painful to admit the mistakes made in the springtime of youth "

In response to Rem's bold accusations, Subaru could only stare into the distance while muttering sheepishly. In the distance, Rigel, who was currently being treated as a "mistake," showed a sour face, but he read the atmosphere and calmed down without saying anything. Quite a kid, Subaru thought.

Subaru nodded at his son's remarkable growth. Beside him, Rem also looked on at her son's sour face and, with a small breath, continued,

"But when Rem was pregnant with Rigel, Rem was really, really happy."

"Well of course I was happy too. When I first heard, my nose started running and I pissed myself a little. Then I wanted to make sure it wasn't a dream so I asked you to punch me, and it was a complete blood bath."

It may have been because Rem was emotional at the time, but she had swung full force at Subaru, causing him to slam into the wall with such force that the entire building shook. If she hadn't unconsciously held back, it wouldn't have been strange for Subaru to have died outright.

Leaving aside those memories, Subaru could clearly remember the time Rem told him she was pregnant. He also vividly recalled the feelings welling in his chest.

However, Rem shook her head at Subaru's answer. He couldn't quite understand the meaning behind it, so he cocked his head in turn.

“The reason Rem was happy was somewhat different from the reason Subaru-kun was happy. The reason Rem was happy was because now… now Rem wouldn’t have to worry about losing Subaru-kun.”

“…”

“To Rem, Rigel is a definite bond between Rem and Subaru-kun. It sounds wrong that way but, when we had our first baby, it was also a link between us that would always exist That’s why Rem was so happy.”

Perhaps Rem had always struggled with this anxiety.

After throwing away everything she held dear, just the two of them escaped to a completely new land. With no one and nothing to cling to but each other, Rem always struggled with the fear that she would someday lose Subaru as well.

Her low self-confidence would prove an impressive match for Subaru’s. For Rem, who rates herself strictly, her life with Subaru was both fantastically happy and yet incredibly anxiety inducing.

It was the birth of the new life between them that finally put an end to that uneasy time.

“Did you have a hard time believing?”

“No. Rem believes in Subaru-kun more than anyone in the world.”

“That’s not it. I didn’t ask if you believed in me… I was asking if you had trouble believing in yourself.”

Hearing Subaru’s response, Rem takes a small breath and nods.

To Rem, Subaru’s existence was so very large. And yet because she looks at herself so poorly, she worried that her own existence was but a small shadow next to his.

—But in a way, Subaru also felt the same. He had always felt that, when compared to himself, Rem was far too wonderful of a girl for him.

It's so strange I can't help but laugh, Subaru thought as his face relaxed into a goofy grin. Rem sees this and puffs her cheeks.

“Nevermind. Rem was being dumb. It can't be helped that you'd laugh at her…”

“No, no that's not it. I was just thinking that you and I are really very alike. And so then I thought that my wife is definitely the cutest in the world.”

Unprepared for Subaru's surprise attack, Rem freezes in surprise for a moment, and then explodes into a feverous blush. Watching her react like this, I really get the feeling that I love her, thought Subaru.

More than anyone else in the world, I love Rem. I love her. I could scream it at the top of my lungs.

Actually, in reality, he sometimes does. In the neighborhood, they're known for being an incredibly loving couple.

“—Rigel, Spica.” “Hm?”

Rem appears to lovingly call her children's names. But she shakes her head to say “No”. She looks toward Subaru and says,

“They were both the name of stars, yes? From the place that Subaru-kun came from, they were how you called them.”

“Yeah, my dad was basically a nut, the sort of sad human being who could barely read, but I thought that his idea to name me after a star was good. I really like it, my name. “Subaru” is also the name of a star from there.”

Back around elementary school, there was an assignment to investigate the origins of one's name, and it was then that Subaru learned of the history of his name. When he learned that he was named after one of the dancing stars of the night sky, he couldn't contain his excitement.

Since then, while he couldn't keep interest in much of anything, he at least continued to gaze at astronomy charts in his spare time. He knew the names of stars by heart, and if a chance to name something came up, it was always an obvious choice how he'd do it.

"I'd always use the names of stars. With things like usernames on the Internet, I'd always use stars as nicknames. In a sense, aren't these names SHINING?!"

"Rem doesn't know what Subaru-kun is talking about, but using the names of stars sounds beautiful. When the third one comes, we'll do just that."

"Isn't it a bit early to talk about a third? I mean, isn't Spica still a baby?"

"Aside from feeding, we can leave everything to Rigel. Why do you think Rem said to wait until Rigel was bigger before having our next child?"

"You know, usually it seems like I'm mainly the one bullying him, but don't you actually go at him way harder?!"

Pondering the daily verbal abuse his son suffers, Subaru gets up and brushes himself off. As Rem looks up toward him, he casually stretches his back and shakes his hips.

"I think it's about time we head home and put away the groceries. Plus, there's too many eyes around here to flirt to my heart's content."

"Yes. Right now Rem is in the mood to flirt to with all her strength and passion."

"I-I wonder if my libido will be able to keep up with the stamina of an oni…"

Muttering to himself sheepishly, Subaru extends his hand to Rem, sitting on the park bench. Rem slowly grabs his hand, but Subaru suddenly pulls her up. The girl makes an audible "Wa!" as he skillfully catches her in his arms. He hugs her along with Spica and savors their warmth.

“Alright, let’s go back. To our home that is.” “Yes dear.”

Holding the groceries in one hand, he grasps Rem’s hand in the other. Walking half a step behind Subaru, Rem snuggles with him as they walk.

“Hey, my son frozen for an eternity in a winter wonderland. Watching your stagnant game of freeze tag was supremely boring so we’ll be heading home. Go stay at a friend’s house for the night.”

“So you’re flatly kicking me out for the night?! Plus, what kind of parents come to a park in broad daylight to kiss anyway?!”

“Ha, you’re just jealous. Sorry, Rigel. This Rem belongs only to me.” “SOOOOOOO ANNOYIIING!!”

While Subaru laughs proudly with his head held high, Rigel yells back with a demonic face. But seeing his father only get more festive, Rigel takes a deep breath and shakes his head.

“Calm down, calm down me. Don’t get caught up in your old man’s pace. Calm down, calm down~. Alright, I’ve calmed down. So, what were you talking about with mom?”

“Oh? We were talking about how your name comes from a star and stuff like that. You know our first idea was to name you “Vega.”“

“That sounds strong as hell! Why didn’t you?”

“Well, it sounds strong right? Like you would grow up to be really strong, and then you’d be too strong to handle in your rebellious phase, so I decided against it. Even though you’ll eventually surpass me in strength, the dad in me said he didn’t want to lose to his son so soon.”

“You thought about all this for a baby who was only a few days old?!” Rigel flails about after hearing Subaru’s casual banter. Then, “Heeey, Rigel’s moving! You’re breaking the rules of freeze tag!” “Ah!”

Despite ignoring him completely while he was frozen, the other children quickly pointed out his mistake the second he moved. Rigel's in shock as he stands there stunned. Subaru pats him on the back and says,

"Those who break the rules of freeze tag suffer a penalty game. You get tickled by the others until you can't even cry anymore. —Good luck."

"What the hell are you saying with such a serious face… Hey, what are you, GUYS! Wait, stop for a second! Don't just listen to everything this guy says! Wait, UWAAAAAAAA—!!"

Hordes of children descend upon Rigel and chase him about. Rigel tried to escape. But they eventually corner him. From there they grab his arms and push him to the ground. With no chance to resist, countless fingers begin tickling him.

"So long kiddo. You were a good son. It was your father who was the bad one."

"Rigel, your mother and father have some important business to attend to, so please stay at a friend's house for the night. Also, the use of your horns is forbidden. And don't let your clothes get torn."

"I-I'll remember this you heartless parents—!!!"

As a mountain of fingers tickle him relentlessly, Rigel's forced laughter can be heard even from a distance. Seeing her older brother in such a state, Spica raises her voice in excitement and delight.

Well well, seems like she's got promising taste, Subaru thought. Her position in the family will be a lot more interesting.

To their beloved son whom they cannot help but adore, they showed a somewhat unusual way of expressing their love that day.

Subaru pulled Rem's hand along as he walked.

Towards the precious place where his family lives, the place filled with peace and happiness that they call home.

“Subaru-kun.”

“Hm?”

Feeling a tug on his arm, Subaru stops and turns around toward Rem.

At that moment, a strong gust of wind blows about them. Subaru shuts his eyes involuntarily, opening them again after the winds had died down.

Rem’s long blue hair was being carried by the wind, glimmering brilliantly as if it was blending into the sun’s shining rays. Long ago, Rem had started growing out her hair. For whom she had grown it, Subaru now had a good idea. And when he thought of long-haired women, the very first to pop up in his mind was of course the one in front of him, the one he loved most in the entire world.

With her blue hair silently flowing behind her, and their beloved child held in her arms, Rem chased after Subaru with a brilliant smile on her face.

Above all else, it was Rem’s smile that stirred such feelings of fondness and love within him.

“Right now, Rem is the happiest in the entire world.”

Oni and Happiness

1

“N-No way… is this for real…?!”

Amongst the crowded plaza, Subaru raises his voice in disbelief.

Eyes rife with excitement, he can’t help but make a scene.

In his line of sight was a single market stall. —The brown-clothed shopkeep handling it widens his eyes at Subaru’s sudden overreaction.

But Subaru, overwhelmed, doesn’t even notice the shocked shopkeep. Lips trembling with excitement, he even neglects to wipe the sweat dripping from his forehead, causing Subaru to taste some oddly bitter “saliva.” Caught like a deer in headlights, Subaru’s feet stop squarely in front of the stall.

“Hey, what’s the matter, standing around like a mook all of a sudden? If we don’t get home soon you’ll end up buying some useless crap again.”

The child walking ahead grimaces as he reluctantly stops for Subaru.

Folding his arms behind his head, the boy’s sharp, dagger-like stare makes his displeasure seem very obvious.

And yet, while his leering suggests he’s out to kill, Subaru knew he wasn’t necessarily in a bad mood. After all, Subaru, with his own set of sharp eyes, was practically a veteran in accidentally scaring off strangers.

“[Live strong…]”

“What the hell are you suddenly pitying me for! Ah, wait wait wait! I don’t wanna hear it! I know it’s just gonna depress me! Don’t tell me! I said don’t tell me goddamnit!”

“Seeing you all worked up like this, I’m really looking forward to the future. Really, you’re the best for bullying like this. You might seriously be a prodigy. Blessed by the very Gods with this divine gift.”

“Like hell I want a gift like that! If the Gods have the time to be giving out useless crap, then at least give me something more useful damnit!”

The boy shouts back at Subaru’s taunts, his face twisted fiercely.

—The boy with short blue hair looks up to the sky as if grieving. Subaru merely nods at his usual overreaction, then proceeds to face the shopkeep who had been watching their useless banter with a blank face.

“Hey, how much are these?”

“H-Huh?”

Subaru grins mischievously at the shopkeep who was obviously taken aback. Subaru’s evil glare and exposed teeth puts a lump in the shopkeep’s throat as he tries his best not to shriek. Although considering the exchange just then, his own reaction seemed rather trivial.

Subaru clears his throat and points at a particular item in the stall.

“I want these. Give me some. I’ll take, say, three bags of them.”

“Y-Yes! Thanks for ya patronage!”

“Hey! Wait, wait a sec! What the heck are you buying all of a sudden… if we buy unnecessary stuff on the way home, we won’t just be wasting money, we’ll be punished within an inch of our lives!”

The second the shopkeep accepts Subaru’s purchase, the boy’s face fills with fear. He pulls sheepishly on the hem of Subaru’s coat, practically begging him to reconsider. Taking hold of his hand, Subaru crouches to the boy’s eye level and reassures him, "Don't worry, I'm not using any of our shopping money. This'll come out of my own personal pocket money. It's my hard-earned allowance that I've slowly, slowly been saving up. I'm sure you know how restrictive I am about using it."

"Uh huh, yeah, well… you don't spend on alcohol or smokes, so that just leaves… I guess splurging it all on women?"

"Hey, you're definitely trying for a serious misunderstanding here, aren't you. Who the hell did you get this awful personality from, huh? I'd really like to know-"

"I'm pretty much certain it's hereditary. Sadly."

Subaru shakes his head with grief at the boy's callous declaration. As he brandishes the Bird with his left hand, Subaru grabs the exposed finger by the joint, and the boy mutters a short "Ah" before wailing in pain.

As these two carry on, the shopkeep dutifully fills the bags and gives a brief, nervous laugh.

"You boys sure are friendly. Whatcha, father and son?"

"Hey, hey, after all that, you really think he's my son… man, merchants sure have some useless eyes. What do you think Rigel?"

"After looking at our faces, it'd be harder not to figure it out!"

Still locked in a death grip, Rigel shouts rebelliously against the pain. Hearing that, Subaru admits defeat with a casual "Well, I guess that's true."

At that point, the bagging was finished. The shopkeep brings forward three small sacks while Subaru pulls out the pouch holding his allowance.

"Alright, how many Yen will that be?"

"Dunno what 'Yen' ya talkin' 'bout, all togetha it be sixteen coppers."

“Hm, then three silvers should do. —I don’t need the change. Keep it.”

“Shoot! Generous ain’tcha! I’ll take ya up on it. Thanks.”

The shopkeep makes big, dramatic gestures as he happily accepts the silvers. Watching the exchange and their carefree smiles, Rigel grimaces. Between Subaru’s Death Grip and the fact they were giving up the change, it was obvious that Rigel was upset.

“Don’t worry, it’s all good. Today I got a hold of something really nostalgic. Just consider it a bonus for bringing me a little excitement. Besides, being too stingy will get you punished someday.”

“…Excitement and nostalgia, what are you even talking about.”

Rising up, Rigel, while still clearly discontent, asks curiously about the purchase. In response, Subaru ruffles his short hair with full force. “GUAAAAHH”, Rigel roars with further discontent.

“It’s got a little something to do with the Missus. It reminds me of an old custom from my hometown,”

Subaru replies, a mischievous smile emerging on his face.

2

“—and so, you two somehow ended up spending how much?”

The blue-haired maiden sighs lightly at Subaru’s explanation. The second Subaru and Rigel had returned, she came out to welcome them both home. She apparently came from the kitchen, as her white apron had faintly wet splotches, showing where she had hurriedly dried her hands.

In his spare time, Subaru covered her apron with decorative patches and embroidery. Seeing the wet splotches all a careful distance from his handiwork, Subaru is struck with a surprise attack of embarrassing affection.

“Geez, what are you laughing about. Rem still hasn’t received a satisfying answer."

Without really thinking, Subaru's face loosens at the sight of her

—yet, the long, blue-haired Rem was thoroughly upset. Looking ready to dish out a frightening punishment, she lays her eyes on Rigel who stands beside Subaru.

"Rigel too. You know your father is erratic like this. If you don't keep it together, what is Rem to do?"

"Yes, I'm incredibly sorry for… wait a sec, this is just weird. Even if I calm down and think carefully it's still just plain weird?! Why is the child being scolded for his careless parent? Isn't it supposed to be the other way around?"

"Wait a minute, Rigel. Take a deeep breath, now exhaaale… yeah like that, slooowly. Repeat that five more times, and make sure to close your eyes. One, two, three… yeah, there you go. Have you calmed down? Yup, you're calm now. Alright so now that you're calm, go ahead and apologize to your mother…"

"I freakin' meditated till I hit my Zen state and reflected on my actions, but I still don't see how I've done anything wrong!!"

Rather than calm down, Rigel goes red in the face with anger, raging toward his room. "Rigel!", Rem calls out his name as he rushes past her, but he keeps moving. Or so it seems until he had run up to the end of the corridor.

"…what?"

Rigel's feet stop. Despite everything else, Rigel always listens to what his parents had to say to the very end. Rem, fully aware that Rigel would stop for him, carries on with her usual cool demeanor,

"Snacks have been prepared for you up in your room, so please have them after washing up. And don't forget to let Spica know you're home."

"…got it. Thanks for the food."

As part of Subaru and Rem's lessons on mannerisms, it was an ironclad law in the Natsuki household to say "Thanks for the food" before meals. No matter how frustrated or rebellious he was, Rigel would always remember this rule. Seeing the rare child in him, the couple looked toward him with fond eyes.

In an act of petty rebellion, however, Rigel still slams the door as he heads upstairs. Rem turns back toward Subaru.

"Do you, do you think we teased him a bit too much?"

"Nah, in terms of mother-and-son conversations, that was par for the course. Even though he acts like that, at his core, he at least doesn't hate it. That brat, he really is just like how I was as a kid. I can basically see right through him."

Subaru affectionately pets Rem, comforting her as he removes his shoes and enters his home. He collects the day's purchases that Rigel had tossed haphazardly (though in reality, he let it prop up against the wall so it wouldn't fall over) and, practically by habit, Subaru walks side by side with Rem to the living room.

As he props the three small bags onto the table alongside the groceries, Rem sneaks a peek at their contents.

"They really are… completely normal beans."

"Yeah, that they are. What, did you think when I said "beans," I was somehow hinting something more naughty and erotic? Man, my dear wife might seem calm and level-headed, but she's actually pretty active and aggressive afterall."

"Rem simply doesn't hesitate with giving and receiving love. Furthermore, when it comes to embarrassing displays of affection, Rem thinks Subaru-kun is just as guilty."

"Oh? When has a SHY and NAIVE-natured NICE GUY such as myself ever done something so shameless?"

As Subaru poses flamboyantly, his chin on his fist and exposed white teeth flashing a smile, Rem briefly gazes at him with a charmed yet somewhat dumbfounded face. With her face still red with embarrassment, she averts her eyes,

“Wh-When we celebrated our anniversary, Subaru-kun bought a huge number of bouquets, and for Rem’s birthday Subaru-kun and Rigel put up decorations all over the house, and when Spica was born, Subaru-kun convinced the townsfolk to hold an entire parade… Subaru-kun always spends way too much on other people.”

“I use my allowance to make my wife and family happy. Isn’t that basically spending for myself? In the end, I’m spending my allowance for the sake of my own HAPPY LIFE aren’t I?”

“—-!”

Subaru’s earnest answer paints Rem’s white face red with shyness and embarrassment. The sudden wave of emotions is too much for Rem, as happy tears faintly well. Raising her face, Rem quickly grabs Subaru’s sleeve to mop her moist eyes.

Her sudden movements surprise Subaru. He lets out a small “Uwah!” as he loses his balance. Rem stands on her toes to support his weight, facing him as if there just to catch him.

“…”

“…What’s up with you all of a sudden?”

And then for a brief moment, they let their lips meet, their tongues entangled in a sweet embrace before finally parting.

Subaru’s heart beats feverously after Rem’s sudden display of affection, but he somehow manages a facade of calmness on his face. After savoring his tongue with her soft, sweet lips, Rem, with a faintly sensual look on her face, answers,

“Subaru-kun… is the one at fault here. Saying such embarrassing things so suddenly like that.”

“Did I really say something that embarrassing?”

“Subaru-kun doesn’t realize how much his words and actions affect

Rem. Subaru-kun should be more careful. —Rem doesn’t mind if it’s at home, but if Subaru-kun does this to Rem outside, Rem will be troubled.”

As a blushing Rem mutters back sheepishly, Subaru’s facade of calmness and his very last threads of reason seem ready to snap. Subaru anxiously sneaks a glance at his wife. He definitely wasn’t alone in his hot, unsteady breathing.

As the atmosphere between the two lovers reaches a boiling point,

“—AAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHH!”

“Whoa!! Spica’s crying—! Someone! Anyone—! HEELP—!!”

The cries of their beloved son and daughter shook the house like a small tremor.

Subaru and Rem look each other in the face, and then automatically dash off. Without even a word, the two take each other’s hands as they rush over to their crying baby daughter.

“By the way, what were those beans for? Subaru-kun said they were for an old custom from his hometown…”

“Oh yeah, did I not say?”

With Rem wrapped around his arm and her weight pleasantly pressing against him, Subaru casually answers with an innocent laugh,

“—So back in my hometown, there was this tradition where we’d throw beans at bad Oni to get rid of them, you see.”

—At that moment, the bright smile Rem had shown Subaru seemed to freeze in shock.

3

“You got it all wrong! Completely, utterly wrong! That wasn’t my intention at all, I swear!”

"He's horrible isn't he, Spica. Your father, oh it must be that your father has come to hate your mother. If not, then why in the world would he buy beans for getting rid of Oni… It must be some roundabout way of telling Rem something. To Subaru-kun, Rem is just, Rem is just-"

"There's no way that's true! If someone asked me to choose between Rem and Rigel, I wouldn't hesitate for even a second to choose Rem!"

"You shitty Dad!!"

The family of four makes a huge commotion, its members chasing after each other in circles around the room. In the lead, a sulking Rem cradles Spica in her arms and traces circles, cheeks puffed to their max. Second in line, Subaru desperately chases after her, apologizing profusely. And at the end of the pack, Rigel, who isn't heartless enough to leave outright, yells after Subaru with his face twisted in anger.

"Wait I get it, stop for a second! I'll admit that what I just said wasn't quite right. Okay so, if someone asked me to choose between Rem and Rigel, I'll hesitate for a little while and then choose Rem!"

"It's not about how long you took to get to that decision goddamnit! Don't get me involved in your lover's quarrels!"

"Rigel, what kind of language are you using against your father. Also, if you keep angrily thrashing about, Spica will start crying again. Please keep quiet."

"I don't want to hear that from the angriest person in this house right now!"

Rigel continues to roar rebelliously. At once, Subaru and Rem both put a finger to their lips and make a "Shhh" sound. Mortified, Rigel drops out of their absurd chase.

The remaining two, Subaru and Rem, seem to chase after each other's backs endlessly, circling around an agitated Rigel sitting in the middle.

“[Chasing out Oni] was just an expression. Back in my hometown they were, let’s see… Oni were sort of like a collection of bad things. Things like disease and poverty and unpopularity were all bundled together and called [Oni]. The bean tossing was a tradition for getting rid of those bad things, so it’s not like we were antagonizing actual Oni.”

“Horrible, you’re just horrible. Subaru-kun, you even once said things like being ‘fanatical like an Oni,’ and ‘I love Oni’ just to woo Rem… It seems that Subaru-kun has completely forgotten the feelings from that time.”

“I’m telling you that’s not true!”

With that final retort, Subaru suddenly stops and turns around. Having not expected their circular chase to suddenly end, Rem falls into Subaru’s breast with a startled look.

Bringing her face even further into his breast, Subaru uses both arms to grab her in a bear hug, preventing Rem’s escape.

“Forgetting my feelings for you? That’s just plain impossible. Rem, you’re my number one favorite person in the entire world. Don’t tell me you forgot that?”

“Su, Subaru-kun…”

Feeling his passionate gaze on her, Rem’s eyes soon grow moist.

It has been nine whole years since the first time the two had met. In that time, Rem became a mother, and the young weakness in her was shed away, revealing the fortitude of a strong woman.

And yet, when she falls into Subaru’s arms like this, Rem can’t help but revert to that time long ago when she was brimming with love and longing for him.

Embarrassed with herself, Rem closes her eyes as a sweet sensation tickles her lips.

“Subaru-kun……—oh yes, Rigel. Please take Spica for your mother.”

“Err, uhh, yeah okay.”

“—Subaru-kun.”

Between Subaru and Rem, Spica had been experiencing a rather claustrophobic situation. Now with both hands free, Rem flings them towards Subaru’s chest and rubs her soft cheeks against him.

“In Subaru-kun’s eyes, is Rem still Subaru-kun’s number one favorite person?”

“Is that even a question? I wouldn’t even be exaggerating if I said that half my entire existence was my love for Rem and the other half was my devotion for Rem.”

“Geez, Subaru-kun is always spouting such nonsense…”

Embracing each other, Subaru and Rem exchange their deepest feelings.

Witnessing the scene of his parents making up, Rigel deftly plugs Spica’s ears,

“—WHAT A FAAAAAAAARRCE!!”

Rigel screams with the force and strength of his entire body.

4

“Hmm, the Bean-tossing festival… Rem has never heard of such a tradition.”

“Well I guess around here that’s gotta be the case. To be honest, I can’t seem to match the local calendar with my hometown’s, so I’m not actually sure when it even is around here…”

To properly celebrate the festival, they would have wanted to wait until February 3rd. But, while this world had the same four seasons, and a year was even the same 365 days, the names of the months were so outrageously different that, even after nine whole years, Subaru still couldn’t figure out which was February.

All he knew was that since it was mildly cold out, it had to be somewhere between January and March.

“Anyway, without further ado, let’s get the Bean-Tossing Festival started! Oh, but rather than chase away actual Oni, we’ll be chasing away all the bad stuff that gets referred to as Oni. Let’s do it for our family’s future happiness!”

“Well, Subaru-kun says that, but three out of our family are actual Oni…”

With the inkling of a bitter smile on her face, Rem protrudes a single white horn from her forehead, appealing for the Oni.

Just as Rem said, Rigel and Spica are indeed half-Oni. Having inherited Oni blood, horns have even sprouted on their foreheads.

Rigel can consciously bring his out, while Spica’s tiny horn occasionally emerges from her particularly enthusiastic crying.

As the four sit in a circle for their family meeting, Subaru can feel a lack of enthusiasm in his Oni family members. Dismayed, he tries for a diversion,

“TEI-!”

“Ahn!”

Subaru extends his hand toward Rem’s horn, gently rolling his fingers about the white protrusion. While the structure of the horn was quite rigid, its surface was surprisingly lukewarm and smooth to the touch. And above all else, apparently the horn was a sensitive spot of sorts. As Subaru’s fingers play with Rem’s horn,

“Ahn, mngh… wa-, wait, Subaru-kun… the children, they’re still, they’re watching… uu~”

“You’d be a little more convincing if you weren’t snuggling up to me right now…”

As Rem lovingly brings her body towards Subaru’s, she feels more reminiscent of a small, affectionate animal than a sexy housewife.

Subaru brings Rem to his lap as he continues petting her horn. Turning to Rigel,

“Hey Rigel, what do you think?”

“Aside from ‘You normies should just go explode!’? Well, I dunno but… Dad, I don’t really get why you wanna do this so badly.”

Rigel glares harshly at Subaru as he comforts Spica in his arms. To his son’s criticism, Subaru gives an audible “Heh” and makes big, exaggerated nods.

“The reason’s very simple actually. This is really the only holiday about Oni I could think of. Also, I didn’t mention it before, but there’s a bit more to this festival. As we chase away the bad things we call [Oni], we’ll also be inviting happiness into our home. Basically, it’s a sort of ritual where we do away with the bad while praying for a safe, happy future.”

At that point, Rem had curled up into a ball on Subaru’s lap. While softly stroking her small back, Subaru points his finger upward,

“To Natsuki Subaru, family is the most important thing in the world. And the fact that we have ties with Oni isn’t something I can or want to ignore… Besides, it’s not like Oni have to always be antagonized.”

“…meaning?”

“Technically we’re supposed to say ‘Out with the Oni! In with fortune!’ while we throw beans around. But lately it’s been popular to bring both Oni and fortune into the household.”

“That’s just putting the cart before the horse! Bringing in good and bad things, what happened to the stuff from earlier?”

“The way of thinking must have changed. And I don’t think it’s really a bad thing either.”

Subaru explains as his fingers gently trail through Rem’s long hair. Rem’s back faintly quivers at the ticklish sensation, melting Subaru’s gruff face into a fond smile.

"Chasing them out because they're Oni is just unreasonable. After all, it might just be possible to befriend an Oni. And then do erotic things with an Oni, and then marry an Oni, and then build a loving family with an Oni. Yeah, somehow, I think they're all possible."

"…"

"If the world changed its way of thinking like that, I think it'd be great. I've always really liked Oni, and now my wife is an Oni, so I'm in paradise! Maybe people have started accepting the good with the bad, and this change in the Oni's treatment reflects that."

Just as good and bad fluctuates in the world and day-to-day life, perhaps the way people feel about Oni is changing.

Some even declare Oni as "moe" characters. Having experienced Oni firsthand, Subaru knows them better than anyone. In his mind, there isn't even a shred of doubt. His wife is the cutest.

"In with the Oni! In with fortune too!"

"Say what?"

"'In with the Oni! In with fortune too!' Let's bring them both in! To me, Oni and fortune are both signs of happiness. Being a bit greedy and going for both… how's that sound?"

Seeing Subaru shrug casually, Rigel shapes his mouth to say something back, but eventually couldn't find anything to say and slinks back down.

As Subaru laughs at his son's speechlessness, a smiling Rem, still nestled in his lap, giggles with a "fufufu~" sound.

"That peculiar way Subaru-kun thinks, Rem loves it. —Let's do it, the Bean Tossing Festival."

"Oh, finally up for it it I see. Alright, let's strike while the iron's hot. Maybe after this we can share the Festival with everyone else too."

Rem tilts her face toward Subaru as he lifts her up. She gives him a puzzled look, to which Subaru answers, "You know, like back when I showed the kids how to play freeze tag, and it spread like wildfire. Kararagi just feels kind of intimate and familiar. I always get the feeling it's just like my old hometown."

"Subaru-kun does say that occasionally. Is the feeling really that strong?"

"I said it a few times without really thinking much of it, but the villages here also elect their leaders by popular vote… or something like that. And there are even holidays just like April Fools and Christmas."

"Because having many events and holidays keeps things exciting and interesting… Rem thinks."

"That's definitely part of it, but I feel like there's also more to it than that… well, it doesn't really matter right now."

Kararagi was undeniably a wondrous place to live. Together with Rem, it has been nine years since they immigrated here.

Indeed, without the flood of support and kindness from its inhabitants, Subaru and Rem could not possibly have done as well as they did.

Even now though, they still had their difficulties with the tricky Kararagi dialect, which was reminiscent of Kansai dialect.

"Hey, I brought the beans. If we're doing this, let's get it over with already."

"Aha, finally coming around are you, my son. Even though you were being all negative earlier, deep inside you just couldn't help getting all crazy and excited. Wow, Rigel's suuuch a kiid~"

"I'm still better than a stupid dad who worries his wife and kids to death!"

Rigel roughly forces a bag into both Subaru and Rem's hands, keeping one for himself.

Now facing each other, the two Oni look toward Subaru for what to do next. Nodding, he stuffs his hand into the bag and pulls out a single bean.

“It’s simple. Just chant ‘Out with the Oni! In with fortune!’. Well, except we’ll be bringing the Oni in. Yeah, let’s do that instead.”

“Umm, so the beans… does Rem throw them at the Oni?”

“Umm, Mom? That violent look you’re giving your son is genuinely terrifying him!”

“Well technically, but don’t do it so seriously, alright? Actually, please be gentle.”

After ensuring everything was set, the Bean Tossing Festival —begins.

Facing off against each other, a bean in each hand,

“Alright, take that! In with the Oni! In with fortune!”

“Umm… i, in with the Oni! In with fortune!”

“In with the-, hey wait, Spica don’t cry! I said don’t cry! Hey, stop for a sec-, wai-, STOP WITH THE BEANS!”

Back and forth, the room is filled with such exchanges as beans fly chaotically all over.

Subaru bears a refreshing energy and gusto. Rem, who felt embarrassed at first, quickly casts off her shame and laughs innocently. Rigel, who for some reason bore the fatal handicap of handling Spica, fights against an almost desperate struggle.

“Yeah! In with the Oni! In with fortune!”

With the Oni themselves as family, and a home filled to the brim with happiness, this is the way the Natsuki household celebrates the Bean Tossing Festival.

With a loving Oni wife by his side and yet more Oni as children, Subaru enjoys a truly new form of the Festival with his precious family.

This is just bliss, he thought.

Rogue beans scatter about the room, the corridor, all over the house. Just thinking about the ensuing cleanup would put a serious damper on the soul. —But anyone moping about cleanup instead of enjoying this chaotic moment wouldn't be quite right in the head.

They laugh, and laugh, and laugh some more as beans shoot across the room.

For the sake of being together with the beloved Oni, and for the sake of everlasting happiness, they toss beans.

"Subaru-kun"

Before he realized it, Rem's face had closed in on Subaru.

As Subaru drops his gaze towards her, Rem approaches him, her flushed face showing him a brimming smile.

"Today and every day from now on, will Subaru-kun please happily embrace both Rem and fortune?"

Saying that, Rem jumps into his open arms. Subaru hugs her in turn as he replies,

"—I told you didn't I? Building a future together, hand-in-hand with an Oni, that's always, always been my life-long dream."

With the happiness of this moment, as well as the promised happiness of tomorrow, unshakably rooted in his heart, Subaru whispers back his reply with a limitless passion.

5

"…Damn, he sure just does whatever he feels like."

"Adaaa—"

"What, you're hungry? But no, you can't eat them. Dad said you're supposed to eat your age in beans. Spica's not even 1 yet, and you don't even have teeth to eat them with anyway. I'll eat them in your place."

"Udaaa—"

"Don't look so sour… you know, when you make that face, you look just like how Mom does when she's sulking to Dad. Damn, once Spica starts walking around and stuff, I'm not looking forward to my place in the family hierarchy."

"Au, baa—?"

"Go back inside? Don't talk crazy, we can't go back right now. All that stuff about bean tossing and the Festival, and after trying to look cool in front of Mom, they're definitely still flirting around in there. 'Out with the Oni!' my ass. I bet he just wanted me out so he could flirt to his heart's content."

"Aau! Aaah, adaaa—!"

"What, are you backing him up too? First with Mom, now with Spica, does Dad emit some sort of Oni-attracting pheromone or something? I don't believe this shit."

"Aah—? Ada, adauuu—. Uuu—"

"Huh? Why are you petting my cheek like you're trying to comfort me? No, you got it all wrong, it's not like I like Dad or anything. Even among the Oni, even among the outsiders of the Oni, I'm still an outsider. It wouldn't phase me even if all the Oni in the world fell for him. I'd still be a member of the Anti-Shitty Dad faction."

"Aahh—buaaa—"

"Agh, damn! Screw this! C'mon, we're going Spica. I figure if we take a short walk around the neighborhood, even those two will eventually finish their flirting. And I'm saying this now, but it's not like I'm doing this to give them some time for themselves… I TOLD YOU THAT'S NOT IT!"

“Aadaa! Aadaa!”

“Ahhh, damnnit.”

“—The weather sure is nice today.”

Fortune Roll Rhapsody

1

When Rigel sees what awaits him in the living room, he suddenly wants nothing more than to turn and run. Deep in his soul, there burns an intense desire to abandon everything and run home. Unfortunately, this is his home. There is simply no running from his cruel destiny.

“Fugafuga?”

“…”

“Fugafugafuu—ga, fuu—gafuga”

“Shut it with your fugafuga’s! What crazy cult ritual is it this time! Do you ever think how your son feels? When he comes home, and his Dad is running around fugafuga-ing with a pole of all things stuffed in his mouth?!”

As Subaru stands and ambles toward Rigel, mouth still stuffed, Rigel rants, spit flying everywhere. As the target of his son’s rebellious tantrum, Subaru slinks his shoulders.

“Fugafuga…”

“Would you quit it with the fugafuga’s already!”

“Fugafu… Geez, what a brat. You know, if you’re always this uptight, you’ll eventually regret it. Kids need to play while they’re young. Once you’re an adult, you’ll worry about people’s opinions and start restraining yourself…”

“When you say that, it sounds completely unconvincing! How old are you! How much longer are you gonna keep playing! When will you gain this so-called ability to ‘worry about people’s opinions!’”

Despite approaching his thirties, Natsuki Subaru doesn’t show any sign of slowing down. He even plays with kids Rigel’s age, causing the comparatively mature Rigel intense embarrassment. This boy wishes more than anything for his father to act his age.

Then again, if he actually did, Rigel would worry that his father was gravely ill.

“So, what sort of weird festival did you come up with this time?”

“Hold on, my son. Are you actually an esper? So, you’ve somehow gained the ability to read my mind. If not, then how could you ever see my actions as part of a festival…”

“It’s more like I’m praying it’s for a festival. My sanity couldn’t take it if you casually welcomed me home with a thick pole shoved in your mouth for no reason. Just tell me what’s all this about…”

Rife with complaints, Rigel picks up the mysterious object Subaru was carrying in his mouth. He finds it surprisingly soft and flexible. Rigel quickly uncovers its identity.

“…a sushi roll?”

“Yup, a sushi roll. You look like you want one. I got it, if you want it so badly, go ahead and chow down. Luckily, that’s just one of the ‘prototypes.’ I’ve already set aside the rolls for the main event, so you can have that one as a snack.”

“Even if I was hungry, I’m not gonna eat something that spent any time in my Dad’s mouth… Maybe if it was Mom or Spica.”

“Hey, isn’t eight years old a bit early to hate on your old man this hard? At your age, even I respected my Dad… wait, did I? Did I?”

“How would I even know! Anyway, what’s this festival already! And what main event!”

Hounded by an impatient Rigel, Subaru shrugs his shoulders and laughs. He points out a plate on the living room table with homemade sushi rolls stacked neatly on top.

“Isn’t it obvious? After the Bean Tossing Festival,—YES, it’s the Ehomaki Challenge!”

2

“Ehomaki, is it? What kind of festival would that be?”

Rem, after coming home from shopping, listens to Subaru’s explanation. She tilts her head curiously as she cradles a drowsy Spica in her arms. As Rem speaks, Spica’s small hands lightly grasp at the fair maiden’s long blue hair.

With all members accounted for, the Natsuki household sits in the living room, surrounding the plate of rolls.

“Remember the Bean Tossing Festival? By tossing beans, we took in happiness while getting rid of misfortune.”

“Of course. Rem thought Subaru-kun was trying to throw her away… Rem’s maiden heart was deeply, strongly afflicted. This incredible sadness, it will not heal easily. Please take Rem on a date.”

With upturned eyes, Rem pretends to sulk as Subaru smiles wryly.

His cute wife’s request. As her husband, accepting is both his natural-born duty and his happiest privilege.

“It’ll be my pleasure. Let’s see, I’m free tomorrow, so let’s do it then. Speaking of which, they just finished remodeling the spirit shrine at the edge of town. It’s really something now.”

“Yes. And after Subaru-kun started embossing couples’ vows onto its walls, visitors started flocking to the shrine from all over.

With her husband’s work going so well, Rem can hold her head high.”

“We’re married already, but how about we go add our vows too. It’ll be just the two of us. Ah, don’t worry, Spica’ll be fine. She’s got her siscon-afflicted brother to watch over her.”

“Subaru-kun… Rem is so happy. Rem will look forward to tomorrow’s date.”

“Can we get back to the main topic already?!”

As his parents plan out their date, an impatient Rigel finally explodes. But despite his sudden outburst, Subaru and Rem, used to his tantrums, hardly react at all. Even Spica seems unfazed, her sleepy face unchanging.

Rigel’s yells echo pointlessly throughout the house.

“Hey Rigel, don’t shout so suddenly like that. You know, if you’re too hot-blooded while you’re young, once you’re older, the veins in your head might explode from stress.”

“Shaddup! They’ll explode even if I hold it in! So I might as well shout!”

“Rigel, what sort of language are you using against your father. Your mother hopes you don’t speak like this outside as well. If Rigel always act so angry, everyone from friends to strangers will avoid you. You need to become a more wonderful person like your father. Oh, but Rigel could never possibly hope to win against Subaru-kun. Try not to be too depressed about it.”

“Your comforting is depressing me! What did I ever do to you!”

Bullied by his own parents, Rigel throws himself at the floor and collapses into a heap. Subaru and Rem giggle as Rigel falls into complete sulking mode. As Rem readjusts a sleeping Spica in her arms, Subaru clears his throat to resume,

“Well anyway, with it being Rigel’s dying wish and all, let’s get back to the Ehomaki. For the Bean Tossing Festival, we invited happiness and chased out misfortune. This Ehomaki Challenge and the Bean Tossing Festival are both part of a holiday called ‘Setsubun.’ The Ehomaki Challenge is a more minor event though.”

“A different event from the same holiday?”

“Exactly. Back home, the East and West did things totally differently, you see. The Bean Tossing Festival and the Ehomaki Challenge were part of those differences. The East celebrated the Bean Tossing Festival while the West did the Ehomaki Challenge.

But there's no such thing as too much of a good thing, so I thought we'd try both."

"Yes, as expected of Subaru-kun. The way Subaru-kun unhesitantly takes the best of everything is wonderful as well."

Rem praises Subaru, clapping softly to avoid waking Spica. Then, putting a finger to her cheek as she tilts her head to the side,

"So if we needed beans for the Bean Tossing Festival, the Ehomaki Challenge uses these sushi rolls?"

"Well, we actually could've used a few more things for the Bean Tossing Festival. I already got that shop to stock more beans for next year. But I also want to make some more elaborate preparations like getting an Oni mask and Oni pants for me to wear."

When it came to enjoying festivals to their fullest, Natsuki Subaru's energy and dynamism knew no limits.

A spellbound Rem gazes fondly as her husband exhibits his needlessly hot passion. After briefly letting his thoughts run wild, he shakes his head.

"Nononono. We're talking about Ehomaki right now. Just as Rem says, instead of beans, we have these sushi rolls. Where I call from, this kind of sushi roll is called an 'Ehomaki.' Rem, just from looking, what do you notice?"

"Hm, well. It's very long and thick and black."

"One more time please."

"—? It seems to be very long and thick and black."

"My cute, honest wife can sometimes be unknowingly erotic…"

Deeply moved, Subaru struggles to keep a straight face as Rem returns an innocent, puzzled look.

Seeing as this wasn't particularly wholesome education, Subaru puts on a serious face and gets back to the sushi rolls.

“These thick sushi rolls are called ‘Taimaki.’ Unfortunately, Kararagi doesn’t have any customs about Ehomaki, so I made them myself. They’re actually pretty easy.”

“This faintly sour scent, this is vinegie, yes?”

“Vinegared rice. It’s definitely the ideal rice for sushi. Next time, we should try it with some raw fish. Putting that aside for now, the recipe’s really simple. You just take dried seaweed and vinegared rice and wrap seven different fillings inside. That’s it!”

“Is there any special meaning attached to having seven fillings?”

Peering at the Ehomaki’s rainbow-colored fillings, Rem asks a natural question.

“Glad you noticed, as expected of my wife! Yeah, that’s an important point. Ehomaki are meant to be a festive food. Back home, we held festivals every year to celebrate the Seven Deities of Fortune, you see.”

“My, such festive deities.”

“Yeah, they’re a real festive bunch. The seven different fillings represent the Seven Deities, and when we wrap them into Ehomaki, it’s like we’re capturing their luck. A food filled to the brim with good luck. That’s Ehomaki!”

As Subaru explains this last point, his foot dramatically planted on the table, Rem once again claps modestly.

Finished listening, Rigel raises his face. With delinquent’s eyes that rival Subaru’s in sharpness, Rigel glares at his festive parents.

“So after all that fanfare, we’re just gonna eat sushi rolls? I don’t see what the big deal is…”

“Foolishly foolish fool!”

“Yeow! How’s a finger-flick so strong?!”

After chastising his cheeky son with a whip-like finger flick to the forehead, Subaru grabs the agony-stricken Rigel and forcibly gives him a shoulder ride.

“Why are you suddenly carrying me?!”

“Just felt like it, really. Anyway, I’ll admit that compared to the Bean Tossing Festival, the Ehomaki Challenge seems a bit plain. But actually, I neglected to mention a few more points. Forgive me my son.”

“Don’t bow while I’m on your shoulders! Cut it out! I’m falling!”

With the flailing Rigel’s very life at his mercy, Subaru makes purposefully dizzying laps around the dining table.

As father and son engage in such lighthearted roughhousing, Rem looks on with an affectionate, motherly gaze.

“So then, what else is left to explain, Subaru-kun?”

“Well first of all, what do you think the ‘Eho’ of ‘Ehomaki’ means? I haven’t explained that yet, afterall. The way it’s written, ‘Eho’ means ‘the compass of fortune.’ Every year, we have a lucky direction, like north or south. So they’re called ‘Ehomaki’ because we face that direction while we eat them.”

“Rem sees now. A ‘compass of fortune,’ what a fun idea.”

“Also, you can’t speak while you eat an Ehomaki. It’s just a saying though, so don’t split hairs over it. They also say you should eat it with a smile but… actually, that sounds like a good one. They do say ‘Fortune comes to those who smile.’ Besides, you naturally smile while eating something good.”

As Subaru grins widely at his own explanation, Rem cheerfully adds,

“When Subaru-kun eats the food Rem makes, Subaru-kun always has such a big smile.”

“Delicious food and a cute wife. Spending time at home with my beloved family, how could I not smile? It's like I'm hogging the entire world's happiness for myself."

"With Rem, it would be two people hogging… actually, the whole family is hogging the world's happiness."

"Rem…"

"Subaru-kun…"

"Don't flirt around with people riding on your head! Mom too! Restrain yourself a little while holding Spica!"

As Subaru and Rem flirt, totally oblivious of their children, Rigel's impatience boils over and explodes.

In the Natsuki household, conversations tend to sidetrack and go nowhere fast. Almost like another festival, it's a regular event that simply can't be helped.

After Subaru finally puts Rigel down, Rem hands Spica over to her son. An astonished Rigel watches as his parents lovingly take a seat beside each other.

Tightly holding Subaru's hand, Rem lets her small body rest against his shoulder.

"By the way, if the Ehomaki… If it's the 'compass of fortune,' which direction should it point in this year? Does Subaru-kun know?"

"Nah, I honestly have no clue. Even now, I wonder how they figured it out every year. It might've had something to do with Feng Shui, but that's way beyond what I know."

Leveraging his knowledge from before being summoned, Subaru makes a living as a successful producer of sorts. Though he can take a smattering of knowledge and somehow stretch it thin, he can't do anything when completely clueless.

While Subaru prepared the Ehomaki successfully, the all-important "lucky direction" eludes him. Tilting his head in puzzlement, his eyes wander toward Rigel and Spica. Suddenly, an idea forms in Subaru's head, and he claps his hands together.

"I got it. This year's lucky direction, we'll let Spica decide it."

"Huh? Let Spica decide? Think a little before you speak. Spica's still small and cute, and you already want to corrupt her? God, it's just too pitiful. Hey you, are you going to take responsibility for Spica's tarnished future, HUH?"

"Man, whenever the conversation turns to Spica, you act like the world's most obnoxious delinquent."

With Rigel violently opposing his father's idea, Subaru thinks of how to pacify him.

"Listen. What would you say is the clearest symbol of happiness in our home? Of course, Rem's very existence is happiness itself, and your natural-born talent as a verbal punching bag is like a blessing granted to me by God, a fateful meeting of fortune and destiny…"

"Waitwaitwaitwait, I just heard something I can't ignore, HEY!"

"Rigel, please calm down. Just as Rem is a symbol of happiness to Subaru-kun, Subaru-kun is a symbol of happiness to Rem. Your mother doesn't have any sort of misunderstanding about that, so please don't worry."

"Anyone with eyes would know not to worry over that!"

Rigel plugs Spica's ears as he shouts at his parents, his so-called secret technique. Born and raised in the Natsuki household, in Rigel's short lifetime of a mere eight years, much like a one-trick pony, he developed potential in but a single talent.

—Yes, his natural 'straight man' act and his prodigious 'victim' character.

"Doesn't that make him a two-trick pony?"

"What kind of monologue are you having! Get back to the topic!!"

"Well what I mean is, Spica is the clearest symbol of happiness we have. That's why, whichever direction Spica chooses will definitely be lucky. How's that?"

"Shit, compared to Dad's usual nonsense, that's a pretty flawless, watertight argument…tch!"

"Whenever Spica gets involved, you completely lose your sense of judgement, don't you."

Frustrated, Rigel ruffles his short blue hair. But with his eventual approval, the specifics of the Ehomaki Challenge were finalized.

Since Subaru prepared the sushi rolls in advance, the last task was to divine the lucky direction.

"Having Spica decide seems fine, but how should we go about it? Spica probably won't understand anything we tell her."

"Hmm, let's see… How about we let Spica sleep on the table, and when she wakes up, we'll go with the first direction she looks."

"When she wakes up,"

"First direction she looks…"

Considering Subaru's impassioned speech from before, it was a rather casual way of deciding. Rem and Rigel look at each other, then down at Spica. They seem to be mulling over something.

"In other words, we decide based on… who Spica loves the most. — is what Subaru-kun means, yes?"

"…I, I guess?"

Rem's overthinking startles Subaru, but he realizes she's not exactly wrong. The first person Spica lays eyes on,—in other words, the person this defenseless baby depends on most.

Unexpectedly, the lucky direction will be decided in a battle for Spica's love!

"Well, unfortunately for you two, it's obviously going to be me. I'm the breadwinner of this household afterall. Spica must realize it’s thanks to her amazing Dad that she enjoys the necessities of life. Even though she’s still a baby, I’m sure this clever child is already dreaming of becoming my wife someday.”

“Please wait a moment. While Rem does indeed plan to teach Spica about Subaru-kun’s greatness and splendidness, this and that are two different matters. Afterall, from whom does Spica receive her milk, and in whose breasts does she so peacefully rest? This child surely knows. Rem is clearly the winner here.”

“You two just butt out. I’m obviously the one Spica relies on the most. In this weird, unreasonable household, I’ve abandoned anything and everything to protect her. Spica, loves, me, most, definitely.”

A three-way standoff, with no one yielding Spica’s love.

They stare each other down fiercely, daggers in their eyes as they compete for her. The peaceful mood from before feels like a lie.

“—ooh--”

As sparks fly, Spica rouses in Rigel’s arms. With the baby about to wake up at any second, the trio look each other in the eyes,

“Ehomaki moved!”

“Pillow set!”

“Spica set!”

Subaru takes the Ehomaki off the table, Rem places a cushion onto it, and Rigel plops Spica onto the cushion.

From there, the three nod, splitting off in different directions. On top of the cushion, Spica rouses from her slumber, her head shaking gently, her small hands rubbing at her eyes. So cute. Like an angel.

“…”

Holding their breath, they wait to see who Spica turns to.

Eventually, her eyes pop open, and her light blue eyes dart around the room.

“Aah—”

“OH YEAAAAAAHH!!”

Seeing Spica extend her hand out to him, a victorious Rigel falls to his knees in dramatic cheer.

The chosen Rigel yells with pure joy. Meanwhile, the forgotten Subaru and Rem fail to hide their disappointment as they snuggle up to each other,

“Well, when you think about it, the person who rests most peacefully in your breasts is me. I guess this match was over before it started.”

“Even if Spica wanted to be Subaru-kun’s wife, that spot is already Rem’s territory, and she will never budge an inch from it. It was an expected result.”

“Would you guys just celebrate my victory! Don’t get all mushy in front of your damn kids!”

Rigel scolds his parents as Spica mischievously pulls on his face.

Seeing his usual attitude, his parents burst into laughter.

Eventually, Subaru takes note of where Rigel stood,

“Looks like Rigel was in front of the entranceway. Alright, that’s our lucky direction. Everyone, take your Ehomaki and let’s go.”

“Yes, Subaru-kun. But which Ehomaki is Rem’s? Did Subaru-kun prepare one especially for her?”

“This one’s yours, Rem. I made it with a sakura filling that forms a heart shape when it’s rolled up. I went through a lot to pull it off, and I had to eat the failures, so I’m already stuffed.”

Subaru’s belly appears noticeably rounder than usual. Rem extends her hand toward it and rubs it lovingly.

“Subaru-kun looks so wonderful when he does his best for Rem.”

“Alright alright, to the entranceway damnit, the entranceway. As for mine, I’ll just take whatever. Also, what are we doing about Spica’s? She barely even has her baby teeth. It’ll be no joke if she chokes on the seaweed or something. Did you even think about that?”

Rigel searches for a roll that the young Spica could possibly eat. However, the overprotective brother fails to find anything.

To Subaru as well, being unable to prepare anything for her was a major regret.

“I tried a lot of things like melting the seaweed, but the tests didn’t go too well. It’s unfortunate, but Rigel will just have to eat twice as much to satisfy the Seven Deities.”

“How the hell am I supposed to eat two of these gigantic things. You’re expecting way too much from me.”

“Oh, I see. Yeah, I get it now. I guess even with Spica’s happiness on the line, you’re the kind of brother who can’t even make the effort to push his stomach a tiny little bit. That’s okay, I’ll do my best. You just keep deceiving Spica with your shallow, superficial love…”

“I get it! I’ll eat them both! No, please let me eat them both!”

“Hey, don’t pop out your horn over something like this…”

After taunting him with Spica, a short horn protrudes from Rigel’s forehead. He quickly grabs two futomaki and makes for the entranceway. Subaru and Rem laugh heartily as they follow after him.

3

“…”

"…"

"…"

"Aahh—"

Silence dominates the entranceway.

While many rules about Ehomaki exist, the most popular, widespread rule is undeniably "one may not speak while eating Ehomaki."

Since Ehomaki is eaten to take in fortune, opening your mouth would be like letting that fortune escape,

—is probably the case, Subaru decides.

To that end, the trio sit in their entranceway, nomming at their Ehomaki while staring blankly at the front door. Determined to finish their rolls, they eat in complete silence.

"Knock knock. Pardon Natsuki-san, I'm comin' in."

While they sit in the entranceway, their front door suddenly opens.

Perhaps due to old Kararagi customs, since long ago, this rural town had a culture of being shockingly laidback and neighborly.

Almost no one locks their doors, and people would suddenly come inside to greet each other like it was perfectly natural. The voice from just now belongs to a middle-aged woman, one of their many neighbors.

"We're passin' around this week's neighborhood notice. Was hopin' you could take a look…"

says the woman, flyers in hand. But upon seeing the entire household sitting in their entranceway, nibbling at taimaki while silently staring at her, the woman's eyes grow wide like saucers. But, quickly nodding, she leaves the flyers on their shoe cabinet.

"Well, looks like ya'll are busy, so maybe later. Take a look and pass it on will ya? Oh my— Spica's such a cutie today."

Smiling at a waving Spica, the woman leaves with a brief "toodle-oo." They wordlessly see her off with nods and hand waves. Once gone, the four return to sitting in complete silence—

"What the hell was that scene!!"

Unable to bear it any longer, Rigel suddenly jolts up, shouting against the absurdity.

"Why did our neighbor accept it like it was totally natural! Do the neighbors just assume we're a bunch of nutcases! I feel like an idiot for freaking out over Dad's shenanigans! Am I the weird one here?!"

"Fuga. Calm down Rigel. I know how you're feeling right now. Sometimes, when something feels off, you wonder if the problem is with you or the world itself. But you know, it's almost always the case that you left home with right shoe on left foot or something…"

"No! You're wrong! I'm not a nutcase! It's the world that's gone mad!"

As Rigel raves on, a giggling Spica excitedly claps her hands together. To Spica, the sight of her brother writhing in frustration is her greatest plaything. To already recognize the best way to enjoy Rigel at such a young age, this girl's future feels extraordinarily bright.

"Also, because you started talking, I failed the Ehomaki Challenge too. Damn, I really want to succeed at least once. There's plenty of rolls left, but at this rate."

"That's weird too! You said I only had to eat two of them, but now you and I have to finish off them all off ourselves? What about Mom?"

"You idiot, we can't let Rem force herself like that. What are you going to do if these carb-heavy bombs of rice and sugar destroy Rem's figure?! Even after having two kids, the fact that she's as slim as ever is a bonafide miracle. Compared to her, our weights are just mere numbers."

“Nomnom… Rem is finished. Also, if Subaru-kun says it like that, Rem will get shy.”

With a flushed, embarrassed-looking face, Rem declares her completion. With her serious, goal-oriented attitude, Rem’s chances of clearing the Ehomaki Challenge were exceedingly high. On the other hand, with their whimsical, impatient natures, Subaru and Rigel fail over and over.

Finally, one massive roll and one smaller roll remain.

“These Ehomaki are our very last chance. After all that squabbling and prep work, we can’t let it all go to waste. Let’s do our best, Rigel.”

“Urp… I’m almost at my limit. I’ll remember this, shitty Dad… ugh.”

“Good Luck”

Subaru gives a thumbs up as Rigel faces off against the smaller Ehomaki. Rem, having finished long ago, snuggles up to Subaru,

“By the way, this event doesn’t seem to involve Oni. Rem has many objections to the Oni abuse in the Bean Tossing Festival, but not involving them feels somewhat lonely.”

“Hmm, they don’t have to be completely uninvolved, do they? The seven fillings represent the Seven Deities, but you could also say they’re like sealed Oni. Maybe the red filling could be the Red Oni, and the blue filling could be the Blue Oni.”

“Do the Ehomaki even have a blue filling…?”

“Well, you know, sometimes vegetables are called ‘blue-green’ and… is that too much of a stretch?”

Hearing about the Blue Oni and thinking it was her, Rem wears a somewhat dissatisfied face. Then again, with nothing blue to use as filling, it simply couldn’t be helped.

Smiling wryly at Rem’s scornful eyes, Subaru spins the last Ehomaki in his hands.

“But if we think of the fillings as Oni instead of deities, it’d be like exterminating the Oni by eating them. I guess even here, the Oni get antagonized.”

“Does Subaru-kun’s hometown hold some sort of grudge against Oni?”

“Well a bunch of stories talk about rampaging Oni and such. But it’s not like I feel that way. The story about the Red and Blue Oni is my all-time favorite. And of course, my wife is an Oni too. So it’s the same deal as the Bean Tossing Festival.”

“The same deal?”

Rem asks with a curious look on her face.

“Yeah, the same deal. For me, ‘eating the Oni’ is the same as taking in happiness. If anything, they’d become my flesh and blood, in a sort of ‘I won’t let you go’ way.”

“Will Rem be caught?”

“I’ll catch you for sure.”

While Rem’s face beams with happiness, Subaru’s looks explicitly lewd. To their side, Rigel ignores them as he finishes his Ehomaki in silence.

“Alright, I ate it! I ate it all, damnnit! Hey, did you guys see that?”

“Deepest apologies.”

“Don’t apologize so honestly! Damnnit, I already knew, I was watching while I ate!”

Sulking, Rigel picks up Spica and rubs cheeks with her. Seeing her brother so heartbroken, Spica pats his back as if comforting him.

“Well then, for the finale, the family head will show what he’s got.”

“Yes. Rem looks forward to seeing Subaru-kun’s cool side.”

With Rem cheering him on, Subaru challenges the final sushi roll, a true monstrosity,—Ehomaki GRANDE!

Subaru had slapped together all the remaining ingredients into this last roll. While it technically still had seven different fillings, frankly speaking, it was less an Ehomaki and more like a biological weapon.

“No—mm”

Practically unhinging his jaw, Subaru bites into the Ehomaki, taking the first blow in their epic battle.

Having already failed numerous times, Subaru’s stomach is dangerously close to its limit. It could burst apart at any moment, a truly cruel and miserable death. Even then, as a man, as a father, there comes a time when one must fight.

“Nom-”

“—?!”

While Subaru takes on the battle of his life, Rem circles around to assist him.

Smiling slightly, she noms at the opposite side of the Ehomaki. In accordance with the rules, Subaru has no way to stop her. Rem had anticipated this, intent on waging war against the final Ehomaki right alongside him.

With his wife’s support, Subaru felt the strength of ten thousand allies pushing him on. But even while borrowing Rem’s power, as a man, Subaru has to show her his own strength. He pushes himself to lighten her burden by eating even just a tiny bit more.

As Subaru and Rem press on, the Ehomaki between them grows shorter and shorter. Before long, their faces close in, then finally their lips—

“Hold it! BAAAM!!”

At the very last second, Rigel splits the sushi roll with a karate chop.

With his horn protruding, Oni powers massively amplify the sharpness of Rigel’s chop. It wields more than enough strength to cleanly cut into the Ehomaki’s rice and seaweed.

With the sushi roll suddenly split in two, Subaru and Rem part their startled faces. Quickly finishing off their ends of the roll, they confront their son.

“Hey, Rigel! We were about to have a beautiful finale right there!”

“That’s right, Rigel. Subaru-kun and Rem were working on a very important collaborative effort. Does Rigel have some sort of complaint about his mother and father getting along?”

“Hell yeah I do! You’re always ‘getting along’ waay more than necessary! And I’m always trying to tell you too! Get across, my feelings!”

“Sorry, Deflected!”

“Don’t deflect them!”

As if swatting away Rigel’s projected thoughts, Subaru cheekily slaps at the air. On the other hand, an indignant Rem presses rather forcefully against Rigel’s horn.

With a pitiful yelp, he collapses in a heap.

“Karate chopping food, Rem doesn’t remember raising such a bad child. And to not only interrupt, but to interrupt at the last second. Rem hardly thinks this is sufficient punishment.”

“I wonder if all the demi-humans have weak points like this. Spica, if your horn grows in, you can’t let anyone but your precious person handle it, alright?”

Retrieving Spica from a collapsed Rigel, Subaru lectures her in his arms. Spica blinks at his words and rubs her forehead.

As if to say that even if they did grow, her family would still love her.

“As expected of Spica, our family’s greatest treasure. With a single move, she puts us all in bliss.”

Oddly enough, her simplest actions feel even more effective than the Ehomaki. Subaru kisses Spica’s forehead, then hands her off to Rem. He then slings the agony-stricken Rigel over his shoulder and proceeds to spank him.

“So, after we clean the kitchen, how about we go back to talking about our date?”

“Rem agrees. Also, while there’s still quite some time left, what would Subaru-kun like for dinner?”

“I’ve had my fill. I’m totally stuffed.”

With a strained laugh, Subaru heads to the living room. Rem walks alongside him with a heartfelt smile.

—On this day as well, they enjoy a rather uniquely-shaped happiness.

Today is Setsubun.

A sightly special day that comes every year, once a year.

Natsuki Rigel

1

“Rem’s birthday and Setsubun are here once more! By our powers combined, let’s make these days amazing!”

On February 2nd (self-decided), the first signs of a storm brew in the Natsuki household. And as usual, the one brewing it is the head of the household, Natsuki Subaru.

“We’ll do it as a family! You’ll help me won’t you, Rigel!”

Subaru gives a thumbs up, flashing a blindingly bright smile.

The young boy sighs deeply at his father’s pose, an unchildlike sternness on his face.

Bearing his mother’s beautiful blue hair and his father’s menacing eyes, nine year old Natsuki Rigel laments his very existence.

As he tries focusing on homework, Subaru anxiously shifts about, awaiting his reply,

“Dad’s lost it again…”

“That’s way too harsh! You skipped past ‘Huh, that’s kinda weird,’ and went straight to ‘My dad’s borderline insane’ territory! Plus, my request isn’t too hare-brained this time, is it? If anything, it’s brimming with love!”

“That blinding love of yours is what terrifies me. After living here for almost ten years, even I know to avoid it.”

With a cold stare and an even colder tone, Rigel pushes back an encroaching Subaru. “In the first place,” he continues,

“Mom’s birthday aside, all I’ve gotten out of that Setsubun thing is crippling trauma! Isn’t it just bean-tossing and sushi-eating? What’s so great about that weirdo fest…”

"Hey, don't call it a weirdo fest. Yeah, on the surface it's kind of a weird event, but like I said, there's kind of a meaning and purpose to it. You could say it's the Setsubun that's kept our family safe from misfortune, after all."

"What about all my suffering? What about that misfortune?"

"That's not misfortune, that's called 'daily life.' You know, you'll never get anywhere if you focus too much on all the bad things in life. Your stress'll add up too."

"Don't say it like it's my fault! I'm just a victim of my shitty Dad's nonsense!"

Rigel slams the table and flies up. Fuming, he points outside the window with a finger.

In front of their house, numerous flyers with the headline [Come Celebrate Setsubun!] are pasted onto a magic streetlamp. They list date and time, details, and the organizer's name—

"That weirdo fest, you're the one drumming it up into some bizarre town-wide event, right? Your name's even listed as the organizer… I-, I thought I would die of embarrassment at school today."

"Well it's a natural extension of my talents as a Producer. C'mon, now you can proudly boast something like 'My Dad's the HERO of my household!'"

"Maybe if the event wasn't about smashing beans into my face!"

Rigel rips yet another flyer off a nearby wall. He points to a section below "Practices," "Purpose," "Details," and the event date of February 3rd (self-decided). According to the flyer, [Oni] will run around the neighborhood being chased all day. And acting as their representative, will be [Natsuki Rigel].

"Don't sell out your son without permission! What are you, an Oni!"

"You're the Oni, and so is my wife. And well, I can't let Rem do something this crazy. That's why, I'll swallow my tears and send off my dear son…"

“What are you, an Oni! No, you’re definitely an Oni!”

“Calm down. It’s not like everyone’s out for blood. Plus, you might be the representative, but there’ll be other Oni. I’ll be helping out too.”

Seeing Subaru’s bold, undaunted face, Rigel gives in.

In the first place, they’ve already fought this battle countless times since the event’s announcement. Each time, Rigel was utterly defeated, and the day of the event creeped ever closer. Now, there was simply no running or turning back. While his role was forced onto him, Rigel felt obligated to fulfill it.

—Such is the level-headed Natsuki Rigel’s harsh way of life.

“An event’s an event. Just take it like a man. But that’s not what I wanted to talk about.”

“…Mom’s birthday, right?”

“Exactly.”

As Subaru snaps his fingers, Rigel turns away.

By some twist of fate, the hectic Setsubun and the birthday of his mother, Natsuki Rem, are only a day apart.

—Grandly celebrating with his mother on the first day, then tasting a glimpse of hell on the next. This was their annual schedule.

“We can’t properly celebrate Mom’s birthday like this…”

“I won’t deny that it’s a jam-packed schedule, but enjoying two great days in a row is a blessing. Come on, be more optimistic. POSITIVE THINKING!”

“…We can’t properly celebrate Mom’s birthday like this…”

“Huh? Déjà vu?”

Déjà vu my ass.

Unmoved by his father's speech, Rigel's answer remains the same, right down to the syllable.

"I know you're pretty tense about the Setsubun. But that's no reason to make light of Rem's birthday. It only comes once a year, you know. Won't Rem be sad? So let's switch gears here. I know you can do it."

"——. ———. ————. ————————ahh."

Rigel takes some time to accept.

But arguing won't get him anymore, and dispiriting Subaru is borderline impossible. Rigel's only choice is to obediently concede.

"So, you wanna talk about Mom's birthday present, right?"

"Right. You see, this year's a pretty big milestone. It'll be ten years since we got married, after all. We actually don't have a specific day for the anniversary, so I wanted to celebrate it along with her birthday. That's why, I decided to do something special this year."

"Well, that sounds alright to me? Honestly, Mom'll probably be happy no matter what Dad does. But for once, I'm pretty onboard with this."

"Right? So, here's the meat of it."

With the smile of a scheming child, Subaru beckons his son over. Rigel frowns, an ominous feeling hanging over him. But while he hesitates, Subaru waves for him over and over. In the end, a reluctant Rigel sighs as he lends an ear.

"For our tenth anniversary, I've actually prepared something really special. I already ordered it too, so no worries there."

"…hm, well, okay."

"I've been steadily building up my secret stash, all for this day. And the result is something to behold. Listen and be amazed—It's a gemstone!"

"—wohh, a gemstone."

"Be amazed," his father said. But with Subaru's gift actually turning out respectably amazing, Rigel was doubly amazed.

As a rule, no matter what he does, Subaru always overcomplicates things and makes a great, chaotic mess. But for once, that doesn't seem to be the case.

"A gemstone, huh…"

Looking back, Rigel's mother, Natsuki Rem, doesn't dress herself up very much. This wasn't a matter of household finance, but rather, a matter of character.

Rigel has always been secretly proud of his exceedingly beautiful mother. But her reluctance to wear jewelry and fancy clothes was a source of his discontent.

They weren't necessarily poor either. She just doesn't particularly care to adorn herself. And yet, without any regard for dignity nor honor, Rem is shamelessly attached to Subaru. To Rigel's dismay, if it's a present from Subaru, Rem will always accept it. Thus, Rigel immediately approves of a gemstone as his father's gift to his mother.

"That's really great! Hell, you really can do it if you try!"

"Yeah, that's right. I'm the type that just needs to try and… huh? What the heck? Doesn't it sound like you're the parent here?"

"Forget about it. What's important is Mom's gift, right?"

"Oh, yeah, right. Yeah, of course! What's important is Rem's gift. Well I knew I had the right idea, but I'm confident now that you've approved."

With a spirited fist bump, Subaru and Rigel nod to each other.

Rigel then wonders about his mother's gift, especially with his father's questionable tastes.

“So, what’s the gemstone like? Knowing Dad, I’m worried you found some weirdo craftsman to make it.

“Oh my god! My stock rose and fell within seconds! …But about that. Now we’re getting to the important part. Listen carefully, my son.”

“Ughh…”

Rigel groans at his father’s gravely serious face.

When Subaru has this serious look, and the playfulness in his voice vanishes, one must be extremely careful. He’ll definitely spit out something troublesome—this was the “trust” cultivated between Rigel and his father for the past ten years. And once again, this trust will not be betrayed.

As a fearful Rigel wrinkles his face into a scowl, Subaru whispers,

“—The merchant carrying Rem’s gemstone, his dragon carriage ran into some trouble and hasn’t arrived. There’s talk that he might even head back, so I’m going out to get it myself.”

“…are you gonna make it by the end of the day?”

“Well, I’ll be chasing after them full throttle, of course. —But, honestly, I’m not sure.”

Fingers twiddling, gaze dropping, voice lowering. Seeing his father like this, Rigel slaps his forehead,

“If you’re that worried, why not forget the gemstone for now? Birthday present aside, if Dad’s not here, Mom’ll be way more sad.”

“I know. I know that, but… I have to give her this present today. It’d be meaningless otherwise, I think.”

“That’s just…”

Selfish, he wanted to say, but Rigel’s words stopped short.

Subaru scratches his head, a pitiful, bittersweet smile on his face.

But beneath, a maelstrom of hard, indescribable feelings swirls about. Just from looking, Rigel feels its pull sweeping him away.

From the depths of Subaru's soul, tucked away with the greatest of care, Rigel could feel the faint traces of an important something.

—It was the irreplaceable bond his parents shared.

"…"

Cutting in would be wrong, Rigel decides.

With a sigh, he too scratches his head,

"So, after revealing all this, what do you want from me?"

"Will you hear me out, Rigel!"

"You're practically forcing me to! Spit it out or I'll look like some scumbag who can't read the atmosphere!"

"I'm saved!"

With Rigel's reluctant acceptance, an ecstatic Subaru grabs him by the hands, swinging up and down, to and fro.

Rigel scowls, but Subaru just keeps smiling back,

"I'm going out to retrieve the gemstone. I'll definitely be back in time, but you need to give Rem some excuse while I'm gone. Even if you screw up, don't talk about the present. It'll ruin the surprise."

"…if Dad's not around for Mom's birthday, I think that'll be more than enough surprise."

"Even then. Anyways, I'm heading out now. The rest's up to you!"

After forcing his trust onto Rigel, Subaru grabs his luggage and rockets out the front door.

Like the wind, he furiously tumbles down the street, making for the town gate—from there, he'll likely mount an earth dragon and chase after the jeweller.

“Is he gonna make it back in time?”

Just barely, according to Subaru. But Rigel figures he’s more likely to fail than succeed.

In his absence, it’s up to Rigel to defend the Natsuki household from devastation. But with Rem’s endless devotion to her husband, Rigel can already see his mother shaking and trembling.

“Is-, is this gonna be a bloodbath…?”

Trembling with fear, Rigel anxiously waits for his mother’s return, all the while praying for his father to come home even a second sooner.

2

Fortunately, Rem’s reaction wasn’t nearly the catastrophe Rigel imagined. Compared to the worst case scenario, she was utterly composed.

“So y’see, there was some trouble at work, or something. They needed Dad over because, y’know, they really depend on him and… wait, do they? They do, right? Well, assuming they do, he apparently went off to sorta help them, I think.”

“Why does Rigel sound so uncertain? Really, at almost ten years old, you should at least house-sit and relay messages properly. Honestly.”

Returning from shopping and the local neighborhood meeting, Rem is welcomed home by her son. With no time to prepare, Rigel clumsily explains Subaru’s absence. Luckily, Rem doesn’t particularly doubt him, nor does she pout.

But on the other hand, she clearly disapproves of his shoddy explanation. Despite appearances, Rem is actually quite the despotic mother. It’s a well-kept family secret that Subaru is in fact the more lenient of the two.

“So Subaru-kun had to go out… that’s too bad. For lunch today, Rem planned to make all of Subaru-kun’s favorite foods.”

Bearing her shopping bag, a slightly lonely Rem droops her eyebrows. Suddenly, a sense of duty burns and rages within Rigel. No matter what, he can't let his mother be sad. As a man, Rigel puts his all into everything, even roles forced onto him. You could say his very nature was a tragedy.

"Dad's favorites, huh. That's a shame… wait, didn't you say the same thing yesterday? I feel like we had all his favorites yesterday too…"

"Yes. And tomorrow and the day after, and the day before yesterday and even the day before that, it's all Subaru-kun's favorite foods."

"Home cooking aside, that's some extreme favoritism!"

Day in, day out, Rem dedicates every single meal to Subaru's tastes. Realizing this, Rigel can't help but cry out.

"No, no," Rem replies, shaking her head,

"Please don't worry. Subaru-kun's favorites are also Rigel's and Spica's favorites. Afterall, has Rem ever made anything that you two didn't like?"

"Well… now that I think about it, I guess not. But is it even possible for a whole family to like the same things? I mean, doesn't everyone have different tastes?"

"That's because when Rigel was just a baby, Rem endlessly whispered Subaru-kun's favorites to him as he slept, brainwashing him into liking them too."

"Please tell me you're joking?!"

"Yes, that was just a joke. Rigel should take better care not to fall for things like this."

Rigel's eyes are wide as saucers from this devastating truth. Seeing him, a giggly Rem playfully sticks out her tongue.

Then, smoothing down her long, blue hair, "Rem calls them Subaru-kun's favorites, but the truth is that Subaru-kun always says 'delicious' to Rem's cooking. So Rigel doesn't need to worry."

"Well alright. But doesn't that make your efforts kinda pointless…"

"Not at all. Subaru-kun always says 'delicious,' but when he really loves something, his tone changes, and his cheeks move a bit differently. They're cuter than usual. Fufu."

Rigel can't decide whether his mother's detailed observations make her charming, or a little scary. He lets out a vague, strained laugh as Rem smiles blissfully.

She then hands Spica over and carries the groceries to the kitchen.

"Seriously, your big bro's drowning in anxiety over here, but you're as carefree as ever, huh."

"Aaahh—?"

"Don't 'aaahh' me, you… ohh, you're too cute, Spica!"

With the goofy affection of an older brother, Rigel rubs cheeks with Spica. While naïve to the world, Spica still loves his doting and affection. She smiles and giggles as if being tickled. After savoring Spica's smile to his heart's content, Rigel takes her with him to the kitchen. Before them, Rem is putting away the day's groceries.

"So then, Rigel. When did your father say he'll be home?"

"Oh, uhh… well, I think he said he might take a while? But he said he'll try his best to hurry back. Since, y'know, he's got a reason to hurry today."

Rigel immediately regrets saying too much. Subaru's trip and Rem's birthday are topics he desperately had to avoid. And yet, with every clumsy step, a dumbfounded Rigel digs his grave ever deeper. Woefully unaware of his "Can't tell a lie to save my life" personality, Rigel quickly covers his mouth.

Mimicking him, Spica puts her small hands up to her own mouth.

So cute. But this isn’t the time to dote.

“Is that so. ‘He might take a while’…”

“…”

“How troubling. Though Rem understands why he would hurry.”

Without turning around, Rem continues stocking the shelves. But Rigel looks on in worry. Her voice is the same as always, but she might actually be on the verge of tears, ready to fall to her feet from the shock.

In Rigel’s mind, Rem is a strong woman, but she has some very fatal weak points. And those weak points invariably have to do with Natsuki Subaru.

In the first place, from her words, she’s probably already realized that Subaru’s preparing for her birthday. Unlike Subaru, Rem is unusually perceptive and actually capable of reading the atmosphere. Rigel wonders if there’s really any point to all this deception.

“Umm, Mom, listen…”

The more he thinks it over, the more it wears on his nerves. Honest to a fault, Rigel’s resolve grows weaker and weaker.

“It’s about Dad but, well, don’t think too badly of him.”

“—-? Isn’t that obvious? Rem would never think badly of Subaru-kun for going out to work. He’s working hard for his family, afterall.”

“But well, the situation’s a bit different this time, y’know?”

“…ahh, as expected. Rigel was also worried about that.”

Turning around, Rem finds her son with an uneasy expression on his face. She smiles back fondly, as if understanding everything from that one look. Feeling he’s been completely seen through, Rigel silently apologizes to Subaru.

But to think that, in a mere thirty minutes, he would already taste defeat.

Shamefully coming to grips with his loss, Rigel realizes he no longer needs to lie. The guilt of keeping secrets from family dissipates, the thought of coming clean lightens his heart.

In the end, you just have to be honest. There isn't a shred of doubt.

"Please don't worry. Rem is a little uneasy as well. But if it's Subaru-kun, there's nothing to worry about."

"I don't know if I believe in him that strongly, but… yeah, I guess that's good."

"Yes. Rem doesn't exactly understand his intentions, but she did her best to prepare to Subaru-kun's instructions. If anything, Subaru-kun entrusting Rem with this task is a sign of his faith in her. Rem feels inspired to do her best."

"…huh?"

Tightening her hands, Rem makes a guts pose.

Rigel secretly likes this childish habit of hers, but right now, it stirs a sense of anxiety in him.

Their conversation, it seems to flow, and yet it doesn't.

"Hold on a sec?" Rigel asks, his head cocked in puzzlement,

"What're you talking about?"

"—-? Well of course, preparations for tomorrow's Setsubun event. Rigel will be representing the runaway Oni, afterall. An appropriate outfit… Subaru-kun asked Rem to prepare one for Rigel. Rem was hoping Subaru-kun could review the final result."

"—AHH DAMNIT! I KNEW IT!!"

With both sides of their conversation finally meshing, Rigel's guilt gushes back in full force. Realizing that nothing he's said has made it across, he can’t help but wail in frustration.

Spica, still held carefully in his arms, looks to her brother’s wrinkled, anguished face. “Awuu—” she chirps, mimicking him as she laughs so happily.

3

—A few minutes later, standing before a mirror is Natsuki Rigel, newly reborn.

“As expected, Subaru-kun’s judgement was flawless. Rem is so moved.”

“Upaa~♪”

Rem nods, deeply satisfied with her work. In her arms, Spica gazes at her brother with a pair of sparkling eyes.

The being standing before them is a perfect reproduction.

“…”

Pants made from a yellow fabric, spotted with black lightning bolts coming down in vertical stripes. For his upper body, a vest sewn from the same yellow fabric. On his feet, a Kararagi specialty, wooden clogs.

In his hands, he grips a metallic-looking club made from papier-mâché. In his mouth, a pair of fake fangs borrowed from the costume store. And with his hair ruffled a bit more wildly than usual, Rigel was the spitting image of an Oni.

With her son perfectly embodying the classic Oni style, a delighted Rem looks on admiringly. Meanwhile, Spica’s eyes brim with heartfelt wonder at her brother’s magnificent form.

With these two watching over him, the newly reborn Rigel studies himself in the mirror,

“God, this is awful!”

“My, what is Rigel saying? Doesn’t this costume match perfectly with Subaru-kun’s sketch? For her fine work, Rem is ready to sing her own praises.”

“This is an Oni? I look more like a barbarian! Mom, as one of the last surviving Oni, doesn’t this costume piss you off?”

“No matter how the world perceives Oni, it won’t control Rem and Rigel’s lives. It will be okay. With that said, such a breathtaking costume… especially those eyes, so wonderfully Oni-like.”

“That’s the only part that’s real!!”

His parents may have given him this body, but having it praised by those very parents only annoys Rigel.

His unexpected reaction vexes Rem, but in all honesty, the one most vexed is Rigel. Delighted by his agitation, a cherry-cheeked Spica rolls and tumbles with laughter, her voice resounding like bells throughout the house.

An Oni vest and Oni pants. An Oni’s club and an Oni’s eyes. Truly a work of perfection.

“No, not yet. As the finishing touch, please grow out your horn. With this, the costume will be complete.”

“Th-, that’s not your business…”

“Not true at all. Rigel is Rem’s child. And when it comes to Rigel, Rem’s thinking is always serious and sincere.”

At Rigel’s doubtful eyes, Rem speaks back with an utmost seriousness. Overpowered, a reluctant Rigel concentrates his senses to his forehead.

As a successor to the Oni bloodline, Rigel possesses the horn of the Oni clan. However, rather than the usual pair, only a single horn grows from his forehead. According to Rem, this was probably due to Rigel’s half-Oni blood. Frankly, it didn’t bother him very much. However—

[For only being able to give Rigel a single horn, Rem is sorry.]

His mother's apology from so long ago. In Rigel's mind, it remains vividly clear. Her apologetic face, that regretful voice, he could never forget them.

But Rigel doesn't care how many horns he has. Whether there's one or two, a horn's a horn. When he grows it out, his body feels light and easy to move. Rigel considers it a true blessing.

[Yes, thank you very much.]

When he answered this way, his mother made a lonely, bittersweet smile. From time to time, Rigel helplessly thinks back to that moment. But since then, he could never find the courage to bring back the topic. They never spoke of his horn again.

Supposedly, his mother also has just one horn. Rigel wonders if she ever suffered because of it.

"…"

Putting those thoughts aside, Rigel concentrates on rousing his Oni blood. From his forehead, the white, pointed tip of a horn begins to emerge.

A sharp sensation courses through his forehead like lightning. As it flows to the rest of his body, Rigel feels his limbs brimming with strength. At the same time, a powerful urge throbs deeply within his chest. According to his mother, this was the Oni's natural battle instinct. The instincts roar louder and louder, assaulting his mind.

As he basks in this strange but empowering sensation, Rigel holds back the equally powerful battle instincts.

In the mirror, his appearance has undergone a clear transformation. Confirming the growth of his horn, Rigel turns back towards Rem and Spica—

"How is it…"

"Pfft… it-, it's very, splendid… splendid, indeed, Rigel… pfft."

"Could you give me back my concern?!"

Turning around, Rigel finds his mother desperately stifling her laughter. After witnessing his perfection of the classic Oni style, Rem's cheeks are puffed red. She falls to her knees in a giggling fit.

Just moments ago, Rigel was wrought with worry and concern. But with the growth of his own horn turning him into a laughingstock, he realizes it was time and energy wasted.

As Rigel droops his shoulders in exhaustion, Rem somehow manages to get back up. Pulling herself together, she wipes away a stray tear,

"In-, in any case, Rem thinks it's wonderful. Subaru-kun will surely be satisfied, and all the participants will love it too. —pffft."

"Fine, I'll make you all regret choosing me to represent the Oni! For the first time in my life, I'll unleash these savage fight instincts sleeping within me—"

"Of course, Rigel is forbidden from causing harm to anyone. If he resorts to violence, Rem will take responsibility and personally subjugate him. Is that clear?"

"For the first time in my life, I'll unleash these savage flight instincts sleeping within me—"

Adjusting the wording ever so slightly, Rigel corrects his declaration. Seeing a satisfied Rem nod back, he sighs.

"Looking in the mirror, I can see why you'd like it, but… is this really okay? Won't this just make the Oni look bad?"

"As a race, the Oni have almost all perished. Even if someone insults us at this point, there's little use in worrying over it. Incidentally, the setting for this event has Rigel as the chieftain of a ferocious, bloodthirsty Oni tribe. If the townsfolk fail to repel them, the tribe will instigate an atrocious mass killing, painting the town ruins into a true scene from Hell… is the planned development."

"They really are barbarians! Do they even need to be Oni?!"

“Oni are excellent for playing the villain role… is what Subaru-kun said.”

While indifferent to the Oni’s dignity, Rem seems reluctant to continue their talk.

The near-eradication of the Oni clan is common knowledge. And yet, Rigel has never heard Rem talk about it in any real detail.

Thinking back, he’s never heard much about his parents’ romance and past either.

“…Well, hearing about it will just wear me out anyway.”

Sometimes, from his parents—from Subaru and Rem, he has this strange feeling, as if something’s off or out of place.

Whether it’s helping with his homework, or celebrating weird festivals, scraps of knowledge from some unknown place would pop up from time to time. There were all sorts of mysterious odds and ends.

Every time he catches a glimpse at his parents’ past, Rigel feels oddly vexed. At any rate, between his parents, there were traces of an education that they couldn’t quite conceal.

Rigel guesses that these two received a respectable education from somewhere. As their son, the thought fills him with pride. And yet, seeing his parents hide their secret at all costs, this pride is tangled with resentment.

Rigel wonders if, someday, he’ll be able to hear their story.

“But well, I doubt they’ll tell me any time soon…”

Coming to this conclusion, Rigel sets aside his suspicions for now. Oblivious to her son’s inner turmoil, Rem clasps her hands with an enthusiastic “Now,”

“Let’s put away the costume and prepare for tomorrow. It’s too bad that Subaru-kun couldn’t personally check on it, but Rem will leave that for tomorrow as something to look forward to.”

“Am I really running around in this tomorrow…”

“Other Oni besides Rigel will be wearing the same outfit, so there’s nothing to be embarrassed about. Though the only real Oni will be Rigel, of course.”

As he pulls his arms out from the vest and changes his pants, Rigel grows anxious over tomorrow’s event. Wanting to encourage him, Rem gently brushes her beloved son’s shoulder,

“It will be okay. Rigel is Rem’s and Subaru-kun’s proud son, after all.”

“Well, being Mom’s son is fine, but having to be Dad’s son is…”

“If anything, that part should be a source of relief. On the other hand, Rem’s blood flowing in Rigel’s veins, Rem worries and worries that it’ll cause him nothing but trouble…”

“Aren’t you undervaluing yourself here?”

It’s a bad habit of hers. Rem loves Subaru and sees him in almost too good of a light. And yet, while not quite self-deprecating, she’s undeniably too hard on herself.

“I don’t know how convincing it is coming from me, but I don’t think Mom’s blood ever caused me any problems. Like I said, it’s Dad’s blood that’s got me worried. These scary eyes aside, I feel like I’m inheriting his evilness.”

“Those eyes are wonderful.”

“But sometimes girls cry just from looking at me…”

“They’re just too young to understand a boy’s charm.”

That stubborn, unyielding faith in others, why does it weaken so much when it comes to herself?

Actually, Rigel suspects that Subaru has the very same flaw. But he rarely sees weakness in his father, so he can’t quite compare. Putting those thoughts aside for now, “As your son, I honestly have no idea why you’re so unconfident… I guess, I’ll just have to prove it to you?”

“Huh?”

“Tomorrow’s event, if I pull it off perfectly, completely, and without a single incident… then as both Mom and Dad’s son, I’ll make you see that there’s nothing to worry about.”

“…”

“It’s been bothering me for a while now. So I’ve always wanted to prove it to you.”

Staring back at his wide-eyed mother, Rigel makes his bold declaration.

As the loving wife of Natsuki Subaru, and the doting mother of Natsuki Rigel and Natsuki Spica, Natsuki Rem is a woman who lacks self-confidence. Yet in Rigel’s mind, no other woman is so deserving of respect.

“You’re always worried that you can’t match up with Dad, but I’ll show you that that’s not even the tiniest, slightest bit true!”

“Rigel…”

“My… my Mom is the greatest Mom in the entire world. I just wanted you to see that.”

Unconfident, yet living so blissfully, but at times, shrinking back in hesitation. Rigel has watched over his mother all this time, wishing that she would live more proudly.

Just as she loves her husband and her son and daughter, Rigel wishes she would love herself.

Because Subaru and Rigel, and Spica as well, they all love Rem.

Because just as Rem loves them all, they all love Rem back,

“Looking down on my Mom, I won’t let anyone do that, not even my Mom.”

Burning with a feverish vigor, Rigel finishes his declaration. But suddenly, he’s struck with an awkward situation.

What the hell am I saying, looking like this?!

Having removed the Oni vest and pants, he stands there in nothing but his underwear. Like this, no matter how serious he is, he’ll just be treated like a comedy show.

After all this time, he finally blasted out everything he wanted to say. But there had to have been a better time to do it.

“Ahh, uhm, just now, that was—”

“A mistake,” he wanted to say, but before he could,

“…”

Suddenly, Rigel’s head is entangled between two outstretched arms and abruptly embraced.

A tender feeling envelopes his head as a bewildered Rigel darts his eyes about in confusion. He quickly realizes, this is his mother’s embrace.

Hearing the intense pounding of his mother’s heart so close, Rigel’s face immediately turns red.

He’s at the age where being spoiled by his mother is unbelievably embarrassing. The days when she’d hold him like this should be long past. He instinctively wants to pull away. However—

“…Mom?”

“…”

Feeling the tremble and quiver of the arms cradling him, Rigel freezes in place. He calls out to his mother, but Rem doesn’t answer. That’s when he realizes,

“…uu, fu, eh-”

The sound of crying meets his ears.

But it isn’t the familiar crying of his adorable little sister. While so very similar, this crying comes from someone Rigel has never seen cry before.

Quickly realizing its owner, Rigel turns a pale white.

What if something he said was unimaginably hurtful. His forceful, impassioned words, if they hurt her, it’d be a mistake that Rigel could never take back.

He frantically wrings his brain for the right words to say.

But he soon realizes that all his fretting and worrying was unnecessary.

“…”

Shaking her head, a small Rem firmly embraces her even smaller son. The emotion packed into those trembling arms, it wasn’t displeasure, nor was it grief. There was only loving affection. Caressed by this affection, Rigel is the first to understand.

Returning his sobbing mother’s hug with his own, Rigel gently strokes her back.

“Don’t cry, Mom… if Dad sees, he’ll kill me.”

“…that, isn’t possible.”

“Why?”

“Rem is this happy, yet the tears won’t stop falling.”

To think that the mother he’s known for almost ten years is, unexpectedly, such a crybaby. Rigel sighs.

Still held by her mother, Spica looks to her mother and brother embracing, tilting her head. And then Spica, with her small, autumn-colored hand, as if mimicking her brother, starts stroking her mother's back.

Slowly, slowly, with a tenderness that could soothe even the biggest crybaby.

—As happy tears fall from their mother's eyes, the siblings continue stroking her back.

4

—In the end, Subaru, who went out to retrieve the gemstone, didn't return while Rigel and Spica were awake.

"Tomorrow will be very busy, so Rigel should go to sleep now.

Don't stay up too late since we start early tomorrow."

His mother spoke in her usual tone, as if she already forgot how hard she had cried. However, as Rem kisses his forehead to say goodnight, Rigel notices her expression has somehow changed from yesterday's.

In the end, they never spoke about her birthday, but at least he kept his promise with Subaru. Rigel decides to leave the rest to his father.

In the first place, he didn't have the courage left to spout any more embarrassing words. After all, he just finished blasting out a whole ten years' worth.

"…"

Staring at the magic crystal, Rigel counts down the remaining minutes on his fingers. Will Subaru return home in time for Rem's birthday? In Rigel's experience, Subaru will go to absurd lengths to prove his love and devotion to his wife. That's probably why. Even with just ten minutes left, Rigel isn't at all worried.

And in the end—

"—Rem, I'm home! Sorry I'm late!"

Subaru rolls and tumbles into the house, a mere five minutes before the date changes. —Though they technically had just five minutes left to celebrate, he still managed to keep his promise.

“Subaru-kun, welcome home. But please don’t make so much noise. Rigel and Spica are already asleep. It wouldn’t be good to wake them.”

“Ahh, sorry, sorry. I was just in such a rush…”

The sound of Rem welcoming, then scolding Subaru, and the sound of a flustered Subaru apologizing back. From his futon, Rigel hears footsteps make their way into the house.

Since he went to bed a few hours ago, Rigel has just been tossing and turning. But with this last worry cleared from his mind, he finally feels sleepy.

Considering tomorrow’s event, just as his mother said, he really should sleep already. Yesterday, he dreaded the Setsubun event, despairing as it came ever closer. But now, Rigel feels like he can look forward to it, just a little. It must be because of the promise he made with his mother—

“Rem, I’m really sorry for being late, but there’s more I have to say. The work I was out for today, it was more like a personal errand. A really important one.”

“A personal errand, is it? Was there something special going on?”

“There is. Though you probably don’t think it’s too special.”

Tilting her head, Rem seems to honestly have no clue. Neglecting herself, another bad habit of hers. Frankly, hiding the present from her might’ve been totally unnecessary.

That’s just how indifferent Rem is towards herself.

At Subaru's stiff words, Rem's cheerful voice abruptly pauses. Finally understanding, she's met with two conflicting emotions. Unsure which to embrace, she stands in bewilderment.

"…"

Rigel guesses that his mother's eyes are darting about in confusion as his father hands her something. And with Rem still vexed, it's probably Subaru who opens the small box lying in her hands. At the sound of the box opening, Rem peers inside and lets out a small gasp.

"This is…"

"A garnet… at least, I think that's what you'd call it. I've been steadily building my secret stash all for this day. But seriously, I was so worried. Even though it's only meaningful if I gave it to you today, that dragon carriage started heading back halfway."

"…"

As Subaru recounts his trials, Rem stands wordlessly. Noticing her silence, a wryly smiling Subaru roughly scratches his head.

"I wanted to give you something definite, something permanent. We've been together for ten years now. And with your birthday, and Setsubun, I thought this'd be a fitting way to ask, 'Once again, please take care of me.'"

"…is it really okay, for Rem-"

"Hm?"

"For Rem to be this blessed, is it really okay?"

Hearing her trembling voice, Rigel shifts about, his weary eyes now looking towards them. His parents are in the neighboring room, but Rigel can see them through the half-open sliding door. Subaru and Rem face each other, with Rem's eyes fixated on the red gemstone in her hands.

"Rem's birthday… she completely forgot about it. Because… Rem always believed she had no right to celebrate it."

"…"

"Rem left behind Nee-sama, who was born on the very same day… even though she knew it was such a terrible thing, but…"

"Yeah, tell me anything. I'll listen to you."

"—n. Rem was always worried, if she's allowed to be this happy."

That tearful voice, the same one Rigel heard just hours ago. Yet this time, it feels strained with a deep guilt.

And from his mother's mouth, the surprise of an unfamiliar word. "Nee-sama". But what truly surprises Rigel is that, far beyond what he imagined, his parents' past is heavy and painful.

"I won't tell you to stop feeling guilty. I know all too well that it isn't possible. Because, I feel the same."

"…yes."

"But even then, I don't want to think that anything and everything has been bad. Even though we gave up, even if we ran away, the things we obtained after running, I don't want to think badly of them too."

"…yes."

Unimaginable from his usual tone, Subaru's truly serious voice shocks Rigel. And as Rem nods over and over, her voice carries something different as well. Separate from her reliableness as a mother, different from the extreme love and favoritism she shows her husband.

Right now, they were merely a man and a woman, sharing in their precious bond and memories.

"Coming to this town, and having Rigel and Spica. After all sorts of things happened, now you and I are here. All of that is connected to our happiness. I wanted to prove that to you and give it shape. And that's this gemstone."

"…"

"If it's still too painful for you to accept it, I won't ask you to immediately wear that gemstone. I won't even mind if you put it away somewhere. But please, don't throw it away. I feel like that's the one thing we shouldn't do."

Appealing, Subaru takes a step towards the wordless Rem.

Carefully reaching out his arms, he embraces Rem and pulls her towards him. Holding her close, Subaru tenderly strokes her head.

As he does so, Rem buries her face into his breast, and says with a small voice,

"Today, Rigel told Rem."

"Yeah?"

"He said that Rem is… the greatest mother in the world."

"Yeah. You didn't know?"

"…Yes, Rem did not know."

Rem carefully repeats Rigel's words, but Subaru swiftly answers back, as if they were the most obvious words in the world.

At his immediate reply, Rem wrinkles her face and smiles.

Fortune Fish-Head Tree

1

It was a yearly thing—well, he disliked how it was yearly, thinking that it was annual in his mind, but that annual day approached this year too.

Rigel: “I feel some serious hatred because of this day coming closer…”

Then, the person who let out that listless murmur along with a sigh was a boy that had tiredness and insightfulness on his face, unfitting for his age.

He had short, blue hair swaying in the wind, sanpaku eyes to sharply look through the world, and traditional Kararagi Japanese clothes.

It was the Natsuki Rigel, the “Setsubun King”, admired by the people at Kararagi City State’s second town, Banan.

Rigel: “Too disgraceful…!”

The “Setsubun King” folds his short arms, and he looked up at the sky as if in grief.

The “Setsubun” event that started to root in the town a few years ago changed every, every year, swooping down on him. The continuation of that suffering made him grow, and when he realized it, it even pushed the lone boy up to the “Setsubun King”.

As of now, Rigel was merely walking in the Banan town, and even on days unrelated to Setsubun, he would occasionally have to deal with the shower of beans from kids. It seemed he didn’t understand the point of it. If he overlooked it pleasantly by reasoning that it couldn’t be helped because they were kids, then his father who’d seen it would laugh at him in an extremely pompous way, and he’d feel discomfort.

Anyhow, the “Setsubun” event already became essential at Banan, and to Rigel as well it was—putting his emotions aside, the same could be said for Rigel.

Rigel’s own father was related to why that began, but the biggest reason was because of a family matter—”Setsubun” was an event related to Onis.

Thus, Rigel, who had Oni blood, his beloved younger sister, and also his mother were inseparable.

Therefore, “Setsubun” was an event that involved Rigel, and it was essential to the Natsuki family.

So, Rigel came to accept the bean tossing, being a target, being silent until he was done eating the lucky direction roll Futomaki, and running all over the whole town dressed as an Oni.

However…but…

Rigel: “Can Dad run out of ideas already…”

Subaru: “—Hey! Rigel! Just how long are you gonna stand there lost in your thoughts?! I’m really counting on your fighting power! Come over here! Help out!!”

It was right after Rigel dropped his shoulders weakly and grumbled like that.

Rigel heard a faraway voice call him, which also sounded quite cornered, and so he reluctantly turned his head.

—His half-naked father was waving his hands frantically around the water of the large Mogolade geyser.

He was completely soaked, his usual upright black hair now clung to his forehead, and it was as if they were taking a bath together. His father threw away his ruined jacket, and while hurriedly bleaching his built upper body, he called out to Rigel and said

Subaru: “A school is coming! What Elder said was right! There won’t be another chance if you let this one go! Rigel! Hurry!”

Rigel: “Fine! I got it, sheesh!”

It would have been better if Rigel just abandoned it regretfully, but he recklessly and violently scratched his head, and he finally ran towards his father.

Rigel went towards the Grand Mogolade Geyser that spouted water while having his head being bathed in the spray of water coming down from the cloudless sky.

—This year’s “Setsubun was somewhat different from the usual.

Rigel: “No wait, being a nuisance to me is the usual!”

Subaru: “Rigel! Rigel-san?! Hurry! Bring out your horn! Grab onto the net! Grab onto it hard and don’t let go!”

Rigel: “Shut up—!!”

Rigel follows his father’s orders, unsure of if he was being serious or not, and when he stood on the deep pool of the grand geyser, he stared at the swirling water, seeing myriad of fish shadows.

“…”

He grabs tightly onto the edge of the net. Heat gets produced on his forehead. He blanks out for a second, and he felt an excessive amount of exhilaration.

The overflowing power swells up endlessly by taking in the mana in the atmosphere. The short 11 year old Natsuki Rigel had the brute strength of an Oni god inside of him, unfitting of his childishness.

Rigel: “Urwaaaa—!!”

He puts in unfathomable strength into his thin arms, and pulls up the net at once. The net made of thin iron thread fulfilled its role of not being torn down by oni strength.

Subaru: “There it is! Rigel did it! We won’t lose either! Everyone, give it all you’ve got and pull—!!”

Everyone: “Heeaaaaaaaaaveee hooooooooooo!!”

The father continues after Rigel, who became the previous counterattack—no, it wasn’t just his father.

All the people of Banan he brought along ran up to the net at once, and each of them pulled up the net with their entire soul. He turned his head towards the outside of the net to make sure the fish shadows didn’t escape, but they were already in the middle of a devilish strategy. They couldn’t escape. They wouldn’t let them.

Subaru: “You guys…behave, and become sacrifices for “Setsubuuun”!!”

They were comrades having unwanted suffering forced upon them by “Setsubun”.

They didn’t understand the other people’s—the adults’ feelings. However, at the very least…

—At the very least, I’ll sympathize with you guys from the bottom of my heart, and I’ll take you with me!

Subaru: “Uwoahhhhhh—!!”

He bites his molars, each of them fighting for their lives, putting in absolutely all of his strength.

His palm that grasped the net was hot. He didn’t know if the drops of water from his forehead were sweat, or if they were drops of water from the grand geyser.

The only thing he thought of was him not letting go of his grip.

—To understand why it became like this again, we’ll have to backtrack a few days.

2

It was early afternoon of a day off. The father and son entered the same kotatsu, faced each other, and began having a pleasant interaction.

Neither of them had school or work, and it was a rare day when they had no plans. They spent their time leisurely in the kotatsu since morning, had the same old conversation of “How’s school?” “Nothing new”. Having these kind of days every now and then—what a time of negligence it was.

Subaru: “Ah, Rigel-kun. It’s gonna be that day soon. What do you think about that? Hm?”

Rigel: “Go catch a cold.”

Subaru: “That’s a roundabout way of being offensive, oi.”

The person who responded to those words by curling his lips unhappily was this man that saw his eyes that looked exactly like Rigel’s everyday in the mirror.

He had short, black hair, unusual black eyes, and he was the center pillar of Natsuki, Rigel’s family name. He was Natsuki Subaru, Rigel’s father.

He should almost be turning 30, so to the best of Rigel’s knowledge, it wouldn’t be strange for him to have things like suitable composure and dignity as an adult. However, his father—as for Subaru, he didn’t really seem to be that way, and he had composure that might make you think he’d be 5-6, or even younger than that, perhaps being related to emotional matters, or his everyday behavior.

Incidentally, currently in the Natsuki Family there was Spica who was having special education for the gifted as the youngest child, and things like dirty words and offensive words were forbidden for the sake of her emotional development. Thus, it was necessary for him to pick expressions that would soften the abuse of his father down to things like “Go catch a cold”, while still carrying what he intended.

But, Subaru was not discouraged at all by Rigel’s original complaints, and he said

Subaru: “Well, it’s not like I don’t understand your feelings, either.

I've also reflected on this year. —There's no way you'll be hit with more beans during Setsubun than the amount of beans used at Banan in a month."

Rigel: "Last year I didn't think I'd hover between life and death because of something like beans. I've seen it for a while in my dreams, and even now I make noise while having nightmares."

Subaru: "But don't worry. The number of Onis has increased even more this year, and it's been converted into a plan to distribute and reduce the burden on your shoulders. Nothing similar to what happened last year will happen again!"

Rigel: "Stop building a unit with me in the center without warning!"

In response to Subaru's words, him acting like he cared but not actually caring at all, Rigel hit the kotatsu, and he raised his voice. However, he was relatively quick to feel like he was probably wasting his breath, which is what he started to feel in particular a few days after last year's Setsubun.

Anyhow, everywhere he went, every man he met, and finally, even any infant would know about Rigel's achievements. If the townspeople whose faces and names didn't match continued to call out to Rigel by saying "Looking forward to next year as well!", he wouldn't have something like a way to escape, as he was timid.

Rigel: "The kneading from last time wasn't good enough too. Also, about the decorative club, were the thorns filled with cotton properly? It's not like I'm going to hit people, but if by some chance I hit them, there's a good chance the event can get canceled…"

Subaru: "Considering how you're saying this and that, and how you handle things positively, I feel like I've raised you well. That's a relief."

Rigel: "What are you saying?! Also, isn't the first time you said that when you started getting everyone involved?! And putting my right to complain to you aside, don't you feel bad about disturbing the people who are mere participants?!"

Subaru: “Seems like you’re kinda getting old already…”

Rigel sighed without saying anything at Subaru’s unreasonable thoughts.

Subaru’s words being incomprehensible was also just the usual. Trying to understand all of them little by little would just tire him out. Unlike Rigel’s mother, he gave up on trying to understand his father ever since he had an umbilical cord.

Rigel: “So, is it safe to say that you wanted to talk about “Setsubun”? I’ll have you know that the size of last year’s Oni pants and vest won’t fit me. I’m growing.”

Subaru: “Well, compared to last year you have grown 5 centimeters, after all. It makes me feel good too seeing the height marker starting to get higher at a quick pace. However, I’ve also had my growth halted temporarily, and there was a lot of time until the next big result. Look at it in a long term point of view.”

Subaru laughs, and he reached out for Rigel’s head, who was at the opposite side of the kotatsu. He was probably trying to pat it, but he couldn’t reach it because of his laziness of not coming out of the kotatsu. It couldn’t be helped. Rigel brought out his head, and it got pat. It tickled.

Subaru: “Anyhow, don’t worry about the Oni pants. Rem will proceed to secretly work on that. The outfit that is remade every year for your growth…I thought to put visible decorations for the people that come to the ceremony when you get married, but what do you think?”

Rigel: “Go catch a cold.”

While getting his head pat, Rigel wished relatively seriously for a cold that would make his dad breathe painfully. Subaru continues with a “And then you see”, as he accepts that with a wry smile and says

Subaru: “Yes Oni pants are important too, but the “Bean Tossing Event” committee are the ones that pursue that issue, so we have to groan “Uh-huh” by ourselves. Apart from that”

Rigel: “Wait wait wait wait, you mentioned the name of a committee I’m unfamiliar with!”

Subaru: “Apart from that, what’s important is the upcoming new experiment for “Setsubun”. Bean tossing is easy with ehomaki, but we have to cultivate the unknown that to avoid getting tired of it. The times always walk fast. If you cling onto the past, you’ll get left behind.”

Rigel: “Catch it…! Go…catch a…cold…!”

The voice that sincerely made a wish didn’t even reach his father in front of him, and it got repelled.

Rigel hanged his head heartbroken in response to that reality. Subaru nods at his son’s situation, listens, and he leaned forward as if telling him to be surprised.

Subaru: “I wracked my brain, and I worked out what the Setsubun event left behind. With that being said, in addition to the bean tossing, let’s put that thing into practice too this year.”

Rigel: “…What kind of strange festival will it be this year?”

Subaru: “Don’t call it a strange festival. Strange festival…is what I want to call it, but I’m ready for that type of slander towards this event too……”

In response to Subaru’s way of speaking, him being gloomy, Rigel had the chills run through his back.

From an outsider’s point of view, it wouldn’t be strange for them to think of things like festivals to scatter beans and hit Onis, events in which people would stay silent, eating futomaki while facing the lucky direction, all as a strange festival, even if they seemed like a family gone mad. However, with the way Subaru put it, maybe they seemed like something more than that.

Rigel: “N-Noo! You’re just gonna end up making me suffer again anyway! Right? Isn’t that right?!”

Subaru: “Why have you become a child that doubts…just what changed you?”

Rigel: “90% of it was because of Dad, and 10% of it is because of Mom!”

Subaru: “…Hehe, for you to understand the influence of your parents at that age, you’re amazing, eh. To be frank, I’ve truly recognized that ever since you were born.

Rigel: “Why are you flattering me with a distant look, I’m angry, you know?!”

He rubs the bottom of his nose, and Rigel was seriously appalled at Subaru, who seemed to be satisfied in a way. However, Subaru waved his hands with a “Calm down calm down”, and he said

Subaru: “Stop, since the conversation won’t get anywhere. Allow me to announce what we’ll be doing in this year’s Setsubun.”

Rigel: “What about the next Oni pants…”

Subaru: “No need to worry, since they’re ones that won’t hurt your heart or body. —A new custom will be added to the Natsuki family, starting with this year’s Setsubun!”

He claps once, and meanwhile, Subaru hit the table with his fingers with fast rhythm. When he urged him with his eyes to imply that he was taking too long with his introduction, his father said “Tada!” to create an opportunity for himself, and he said—

Subaru: “—We’ll be doing Hiiragi Iwashi!”

Then, he said that.

3

Rem: “So, what type of event is this “Hiiragi Iwashi”, Subaru-kun?”

A few minutes after the awfully grand announcement, a woman came from the kitchen and returned to the living room—it was a person with long, blue hair, and beautiful, soft looks. She wore a kimono, had a lovely, black haired baby held in her breasts, and she was next to Subaru in the kotatsu.

Needless to say, it was Rigel's mother, and Subaru's wife, Natsuki Rem.

Rem had been cleaning up the lunch in the kitchen, and while caressing her daughter—while caressing Spica so that she wouldn't wake up, as she was full and was taking a nap, she tilted her head in a lovely way.

She was listening to the father and the child's conversation, but it seemed like it was also her first time hearing about the "Hiiragi Iwashi" that Subaru brought up. It wasn't like the Natsuki married couple to talk about basically anything.

Subaru: "You listened well, Rem. "Hiiragi Iwashi" is the third Setsubun plan to go with the bean tossing and ehomaki. I can't deny that it feels a little plain and minor compared to previous ones, but for that, it seems like there's some real, well, things like blessings, so it's recommended for religious people."

Rem: "I see, as expected of Subaru-kun. Woman and the elderly certainly do expect participating in the events like bean tossing and ehomaki to be difficult. It's not easy to clean up the beans and eating all of the futomaki…you have an eagle eye!"

Subaru: "Ah, yeah. Now that you say it, that is true. …Ahh, that's right. That's exactly the eye I was aiming for!"

Rem: "Yes! So, what is "Hiiragi Iwashi"? What type of suffering will you put Rigel through?"

Rigel: "With this, I feel like making Mom catch a cold now too…!"

In response to Rem's words that linked "Setsubun", "Rigel", and "Harm" with an equal sign, Rigel held his head with his hands and lamented himself. However, Subaru swung his raised finger back and forth, saying "Tut-Tut-tut" at Rem's words, and also said

Subaru: "Rem, don't jump to conclusions like Rigel. Zero harm will be done to Rigel this time. "Hiiragi Iwashi" is simple, quick work, after all. Don't worry."

Rem: "I-I see. …Yes, I understand."

Rigel: "Why do you seem a little sad? Hey, Mom, Mom?"

Rem: "Just kidding. Please don't take things so seriously, Rigel."

His mom's despondent look restored to her usual one, and Rigel made an indescribable profound look at her. Subaru responds to the interaction between the mom and child by clapping his hands as he said "Okay okay, attention please".

Subaru: "It's bad of the Natsuki family to get off track so easily. So, let's reflect and do this again. About the essential "Hiiragi Iwashi", it's something that's even simpler than things like bean tossing. It's a custom where you impale the head of a fried sardine onto a Hiiragi twig, placing it at the front door. Easy peasy, right?"

Rem: "Iwashi?"

Rigel: "Hiiragi?"

Rem and Rigel tilt their heads, respectively, at Subaru, who gave an explanation with pride.

The "Iwashi" and "Hiiragi" words Subaru said were both unfamiliar vocabulary to them. The original name was "Hiiragi Iwashi", so he thought it'd be simple.

Subaru puts aside convincing Rigel for now, and he folded his arms as he nodded saying "I get it".

Subaru: "If this was the old me, I would've said some foolish remark like "D-Damn it! People don't get Hiiragi and Iwashi here too!", but that's no good. I'm learning, too. I've anticipated it not getting through. So, let me simplify it. Hiiragi is a tree, and Iwashi is fish. In other words, it's a custom where you impale grilled fish onto a tree's twig!"

Rem: "Grilled fish…onto a tree's twig…why do that?"

Subaru: “To be honest, I really have no idea…this event is left at the edge of my sea of knowledge, but it’s about enough bean knowledge to make me want to praise myself…”

Rem: “I see. Bean knowledge just for Setsubun…Subaru-kun, well done!”

Subaru: “That wasn’t what I was aiming at just now!”

To the side of Subaru getting hurt by Rem’s assistance, her being innocent, Rigel puzzled as he said “Hmmm”.

An event where you impale grilled fish onto a tree twig—out of all the strange festivals that have happened, it certainly did surpass them in eccentricity, but it’s an event that didn’t require any particularly active activities. He nods, as there was no need for Rigel to be harmed.

Rigel: “But…”

Subaru: “And then Rigel felt like just a little something was missing…”

Rigel: “Don’t start a weird monologue! That’s not it! I thought your quietness was off, since you’re Dad, but those are two different things. Bring it on. I’ll impale a fish on a twig. Let’s get this over with.”

Subaru: “Ohh, positive, aren’t you. You’ve finally come to accept that “Setsubun” is a custom imperative to the Natsuki family. …I have nothing more to teach you.”

Rigel: “Yeah yeah, I’m thankful I’m thankful. So? What do we have to do?”

Subaru: “Well, hold on. I may look like this, but I am the boss of this “Banan Culture Promotion Committee”. We’ve went through a lot of work since last year, and the preparations have been made.”

Subaru smiles in a way that suggested he was going “Heh heh”. Rigel responds to that behavior by letting out a “Really?”, seeming to be impressed.

The “Banan Culture Promotion Committee” was a group of people that would spend useless efforts day and night to introduce the many new strange festivals that Subaru proposed for whatever reason as culture, spreading them throughout not only Kararagi, but throughout the rest of the world as well.

For some reason it was surprisingly popular, and the amount of promotion committee people was increasing beyond Rigel’s expectations, but him breaking because of that was another story.

Anyhow, should there be people cooperating with the “Banan Culture Promotion Commitee”, maybe he really wouldn’t need the few helpers from his family, Rigel and Rem. Whether it be for preparations or events, help would be essential to all of it.

Last year’s bean tossing event that used the town only happened because of working together with the people around, too.

Subaru: “And so, ever since last year, I’ve been absorbed in watching for an opportunity, and looking for fish and trees similar to Iwashi and Hiiragi. Although it’s difficult to look for things that are exactly the same, it would be sincere to the custom if the things are as similar to them as possible. Having the effect change, and having the celebration turn into a curse would be problematic, after all.”

Rem: “So, based off the flow of the conversation, you’ve found fish and trees, right?”

Subaru: “Exactly. They’re all fish nearby…also, it’s a place where they’re easy to catch.”

Then, Subaru put his hands around the bottom of his back, as he got out of the kotatsu, and he slowly brought out something that was put on his trousers. He spread it out on top of the kotatsu.

It was a map. The map that had the Kararagi City State drawn on it had moderate precision, though it was off-putting with its handwriting, and it had “Natsuki Subaru” signed at the bottom right.

After that, he thrust his finger at the middle of the map and said—

Subaru: “We’ll be going to the Grand Mogolade geyser. This is where the fish surge in schools. Plus, when they try to burst out, they’re the size of the Cragrel Moving Forest. Believe in the seniors, spread the roots here, and net a hall of fish. —That’ll be the mission of the Natsuki family.”

Rigel: “Don’t just involve us like it’s nothing!!”

Rem: “Ah! Rigel, you can’t! Spica is going to wake…ah, ahhh.”

Spica: “Waaaaaaaaa!!”

Rigel yells in response to Subaru’s declaration, him looking proud, and Rem was already too late to panic about that voice, as Spica’s crying resounded powerfully, having been woken up forcefully.

—That was the “Fish Head Tree Strategy” prologue.

—Let’s talk about the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

The Grand Mogolade Geyser isn’t at all related to “The inner sea of the planet. The platform of the watchtower. From the edge of paradise…” but it’s a place in the Kararagi City State country with an extremely favorable environment.

What stood out about the Kararagi City State’s climate was the deserts that were generally dotted around the country, and the abundance of arid regions that were scarce by nature, though you couldn’t go as far as to say those regions were deserts. —Basically, unlike the Kingdom of Lugunica abound with nature and the Vollachia Empire, it was a country with a harsh natural environment, although the type of harshness was different than what the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko covered in perpetual snow had.

Therefore, before Kararagi settled as a single country, each of the small countries competed with each other, scrambling for fertile land. A single hero brought them together, but that didn’t mean the natural environment would have any dramatic improvement.

Things were the same. The land was still harsh, and it was still an environment where not everything was rich in this rich land. People could only look for some way to manage living.

As a result of being in an unreliable natural environment, the way of life chosen for Kararagi City State was promoting business activity all over the country—this was how Kararagi City State became specialized in trade.

Alright, let's go back to talking about the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

The Grand Mogolade Geyser surrounding area in Kararagi City State has already been described as having a special environment, but to say what exactly would be special about it, it would be that this is the only area with fixed, periodic rain. —The intervals were also definitely fixed.

That was the only very big thing in the country Kararagi.

The Grand Mogolade Geyser did seem to be a huge lake. However, that entity was not something like a lake, but a large hole that was deep, so deep in the earth that it was empty until it penetrated the "bottom", and the water that filled that hole would lead to the "Great Waterfall".

And the arising water spouted out towards the sky at fixed intervals in the Great Geyser, tossing dozens of, sometimes several hundreds of kilometers of rain. Thanks to that blessing, a nature unexpected of Kararagi burgeoned around the Grand Mogolade Geyser, and it was treasured.

You could say that the towns like the fourth city "Fusumi" near the Grand Mogolade Geyser were the ones that benefited from that blessing the most.

And now, the "Banan Culture Promotion Committee" that Subaru ran received backup from the head of the Fusumi city, and they took the challenge of an "Iwashi Gathering Mission" at the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

On the other side of that cooperation, in recent years, there was a rumor that said there has been secret strife in getting Fusumi involved with the Banan activities that conspicuously raised the event related achievements in the whole city. However, this haggling was between the higher-ups, and neither Rigel, a child, nor Subaru, an adult, had heard about it.

It was long, but this was the beginning—it was the outline of the “Banan Culture Promotion Commitee”‘s fight below Rigel, who struggled at the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

—In other words, the story will resume from here.

5

Rigel: “Ahhhhhhh—!!”

He throws the net at the Grand Mogolade Geyser, grabs onto it, having succeeded at catching a large amount of shadows of fish, and Rigel roared with everything he had, having unleashed his Oni strength.

It was long, way too long of a fight. After Rigel grabbed the net, he felt like a lot of time passed since he came here, but he didn’t have any time to think about useless things, as he twisted desperately.

He went fishing with Subaru before.

It wasn’t that Subaru and Rigel were particularly interested in fishing, but Rigel brought Subaru along, as he was whiny about wanting to do parent and child sort of things, so he guided him reluctantly to the rumored pond at school.

Rigel ended up having a showdown with the chief that was there for some reason, and he spent no less than 2 hours with it as it tried to snatch the bait. He didn’t underestimate fish. Their survival instincts lit up even more than Rigel and Subaru, whose bodies were, incidentally, several times larger than theirs.

It was the same as the silver fish trapped inside this net—no, they of course couldn’t be compared individually to that chief, but the amount was too different.

The shadows of fish, a hundred, twice that, or even more sparkling lives had tremendous power, absolutely not a step less than that of the oni grating his molars.

Subaru: “Hang in there! Hang in there, everyone—!!”

Adults: “Heave-ho! Heave-ho! Heave-ho!”

And behind Rigel, him being desperately determined, there was Subaru, pulling onto the edge of the net like he was, and the promotion committee that came along. Not knowing if their yells were serious or not was the one thing that hurt Rigel’s concentration.

—Your postures are already bad. Drop your hips more. Ahh, but Liggins-san has back pain, so he can’t strain it. Wait, why even come? Get some rest at home.

Liggins: “You guys, just faking it won’t cut it.”

Adults: “Li-Liggins-san…!”

Liggins: “Hehe, we’ve still got more to show…Gwaaaa! My baaack!!”

Adults: “Ligins-saaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaan!!”

He gives a refined smile, and the moment Liggins changed his posture, he collapsed and withdrew from the front.

This basically happened because of the defeat of getting old.

Most of the promotion committee members were old people that wanted to strengthen the bonds in the area, connecting with youth through events.

Young members were chosen as carefully as possible, and the average age was around 60.

And well, at this battlefield where they were fighting violently for each of their lives, the people were half dead.

Subaru: “No! You can’t push yourself more than this! Elder! Take the casualties and fall back! People will die at this rate!”

Subaru takes into account the grimness of the situation, and he fires off his voice as if he made a tough decision.

If the wounded weren’t going to die, then it would be better and necessary to save them, rather than having them die. Casualties were kept away, but even then, two people were needed. In other words, if one person collapsed, a downward spiral of two helpers falling out would develop, and the front would finally collapse completely.

Now, there was only Subaru and Rigel, safely grabbing on the net, as well as three old people.

Subaru: “Di-Didn’t think that it’d come down to a battle like this… my bad, Rigel. I wasn’t thorough at all with my judgement. I even got Elder involved…”

Chamov: “There’s nothing to worry about. We’ve known each other for a long time, and I knew that a time like this would pop up.”

The person that shook his head at Subaru’ murmuring, him being bitter, was a senior that had his white fur wet with water, and yet still maintained his charm—it was the puppy person Chamov-san.

The senior Chamov, who traveled the world and boasted about having conquered the 7 deserts, was the one who provided the information about the wanted schools of fish that passed through the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

He had that responsibility for the information, and he was also participating in the fishing, but—

Chamov: “But, what’s regretful is that…I won’t…be able to be with you guys until…the…end…”

Subaru: “El-Elder? Elder—!”

Subaru looks back, and he was greatly surprised at Chamov, who he called out to. Rigel also looks back, getting lured by the sound, and he had no words for Chamov, who was no longer in sight.

The puppy person Chamov was only 50 centimeters tall, which meant he was the same size as the waves that were caused by the raging fish in the midst of the Grand Mogolade Geyser battle—just how many times has he stayed with them until the end, even after being washed away?

His diligent resistance and his toughness of not making himself noticeable to the others until this moment symbolized his hard-boiled way of living that didn't match his appearance.

Chamov: "I-I can't go on…"

Elder—he was a friend, and a person that visited their home many times

Rigel sees that Chamov had withdrawn from the front, and he quickly starts to lose strength. The horn on his forehead loses its light, and the boy's body turns into one of a mere 11 year old boy.

That was also of course him raising a white flag to the sparkling of the fishes' lives.

Subaru: "—Rigel, it's fine. Withdraw."

Rigel: "…Dad?"

When he sought to let go of the net, Subaru said that to Rigel, being right behind him. That voice's tone catches his attention, and his hands that tried to let go for a second were hesitant.

When Rigel looked back, he saw Subaru having the net tied to his wrist, even while being soaked, and he nodded at him, not letting go no matter what.

Subaru: "I have responsibility. So, I'll stay here until the end. Go back. Go back, and take those people collapsing over there with you."

Rigel: "Bu-But……you can't do it! Give it up! Let's replace the net later!"

Subaru: “It’s not like I’m holding out because I care about the wickerwork. I told you, didn’t I? I have a responsibility. It might be a little embarrassing to the “Banan Culture Promotion Committee” and you, but this is also a part of my job. —As if a parent would screw up a job in front of his kid.”

Rigel: “…”

Rigel could not respond to that assertion.

His enthusiasm was excellent. So excellent that he lost the will to snap at him.

However, he had no chance. Could Subaru do something about the failure that happened even with all those people pulling, not even having Rigel, who for some reason was the main force?

It was impossible. This battle was already—

Subaru: “Also, you’re not taking someone seriously.”

Rigel: “Dad…you mean daddy?”

Subaru: “Even if you aren’t taking me seriously, I’m a hopeless adult, so that’d be fine. But, the one you aren’t taking seriously isn’t me. …It’s Rem.”

Rigel: “Mom?”

Rigel was stumped with why Rem’s name came in this situation.

Rem hasn’t participated in fishing with the Grand Mogolade Geyser as a stage, something you’d also understand if you followed the battle up to here. Of course, she came with him to Fusumi, which was called a family trip, but it was not fishing that had the possibility of danger; it was like Rem and Spica were sightseeing, participating from the “Cragrel Living Forest” by tearing off twigs.

Rem: “Spica and I will be taking our time, so Subaru-kun and Rigel, please be careful not to skin your knees.”

They each swore to do their best, which was a bit of a calm interaction, but considering that conversation, the mom and the younger sister not being here was a self-evident truth.

Therefore, Rigel could not see Subaru's words as anything but preposterous nonsense, but—

Rem: "—Subaru-kun, you understand me as well as always. I'm blushing."

Rigel: "—!"

That voice made Rigel jump, who was trying to make Subaru give up in one way or another. It was a voice that shouldn't have been heard, a being that shouldn't have been here, and yet they calmly appeared.

It was a women with long blue hair put together simply, and she stood alongside Subaru, pulling onto the thread connected to the net so that the sleeves of her kimono didn't get in the way—it was Rem.

Rigel was dumbfounded by that entry, but Subaru immediately gave a broad grin and said

Subaru: "Sorry, Rem. We're in a pinch."

Rem: "Yes. It's always like this whenever I take my eyes off of Subaru-kun. Just another reason why I can't take my eyes off of Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "Your love is heavy! But, that helps."

The married couple grab onto the net together, and Rem puts strength into her shoulders, her lips closed tightly. Just from that, the net's force that lost to the fish pulled the fish towards them splendidly.

However, even then, they were still outnumbered. Even with Rigel, that inferiority in numbers wouldn't be overturned. They were already at an unmanageable difference in fighting power from the beginning. Even if a miracle happened when Mom joined here, this battle would—

Rem: “Rigel, hold onto this rope, and stand still please.”

Rigel: “Eh?”

Rem: “Meanwhile, Subaru-kun and I…Dad and Mom will hold up the net with the two of us, and hope that Rigel won’t miss an opportunity. —It’s a chance for Onii-chan to show his cool side to Spica.”

Without being able to hide his confusion, Rigel did just what Rem said. He did not pull onto the net; he held onto the rope connected to the net, and he looked around the area restlessly.

What in the world did chance and opportunity indicate?

Chamov: “This is a man’s opportunity. We won’t be defeated.”

Rigel: “El-Elder…!”

Ligins: “We’re here too…!”

Rigel: “Ligins-san! And the other bunch!”

Once again, the assembled comrades grab onto the net simultaneously to wipe away that uneasiness of Rigel, as he was worrying about his parents’ limits, and they put in their strength. Even if they were described as half dead people, if they were half alive, then there was meaning in bundling their power. Now was that time to do it.

Adults: “Heave-ho! Heave-ho!”

Adults: “Heave-ho! Heave-ho!}

Rigel frantically opens his eyes while having his concentration disturbed by their yelling. He gets lost in the loud adults’ voices, and he feels something—yes, he feels something like tremor.

Perhaps it was an omen of the Grand Mogolade eruption, when the water would spew out. —No, that wasn’t it. The tremor was not inside of the grand geyser, it came from outside and it was coming towards them.

That was—

Rigel: “Th-The Cragrel Moving Forest…!”

It was the Cragel Moving Forest that moved, seeking water. —It was a quake. Clouds of dust rose into the air, and as for what was approaching, it was a march of green that was passing right next to the grand geyser.

Rigel belatedly determined what he’d aim for upon seeing the front —that large tree advancing at the very front.

Rem: “Rigel, now!”

In response to his mother’s yell, Rigel used the tip of the rope as a loop and threw it without question.

That loop entangles the tree’s thick branch, and the net pulls it.

—The sparkling of the fishes’ lives suffered defeat in front of Mother Nature.

6

—Let’s talk about the Cragrel Moving Forest.

The inner sea of the planet, etc…

The Cragrel Moving Forest is special nature that produced the Kararagi City State’s harsh environment, as well as the river source that is Grand Mogolade Geyser—it’s the name of the many trees whose roots don’t stick to the ground.

It’s already been explained how the water that spews out from the Grand Mogolade Geyser acts as a source of river around this area, but the water that spews out at fixed intervals doesn’t always rain on the land.

The wind has a particularly big effect, and the lands’ respective precipitation becomes sparse because of the season’s wind direction. Apart from that, the living things that were managing were people and animals, but the plants that relied on water could not do that.

Naturally, the Grand Mogolade Geyser's water was a lifeline to them, as they were things that would have no choice but to wither if water wasn't thorough.

Having said that, plants weren't things that could make direct appeals, as they didn't have mouths. Therefore, as a result of the influence from not knowing what to do to survive, the trees went through evolution.

It was them saying "If the land lacks water, then why not just walk to a place with water?".

And thus, the moving forest that was born—The lively trees that were called "Cragrel Moving Forest", picking up the name from the humans that first discovered it, were in the middle of the Magolya Plateau that had the Grand Mogolade Geyser water rain on it, and they continued to move all year round without rest.

The moving forest's trees' wood were known to be of very fine quality, perhaps because of how they were full of vitality, but they wouldn't stay in one place, so it was difficult for them to gather. To make matters worse, if you stood in their route, you'd get run over recklessly, so they were famous as forestry that put lives at risk.

That special characteristic of the moving forest worked as a plus, just for this one time.

That was when they did something with the force of nature, given that they couldn't win with human power.

Rem: "The moving forest was going for the grand geyser, so it seemed that I could take my time to join Subaru-kun and the others. That's what I said at the start."

Subaru: "Then, if Rem sees withdrawn people collapsed at the base camp, she'll do something about it, having noticed it…actually, that's the truth of my strategy, eh."

Rigel: "Strategy? How is that a strategy? It's a German hold of relying on Mom!"

Subaru: "Don't put it that way. Well, this is love winning in the end.”

Rem: “Subaru-kun…”

Rigel: “That was a good line?! Mom spoils you too much!”

They raised a big catch flag, and the group went back home.

The soaked family talked about this time’s cause of victory on the way back, but the one who wasn’t quite satisfied with that explanation was Rigel, who wasn’t overcoming it.

Rem’s participation and pulling the Cragrel Moving Forest with a net brought them success, and the large amount of fish that were in the great geyser was pulled out splendidly(Subaru called them pseudo-Iwashi).

Actually, after that, the dashing moving forest took away the fish with the net, and there was an act of them chasing the moving forest to get back the net back, but that was left out.

Anyhow, they obtained the fish safely, and they replaced Hiiragi successfully by cutting down one of the moving forests, so enough of that was secured.

With this, the preparations for “Hiiragi Iwashi” that Subaru talked about were complete.

Rigel: “That was a lot tougher than stuff like bean tossing and Ehomaki. We went far too, plus I’m tired.”

Subaru: “Yeah, people like Elder were about to die, after all. You shouldn’t do things you aren’t used to.”

Rigel: “You said it, I’ve had enough of that. I definitely won’t do things like that again.”

Rigel sighs, and Subaru smiles wryly at him, agreeing with his feelings.

Although, the two of them saw Chamov chewing on a sweet leaf carefully.

Even though it was a lot of work, fortunately there were no casualties, and there was no damage. They were all somehow intoxicated by the atmosphere, but their injured backs were also recovering through Rem's healing magic.

Like that, everyone triumphantly returned to Fusumi, and they should've been talking about distributing things like the fish and the wood now, but—

Subaru: "That's out of my control. Let's share the hardships of this trip as a family."

Rem: "Yes, the best part of the trip."

Rigel: "The best part of the trip is sharing hardship……?"

While experiencing a slight feeling of a common sense crisis, Rigel gets mad as he cuddled his beloved sister, his reward for returning from the jaws of death.

Spica was one year old, and recently, she's been frequently standing up and trying to walk on her own. She was an angel that also called Rigel "Nii-ni" on very rare occasions.

Rigel: "Her first calling me Nii-ni will be my lifetime treasure."

Subaru: "You are an extreme siscon…"

Rigel: "Uh-oh, kinda seems like you're saying Daddyy after Nii-ni and Mommyy, Spica. The grumbling of a loser does make me feel good. Hahaha."

Subaru: "Grrrr…"

Rem: "Calm down, Subaru-kun. You have to let Rigel feel superiority sometimes too. Also, Subaru-kun is my number one."

Rigel: "Spoiling him again…"

Rem kindly comforts Subaru, who was depressed. Rigel pouts in a displeased way at that usual interaction. Then, seeing that, Rem let out a little laugh.

Subaru: “Oh, what happened, Rem?”

Rem: “No, it’s just…we’re always together wherever we go…that made me a little happy, and I thought it was funny.”

Subaru: “…I see I see. If you thought of it that way, then it was right to have you on the family trip. Well, forgive me for having it kinda feel like bringing my family come on a company trip.”

Subaru seeing Rem put her hand on her mouth smiling happily makes him also smile again. Seeing that smile makes Rigel feel like he somehow saw through Dad’s expectations.

They went far to prepare for the new celebration of “Setsubun”.

Of course, they really were necessary procedures needed to celebrate “Hiiragi Iwashi”. That’s why fish, wood, and twigs should have all worked as alternatives.

So, as for why they still had plans of going far away like this—

Subaru: “The culture promotion committee was happy to tackle promoting culture. Being able to study the ways of Banan made Fusumi’s great men happy. And, we’re happy that we were able to make a family trip. It was a good attempt at finding a solution throughout struggle. No, it wasn’t a complete struggle, but 3/8ths of a struggle.”

Subaru laughs nonchalantly. The main thing was the very last part of his speech; if he was familiar with spending everyday together with family, he could see the light.

It probably was the truth that he couldn’t ignore the two goals in front of him. Not appropriately declining favors was very inconvenient, and it was the nature of a man who saw much of life. That’s what Rigel nonchalantly thought.

“…”

Rem was looking at Subaru’s smile, her smiling with a kind look in her eyes.

Mom also definitely was able to see through Dad's heart. That's why Mom did not even oppose Dad's absurd speech from the start, but instead happily went along with it.

Rigel: "Elder, Elder, can you hear me out for a bit?"

Rigel separates himself a little from the flirting called parents' pleasant chat, and he calls out to Chamov, who was drying his body's fur in the sun. Chamov turns around saying "Certainly?", and he looks at Rigel with his round eyes as he said

Chamov: "What is it, certainly? Rigel and I are good friends, certainly. Ask me anything, certainly."

Rigel: "Anything special happening in Fusumi this season?"

Chamov: "Hmmm…"

He asks that question, and Chamov closes one of his eyes, seemingly going into deep thought, just for a little bit. After that, Chamov glances at Subaru and the others, and he immediately nods.

Chamov: "Subaru has asked me that question too, certainly. Like father like son, certainly…"

Rigel: "No, I don't need to hear about that."

Chamov: "Don't be a party pooper, certainly. This season at Fusumi, famous flowers will… "White Snow Sakuras" will bloom."

They were plants that were extremely difficult to take care of that could grow precisely because of how it was Fusumi, land blessed with plenty of precipitation from the Grand Mogolade Geyser.

It was a scene of all the huge trees' leaves becoming petals that were white like snow—Rigel had never seen snow, but he imagined that it was definitely a stunning scene.

It was also a family trip Subaru planned, as he wanted to show it for "somebody's birthday" that was coming up very soon, using "Setsubun" as an excuse to go.

Chamov: “Calling him out would be unromantic, certainly. It will be kept secret, certainly.”

Rigel: “I won’t say it…but Mom probably knows.”

Chamov: “Like I said, it’d be unromantic, certainly. You too, if you’re going to marry, you’ll take that child too, certainly.”

Rigel: “I’m against raising Spica exactly like Mom…”

Chamov: “The madness of you wanting to marry your sister like it’s no big deal makes me tremble, certainly.”

He makes Chamov’s small body tremble, and Chamov looked at Rigel with eyes that seemed to be frightened. Just when he shrugged his shoulders, indicating that he was annoyed with that look, Spica pulled onto his cheeks. Cute.

Subaru: “Hey, Rigel, Spica. Come here. I have something to talk about.”

Then, just when the conversation ended, Subaru called out to Rigel and the others. Chamov jerked his chin in response to that voice.

Chamov: “It’s okay, I’ll go, certainly. I won’t be unromantic by butting into a happy family get together, certainly.”

Subaru: “Th-Thanks, Elder. Okaay, then we’ll see you later.”

He waves goodbye, and when Chamov let out a charming smile, while swinging his butt’s tail left and right, he walked off in a way that was filled with only love and respect, nothing more and nothing less.

Rigel sees that with his own eyes, and then he went back to his parents. When he did, he saw the same old Rem, her cheeks slightly red, and the same old Subaru, him being his reckless and self-confident self.

Subaru: “Ahem. You see, Rigel. I want to show something to Rem and you guys.”

He imagined what it was from the pretentious expression, and the wording that came out after that.

"…"

There was a pause after Subaru's announcement, and Rigel glanced at Rem.

Subaru faced the children, his eyes sparkling, and he did not notice his wife next to him. When Rem noticed Rigel's look, her having a faint smile, she put a finger on her lips, saying "Shh" as a signal.

Starting to talk would be unromantic. Pointing it out would be unromantic. That was greatly understood.

Rigel reluctantly shrugged his shoulders. Spica also shrugged her shoulders, copying him.

Subaru: "This time's family trip isn't for mere fishing and work. The truth is—"

The clownish mastermind gets surrounded by the children and his wife, thinking that his secret hadn't been found out, and he magnificently announced the final plan of the family trip.

7

The details of the "White Snow Sakura" appreciation meeting will not be talked about.

Let's just say that they were able to enjoy the truly splendid scene of the flowers that colored the many mountains of Fusumi.

Well then, the family trip was used as groundwork, and they still had to accomplish the new nominated custom of Setsubun, "Hiiragi Iwashi", but—

Subaru: "Hmm, I didn't see through this unexpected thing happening, even with my amazing eyes."

Rigel: "That's because you're blind as hell! Come on, use your hands, Dad"

They pant, and the big figure and small figure that ran about in the streets of Banan—putting it frankly, they were the men of the Natsuki Family, Subaru and Rigel.

They had green and red wigs that were like a perms, and vests with black and yellow stripes. They had clubs made of soft material in their hands, the thorns filled with cotton. It was a style of the good old days, and a style of the new era of the Oni.

As for what those two were frantically doing in what were clearly Oni outfits—

Subaru: "Trying to do Hiiragi Iwashi was fine…but I didn't think it'd cause an outbreak of cats and mice downtown!"

Rigel: "If you think about it, it was inevitable! Of course the strays would the eat all this bait if we hung them up openly!"

Rigel takes decorated fish again from an established point with their branches while raising an angry voice, and it gets thrown into the bag to collect them. They were now at 20. There was still a long way to go.

That was because branches and fish were distributed throughout town, and the whole town was practicing this weird festival.

Subaru: "Oi, Rigel, don't treat them so carelessly! This is like a sacred ritual, so the Hiiragi Iwashi would be thankful. You should dispose of them kinda like this, filling them at a proper place. You have to do it like that."

Rigel: "What a pain! Plus, don't implement disposal laws arbitrarily! And anyways…Ow!"

Rigel continued to feel impact on his little back, as he raised his voice pointing out the lack of progress. When he turned around to see what it was, what fell at his feet were small beans—they were beans.

And the ones who threw them were kids chasing him with smiles on their faces—.

Kids: “It—it’s hunter! Hunter found them!”

Rigel: “Crap! We’re gonna get covered in beans! Hey, you over there! How can we escape to the other side from here…shit! Damn, he’s nibbling on Ehomaki!”

When Rigel was cornered at the street, trying to look for a way out, he was at his wits’ end. The old person that he asked on a porch was looking at the lucky direction of the futomaki that he was nibbling on.

A person in that situation would not speak. He would continue gazing at the lucky direction until he was done eating.

Subaru: “I feel like damage like this breaks out even at Fusumi, but who will be responsible? Me? What you think, Rigel?”

Rigel: “At the very least, ow! Right now, oww! I’ve lost a way to escape, ow! So it’s your fault that I’m getting hit with beans ow ow ow! Why only me?!”

He had just seen him in a new light for a little, and yet Subaru still did an unsatisfactory job.

The parent and child ran their Oni pants through the Banan town while crying because of the rapid succession of beans.

Surely his mom and sister were waiting at home, eating Futomaki while facing the lucky direction.

Would they collect all the “Hiiragi Iwashi” and return home safely—?

Subaru: “Hehe, Rigel. You’re pretty fast now. I’m happy.”

Rigel: “Shut uuuupp!! Go catch a coooldd!!”

That parent and child quarrel resounded into the sky.

This was also, once again, a shot of the daily scenery at one part of Kararagi City State.

Fortune Setsubun Hollow

1

Let’s get right into it without any introduction. —Setsubun season is here this year again.

Setsubun is the most feared day in the year for the “Setsubun King” Natsuki Rigel.

In Banan, Kararagi city state’s 2nd town, it was culture that was now well established, and you’d call it a strange festival.

—Throw beans should you come across an Oni, eat rolls should you face the good luck direction. This is where the idea of hiiragi iwashi comes from.

Dunno who said that, but that’s what Setsubun is like—the new culture in Kararagi.

Rigel: “I wonder what they’ll make me do this year…”

On the way back from the school “Temple Elementary”, Rigel, while clasping his hands behind his head, sighs about the upcoming misfortunate event in which he’d probably be attacked.

Wear outfits like Oni underpants and run through the whole town to get away from the hunters that’ll be hot on your tail to try and hit you with beans. —Rigel does have that sort of role as the king, but that’s if we assume the standard turn of events of just the original bean throwing.

Every year, Setsubun culture goes downhill thanks to Natsuki Subaru’s—Rigel’s father’s—ideas, and now the damage doesn’t stop with just the bean throwing.

An event called ehoumaki where you eat futomaki in silence while looking in the good luck direction.

An event called hiiragi iwashi where you stab a fish head onto a tree branch and hang it at the entranceway to your house.

As a representative of the “Kararagi Culture Promotion Society”, Subaru had a very influential voice, and over the years the amount of those devilishly intricate revamps has increased.

On top of that, since they had an agreement to keep these sort of displays as vague information, occasionally the descriptions people give of the events are from off from what they actually are as a result of word being passed down like a telephone game.

Thus, Setsubun went through changes, and for Rigel it’s an event where stuff like beans, futomaki, and fish heads are thrown at him while he runs around town dressed as an Oni.

Rigel: “Nobody gets what Setsubun is all about! Plus, they all treat food so recklessly! If it were just beans it wouldn’t be that bad, but other things can’t be eaten once they fall to the ground…!”

While looking back at memories of Setsubun, Rigel showed his anger as he grinded his teeth.

This has been said before before, but Rigel doesn’t like the event Setsubun.

Every single time he just takes all the hits. Still, he had no intention of being a tank that likes it.

No matter how cruel the events may have been, the one thing we can say is that Rigel’s father started this. It really irritated Rigel how the original idea was changing into something different.

Letting them do whatever they want with no boundaries as a way to have fun in an event was the worst idea ever. And this event’s supposed to the event that considers tradition and hearts of the people…

—Though he did hate it from the bottom of his heart, Natsuki Rigel insisted on earnestly making Setsubun a success since he was born with the ability to be a hard worker.

Going off the subject, when it gets to the season near Setsubun when people cut back, in Banan town every family starts to stock up on beans. As a result, there are kids who misunderstand the point of Setsubun, and oftentimes they bring out beans from their home and throw them at Rigel a day prior.

There was also one act on the way back from Temple Elementary where kids saw Rigel and determinedly threw his beans at him which they'd found.

However—

Rigel: "—Woop, oh, oop"

The beans thrown, the size of them, the amount…Rigel knew the trajectory inside out, and dodged all the beans with the minimum amount of movement needed to do so.

If it were only one or two beans being thrown at him, perhaps it wouldn't be anything to freak out about.

However, this time each kid was throwing a handful of beans at Rigel—even though they were kids, 21-30 beans a throw was rough.

In short, Rigel dodged a storm of over 100 beans without even looking at them.

???: "No way…" "???: "Without even taking a glance…" "???: "D-Does he have eyes on his back…?"

In response to them being stunned, Rigel looked back as he shrugged his shoulders.

Rigel: "Too naive, brats, try again. Just how many times do you think I've cheated death every year?"

Said Rigel as he faced the kids with a twisted smile on his face.

That instant, the kids trembled, shrieked as if to curse at themselves for just casually challenging the "Setsubun King", then ran away in all directions.

???: “Eek! We’re gonna get killed!”???: “My god, those eyes!” ???: “The “Setsubun King” is a heartless demon!”

Rigel: “Hop off with the eyes comment! Also, listen to what your parents said about the rules of Setsubun—participate using the right amount! Now I’ma throw them right back at you!”

Rigel threatened the kids running away on the verge of tears and sighed as he looked at the beans at his feet.

Having more of these misunderstood bunches pop up when Setsubun comes near would be troubling. When one does it, everyone else will too, no matter where he goes. Things can’t keep going on like this. He’ll always sense danger whenever he goes out to do a little shopping, or even when he’s taking a walk, and that also goes for when he comes back from Temple Elementary, of course.

Going off the subject again, apparently this is the only time when there are “bean gatherer” jobs for a short period, since oftentimes beans will be scattered all over town when Setsubun approaches.

That’s what he’d heard from Clane, a mediator whom he knew. He vaguely remembers being told that they make a fair amount of money and are appreciated.

That being said, this also leads to Rigel’s senses being real sharp during this time.

Otherwise, he wouldn’t be able to go out with cute little Spica in peace. This was probably one thing he developed as a result of having his life in danger.

As long as he’s with Spica, this whole “bean” thing won’t get him, even if they come at him at the speed of light.

Rigel: “Nothing with ‘bean’ in its name can even touch me now, huh.”

???: “—Saying weird things while looking far in the distance I see. You’re just like Su-san.”

Rigel: “Oh”

Rigel, who picked up a bean and was listlessly murmuring, raised an eyebrow upon hearing that voice.

He’d heard this voice before. A Kararagian speaker that had a low tone and sounded somewhat witty—the moment he realized who the owner of this voice was, Rigel broke into a smile as he turned around.

Rigel: “Uncle Halibel!”

Halibel: “Aye, glad to see you’re full of energy, Rigel.”

Patting Rigel’s head with his big palm as he said that and ran up to him was a tall man who wore a kimono and had a dog face—no, it was a demi-human with a wolf face.

This man who was a wolf man—a race that was considered to be extremely rare—put a golden kiseru to his big mouth that had a full set of sharp fangs, and laughed as he looked at Rigel with his narrow slit eyes.

Halibel was a friend of his dad and mom, and to Rigel he was like a relative to him, too.

Halibel: “Kids around your age grow up so fast when you take your eye off of them for a second. So fast that I want you to succeed me if Rem-chan lets you.”

Rigel: “I told you this before, didn’t I? I need to find a stable job and support Mom and Spica. Can’t have myself walking around aimlessly like you, Uncle.”

Halibel: “Huh, you sure are harsh. For you to sway me that easily… The way you talk big is too much for me.”

Halibel laughed wildly with his big mouth open, and Rigel also was acting spoiled with a smile that was appropriate for his age.

Rigel was someone who was often pushed around by all the shackles in this world, too. Sometimes you can’t look and act like a child when you're exploring the hardships of life.

So, that's why you gotta have times when you're just being spoiled, like how he was right now.

Rigel: "Guess that's the least bit of peace you can get as a child whose parents have all their hopes on them…"

Halibel: "You're getting super deep. Doesn't sound cool for a child to say that."

Rigel: "I don't care about that! Anyway, where have you been, Uncle? You promised to train me, but you were gone for so long that I thought you'd fallen dead on the street or something."

Halibel: "Haha, got me there. If I ever died or something, that'd be a serious concern for this country. It'd also seal my endangered kind's fate, I've got big responsibilities."

Rigel: "Yeah. And you're my master."

Halibel: "Yep. That's an even bigger responsibility."

When he was told something clever, Rigel also smiled at Halibel, who laughed in delight.

Rigel was fond of Halibel, as he was a sociable person and he'd be intimate with him like this.

Although he had a reputation of being an irresponsible person because of his behavior and the fact that he called himself an "Eternal Playboy", it seemed that he was good at his job, and whenever he walked through town with him, he could tell that a lot of people loved him—so much that he couldn't help but feel happy for him.

Rigel didn't really know what his job was, though.

Rigel: "Even after you told me that shinobis fight dangerous people day and night to protect the country. You also said that you're a wolf, an endangered race, right? You must be exaggerating!"

Halibel: “Well, in your case, you had no choice but to throw away your childish innocence to get through the days. It’s a bit unfortunate, but that’s the uncertainty of life for ya.”

Halibel puffed out smoke from his kiseru into the sky and gave a wry smile.

Halibel: “Oh right, have you been practicing the Substitution I taught you? It’s fine if you got tired of it.”

Rigel: “Of course I have. Why would I get tired of it? Can I show it to you? Though, the hiiragi iwashi that was thrown at me on my way back is the only thing I can use Substitution on.”

Halibel: “I see those fish heads every now and then. Su-san must have something to do with it.”

The iwashi head that had been thrown at him was very nice, so he thought to bring it home and show it to his sister for a memory.

When he took it out from his shoulder bag, Halibel nodded over and over as if to approve of it.

This wolf man has been friends with Subaru for a very long time, and just because of that, he was quick at figuring out what was going on.

Halibel: “He works for the Banan Culture Promotion Committee, right? I hear about him quite a lot in other towns. He’s gotten pretty famous. I’m proud of him.”

Rigel: “Hehe, dad may be how he is, but I mean, it is my parent’s job. I guess him being praised is kinda nice. Oh, but please don’t get carried away and tell my dad!”

Halibel: “Kids sure are complicated.”

Halibel, who put his hand in the front of his Kimono and was scratching his stomach, had a bit of a wry smile on his face.

Saved by his understanding attitude, Rigel started walking as he went “Oh yeah” and said, Rigel: “Since you came over here, that means you’ll be staying in town for a little while, right?”

Halibel: “Yep, for sure. I’m gonna go say hi to people I know for a bit, and then I’ll show up at your house at night again. Tell Su-san and Rem-chan I said hi.”

Rigel: “Uncle.”

Halibel: “Hm?”

Rigel: “What about Spica? Nothing for her?”

Rigel frankly asked, smiling with his head tilted.

Upon hearing that, for some reason Halibel’s face stiffened up as though he’d been overwhelmed and said,

Halibel: “O-Oh, right. Tell Spica-chan to be a cute girl and wait for me.”

Rigel: “Ahh, gotcha, I’ll let her know! Oh, but I dunno…Spica is already as cute as an angel as it is. If she consciously tries to be cute and wait, she might just reach an unfathomable level of loveliness.”

Halibel: “That part of you really shows how you are Rem-chan’s kid…”

Rigel blushed and worried as he imagined his cute little sister waiting at home. Halibel, faced with this scene, scratched his cheek with a dumbfounded look on his face.

Rigel: “Hah! I can’t be doing this! I have to come home and see Spica ASAP! Uncle! See you tonight! Don’t forget to bring Spica a present!”

Halibel: “Oh, okay, gotcha. I’ll pick something out and bring it home.”

Rigel waved goodbye with his small hand, turned around as if to say “My work is done here”, then started to zoom through town.

As Halibel watched him fade away while making clouds of dust, he smoked his kiseru and,

Halibel: “You were a sister lover before your sister was born, but after she was born, it’s gotten even worse, huh, Rigel.”

He muttered while giving a wry smile.

2

Ignoring Halibel’s murmuring—though, even if he did hear him, Rigel would be doing the same thing—he fiercely ran through town, and was rushing home.

Rigel: “Spica, Spica, cute li’l Spica.”

While excitedly humming to himself, Rigel ran faster than the wind.

Just by picturing my cute little sister in my mind, endless amounts of energy flows from my body. How about I call this the everlasting Spica engine?

The world oughta acknowledge Spica’s endless potential.

If everyone in the world were to see Spica, all kinds of things would come to an end through stuff like fighting.

While being possessed by such grand fantasies, Rigel repelled the beans that were thrown at him, waved at his neighbor who was nibbling on a futomaki to practice for ehoumaki, and when he put a fish head he’d been carrying on a hiiragi that had had only its fish head stolen by a cat, he’d made it back home.

Feeling that he couldn’t waste another second, Rigel opened the front door, and rushed in at once.

Rigel: “All riiiright, I’m hooome! Spica, Nii Nii’s home! I’m going to wash my hands and gargle right now, so be a cute girl and wait for me please!”

Rigel, with a big smile on his face, announces that he’s home while bearing with his urge to hug Spica right this instant.

Washing his hands and gargling was an obligation that he'd been taught since he was a baby.

He'd been told that he had to do it so that he didn't get sick or something. And Rigel has actually never gotten sick before, though he wasn't sure if it was because of that.

He had a feeling this was simply his healthy mom's blood being just that tough, but in any case, he had to get to washing his hands and gargling. If he didn't do that, he won't even be able to touch Spica and—

???: "You're real different indoors compared to when you're outside."

The one who greeted Rigel as he rushed into the bathroom, however, was neither his mom nor his sister. It was the voice of a woman that wasn't in his family.

Rigel gulped, and then stopped himself from going to the bathroom. After that, he headed towards the living room while being more cautious, slowly put his hand on the double door shoji, and then opened it.

Inside there was—

Spica: "Oh, Nii Nii."

???: "Welcome back. You sure are late."

Rigel gazed in wonderment at the scene in the living room beyond the shoji.

A kotatsu was placed in the middle of the tatami-matted room, and it was an essential for the Natsuki family during cold seasons.

There was a woman with her feet in the kotatsu, and she was cradling a smiling angel in her arms.

The woman shook her milky white hair whose ends were uneven and was furtively giving Rigel a sidelong glance with her almond eyes. Her light pink lips slackened, and she made a very provocative smile.

???: “Can you not be charmed just because I’m cute?”

Rigel: “—I mean, it doesn’t matter if there’s a beautiful person in front of me, I have my sister.”

???: “Look, you liking your sister is all fine and dandy, but people will think you’re an idiot if you’re always like this. Be careful.”

That moment, he came back to his senses upon hearing those words. What came back to him just then were the indescribable, mixed feelings he had about seeing that woman in her white kimono.

It was a frightening but well groomed woman.

In her case, well groomed may not be accurate, but it’s appropriate if beautiful is what’s meant by the phrase. She was not a result of a doll maker pursuing beauty; she was more like a natural beauty that was miraculously created by things that had been put together by animals that followed their instincts.

Beauty with a hint of crudeness…frankly speaking, that was all she was, but even Rigel, who still didn’t have much interest in women, was moved by just how much of that had to come from a miracle.

Although, that’d only be the case if this were his first time seeing her.

This was not the first time Rigel has talked with this girl.

Rigel: “Tia! What are you doing here?!”

Tia: “Huh? No reason, no reason at all, obviously. When I want to be somewhere, I’ll be there. It’s not like anyone has the right to tell me not to. Oh, there there, you’re so cute, Spica. —I really want to kill you.”

Rigel: “You’re gonna teach her bad things, stop that!”

While sweetly smiling at Spica, the woman—Tia uttered some really bloodthirsty words.

Rigel thought that she was actually serious when she suddenly said that remark, and when he panicked and took Spica away from her, he made sure that she was alright as he gently patted her black hair.

Rigel: “Are you alright, Spica? She didn’t do anything weird to you, did she? Sorry for coming home late so much. …What the heck is Mom doing?!”

Tia: “Rem let me take care of Spica and went shopping. I was thinking of going too, but this, uh, kotatsu, was it? It seems I can’t get out. To fascinate me this much…even humans do cool things every now and then, huh.”

Tia pouts over having Spica taken away from her, but she settled down with the kotatsu. She looked happy, resting the upper half of her body on the table as she moaned “Ahh” while smiling.

She looked to be around 20 years old, but the way she talked and acted were completely different. This beauty was also pretty friendly for how stingy she was—not the type of woman Rigel was very good with.

—He didn’t really dislike her, though.

Rigel: “Plus, look at how much of a bum she is, I’m dumbfounded…”

Spica: “Nii Nii, Nee Nee.”

Rigel: “Yeah, you’re right, Spica. Don’t know how I feel about Tia being “Nee Nee”, but we shouldn’t fight. I’m sorry.”

Spica closed and opened her hand and pushed on Rigel’s cheek. Sensing that his sister was emotionally appealing to him with that, Rigel decided to stop fighting for now.

While watching that interaction, Tia took advantage of this and said “That’s right that’s right.”

Tia: “Reflect upon your actions. Be sorry. Since you’ve hurt me, I’d like to eat sweets.”

Rigel: “Don’t get carried away now. Besides, my kind mother must’ve already left sweets. Where’d they go?”

Tia: “Where, you ask? In my stomach.”

Rigel: “Then you’ll have to hold out until supper.”

Rigel had no words for Tia’s bossy behavior who was acting outrageous at another family’s house.

Tia is another one of Dad’s and Mom’s old friends, and she’s also someone Rigel has known for a few years. According to Dad and Mom, she’s apparently more like family than a friend.

But honestly, Rigel still had some doubts.

And that’s because—

Rigel: “Families live together. If you only show up every now and then like this, doesn’t that mean you’re a relative or a friend or something?”

Tia: “What’s this? Getting all pouty because I don’t come to see you very much? Your face does look just like Su’s, but I guess you have some cute points after all. I want to kill you.”

Rigel: “Don’t say such dangerous things!”

He also didn’t like how she would keep on randomly saying “I’ll kill you” and “I want to kill you” as if it was a routine that she just had to do at the end of her comments.

The way she spoke, the way she behaved…those aspects were ruining a lot of things.

If only she didn’t act that way, she’d look quite—

Tia: “…? Did you get taller when I wasn’t looking?”

Rigel: "Gulp"

Tia got out of the kotatsu, instantly closed in, and stood in front of Rigel. She smelled pretty good. She nonchalantly reached her hand out and touched Rigel's short blue hair.

Rigel's silky hair was patted by her thin fingers, and he couldn't move a muscle. Meanwhile, Tia, who seemed to be very pleased with how much Rigel has grown,

Tia: "Kids grow up so fast. Just a little while ago, you were a drooling little shorty, and now you're only somewhat of a shorty."

Rigel: "…That stuff again, huh. People always tell me stuff like you and Halibel-san were there when I was born."

Tia: "It's the truth. I was there, and Halibel was there, too. I may have not been there during the most important part, though."

Rigel: "…"

That's when Tia squinted, and it seemed as though she was looking at something far away.

It felt like those eyes that were looking far away were not looking at what was in front of her, but at the past, and it made Rigel kind of upset.

Rigel couldn't reach that place. Rigel didn't like thinking about that place.

Rigel: "That stuff sounds too much like bull. Who'd believe that Banan town was going to be destroyed when I was being born?"

Tia: "Oh, it's the truth. The map was this close to being rewritten. I wanted to kill you so badly at the time, by the way."

Rigel: "You make it sound like you were going to destroy the town yourself."

Rigel shrugged at Tia, maybe because she wasn't careful with her word choice. Seeing that, Tia's eyes widened as if she'd been caught off guard, and then she said,

Tia: “The way you do that kind of stuff, it arouses my sadism. Ahh, if I keep looking at you being bothered, I can’t imagine how much I’d be pleased. I want to kill you.”

Rigel: “I hate that part of you.”

Tia: “—But, even though you don’t like me, you’ve kept my present for all this time.”

Said Tia as she broke into a smile and looked at Rigel’s left wrist. Upon hearing her point, Rigel choked, his cheeks became slightly red, and he looked away.

On Rigel’s wrist, he had a bracelet ornament made out of a beast’s white fur.

This was something Tia gave to him a few years ago when they first met. When she gave this to him, he said something.

Tia: “Do you remember? Do you remember what you said to me when I gave that to you?”

Rigel: “Id-! W-Well, umm…I-I have Spica, so…”

Tia: “That again? You’re so much like Su in that regard.”

Rigel gets teased, and he grinded his teeth hard. Spica, who was in his arms, innocently watched Nii Nii and Nee Nee glare at each other.

If I back out here, I lose my pride as a man. I can’t let Spica see me being pathetic.

Rigel made up his mind, and he pierced Tia with a sharp look.

And the—

Rigel: “That you love…”

Tia: “That as long as you have white bracelet, I will come running over whenever you're in danger…"

They both speak at the same time, and the things that came out of their mouths were completely different.

Tia's eyes widen in surprise, then her expression slowly turned into a mischievous one, then into a ferocious one a carnivore would have when it plays with a mouse.

Tia: "Hey, what did you just say? Hey Rigel, what did you say?"

Rigel: "Shut up! It's not like that! It's nothing! I lost myself! Dad set this up!"

Tia: "Ahaha, it's okay. I love you. But I want to kill you."

Rigel: "Goddamnit!"

With Spica in his arms and with a red face, Rigel turned his body and tried to run away from Tia, who was in front of him. However, Tia quickly prevented Rigel from doing so with quick movements, and when she got in front of him, she kept poking his red cheek with her finger.

Spica: "Owoo, Nii Nii. Nee Nee."

Spica was the only one who was happily laughing and watching them act that way.

And their little act continued until Rem came home after she finished shopping.

3

???: "And so, here's to Hal-san and Tia being back again!"

???: "—Cheers!"

At night in the Natsuki home's living room, everyone at the kotatsu made a toast.

However, the cups they made a toast with did not have alcohol in them, but tea and a kind of fruit juice. Due to various reasons, nobody was drinking alcohol at this gathering.

Halibel, who would even bring alcohol with him to the bath-house, was no exception either.

Subaru: “But man, coincidences really do happen. Who would’ve thought that Hal-san and Tia would come back simultaneously at the perfect time?”

Rem: “It really was unexpected. Thanks to that, we’re all here together at the dining table. It made me so happy that I’m worried about whether I was able to cook as well as I usually do.”

Subaru: “Oh, so you weren’t able to focus on doing your best, and you’re a bit worried?”

Rem: “Well, I’m always giving it my all to cook meals for our family.”

Seeing Rem smile slightly while being dreamy-eyed, Subaru scratched his head as he blushed.

Frankly, seeing his parents like this was bad for the eyes, but for Rigel this has been the usual since he was born, so at this point it was no big deal.

Rigel: “Uncle, hand me your plate. I’ll get some for you.”

Halibel: “Ohh, as smart as expected. Can you give a lot of meat? Also, don’t put too many vegetables.”

Rigel: “Aye-Aye. But it’s not healthy if you don’t eat your vegetables, you know.”

While taking Halibel’s order, Rigel skillfully used his chopsticks and dished out hot pot ingredients into the bowls.

Tonight at the Natsuki family house, they were having hot pot, and there were also many side dishes arranged by Rem who’d been fired up and made them with her skills.

Subaru: “It’ll be a lot of people, and we’ll be using a kotatsu. We have to have a hot pot!” [Rem: “Yes, that sounds great Subaru-kun! I’m convinced!”

This was what his parents were saying before they had the hot pot. He didn’t really disagree, so he let that be.

Also, Rigel liked hot pot. He liked being able to have lots of vegetables, though he wasn’t really a big fan of them.

Tia: “Hey, Rigel. Aren’t you giving me too many vegetables. Like Hal, I like to eat a lot of meat. Though, I did tell you to give me vegetables.”

Rigel: “What are you talking about? Eat your vegetables. You don’t want to get fat by eating only meat. Meat, vegetable, vegetable, vegetable, meat, vegetable, vegetable. Gotta go with the meat rhythm.”

Tia: “I can barely even eat my meat!”

Tia was served tons of vegetables, and she screamed in displeasure. Still, considering that she wasn’t putting stuff back into the hot pot, it seemed that she was being taught properly, and that’s more important than anything else.

Satisfied with what he saw in her bowl, Rigel served the next bowl, and then the next bowl, and continued to serve.

Subaru: “Man, it really helps that we have a someone taking charge.. Just watching him makes us happy~, and the hotpot running smoothly makes him happy. It’s a win-win situation.”

Rigel: “Stop being ridiculous. I want some hot pot too. Don’t make me do everything…”

Rem: “I feel bad, so…Here, open wide, Rigel.”

Rem pointed her chopsticks at Rigel, who was neglecting his own stomach because he was too focused on serving the hot pot.

It was a bit embarrassing, but everyone here was his friend. Rigel wasn't going to care about being embarrassed, and he contentedly accepted Rem feeding him.

Subaru: "Hey hey, what the hell are you making my Rem do? All right, I'll feed you too."

Halibel: "Oh, huh, Rigel, you haven't been eating at all. I'll feed you too."

Tia: "Oh, okay then I'll do it too. Here, eat this. Hey, c'mon, eat it!"

Rigel: "Nom nom! I can't eat all that!"

Rigel accepting Rem's food lead to all the adults stuffing his mouth with more food. Although Subaru and Halibel were horsing around, they were still choosing things properly so it could've been worse, but when Tia started doing it, she was only giving him vegetables from her bowl that she didn't like.

Rigel: "Stop messing around! You're all adults, so do it properly! Fooling around in the middle of a hot pot… Respect hot pot more! Tremble with fear at the power of hot pot!"

Subaru: "Wow, look at what an expert you are at being a hot pot governor. As your father, I'm proud of how you get into things so easily."

Rigel: "Shut up! You'd never praise me, Dad!"

Rigel roared loudly and whacked the adults, starting with Subaru. However, the adults laughed and ignored it, and it irritated Rigel quite a bit.

There really was no one on Rigel's side besides Spica.

Rigel: "And yet I still got Spica taken away from me by Tia!"

Tia: "Ahh, okay okay, don't get so moody. Like, you, her brother, are the one Spica likes. I've only met her twice, you know."

Rem: "She's right, Rigel. Usually you keep Spica all to yourself to the point of being stubborn, so let Tia-sama have her for today.

Instead, why don't you just pet Halibel-sama?"

Halibel: "Am I still in that low of a position to you?"

Judging from the way Rem bluntly expressed who she had a better relationship with, it seemed Tia had won her support and not Halibel.

An easy to talk to, beautiful, proud mother. That's who Rem is, but it's rare for her to be this friendly to someone, so Rigel wouldn't say anything if Tia were to stick his tongue out at him.

Subaru: "Hey, don't feel down now, Rigel. Seeing Spica is a matter of life and death for you too, isn't it? You won't be seeing Spica for a little while. Don't forget about Tia."

Rigel: "…You can't call her family"

Subaru: "Hmm?"

Rigel: "Aren't families family because they live together? She only comes over occasionally, so it's kind of weird to treat her like family."

Rigel whispered what he had said to Tia in the evening to Subaru.

That's when it felt like Rigel was ratting her out, and he was disgusted with himself.

However, Subaru ruffled Rigel's hair and said,

Subaru: "You've got a good point…is what I'd like to say, but that's not quite right. She doesn't necessarily need to live with us to be family. Tia has her own circumstances. So, she can only show up every now and then. But, she always comes when she can."

Rigel: "…"

Subaru: "Well, for now just spoil yourself with this awfully popular beauty that occasionally comes over to tease you. You're so blessed."

Rigel: “What are you talking about?!”

The sound of his tone changed. Once it clearly fell into the banter category, Rigel yelled. After that, he brushed away his father’s hand that was above him, then he thrusted his finger at Subaru.

Rigel: “Are you really being serious when you say that I’m blessed? I’m definitely going to have a bad time tomorrow at Setsubun, you know. I’m already so depressed…I won’t be able to sleep without Spica!”

Subaru: “What are you trying to demand here? The right to sleep with Spica is given by rotation, and tonight it’s supposed to be mine. And I’ll be giving it to Tia, so even in the worst case, you will have no right to sleep with her.”

Rigel: “Goddamnit!”

Rigel tried to take advantage of the mess and win some sympathy, but Subaru has known him for a long time; since he’s known him since he was born, his shallow plan was seen through immediately.

Then, while the father and his son loudly chatted with each other like that as if it was just the usual,

Tia: “Hm? What’s up? Need something from Rigel tomorrow or something?”

Tia, who was having her finger bit by Spica who’d heard the ruckus, tilted her head. Rigel wasn’t sure how to respond, but Rem took over, nodded, and said “Got it” with a smile.

Rem: “Tomorrow is Setsubun, and it’s actually the day of a festival Subaru-kun proposed. And, Rigel will represent the Onis as he runs around town dressed as an Oni while having beans thrown at him.”

Rigel: “That introduction’s so misleading!”

Tia: “Oh my, what the heck, that sounds like so much fun…”

Rigel: “Don’t get all enthusiastic about!”

Tia listened to Rem's rough introduction, and her eyes shined.

Though you may be able to tell from the fact that she said something dangerous, Tia clearly liked the "bean throwing" part. She liked the part about being able to annoy Rigel, and like she says herself, the sadism in her was very strong. In short, Setsubun is—

Tia: "—A festival for me."

Rigel: "This is why I didn't want you to ask about it! Who was careless and started talking about Setsubun?! Was it me?! It was me! I'm sorry!"

Subaru: "You have a lot on your plate…"

Tia looked at Rigel, who was crumbling with his head between his hands, with eyes that were like those of a young girl who was dreaming. Seeing Rigel's self-destructing, Subaru nodded as he said, "Alright."

Subaru: "Hey, listen up, Son. I really understand how you feel. It's true that the Setsubun event hurts you to a very rough degree. As your parent, I can't bear to see it."

Rigel: "Chomp, this taste like lies!"

Subaru: "That's when you're supposed to lick. Don't bite!"

Subaru got a bite mark on his hand from his son, and he had no idea what to do with Rigel and his distrustful remarks.

Subaru: "What made you become this much of a monster…"

Rigel: "Bad parenting! And bad treatment from the town!"

Subaru: "I'll have you know I do dress up as an Oni too during bean throwing. You're not the only one getting hit by kids throwing beans while walking outside!."

Tia: "Wait, I can throw beans at Su too? I don't know if I'll be able to take this…"

Rem: “Tia-sama, Tia-sama, the meat is cooked now. Say ‘ahhn’”

Tia: “Ahhn.”

Tia, who couldn’t hold in her sadism, teased him, but in the middle of doing so, Subaru’s good wife splendidly saved him, and he continued as he cleared his throat.

Subaru: “Anyway, don’t interrupt me. What I’m about to tell you is the most important part. It’s rough that you suffer too much every year during Setsubun. So, I’ve come up with an elaborate plan this time!”

Rigel: “I’m guessing you’ve added another strange festival aspect to Setsubun…”

Subaru: “You really just don’t trust me at all! Still, I’m sure you’ll be surprised and you’ll accept it!”

Said Subaru, and when he got out of the Kotatsu, he looked for his work bag that had been placed at the corner of the living room. Then, he started taking out a round cloth from it.

Subaru: “Hal-san, hang on to that end! We’re unfolding it!”

Halibel: “Oh, what’s this, a banner? What’s in it?”

Accepting Subaru’s request, Halibel got up and held the end of the cloth. When they unfolded it in one go, some letters drawn with a writing brush came into his vision.

Written on it was—

Halibel: “Setsubun Ghost…?”

Subaru: “The only thing is it’s written in I characters so that kids can read it. I actually wanted to write it as “節分お化け” (Setsubun Ghost). This is the 4th part of the Setsubun plan I produced. Makes you excited, doesn’t it?”

Rigel: “Makes me gets the chills.”

The phrase “Ghost” didn’t give him a good impression. It wasn’t something that sounded very familiar to him, but Subaru did tell him about them before—

Rigel: “Ghosts are Hollow, right? I don’t like the sound of it at all.”

Subaru: “Well, I get that. But, you see, this ghost is another kind of concept. With regard to that, Setsubun Oni have to take on another role…”

The “Oni” in Setsubun don’t represent actual Oni. Instead, they give an Oni = disaster/misfortune sort of impression, and the purpose of the event of driving away Oni is to keep misfortunate away.

Honestly, as someone who’s descended from the Oni, I really feel like Oni being treated as the symbol of disaster is unacceptable, but now that the idea has taken root so deeply in this town, we have no civil rights even if we push for them.

Subaru: “There will be no more of that chasing away evil doers sort of thing, and now the Oni are the protagonists of Setsubun! That’s how it is now, so just let that go.”

Rigel: “And because I’ve let that go, now everytime Setsubun approaches life gets hard.”

Subaru: “You’ve had to pull through despite life getting hard, but I’ve got good news for you. The Setsubun Ghost event is going to save you.”

RIgel: “Oh really?”

Rigel looks at Subaru with dubious eyes.

Halibel, perhaps because he saw that this conversation was going nowhere, put lit his kiseru and said,

Halibel: “Come on now, let’s let him finish. The only knowledge of Setsubun I have is stuff I’ve heard from other people who also heard about it from other people, but how are they different from Hollow?”

Subaru: “About that…this time, they’ll be allowed to disguise themselves as Oni.”

Rigel: “What?!”

Subaru raised his voice as if to say “I have an announcement”, and Rigel’s eyes widened.

The disguise part is what emphasized his surprise. This is because up until now, Rigel had only been allowed to wear yellow clothed Oni pants that had black vertical stripes, a red padded sleeveless coat, as well as a tremendously bold, bright green wig.

Subaru: “By putting on clothes that are different from the ones we usually wear, Setsubun ghosts can go through their Setsubun day without getting found by Oni—that’s the train of thought I had to come up with this.”

Rigel: “There you go making Oni the bad guys again!”

Subaru: “LIKE I SAID, I tried to switch them around this time. Basically, I got something in store for the Setsubun costume contest. I indirectly let the town know about it, so tomorrow all the guys, girls, old and young—everyone will flock to Setsubun in costumes. You’ll slip in and it’ll be like a game of “Where’s the Oni?” Whatcha think, sounds thrilling, doesn’t it?”

Rigel: “Kind of sounds like it’s become an even dumber festival…”

Subaru’s face was practically asking him “Doesn’t it sound awesome?”, and it irritated Rigel. Still, he pondered.

With this, surprisingly, he felt like Subaru’s idea wasn’t so bad. In fact, maybe it was good. Dressing in a way that makes him stand out will be the reason for tons of people chasing after Rigel.

However, if he’s going to look nothing like a normal Oni—rather, if he’s going to have an appearance that doesn’t resemble Natsuki Rigel, perhaps he’ll be able to go outside with Spica in peace.

Rigel: “What happened to you, Dad? Has the father within you finally awoken?”

Subaru: “You say that as if the father within me hasn’t been awake until now. The father within me has been in bloom for a good 2 years now.”

Rigel: “2 years…but that’s when Spica was born!”

Subaru’s teeth glistened as he gave a thumbs up, then Rigel gave a well-delivered comeback.

Anyhow, this was rare, really rare—in fact, this was the first time Rigel agreed with his dad regarding Setsubun.

Rigel: “A disguise! Alright, I’ll make it through tomorrow somehow!”

Subaru: “That’s the spirit! But well, it won’t be that easy, Rigel. To prepare for tomorrow, I’ve taken pics of what you normally look like with a “Metia” and sent them out. In other words, if you have a half-assed disguise, the town’s Rigelists will see through you easily, and you’ll be dead.”

Rigel: “Aren’t you going a little overboard?!”

Just when he started thinking better of him, he made him change his mind again.

However, Subaru went “tsk tsk” to Rigel as he waved his finger back and forth as he said,

Subaru: “Don’t be ridiculous. If this becomes a one sided game, that would be downright disrespectful towards the bean throwers who’ve trained their wrists up until today for Setsubun. They go all out, we go all out—only then will it be sportsmanlike. Yeah?”

Rigel: “Shut up! Then what?! In the end, this is just the same old Setsubun!”

Rigel’s appearance is actually even more well-known in town now than it was last year.

Rigel was ruled by that sort of sense of despair, having a feeling that he’d be killed by beans tomorrow.

However, Rigel was—

Rem: "—No, Rigel. It won't be like that. Leave it to your mother."

The one who gallantly got up and came to the rescue was none other than Rem.

She was in a light blue kimono, and when she tucked up her sleeves, she clenched a fist with her game face on.

Rem: "Subaru-kun told you something. That they'll be going all out, and we'll be going all out. That's exactly what's going to happen. So, all we have to do is give it all we've got and play along."

Rigel: "But Mom, what are we going to do? Wearing costumes is one thing, but I've never disguised myself before. They'll easily recognize me, and I'll be dead…"

Rem: "You're so silly, Rigel. You don't have to take on everything all by yourself."

Rigel: "Huh?"

With a smile, Rem nodded at Rigel who was confused. She gently reaches her hand out, then Rigel's mom's hand touched his cheek. Then, their blue eyes met each other.

Rem: "Listen, Rigel. Leave this to me. Subaru-kun…Your dad thought hard to come up with this idea for your sake. So, it's only natural for me to do my part as his wife."

Rigel: "Mom…"

Upon hearing those words, something warm started to fill Rige's chest.

Then, Rigel thought for a little bit, and—

Rigel: "—Alright. I'll trust you, Mom."

This was after Rigel, who believed in Rem, left it up to his mother to handle the matter.

Rem: “What do you think, Rigel? I did the best I could.”

Said Rem as she firmly nodded while appearing to be wiping the sweat off her forehead.

In response, Rigel took a good look at himself in the full-length mirror. In the tall mirror that reflected his whole body, there was a brand new Rigel.

Rigel: “This is me…?”

Reflected in the mirror was a pretty girl who was the same age as Rigel.

She had a kimono that was based around a dark indigo blue color, and a distinctively light red hair ornament. Her light blue hair was put up nicely, and she kind of looked like a rich girl.

She did have a sharp look in her eyes, but her long eyelashes and lightly rouged cheeks coupled with her slightly embarrassed expression created quite the charm that’d sway a man.

She turns around. Rem nods.

She turns around. Halibel breathed a sigh in amazement.

She turns around. Seeing that girl, Subaru grinned and said,

Subaru: “Let’s name this you Natsumi Rimmel!”

Rigel: “Shut up!! I was an idiot for trusting Mom!”

Rigel hated Subaru’s expression as he held in his laughter, so he stomped his feet with all his strength.

Of course, the pretty girl reflected in the mirror was a magnificent transformation of Rigel done by Rem. To be honest, it was so perfectly done that it made Rem’s skill scary.

Rem: “I saw nothing wrong with it. Rigel, I think you almost have the same potential as Subaru-kun…It’s a masterpiece.”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s pretty cute. I was worried about your future when I saw that you were born with eyes just like mine I was worried, but worst comes worst, with this, there are also eyes that can do something about the future…”

Rigel: “As if there are! What do you mean “This’ll unlock a future for me”?! And what’s this about me almost having the same potential as Dad?! Dad’s going to crossdress too?!”

Subaru: “Natsumi Schwartz…Look forward to tomorrow.”

Rigel had no choice but to yield to Subaru’s vaguely confident reply.

Halibel taps Rigel’s shoulder. When the slit-eyed wolf man let a sigh out of his large mouth, he said,

Halibel: “You might not be very happy about it, but isn’t it well done? I mean, that kind of outfit may be useful for sneaking into places if you’re going to succeed me in the future.”

Rigel: “Stop trying to cheer me up …In fact, just knock it off, Uncle. I have to do this.”

Halibel: “You’re getting pretty into it…”

Perhaps he just liked to laugh at himself. Perhaps he’s just the type to get totally immersed in whatever he did. Or, perhaps he was just used to it.

While wryly smiling at how quick Rigel switched to accepting reality, Halibel scratched his head as if to think for a bit, and he said,

Halibel: “Then how about I teach you the Clone technique for tomorrow? Dunno if it’ll go well if you only learn it on the spot, but you’ve got a feel for it, so maybe you’ll be able to make like one more of yourself.”

Rigel: “Is Clone the thing you used to make four of yourself?”

Halibel: “Yep, yep. I become 4 times the trouble, so it’s super strong. The thing I have to be careful of is, although I become more troubling the more clones I have, the wounds are shared. So if I get hit, I take 4 times as much damage.”

Rigel: “I can’t see anything coming out of it other than me being hit by two times as many beans…”

Halibel: “Wow, even your voice is higher…”

If that’s how it is, maybe I really do have a higher chance of surviving if I nail acting like a woman.

I should forget that I’m Natsuki Rigel and be so girly that they’ll hesitate to throw beans at me.

Rigel: “So I’m being a Setsubun Ghost to keep the Oni away…”

Halibel: “It’s not really like you’re going to fight against your own blood.”

Rigel: “Uncle, I won’t lose.”

Halibel: “Yeah, okay then. Go ahead and try your best. I like how you go all out in everything you do.”

Since Rigel was fired up, Halibel threw away his thought and was about to pat his head, but then he tapped his shoulders, perhaps out of worry that his hair would get messed up.

The way he cared about his hair made his heart skip a beat.

Rigel: “This is bad. I’m already losing doubt that this is who I am…”

Subaru: “The way you get influenced so easily is both one of your strong points and one of your weak points.”

Rigel didn’t touch on who that someone that influenced him was and just stuck his tongue out.

Anyway, if we disregarded Rigel's own shyness, the Natsumi Rimmel—previously Natsuki Rigel—strategy surely will be effective.

If there was a problem, it'd be—

Tia: "—Pant, pant, I'm going to die. I'm going to die. Th-They're going to try to kill me, what the heck, ahaha"

Rigel: "It's not that funny! I'm going to get hurt too, you know!"

Tia: "C-Cmon, stop being so into it. Ah, my stomach hurts, it hurts…!"

Tia had been laughing ever since Rigel's makeover had been finished. Although, it'd be kinda weird if she were to just accept it as if nothing was odd, so he was thankful that she was laughing at him.

Rigel: "…Do I really look that weird?"

Rem: "I'm proud that it is pretty perfect. But at the same time, when I look at you now, I do get the feeling that I may have created an absolute monster…"

He turns around to the mirror, and makes a quick pose. He thought it was cute.

Even though Rem was satisfied with how Rigel was doing, she was starting to break into a bit of a cold sweat.

Seeing his parents reactions in the corner of his eyes, Rigel laughed inside, delighted with how things were going.

Of course, he didn't actually like crossdressing. Well, he did think that it was pretty perfect, and he was surprised that he was pretty cute, but that was different.

When they realize that their own actions are going to put their son in danger, surely then his parents will learn to not have their ideas get out of hand.

By no means was he enjoying this cross dressing, since this chance doesn't come all that often, and letting out his daily frustrations by intimidating his parents.

Rigel: "Heeey, Spica. I'm going to do my best tomorrow."

Spica: "Aooo?"

Spica, who was playing around, going in between everyone's legs under the kotatsu, turned around upon hearing Rigel's words.

Then, she stared at her completely unrecognizable pretty brother, and put her finger in her mouth.

After that, she said—

Spica: "—Nii Nee?"

And she had a crisis from perceiving his identity, making her sink.

5

—The boisterous dinner came to an end, and the night went on at Banan town.

Tomorrow's Setsubun. Tonight is the night before the final battle.

Rigel's the type that usually can't sleep when he has plans the next day, so on the night before Setsubun he was especially nervous.

Apart from Setsubun, there's also family birthdays. Still, my heart's pounding.

Halibel, who had had an evening drink with his dad after dinner, has already returned to the tenement house. Subaru has gone to the "Kararagi Culture Promotion Society" for one last business meeting for tomorrow's Setsubun, and Rem went with him too.

She probably requested "Please take good care of my son tomorrow." She's a conscientious and meticulous mother. Because of that, Rigel knew that he was going to be protected by a lot of adults.

Since they were pushing Setsubun so much, the adults, including Subaru, have probably made sure that Rigel won't get into trouble.

They were thorough with the festival's participation guidelines too, so they probably have some sort of means to prevent Rigel from being mistaken for an enemy in tomorrow's "Setsubun Ghost" plan.

He should be ready for the worst scenario, which is a paper sticking on his back saying "This guy's an Oni."

And so, his parents were not at the Natsuki home at night. This is when Rigel would become the backup family head and steel himself to protect Spica the cute angel.

???: "—Can't sleep?"

A voice spoke to Rigel while he was sitting on the veranda, gazing at the blue moon in the sky.

The person sat straight down next to Rigel before he could turn around. A warm shoulder unreservedly touched Rigel, and he released a small breath.

Tia: "I'm not really sure about this, but don't Human children sleep around this time? You're going to be busy tomorrow."

Rigel: "That's true, but it's fine. In my case, a little lack of sleep puts me on edge and I can move better."

Tia: "But won't your disguise be ruined if you get eyebags? Won't it, Natsumi Rimmel-chan?"

Rigel was told that in a mocking tone, and his cheeks suddenly had a tinge of red.

He was being lead by the nose and played around with. Rigel turned away, not wanting to realize that. However, Tia chuckled, and gently pushed her nose onto Rigel's nape.

Rigel: “Dawa!”

Tia: “Relax. …Mm, the smell of nervousness. Can really smell embarrassment too. You’re so dishonest and cute. To the point that I want to kill you.”

Rigel: “…That again? If you wanna kill me, just do it.”

Rigel sighed as if to send the message “Not like you can anyway.” Then, in response, Tia’s eyes opened widely.

After that, she bit her lip just for a moment, looked down, and said,

Tia: “You’re…right. I want to kill you, but I can’t”

Then, Tia’s lips slackened, and with a smile continued and said “Because…”

Tia: “I love you, after all.”

Rigel: “…”

They were the words Tia had said when he first met her. Upon hearing them, it really stirred his heart.

This was probably the first time he had someone that wasn’t in his family say “I love you” to him.

On top of that, it was from an stunning beauty. He’d be crazy to not think anything of it.

Rigel: “…”

Rigel fiddles with the bracelet on his left hand’s wrist, unwilling to acknowledge the turmoil in his mind. A bracelet made of white beast’s fur, another thing Tia has given to him.

She had said that as long as he has this, she will always come running to save Rigel.

Tia: “You’ve never used that. You’ve never called me over.”

Rigel: “…’Cause, it’s kinda…pathetic. Calling you over just by crying for help…I don't wanna do something like that."

Tia: "Really? Doesn't your dad Su tend to be quick to ask for help from others?"

Rigel: "Dad does do that, but Mom loves him for it so it's fine. But I'm not like that. Thanks to Mom's blood, I'm different from Dad. When I want to see someone, I don't call them; I go see them."

Tia: "Hmmm."

Though it did take a lot of courage to say this, Tia had a negative reaction. She snorted as though she was ignoring him, and played with her milky white hair that was on her shoulder.

Tia: "What a cold night it is. I wonder when Rem and Su'll be back."

Rigel: "It's the day before Setsubun, so they'll probably drink a bit and will take a little longer to get back."

Tia: "Is that so? Then I guess we should get to bed, since we wouldn't want to catch that drunk smell."

Tia stood on her tiptoes and got up from the spot.

The Natsuki family has a rule such that, at night, everyone must put their futons together and sleep in one room. Even on days when Tia stays over.

The one thing that changes everyday is who gets to sleep with Spica —

Tia: "Tonight, I get to sleep with Spica. You jealous?"

Rigel: "Yeah, I am. Who cares about Setsubun."

Tia: "That was such a fast reply. You really are scary…"

This was about Spica, so he couldn't possibly lie, and he couldn't come up with a reason to lie either.

Tia squinted her eyes at Rigel, who had those sorts of thoughts as he curiously tilted his head.

Tia: “Earlier I’d figured this out by the smell, but…You’re nervous, and you’re only acting tough, aren’t you.”

Rigel: “…Well, if I say you’re wrong, that’d mean I could be lying about a ton of things.”

Tia: “Tons of things or not, stop being stubborn. Here, come with me.”

Rigel: “—?”

Tia, who’d gotten up earlier, pulled Rigel’s hand and made him stand up. Slender fingers, and the feeling of her smooth skin. Rigel, who was unexpectedly forced to stand up, was taken by surprise.

Then, Rigel, still shocked, had Tia’s smile coming close to him. She was right there, smiling at him, almost close enough for both of their noses to touch, and

Tia: “I’ll help you be brave. Today, I have the right to sleep with Spica, so I’ll give you the right to sleep with me.”

Rigel: “H-Huh?! If I do that…If I do that…what’s up with this?”

Tia: “You, me, and Spica can sleep together. I don’t want to give up being next to Spica, but I do feel bad for you, and when I look at your poor ol’ face, I’m itching, just dying to kill you…”

Rigel: “I get it! I’d like to go with your idea!”

Rigel, with an entranced look on his face, surrendered to the danger of Tia as she blushed.

In response, Tia nodded saying “Very well.”

Tia: “C’mon, if you’ve decided, then hurry up and get ready. I like to get some sleep without nightmares on my good days every now and then. I’ll even sing a lullaby for you, which I haven’t done in a while.”

Rigel: “A lullaby…”

Tia: “Yep, the “Kill’em Song”!”

Rigel: ““Tia”!”

It seemed the lullaby that his mother had hummed to him long ago came from Tia, and clearly the girl herself was dangerous.

Still, even though she was so dangerous, she’s never changed, and her presence has always saved Rigel.

If she could just stay the same as she was when she first met Rigel and left an impression on him, then maybe someday he’ll catch up to her.

Tia: “Rigel?”

Rigel: “I know, I’ll be there!”

As Rigel heard Tia’s wondering voice, the night sky hit his face, cooling down his hot cheeks and ears.

When he gets in the futon, he might be hot again, but by that time, he’ll be already be snuggled in the futon anyway. It didn’t matter.

So—

Rigel: “—Agh, goddamnit. Be quiet, heartbeat.”

While muttering, Rigel started walking to the futon where cute li’l Spica and Tia awaited him.

Incidentally, the next day, Setsubun incorporated with “Setsubun Ghost” turned out to be a huge success.

“Setsubun Ghost” was well known throughout town thanks to Natsuki Subaru suggesting it. So, many dressed up people got mixed together, even travelers from out of town came to enjoy Setsubun, and the bean throwing ended up being a big event.

As a result, stuff like a “Setsubun Ghost” contest and events to judge everyone’ costumes were held that was suddenly held were held to judge everyone’s costumes.

As a result, with the “Setsubun Ghost” contest suddenly being held, events and such were done to judge everyone’s customs, and—

—The Natsuki Family taking the victory stand remains as a photographic record taken with a “Metia”,

On it were a lovely little girl, a somewhat bewitching beauty, and a beautiful woman dressed as a dashing, gallant man.

With those three who stood together on that victory stand were a big wolf man, and a smiling beautiful woman carrying a baby.

Things are looking really bad. With no money to my name, everything was beginning to look bleak. Actually, I'm not entirely broke. I still have my wallet filled with coins and point-cards. I should have as much money as your average unemployed highschooler. Despite this, however, broke seemed like the right word to describe the predicament I was in.

This brings back a memory of when someone called me broke before. Man, I didn't expect that to hurt so much. I heard somewhere before that being poor affects one's attitude, but in my case, being poor affected the attitude of the people around me.

"I bet the currency is different here…" I said with a sigh as I fiddled a ten-yen coin with reeded edges in my hand.

The ten-yen coin, also known as Ridged-10, wasn't an exceptionally rare item. I found it lying around somewhere and kept it in my wallet ever since. A part of me thought it might come to my rescue like a knight in shining armor if I kept it on me all the time, but it never happened.

My heart is so fragile, even a mere ten-yen can hurt it, huh?

Speaking of fragile hearts, I’m starting to get offended by all these gazes. I’d noticed that people had been giving me funny looks wherever I went for a while now. It was starting to get annoying. I’m not dressed that weirdly, I think.

Although I was often told I had a scary-looking face, my appearance was more or less average. I had naturally black hair and wore a tracksuit that wasn’t designated by my school.

If going out in public without my school uniform on is a crime, then fine, I’ll hold a press conference and apologize to the whole world.

However, I doubted anyone would have listened to me even if such a conference was held.

“This must be that famous thing,” I muttered to myself as I crossed my arms, tilting my head.

A carriage with giant wheels clattered past me. The animal pulling it wasn’t a horse, but rather a giant lizard. The people who were gawking at me were also all dressed as if they were at Shibuya on Halloween. However, I could tell that they weren’t Halloween costumes, but real clothes.

What are real clothes anyways. Wondering what the definition of real clothes even was, I came to one conclusion: “I must have been summoned to another world,” I said, flicking the ridged-10 up high into the air, making a loud clicking sound.

2

Natsuki Subaru was born in Japan and raised in a generation known as the softie generation. Her day-to-day life was so mundane that there was nothing to write about here. The only things worth mentioning were that she was in high school—which she had been avoiding recently—and that she had wandered into another world on her way home from the convenience store.

“That’s all the narration needed to explain my transfer to another world. Talk about being easy,” she mumbled to herself.

It was way too easy. There wasn’t even a truck involved. I just blinked and here I am. And since we don’t need any qualifications to be summoned, even a minor could end up in another world. Of course, it’s not all good news. Being summoned to another world is usually a one-way ticket. And you have way too much free time after arriving.

As someone who had spent her middle school and high school trips alone at a game center, her current predicament was rather excruciating.

“I don’t suppose there’s a game center in this world. Though they’ve been facing existential threats back in my original world too. Man, I wish people would go out and play games outside more.”

There might have been other places people went to play games outside of their homes, but Subaru chose to ignore this possibility. Another possible explanation for why game centers were closing down was the rise of online games, where people no longer needed to go out to play with their friends. However, Subaru didn’t play online games.

“I hate to lose so much, if I played with other people, I might end up killing myself.”

But complaining about the current state of the gaming industry isn’t going to help me with my current situation.

She was still in another world with practically no money.

“Luckily, I was able to find out there’s no language barrier here, and the social infrastructure seems decent. I guess I don’t have to worry about starving to death…?”

As she mumbled to herself, she yelled “Show status!” into midair, but nothing happened. I suppose it isn’t the type of a world where I can see my current status.

“But shouldn’t there be something more? Where’s God’s apology for summoning me to another world accidentally? If not, where's the young girl responsible for summoning me?" she said as she made different gestures with her hands to represent different characters that usually appear when people get summoned to another world. She noticed her eyes started getting watery. "Ah, crap."

Although she was able to keep her emotions in check until now due to being numbed by the extraordinary circumstances she suddenly found herself in, she was reaching her limit. Without any hints or clues on how to navigate this world, she was forced to face reality.

I'm really gonna start crying if I don't do something. That won't be good. The patheticness of a high schooler crying in public could possibly be newsworthy enough to at least make it in a column on a local newspaper.

In fear of such a scenario, Subaru scuttled into a back alley and rested her head against a wall as she sniveled and let out a small groan. I knew I wasn't a good daughter to my parents, and that sure made me wanna kill myself, but I never thought I'd one day make them unhappy like this. The sort of unhappiness Subaru thought she would make her parents go through was the type where she wouldn't get a job and continue living in her parents home even after their retirement.

Actually, now that I think about it, it's the first time that I actually thought about my future like this. I guess the predicament I'm in right now is somewhat better compared to the future I just thought about. I should only pray my parents will live happily together now that I'm gone…

"Uh?"

As she was trying to hold back her tears, she heard a loud noise. She lifted up her head with her ears still ringing, turning her attention towards the entrance to the back alley where she heard the noise come from. It was in the direction of the main street, but she couldn't see the pedestrians as they were hidden by the three figures standing in front of her.

The figures were staring at Subaru, who still had her forehead on the wall. Although their lack of sensitivity was akin to the gawking she experienced earlier, this time there was obvious malicious intent in their stares.

“Crap, it’s a forced quest,” she said.

Her tears quickly subsided. She faced the three figures, trying her best to hide her anxiety. Her heart was pounding loudly. She glanced behind her to see the back alley was a dead end. Why did I choose to come into a place with no escape route? She cursed herself for lacking any sense of cautiousness. Even in modern day Japan, I was always told to be careful when walking alone at night.

“No, don’t be scared, don’t be scared,” she said, attempting to psych herself up. “Sure, there wasn’t a screen that displayed my current status, but it’s still too early to give up! This is another world! There’s still a possibility my hidden powers will awaken and allow me to take them all down!”

“What the hell is this girl mumblin’ about?” one of the figures said coolly.

“She obviously doesn’t know what’s about to happen to her,” said another one. “Let’s teach her a lesson.”

They must see me as weak prey and themselves as a strong predator. Although I don’t blame them, seeing as how it’s three against one.

“But don’t you get too cocky,” Subaru said. “Just so you know, I always play out scenarios in my head for when I get attacked on a daily basis. I’m gonna pummel you all and turn you into EXP!”

“I have no clue what you’re on about, but I feel like you’re mocking us. That’s it, we’re gonna kill you.”

“That’s… My line!” She kicked the ground and ran toward the assailants to deliver the first blow. Caught off guard, the three figures widened their eyes as Subaru threw a punch at the nose of the one closest to her.

The punch landed, causing the one who was hit to let out a groan.

Receiving Subaru’s punch directly on the nose, the assailant’s eyes gleamed in anger. “Now you’ve done it, ya bitch!”

“Huh? Is that it?” Subaru said, taken aback that her punch had no effect. Instead, her fist was hurting so much that she started tearing up from the pain.

However, this was only the beginning of Subaru’s true misery.

“Hey! Hold this bitch down!” yelled the one who had been punched. “We’re seriously gonna fuck ya up now!”

The other two—one small, one big—grabbed Subaru from both sides, pushing her against the wall.

“Eh? Wait! What?!” Subaru exclaimed, failing to escape their grasp.

“Better prepare yourself,” warned the one who got punched. She was of average height, skinny, and had sanpaku eyes that looked as intimidating as Subaru’s. “You’re gonna pay for what ya did,” she said as she inched her way closer to Subaru, sticking out her long tongue.

The other two women who were holding Subaru against the wall smiled vulgarly, as if to match their friend’s energy.

Subaru finally realized the direness of the situation she was in.

“I’m really sorry! I was completely in the wrong! Please don’t kill me!”

And so, the high-pitched voice of 17-year-old high schooler Natsuki Subaru echoed in the back alley.

3

With her arms and legs immobilized from both sides, Natsuki Subaru was in a helpless situation.

The woman with sanpaku eyes wiped a bit of blood off her nose and wiped it on Subaru’s tracksuit. “Black hair, black eyes, and clothes I’ve never seen before. And what’s this bag ya have? You punched my nose. Ya better have somethin' that's worth some money."

"H-Hard to say," Subaru responded. "I mean, you just wiped your blood on my clothes, so that probably decreased its value slightly. Ah! Also, I'm a rare race known as Asian. I heard I can be sold off at a higher price without any scars. So I suggest you don't hurt me… gueh?!"

As Subaru spoke she felt a dense object sink into her solar plexus, causing her to groan.

"I hate women who can't keep their traps shut," the woman with sanpaku eyes said, holding a knife in her hand. Subaru realized it was this knife that had struck her in her chest. She also realized it was their subtle way of saying they could kill her anytime they wanted.

Subaru felt a chill run down her spine. This is bad. This is really bad. She was a moment away from fainting.

Then a different voice erupted in the back alley. "Hey move it, move it! Ya'll are in the way!"

Lifting her head up at the sudden interruption, Subaru turned her attention to the entrance of the back alley where the person who had just yelled was approaching at an immense speed. He was a young boy with golden hair. He had piercing red eyes and a fang that made him look mischievous. His face gave off a cheeky vibe, but it also showed great potential of a handsome man in the making. Subaru felt like the boy's sudden appearance was the beginning of an adventure and clenched her fists.

I bet this boy has a heart of gold and will rescue me. Then, it'll be the true beginning of my story—

"Looks like you're in quite a pickle! But sorry, I'm busy right now! Stay strong!" the boy said as he passed by Subaru, shattering her expectations.

"Wh-What?! Seriously?!" Subaru exclaimed in disbelief.

The boy, however, kept running and didn't stop even when he came to a dead end. Using this momentum, he jumped on to the wall and kicked off of it to get to the roof of a nearby building. After showing off his superb physical ability reminiscent of a stray cat, the boy was out of Subaru's sight before she could utter another word. There was no indication that he was coming back.

"Is there any chance you lost your ill intent with that?!" Subaru asked, hoping her assailants would let her go.

"On the contrary," the woman with the knife said. "In fact, gettin' interrupted pissed me off even more. Don't think ya can leave in one piece now." The woman tapped Subaru's stomach with her knife, making her gulp.

Subaru began struggling, frightened she was going to get badly injured or possibly even worse. However, that only irritated the assailant even more. "Stay still!" the woman warned, delivering a kick to Subaru's abdomen.

Subaru fell to her knees and let out a groan. She was unable to crawl out of the situation either, as the assailant had her pinned to the ground with her foot pressed against her back. I guess you could say this is this world's way of telling me "welcome."

In Natsuki Subaru's case, however, it might as well be the world's way of saying "goodbye." Am I going to die as someone who couldn't survive this harsh world's welcome ceremony? Is this really the end? I haven't achieved anything. I haven't left a legacy. Am I really going to die all alone?

Death was frightening. However, what scared Subaru more than death was the idea of dying without having achieved anything; dying completely worthless, devoid of any meaning to this world. This thought frightened her to her core.

Right as Subaru thought she was going to die, another voice echoed in the alley.

"Stop it right there, you villains," the voice rang, silencing the alley in an instant.

It was as if time had stopped. Not in a literal sense, but in a way as if everything else in the world stopped and all attention was now directed at the person who just spoke. This was the case not only for Subaru, but also for the three assailants. They were unable to do anything except just stand there and stare. The person emanated a presence that stunned everyone. He was a young man who could only be described as beautiful. His silver hair glowed even in the dark back alley, his amethyst eyes emanated sincereness, and all his facial features were arranged perfectly. His eyes, nose, lips, and eyebrows were shaped to perfection. He wore a robe with an embroidering of a bird that looked like a hawk.

“I can’t allow you to go any further than that,” he said, condemning the assailants head on. “Your actions stop now.”

4

The events that unfolded afterward were like a scene straight out of an action movie.

“I-I’m gonna remember this!” one of the assailants yelled.

“There won’t be a next time!” another one exclaimed.

And so the three assailants fled the scene.

Seeing them off, the silver-haired boy relaxed his shoulders in relief.

“Bring it on whenever you like,” a gray cat-like animal said, waving its hand at the assailants. “Although I doubt they’d ever be able to do anything.”

The cat was floating, swaying its long tail from side to side. He had adorable features like that of a mascot, but the assailants fled as soon as they laid eyes on him. That, and of course the magic used by this young guy also must’ve contributed to their fleeing. The magic involved launching icicles at the assailants. It didn’t resemble any magic Subaru expected from a fantasy world, but was heavily practical in its utility.

The young man and the cat had entered the back alley in pursuit of the boy who had run past Subaru earlier. According to them, he had stolen something from them and they were chasing after him to retrieve it.

“I’m guessing it was something of value, right? Can I help you guys out somehow?” Subaru suggested, unable to just leave without helping the person who saved her life. Of course, it’s not like we share a common goal or anything, but I can at least follow them and see if I can help them out somehow.

The young man said nothing, hesitating to answer Subaru’s suggestion. As he hesitated, the cat spoke up. “Why don’t we take her up on her offer? It’s not like we have a better chance of success just wandering around the capital ourselves. We could use a helping hand. Also, she can be your meat-shield.”

“Rude!” Subaru exclaimed.

“Tink, you’re getting carried away,” the young man admonished.

The floating cat covered her mouth with her hands. Side eyeing the cat, the young man let out a sigh. “I really can’t give you any reward. Is that okay?” he said, showing a faint sense of anxiety and hope in his beautiful profile.

“The only reward I need is knowing I fulfilled my one-good-deed-a-day quota!” Subaru replied, extending out her hand to shake. “Also, I get the bonus of spending an entire day with the most handsome man I’ve ever met in my entire life that’s like a prince!”

“I don’t really understand what you’re saying,” he said, as he accepted Subaru’s hand.

And so the Natsuki Subaru Team was formed. The duo plus the cat showed exceptional teamwork, located the person in question with ease, achieved their objective, and lived happily ever after… “Isn’t what really happened, though, unfortunately.” Subaru sighed.

“What do you mean?” the young man asked, tilting his head.

“We’re on a manhunt in this big town,” Subaru replied as she looked over the town from an elevated viewpoint, “and we have no one to help us, or any knowledge of the place. We’re simply lacking too many tools."

Even though they were on the hunt for a precious item, their investigation had hit a dead end. For one thing, Subaru's legs had started to give in, as she didn't have a lot of stamina. Secondly, they lacked resources, such as the aforementioned knowledge of the town and helping hand to achieve their goal. And above all else, there was something Subaru was facing, which was a dire problem she couldn't tell the young man.

"I can't read anything…" she muttered to herself. She was able to understand the language, but she couldn't read any of the things written on the signs on the streets. She had fooled herself up to this point that the signs only depicted some sort of modern art, but she had to start facing the unfortunate fact that she just couldn't read the language of this new world.

However, the young man remained kind to Subaru. "At least we know we have to start looking in the slums. That's certainly progress."

So he's not only good looking, but also kind. This was a breath of fresh air for Subaru, who was beginning to get worn out by the cold-bitter reality of the world she had been thrown into. Additionally, the young man possessed a sense of naivety, something she hadn't realized the first time she met him, which made her maternal instincts kick in.

"I've always been good at judging a person's character, so I can say this with certainty," the cat said. "You're somewhat of an idiot, aren't you?"

"Shut up," Subaru retorted. "You're just a mascot. Why don't you sugarcoat your words a little. How're you expecting to raise magical girls with that sort of attitude?"

"The only one I'm raising is this one," the cat replied, indicating the young man. "By the way, we haven't heard your name yet. How about we introduce ourselves?"

"Self introduction! Now that you mention it, we haven't done it yet.

Alright, I'll go first," Subaru said as she pushed herself off the ledge she was leaning on and cleared her throat. She then pointed at the sky and posed by twisting her hips. "My name is Natsuki Subaru! I'm completely ignorant about this world and utterly broke! Pleased to meet you!"

"Just sounds like you're in a dire predicament," the cat said. "Well, I'm Tinkerbell. Call me Tink. Nice to meet you~."

Tink then flew into Subaru's hand, bumping it with her whole body in a handshake-like gesture.

Subaru tilted her head. "Tinkerbell is the same name of a fairy I know. Although that fairy is a girl."

"Then it's all fine, since I'm a girl too," Tink said.

"Is that right?" Subaru replied, squishing Tink who was still in her hands.

"By the way," the young man said in a depressed voice. "I'd appreciate it if you don't call Tink a fairy. I don't mind what you call me, but Tink is…"

"Eh, what?!" Subaru shrieked. The young man was apparently looking down, his eyes with long eyelashes quivering. "Did I say something to upset you?!"

"It's fine," Tink said nonchalantly. "She didn't mean any ill-will. Seems like 'fairy' is a form of compliment for her," she said, directing her words at the young man.

"Is that…true?"

"Uhh, yeah!" Subaru exclaimed, deciding to go along with Tink's words. "I meant it to mean adorable or fantastical, or something along those lines! I guess you guys don't use this word like that here? Haha, sorry, I'll be careful from now on!"

I mean, I'm just going along with Tink's explanation, but they're not all lies either. I really didn't know 'fairy' was an insult in this world, and didn't use it with any ill intent.

"I see." The young man nodded upon listening to Subaru's explanation. He then suddenly closed in on Subaru.

"Ueah?" Subaru blurted out, taken by surprise by the young man's behavior. A waft of the young man's fragrance tickled her nose.

"No wonder you have such clean hands," the young man commented. "You also don't look like the blue-collar job sort of person, and your hair color is uncommon too. Hm? What's wrong?"

"Y-You're too close," Subaru said uncomfortably. "It's a treat for my eyes, don't get me wrong, but you're too close."

The young man looked confused by Subaru's words.

Is he unaware of how good-looking he is? However, seeing the young man furrowing his brows in confusion, Subaru decided to change the topic. "I-It's your turn now. What's yooour name?" Subaru asked in a light manner, in an attempt to hide how flustered she was.

However, the young man looked down for a moment as soon as he heard the question. Did I do something wrong? Or was it conceited of me to ask such a good looking guy for his name? Subaru began sinking into a deep spiral of self doubt.

"Luna," the young man suddenly said.

"What?" Subaru blurted, feeling like she had been lifted from the spiral by his response.

As Subaru took a deep breath, the young man directed his amethyst eyes directly at her. "Please call me Luna."

He answered my question, but it doesn't look like he wants me to call him that. I would've also appreciated it if he told me his last name, which woulda been easier for me to call him by. Calling a boy, and a super good-looking one at that, I just met by his name is too high of a hurdle for me. I guess I'll address him with second-person pronouns for now.

Watching the interaction between Subaru and the young man, Luna, from Subaru's hands, Tink muttered to herself, "Can't say you have good taste."

However, no one heard her comment.

5

It was a while after they began searching in the slums when they stumbled across some promising information.

"You must be looking for Forte," a person in the slums said. "The blonde kid you're talking about is a short kid, right?"

Knowing it was her help that had advanced Luna's search, Subaru became ecstatic. After all, it was her portrait that helped make this possible. "There was even a period when I considered becoming a professional artist. Although I gave up on the dream after learning there were way more talented people than me."

"Is that so," Luna responded. "But I think this looks reeeally good."

"Thanks! That makes me really happy!" Subaru exclaimed while hiding the wooden canvas with the portrait of the blonde boy, whose name they learned was Forte, behind her back. "Honestly, thanks."

Honestly, I was worried if I would be able to draw Forte properly, considering that I only saw him for a split second during the most dangerous moment in my life. It also didn't help that the most impactful encounter in my life followed right after that. Despite her worries, she was able to draw a portrait of the boy that captured the general feel of him, which led to obtaining concrete information on him.

"But a loot house, huh?" Subaru muttered. "I can't imagine it being a peaceful place."

"Most probably, considering it's a place where they also sell stolen items from there," Luna said, agreeing with Subaru. "Say, you've done more than enough already. You don't have to tag along any further…"

“Wait, wait, wait! I had a feeling you were gonna say something like that, but just wait! I can’t let you go alone to a place we know could be dangerous! That fairy, I mean…” Subaru said, stopping mid sentence since she knew that she had just used offensive language. She then took a step toward Luna, closing the distance between them, and continued restating her last remark. “Tink isn’t with you either!”

The elemental spirit Subaru was careful not to call a fairy was not by Luna’s side at the moment. She had been told that she could only come out for a certain amount of time each day, and that she had already used it all up for today. In other words, Luna and Subaru were on their own.

“There’s no way I could leave you alone,” Subaru continued. “You’re more reckless than I thought.”

“You’re one to talk. You wander around aimlessly without any forethought. Besides, if it weren’t for me, you could’ve been really hurt by those three women.”

“Well, you never know. Maybe my hidden powers could’ve suddenly awakened and…nah, actually that wouldn’t have happened. All my luck has been used up by meeting you.”

Luna tilted his head. “I don’t really get it, but does that mean you’ve lived an unhappy life until now?”

“You’re technically correct, but that’s not what I want you to take away from that!” Subaru exclaimed, feeling flustered. She touched her fingertips together and continued. “What I’m trying to say is that I don’t want to leave you alone. This is something I started on my own volition. At least let me see it through to the end.”

“Well,” Luna started after a brief pause, “I am also worried about leaving you on your own, Subaru.”

“Whoa!” Subaru blurted out, caught off guard by Luna calling her by her name.

Luna looked confused by her reaction.

I'm beginning to manage talking to him naturally, but being called by my given name by someone like Luna, who's a natural-born hottie, is still too much for me to handle. Subaru paused for a moment and said nothing. But my intention isn't all impure. He saved my life. Not only that, but he took his time to help me even though he was in a dire situation himself. I need to repay him somehow. Otherwise, I won't be able to live without regrets. That's who I am, who Natsuki Subaru is.

"I'll take front. You stay behind me," Luna said as they walked through the slums. "You seem like a…reeeally reckless person."

"Yeah, even I know at this point that I'm more powerless than I thought, so I won't do anything… Oh looks like we're here." As they were talking, they arrived at a big old house-like building in the heart of the slums. "This is the loot house we were looking for."

"So this is it."

It was starting to get dark, drawing closer to night. Seems like this world doesn't have much light during this time of day. Subaru had noticed that most places outside of the capital didn't have any sources of light aside from the ones residents used for their daily lives. Added to the fact that they were in the slums, there wasn't even a light post available.

"It's completely dark," Subaru said. "What are we gonna…"

"I have a lagmite stone. We should be set with light with this."

"Lag what?" Subaru asked, furrowing his brows at the unfamiliar terminology.

Luna took out a white stone from his breast pocket, then banged it on a nearby wall, causing the stone to start glowing.

"Whoa," Subaru let out, looking at the glowing white stone in Luna's hand. "So this is a lagmite stone."

"By applying force to it, the mana stored inside the stone gets released and starts glowing," Luna explained. "How did you survive until now without even knowing this, Subaru?"

"By relying on some energies I don't quite understand that were discovered by significant people from the past."

There's an old saying that you never know what you have until you lose it, but I guess I never realized how convenient my life was until I came to this inconvenient world. I should've appreciated the things I had back home more.

"Alright, we need to retrieve the insignia," Luna said, ready to go into the loot house with the white stone in his hand. "Let's go."

"Wait, wait, wait just a minute." However, Subaru grabbed Luna's arm and held him back. "Things aren't that simple."

"What?" Luna asked with a confused look on his face.

Subaru sighed. This is what I was talking about. He's too honest with his approach. "What I'm trying to say is," Subaru continued, "the people inside stole your insignia, right? Do you think they'll hand it back to you peacefully if you walk in there, asking for it back?"

"Why not? If I take my time to explain, they might come to realize what they did was bad."

"What an idealistic view." Subaru paused before continuing. "And what if they refuse to give it back?"

"Then we'll…" Luna started, then made a face of realization. "Ah, we'll get into a kerfuffle?"

"What an adorable way of putting it," Subaru replied, shrugging her shoulders. "You're really pressing on my maternal instincts."

I don't know if it's because of his pacifist nature, but his views are a bit too naive for a world where a gang of ladies try to rob you in a back alley. Subaru was sure the situation would get violent once Luna walked into the loot house. And not just a regular fight on the street. There'll be blood for sure.

"So, I'll go negotiate with them first," Subaru suggested.

“Subaru, no!” Luna exclaimed. “You’re too weak.”

“I might be a girl, but being called weak pisses me off too! At least call me something cuter, like fragile!”

“You’re fragile!”

“You’re making my heart skip!”

I can tell that he’s really worried about me, considering how he rephrased his words. But I can’t back down now. I want to impress him. I want to impress him and get his stuff back.

“I may be fragile,” Subaru began, “but it’s because I’m fragile that I never resort to violence. I’m sure you could tell I’m a pretty darn good talker, right?”

“Hm…”

“I’m gonna give it a shot, and if it doesn’t work out then I’ll come back and we can formulate a plan together,” Subaru added, as she put her hands together and winked. “Let me give it a try. I’ll at least try to see if they really have the insignia.” As Subaru pleaded, she looked up at Luna’s face, astounded that he looked beautiful even from that angle.

Luna said nothing for a while, then finally let out a groan. “Promise me you won’t do anything too reckless.”

Looks like he’s accepting my suggestion.

Luna handed Subaru the lagmite stone.

“Leave it to me,” Subaru said with a smile as she received the stone, which didn’t possess any heat despite the amount of light it was emitting. “I’m not gonna do anything that’ll make you more worried than you are right now. Why don’t you go home and have a bath ready for me, Luna,” she remarked as she started off for the loot house.

“Ah,” Luna let out in a husky voice.

“Hm?” Subaru stopped in his tracks at Luna’s voice.

Luna was staring at Subaru, then his eyes started wandering. “Sorry. I’ll make sure to apologize for that once you come back.”

“I don’t know what you want to apologize for, but stop making such a face. You look like a lost puppy. You’re tickling my maternal instincts.”

“Stop being such an idiot.”

What a cute way to scold me. Subaru started towards the loot house again. She held the handle on the door and slowly opened it, making a creaking sound. Can’t say it’s safe to keep the door unlocked. I suppose it makes sense if the owner is here. But if the owner really is here, then why is it— “So dark?” Subaru muttered the last part of her thought aloud.

Using the lagmite stone, she looked around the pitch black loot house. The first thing she saw was a giant bar counter. Upon closer inspection, she noticed that the overall decor of the store was that of a bar.

Maybe this place used to be a bar. However, it was apparent the store was no longer in operation. Instead, there were miscellaneous goods stacked on top of each other all over the place.

They must all be stolen items. Each of the goods had a wooden plate hanging on them, which Subaru assumed were prices. It looks like they have numbers written on them. Maybe it’s my chance to learn some letters used in this world.

With such thoughts in her mind, Subaru began searching around to see if the insignia Luna was looking for was there. “Huh?” she let out, feeling as if she had stepped in a puddle. Noticing that her sneakers were wet with some kind of thick liquid, her mouth instantly went dry. She started following the trail of liquid with her light, and there it was. The decapitated corpse of a giant old lady with a missing arm.

Subaru screamed. Facing the brutal reality of death, the smell of iron began tickling her nose. Or rather, she had finally recognized it. The eerie atmosphere had made her subconsciously ignore it, but now she couldn't escape it once she faced the undeniable reality of the corpse. A bad feeling suddenly enveloped her. I-I have to run away. I have to run away right now and get to Luna.

However, before Subaru could move, a man spoke to her. "Ah, so you saw it. That's too bad. I suppose I have no choice, then."

The man's voice was deep and had an indifferent tone to it. But at the same time, he also sounded amused.

Before Subaru could turn around to see who was speaking, something hit her from the direction the voice was coming from at a great impact, causing her to crash into a wall.

Subaru groaned at the impact. She fell on the floor with her limbs spread out. The lagmite stone left her hand, lighting up an obscure part of the room. Still disoriented, she suddenly felt heat on her stomach.

"Gahh, it's hot!" Subaru groaned.

The heat spread over her body. She instinctively figured this heat would kill her if she didn't do something about it. However, she couldn't move even though she tried.

It's hot, it's hot, it's hot, it's hot, it's hot, it's hot.

She tried screaming but she was only able to cough up blood. Streams of blood overflowed in her mouth.

Why am I on the verge of drowning to death while feeling intense heat when I'm on land?

That's when Subaru realized she was lying in a pool of blood.

Oh, this is all my blood. I gotta say it's my first time drowning in my own blood. I guess most people who have only experienced it once right before they die. And unfortunately, I'm about to follow the same path as those people.

As soon as she began imagining her demise, she started to lose consciousness. The agonizing heat, and the suffocating feeling of drowning, all started to fade. Her consciousness was slipping out of her body, and was about to get taken away somewhere far away into the distance.

Maybe I could be released from all my worries if I don’t fight this anymore.

“—baru?”

A bell-like voice salvaged Natsuki Subaru’s soul that was sinking to oblivion.

It must be a hallucination. I can’t see, hear, or feel anything. Why would I so conveniently be able to hear his voice? Please let it be a mistake. Please don’t come into the building, Luna. One stupid visitor from another world dying is enough.

As Subaru prayed, a scream echoed in the room, and another person joined her in the pool of blood. The new body collapsed next to Subaru, where her arm was spread out. The pale-white hand of the newcomer overlapped with her blood-stained hand. Though it was all just a coincidence, the hand that was on top of Subaru’s twitched a little as if it was trying to hold her tight.

“…for me,” Subaru squeezed out, refusing to completely lose consciousness, attempting to buy some time. However, she had already lost all her senses. She couldn’t even feel the pain of the heat anymore. There was no point in saying what she was going to say. But, I don’t care. I gotta make this promise.

“I will definitely—”

Save you.

In the next moment, Natsuki Subaru died.

6

“So what’s it going to be, missy?” an intimidating woman with thick eyebrows asked. “What are you spacing out about?”

"Huh?" Subaru said, confused. She batted her eyes several times and took a deep breath, and repeated, "Huh?"

"Stop saying that!" the intimidating woman yelled. "You're the one who started talking to me. So are you gonna buy an abble or what?" the woman asked, as she shoved a round red fruit in front of Subaru's face.

"A-Abble?" Subaru repeated. It's just an apple. No, but since she's calling it an abble, maybe it's something completely different. Either way I can't buy anything right now since…

"I'm broke," Subaru said.

The intimidating woman paused. "I see, so you're just screwing with me. In that case…"

"In that case?"

"Get outta here! You're bad for business!" the woman yelled at the top of her lungs.

Subaru scuttled out there as fast as possible. After making her escape, she stopped and looked around. The sun was beaming on top of her head.

"What's going on?" she asked herself, tilting her head.

7

"Take that!" Subaru exclaimed, as she stomped on top of the foot of the woman with sanpaku eyes. "Bet you couldn't strengthen this part of your body!"

The sanpaku-eyed woman screeched and fell to the ground. Subaru quickly picked up the knife she dropped and faced the other two. I'm gonna call them the Anpontan trio for now.

Subaru glared at the remaining An and Tan, who had been unable to react to her movements. Seeing Pon get taken out like that made them too scared to retaliate.

Then I'll just use that fear to my advantage.

"Just so you know, I love the sight of blood," Subaru said as she started licking the knife. "So, which one of you will quench the dry pavement with your blood first? Hehehehe."

"Sh-She's licking the knife!" screamed An.

"She's crazy! She's out of her mind! We need to run away," exclaimed Tan.

They grabbed Pon and hurriedly ran out of the back alley. Watching them run away while licking the knife, Subaru let out a sigh. "Th-That should do it… What the hell was that? Were they trying to get payback for earlier? They seemed way too oblivious if so."

Subaru was surprised at how the same three women—Anpontan—from a few hours ago picked a fight with her again. However, this time, she was able to defend herself. Although it's a good thing that I simulated a battle plan for when I get challenged again, I didn't expect it to be used against the same exact opponents.

Subaru spat on the ground. "This is unsanitary," she said about the knife she had taken from Pon's waist, "but I guess I should keep this."

It seems unsafe to walk around with it without a sheath, but at least it's easy to carry. And most importantly, it's good to have a weapon. Now, I have to hurry.

"Luna is in danger!"

I was knocked out in the loot house. I don't know why I'm back here. Maybe a random healer saved me. I don't know. I don't know, but I'll think about that later. What I have to do right now is to go back to the loot house. That's it. I have to save Luna, the handsome young man who's too honest to a fault. I can't let him die.

"Hurry up, Natsuki Subaru! It's time to show a little guts!" she said to herself as she began running to the loot house.

“It might sound crazy, but have you died recently, Granny?” Subaru asked the old lady standing behind the bar counter.

The old lady laughed at Subaru. “What are you saying? Sure, I may look like I’m about to die, but I most certainly have never experienced it yet. Could happen anytime soon though, considering my age.”

The old lady took a gulp from her glass behind the bar as Subaru frowned and watched her. The old lady was the owner of the loot house. She had greeted Subaru when she burst into the store. Her name was Old Woman Rom.

She was over two meters tall, and wore clothing made from different fabrics. Despite having just met her, Subaru could tell she was a nice old lady. She didn’t make a single complaint even when Subaru asked rather rude questions. However, talking to her only made Subaru confused.

The last time wasn’t she… “Dead?” Subaru muttered to herself.

Subaru remembered Old Woman Rom’s dead body with her neck gouged and her arm missing.

I was attacked right after finding her dead. But then why are we both alive and well right now? Was I hallucinating Old Woman Rom’s death? But I’ve never even met her before. How could I hallucinate about someone I’ve never met? And what about my memory of looking for the loot house with Luna?

“What’s even real and why am I even here?” Subaru sighed. Being summoned to another world was confusing enough for her. She felt like her head was about to explode as it was, but this new development furthered her confusion.

What in the world am I even doing all this for?

“No, I’m an idiot,” she said to herself after spiraling in self doubt. “I must be a real idiot.” I may not know how I ended up in another world, but I know why I’m here in the loot house. It’s to repay my gratitude to Luna. Even if everything was just a dream, Luna definitely exists somewhere. And even if he doesn’t remember who I am, the fact that I owe him doesn’t change.

Subaru strengthened her determination to uplift her spirit. And right as she found her new resolve, another voice hit her ears, causing her to lift her head up.

“Huh? Who’s this lady? Hey, Old Woman Rom, you better not have sold me out.”

The one talking was a boy with a cheeky attitude—Forte.

As Old Woman Rom intervened between them, Subaru searched her breast pocket for the item she believed could be used as a bargaining chip. An item she brought from her old world and a product of its technology—her cellphone.

“Now, now, calm down,” Subaru said. “Why not have a chat with me, young man? It’s an interesting offer, I promise. It wouldn’t hurt to listen.”

9

“I see, so you’re one of them.”

With Subaru’s careless words, the situation quickly turned bloody.

“Ah, ah, ah.” Subaru was knocked to the floor, unable to utter a word, her eyes wide open.

“God dammit!” Forte exclaimed.

He was next to Subaru with his knees on the floor, biting his lips in vexation. He looked angry at himself for being powerless. Subaru understood his feelings.

“Let me return this to you. I don’t need it anymore,” a tall figure said as he placed a glass on the loot house floor. It had once contained milk, but was now empty with drops of blood lining its broken rim. The blood belonged to Old Woman Rom, whose neck had been slit just a few moments prior.

The tall figure was a man with braided hair who called himself Eins. After placing the glass on the floor, he started twirling his knife with his other hand. It was a kukri knife, a machete with a curved blade. As he twirled it, he turned around to face Subaru and Forte.

He had long slanted eyes and a faint smile on his face that made him seem like he was enjoying the smell of blood residue. His skin was pale-white and he had a handsome face, but the black clothes stained with blood gave off a dangerous vibe. Behind him was Old Woman Rom's giant body lying on the floor.

Subaru's negotiation with Forte over Luna's insignia had been interrupted by Eins, who had commissioned Forte to steal it. And now, the situation unexpectedly turned bloody.

Or perhaps, Eins planned this all along.

"I'm never gonna forgive ya," Forte declared.

"Hm, I don't recommend fighting back. It'll just hurt more."

"You'll hurt me either way, won't ya? You crazy bastard!"

"I mean, you'll only make it difficult for me to kill you painlessly," Eins said, slowly shaking his head. "I'm rather clumsy when it comes to handling my knives. My brother constantly points it out."

He twirled the knife in his hand like a performer. The way he handled the knife freely represented the imminent death that was soon to follow.

"Sorry for draggin' you into this," said Forte.

"I-I…" Subaru tried to respond while still sitting on the floor, unable to get up.

Without giving her a chance to stop him, Forte started dashing around. He quite literally became the wind, causing Subaru to lose sight of him, and moved about the store at an immense speed.

Forte kicked the floor and picked up the glass that had been used to kill Old Woman Rom. He then bounced off the wall and rushed towards Eins.

“The Divine Protection of Wind, how beautiful,” Eins commented somewhat ecstatically. “It would seem the world loves you. How envious,” he said as he swung his knife.

Forte, who attempted to attack Eins from behind, was struck down by the knife, slicing his shoulder open. He fell backwards as his blood splattered all over the place, landing on top of Old Woman Rom’s body. As if fate was playing a cruel joke, the two dead bodies looked like good friends hugging each other.

“You’re not taking any action, I see,” Eins said as he closed in on Subaru, who couldn’t even utter a word and only watched Forte’s attempt to take him down.

Subaru let out a small squeal.

Eins was covered in the blood of his two victims. He wiped drops of it on his pale cheek off with the back of his hand. Being stared down by his dark eyes, Subaru had to remind herself to breathe. And, as if being pushed by her irrepressible rage, she stood up.

“Finally, you’re up,” Eins said with a smile. “A bit slow and boring, but not bad.”

As soon as she saw him smile, Subaru couldn’t hold back her anger and charged at him. However, her impulsive attack was easily countered.

“It’s no use,” Eins said, digging his knee into Subaru’s abdomen.

Subaru let out a groan. This is nothing like the kicks and punches I experienced in the back alley. This is real ‘power’.

Subaru felt her internal organs getting destroyed by Eins’s powerful kick. Vomiting the milk she drank earlier, she staggered back, clutching her stomach.

“It’s over,” Eins whispered. “Let me take you to where the angels are.”

After making such poetic remarks, Eins leaned forward. Alarms went off in Subaru's head when she saw this. He's coming for another attack, she thought, before moving without hesitation.

"Wha—" Eins exclaimed.

Subaru predicted that he was going to go for her stomach again, and moved accordingly. Her prediction was proven right. She dodged his attack precisely, causing him to miss her completely.

"U-Uwaaaahhhh," Subaru screamed as she thrust the knife she took from Pon in the back alley at Eins's chest. Whether she was going to kill him or not didn't cross her mind. She was simply desperately trying to survive the imminent danger she was in. However, the knife never reached his chest.

"Ah, that was wonderful," Eins praised, the knife stabbing through his left hand. He could've stopped Subaru by catching his wrist, but he chose to let her stab him, as though praising her efforts.

The sensation she felt in her hand of a knife penetrating another human's flesh nearly made her scream in disgust, but before she could make a noise, Eins swung his knife, slicing through her body horizontally.

"Uh…"

Subaru fell to the floor, spilling out all her organs.

10

"Wait, wait, Luna!" Subaru exclaimed. Falling victim to the unexplained phenomenon again, Subaru was on the verge of having a mental breakdown. She was moments away from giving up on everything and collapsing on the spot, but instead she desperately chased after the silver-haired young man she spotted on the street. Hearing her call out his name, the young man in the white robe stopped.

Good, I wasn't mistaken. It's actually him. Subaru was relieved to see that he was in fact the purpled-eyed young man she was hoping to reunite with. She felt like everything she went through was worth it the moment she saw his face. She couldn't fathom what kind of grueling experience he had to go through after they split up at the loot house. She wanted to hear all about it, and she also wanted to share her miserable experiences with him as well.

I'm sure he'll listen to what I have to say without judgment.

Subaru was about to cry. However, her expectations were destroyed by the young man's next words.

"What's your problem?"

"Huh?"

"I don't know who you are, but what the heck are you thinking calling me by the same name as the Warlock of Envy?!" the young man yelled, furrowing his well-formed brows in anger.

It was Subaru's first time seeing him this angry. He didn't even show this much anger to the three ladies in the back alley. She felt a chill run down her spine, and feared she may have done something she wasn't supposed to.

Seeing her apparent fear, Luna heaved a deep sigh. "Will you answer my question? Why did you call me by such a name?"

"Wh-Why…?" Subaru said. "Because that's what I was told to call you."

"I don't know who told you to call me that, but that's not good taste. It's quite insulting to call someone by the same name as the Warlock of Envy, an embodiment of curses, whose name is even taboo to say." The young man glared at Subaru without any attempt to hide his disdain. She was utterly confused as to what he was angry about. However, she realized that other pedestrians who were listening in on them were glaring at her, which she concluded was a sign that she was on the wrong side of the argument.

At this time and place, in this world, it looks like I'm the bad guy. But why? What did I do to deserve this?

"Did you really not have any ill intentions?" the young man asked, seeing Subaru look absolutely defeated.

"I…"

"Look at you. Uhh… I may have been a little too harsh."

His words reflected his kind nature. Subaru was confused, nonetheless, by how he was acting. His words resembled that of a person who's never met her before. He's acting like all the things that happened, from helping me to everything after that, never even happened.

As she tried to organize her thoughts, the situation kept developing.

A small figure suddenly jumped in the middle of a crowd, crept up behind the young man, and swiftly snatched something from his pocket.

The young man was stunned at the sudden event, as was Subaru who yelled, "What the?!"

The young man quickly checked his breast pocket, where the small figure snatched something from, and turned blue. And so did Subaru.

"Forte?!" she screamed.

The small figure was none other than Forte, who Subaru witnessed get murdered by Eins at the loot house. He was now making his escape down the main street.

"I've been had!" the young man exclaimed. "Was this what the distraction was for…? Are you working with him?!"

"N-No! I'm…"

Due to calling out Forte's name, Subaru was suspected of having a hand in the robbery. The young man hesitated on whether he should apprehend her on the spot, but he decided to chase after Forte to retrieve his stuff.

"Please! That's important!" the young man screamed as he ran after Forte.

Subaru chased the young man as well. “Wait, Wait! Why! Why is this happening?! Will someone please be nice to me! If not, what’s the point of even being summoned to another world?!” Unable to contain her emotions towards the absurdity of this new world, Subaru’s sorrow changed into anger and spilled out of her in the form of a scream. Her cry went unanswered, however. Neither a God who accidentally summoned her, nor a beautiful young girl who invited her to save the world, existed anywhere.

“Shit! I lost them!” Subaru muttered as she entered the back alley the two ran into, which was a dead end. They must’ve gone over this wall. It must’ve been easy with Forte’s physical abilities and Luna’s ice magic.

However, Subaru, who couldn’t imitate either of those abilities, had no way of getting over it.

“Where did they… The loot house?” Subaru concluded that if everything was going to end up at the loot house, she might as well head there too. But, considering all the tragedy she had experienced there, she was extremely hesitant to go there again. But what else can I do, then?

“Fine! I’ll go! I’ll go, dammit!” Subaru screamed, smacking a nearby wall.

She turned around to get out of the back alley and head to the loot house. But, what she saw after turning around caused her to stop and heave a long sigh of despair. “You’ve gotta be kidding me.”

The three ladies were standing at the entrance of the back alley, preventing Subaru from going any further.

11

“Return by Death, huh?” Subaru muttered to herself. “An ability that gets activated when I’m defeated sounds perfect for a loser like me.”

Subaru discovered what her power was after having died three times. The wounds on her stomach where she had been sliced twice were gone, as was the wound that should have left a scar on her back where she was stabbed earlier.

I'm glad they're all gone. I am a girl after all. I don't want any ugly scars left on my body. "Although I still have the scar from when I fell and stabbed myself on the head with a chopstick as a kid. Jeez, I'm still not even married yet. How are you gonna take responsibility, you stupid chopstick."

I guess I'm asking too much from a wooden chopstick. Lemme forget about this for now. It's got nothing to do with anything. "Could I say my power is one that reverses time…? Time manipulation sounds like an OP ability if this were fiction, but what's this about not being able to use it unless I die? So useless…"

Subaru had experimented to see if there were other ways to activate this ability, such as chanting magical-like terms, but nothing worked. The only method seemed to be by dying. "I knew I was a persistent one, but never would've guessed it was this much." There's an old saying that goes: idiots never learn till they die. But it's a bit overkill that I can't even die. Actually, I technically do die. I guess there isn't even a proverb for me anymore.

"But I still have my cell phone and corn soup," she said. Her cell phone, which she thought she had lost, was in her pocket, and in her hand was a plastic bag with a can of corn soup that was supposed to have been drunk by Old Woman Rom. "And I know these can be sold at a high price… This knowledge will come in handy, I guess?" People in this world will go crazy for this stuff. I'll sell them to gather war funds to prepare for my upcoming challenge. That's the most efficient option for me right now as a person who has no one else to rely on.

"But I can't help but imagine that Old Woman Rom would've been killed even without my meddling." It's highly likely Forte provoked Eins by being too greedy when they negotiated for the price of the stolen insignia. In which case, Forte's corpse might've been at the loot house too when I first found Old Woman Rom's body. If I choose not to do anything out of fear, they'll end up getting killed again. That… "Leaves a bad aftertaste… Man, when did I become such a saint of a person?” I thought I was a more selfish person who didn’t care about other people, and that’s why I was okay with not going to school anymore.

After deprecating herself several times in her head, Subaru slowly stood up. She was ready. I’m going back to the loot house to prevent the assault. I’ll save Old Woman Rom and Forte’s life, and use that as a bargaining chip to retrieve the insignia. Then, I’m gonna return it to Luna… I mean, that young man.

“So Luna was a fake name, huh? I guess that makes sense. Why would anyone give their real name to a person like me who’s obviously suspicious in so many ways? But even so…” I want to know his name. His real one. Even if the timeline doesn’t exist anymore, the fact that he saved my life hasn’t changed. And if I end up in the same situation, he would definitely save me every time. “I’m gonna do my best so he’ll tell me his real name this time.”

“Someooone! Help meee!” Subaru’s voice ripped through the back alley, causing the three assailants to get anxious.

“Wh-Who just screams outta nowhere?! This bitch!” one of the women yelled.

It was Subaru’s fourth time encountering them. The three women were the ones who killed her last time, albeit the whole situation seemed like an accident. However, she wasn’t going to take any chances as there was no guarantee that she’d be able to escape as well as she did two deaths ago. And relying on public help is more than a viable option. If someone helps me, great. If this is a cold-hearted world where nobody helps a stranger, then I’ll just kick Pon in the leg and grab her knife…

“Stop right there.” A voice, not exactly loud but a resonating one, traveled through the back alley, making Subaru feel as though a wave of heat just passed by.

Subaru and the three assailants were petrified. The person responsible for the voice was standing at the entrance to the back alley. She was a woman with long, fiery red hair and sky-blue eyes emanating a strong will, as if to say they won't ignore any wrongdoings in the world. She had long arms and legs and a tall stature, and wore white clothes. Her beauty was so beyond imagination that it would be impossible for even an artist to replicate it on a canvas. Such a woman began approaching the four women in the back alley.

"No matter what the reason may have been for the situation to escalate to this point," the woman began, "I won't allow you three to harass her any further."

Even though her words were that of a warning against the three assailants to protect Subaru, her voice made it sound as though she was singing a comforting love song. It's like her whole purpose of existing is to guard and love and protect everything in the world. Her immense presence makes me wanna continue hearing her voice for as long as I can if time allows me…

"Y-You're…" one of the Anpontan said.

The three assailants had visibly turned blue, their lips trembling at the sight of the woman. They looked up and down at her and gulped.

"Fiery red hair, blue eyes…a knight's uniform and a knight's sword with the mark of a dragon claw," one of the three assailants pointed out.

"She's the Female Knight among Female Knights!" exclaimed another.

"A-Adelheid… The Sword Saint Adelheid?!" the last one cried.

"Seems like I don't need to introduce myself," the woman with the fiery red hair said. "Although, I believe that title is a bit too much for me," she added with a wink.

However, she quickly stiffened her expression, intimidating the three assailants with her stern gaze. They gulped as cold sweat began to appear on their faces.

“I’ll let you leave if you don’t want further trouble,” she began. “However, if you want to continue, I will be your opponent. You may outnumber me three to one, but I won’t back down as a knight.”

“A-As if! There’s no way in hell it’s worth fighting you!”

The three women scuttled out of the back alley, fearing Adelheid. As she watched them leave, she let out a short sigh then faced Subaru with a softer expression.

“We’re both safe now. Are you hurt?”

“You’re such a valiant woman…” Subaru praised, putting her hands together in amazement.

“Hm?” The woman tilted her head, confused.

13

Subaru was back at the store that was also the loot house. She wanted to buy the insignia off of Forte before Eins got involved. He was a dangerous man, and since she couldn’t figure out a way to defeat him, she wanted to avoid him at all costs. Consequently, their negotiation was going smoothly. She was able to play on Forte’s greedy side, and with Old Woman Rom’s help, everything seemed like it was going well, but then someone showed up at the door.

“Don’t open the door, Forte!” Subaru yelled. “He’ll kill you!”

However, the person who walked through the entrance was someone Subaru wasn’t expecting.

“I would never do something so horrifying out of the blue…” the person who walked in said.

He was the young man with silver hair, and the rightful owner of the insignia.

“Eh?” Subaru let out, surprised to see the familiar face.

Wait, he was able to locate this store this quickly without my help?!

Subaru couldn't help but realize how much she was holding the young man back when they were searching for the insignia together. However, the situation unfolded despite her shock.

"Young man, you're an elf, aren't you?" Old Woman Rom pointed out.

"Technically, no," the silver-haired man answered. "I'm only a half-elf."

"Half-elf? A silver-haired half-elf? C-Could it be that you are…?!"

"No! That has nothing to do with me! I hate being mistaken like that…"

Subaru listened to them talk from the sidelines, not knowing what was going on.

I can't tell what they're talking about, but I have a feeling it's related to him not wanting to be called Luna. But that's something I can worry about later. Right now, we don't have time. "Guys, let's calm down for a second. Firstly, Forte, why don't you just return the insignia you stole from him? And you," Subaru said, turning his attention to the half-elf. "Just take the insignia and leave, and be careful not to get it stolen again, alright? This is friendly advice from someone with more experience."

The young man looked confused. "Why are you being so friendly to me? Also, why do I have to receive advice from you when I'm pretty sure I'm older than you."

"I don't like it one bit either," Forte interjected sullenly. "Miss, who the hell are ya anyways? I thought you wanted this insignia too."

"I just wanted to return it to the rightful owner," Subaru explained.

The young man looked dumbfounded by Subaru's response. "Return it to me?"

I guess it's hard to believe such words coming from a total stranger, huh? Let’s see. What can I say to convince him…

Right as Subaru began thinking of a way to explain her position to the young man, she saw a dark shadow creep up behind him.

“Tink, protect him!” Subaru yelled instinctively, as a blade closed in on the young man’s nape, reflecting light off of it.

Before the blade could reach its target, however, a shield made of ice appeared in between, protecting the young man.

The sound of a blade hitting a block of ice resonated in the room, as the young man leaped forward to create distance between himself and the sudden attacker.

“Tink…!” the young man called out the name of the spirit who just saved him from imminent death.

“Well, well, talk about perfect timing. Seems like I just made it in time,” Tink commented, rubbing her face with her paws, before turning around to face Subaru. “My, that really was just in the nick of time. Thanks to you, I was able to save my son.”

“I’m glad too. I was worried that your time was up for today,” Subaru responded, giving the spirit a thumbs up. There was a moment of acknowledgement between the two.

The assailant, Eins, backed away from the group upon having his attack deterred. Still calm and collected, he stood ominously while waving his kukri knife around and glanced at the people in the store. “A spirit, how wonderful,” he said, evidently excited by his bloodlust. “I’ve never disemboweled a spirit before.”

“Hey, what the hell is goin’ on?!” yelled Forte, not knowing why the person who asked him to steal the insignia was suddenly attacking them.

However, Eins paid no heed to Forte’s confusion. He simply gave him a cold, apathetic look.

“Ah,” Forte let out, shuddering at Eins’s stare.

“Unfortunately for you, it seems like you have mistaken my request,” Eins said. “I only asked for the insignia. I never asked you to bring the owner along. Now, I have no choice but to kill you all.”

“Th-That’s insane,” Forte retorted.

“Maybe so, but you’re the one who failed to properly carry out the task I asked. I’m simply replacing a useless tool. Is there something wrong with that?”

Forte made a pained expression at Eins’s cold words.

It’s true, Forte made a foolish mistake. And his foolishness could’ve cost him his life if I hadn’t been here. “Hey, you damn sadist! Don’t you feel ashamed to be trash-talking such a little boy, acting as though you’ve won?! As your mother, I feel so disappointed!”

Eins looked confused. “You’re not my mother.”

“It’s a figure of speech! Also, I’m so mad right now, the things I’m saying might not make any sense! Sorry about that in advance! But the truth is, I was just stalling by saying random nonsense! So, those of you who’re tuned in, don’t change the channel just yet! We’ll be right back!”

Eins furrowed his brow, unable to comprehend Subaru’s odd speech. Subaru, on the other hand, started to get embarrassed seeing Eins’s confused look.

Maybe there was a more lady-like way to stall.

Subaru then clapped loudly. “That’s it from me! Tink, take it away!”

“That was absolutely pathetic,” Tink responded, smiling. “Leave the rest to me. I won’t let your patheticness go to waste.”

Eins popped his head up, realizing he was surrounded by countless icicles with nowhere to run. Before he could do anything, the icicles darted toward him.

“Forgot to introduce myself to you, didn’t I, good sir? I’m Tink. At least remember my name before you die.”

With that, an explosive noise erupted throughout the loot house as white smoke filled the room.

14

“Eins Granhiert, the Bowel Hunter.”

“…Adelheid van Astrea of the family of Sword Saints.”

As the two fighters introduced each other without anyone prompting them, their battle auras enveloped the area, followed by a flash of white light as their blades collided.

The flash of white light appeared every time they swung their weapons, making it look as though they were splitting the loot house, air, and even the sky. Their swings caused a blast wave, but by the time there was an explosion they were already on their next move. The perpetual attacks were too strong for the loot house to endure, eventually bursting it into pieces from the inside as though a tornado had passed by.

The explosion caused everything in the loot house to get blown away, including the people in it. Subaru prevented herself from flying away by grabbing onto Old Woman Rom’s giant body, who was lying on the floor, while holding on to the silver-haired young man in her other arm.

Hold tight, hold tight, hold tight, hold tight, hold tight!
“Ngyaaahhh!!!”

Subaru held as tight as she could while making an unlady-like face, screaming in an unlady-like way. Moments later, after it was all over, she loosened her grip and lifted up her head. There was nothing but a clear night sky, brightly lit with stars before her.

“Th-The building is gone…” she muttered, still sitting on the ground.

“Good, you’re safe,” Adelheid said, turning her head around to face Subaru, showing an affectionate smile. In her hand was a sword that had just been pushed beyond its limits, slowly turning into ashes.

It was able to fulfill its role as a sword at a level that would have otherwise been impossible if not for Adelheid's superhuman power. I wonder if the sword was happy about that, though. "You said hunting monsters is your specialty, but it seems like you're the most dangerous monster!"

"Being called that hurts my feelings, you know?" Adelheid smiled bitterly, watching the ashes that were once a sword fly away from her hand.

Subaru regretted her words after sensing Adelheid's melancholic emotions through her profile. Although she only meant it as a joke, she worried if she had been too crass. However, before she could apologize, a person spoke to her.

"Is it over?"

It was the silver-haired young man. He looked exhausted from healing Old Woman Rom after Tink had left. Subaru also suspected his exhaustion was somehow linked to the fight between Adelheid and Eins. She went to his side to support him and asked, "A-Are you okay? Can you stand?"

"Yeah…"

Subaru held on to his arm that was lean but not particularly muscular, staring at his face.

"What is it?" the young man asked, noticing Subaru was staring. "It's reeeally rude to stare at someone like that."

"No, I'm just making sure your head is still attached to your body, and your limbs are still there."

"Of course they are. What a scary thing to say," he said, confirming his limbs were still there.

Subaru let out a sigh of relief. Finally, I'm here. I finally saved him. "By the way, I haven't said thanks to you yet, Adelheid. You really helped me out. It's the second time you saved me, counting the time at the back alley. Did you hear me scream?"

“Of course, since I am a valiant woman as you once called me… Just kidding. It was actually him,” she said, gesturing at the person standing by the wreckage of what used to be the entrance to the loot house.

“Hm?” Subaru looked at the person. It was Forte, who she had helped escape with all her might during their fight with Eins. It was he who had called Adelheid for help.

“I see, so everything is connected,” Subaru muttered as she sighed.

“That boy is…” the silver haired young man said, noticing Forte as well.

Worrying they might get confrontational over the insignia again, Subaru hastily got in between them.

“Wait, wait! We were saved because he called Adelheid for help. So I get that you’re mad at him, but please don’t rip him apart! I’m begging you!”

“I wouldn’t do such a thing! Just who do you think I am?! And why are you the one begging…?”

“Uhh, well that’s because…” Subaru muttered.

“I mean, who exactly are you anyways?” the young man asked, making a confused face. “One moment you were with the ones who stole my insignia, then the next you’re helping me. I can’t understand you.”

Subaru was unsure of what to say. It’s true, I was planning on buying the insignia off of Forte then returning it to him, but I never thought about what I’ll do afterwards.

Lost in thought, Subaru was oblivious to her surroundings, making Adelheid call out her name. “Subaru!”

Subaru snapped out of her thoughts as a figure jumped out of the rubble of the wrecked loot house, launching itself towards the silver-haired young man. It was Eins. Despite his body being covered in wounds, his eyes were still emanating killing intent.

“Watch out!” Subaru yelled.

The young man couldn’t react to the sudden event. Adelheid was also too far away to make it in time. Subaru was the only one who could save the young man.

All Eins had was a bent up knife. He was using this last opportunity to leave lasting damage. Adelheid can’t make it in time. But if I can just stall Eins for a split second, then she can come and save us. Everything was happening so fast that the young man couldn’t even turn around to see the emerging threat. Where is he aiming? I have to protect him. I will protect him. I will definitely, definitely, definitely, definitely, definitely, definitely protect him! “You’re going for the stomaaach!!”

Subaru kicked up Old Woman Rom’s club, covered her stomach with it, and leaped towards Eins just as he swung his knife at the young man. Subaru was knocked away, taking Eins’s attack head on. Her eyes started spinning, feeling as though she was hit by a moving car. She ended up slamming into a wall and getting buried underneath the falling rubble.

“You dare get in my way again?!” Eins spat, biting his lips since Subaru had prevented his attack again.

“It’s over, Eins!” Adelheid yelled, arriving at the scene before he could pursue the young man any further.

Eins threw the bent knife at her, pausing her advance, and jumped away. Even though the knife didn’t go anywhere near her, it created enough of a threat to give him a moment to distance himself. He landed on top of the roof of the wrecked loot house and looked down at his prey with the moon in the background. “I will disembowel every single one of you one day. You take good care of your stomachs until that day comes.”

Leaving such an ominous comment, Eins used what was left of his power and fled into the dark night of the slums. Adelheid didn’t pursue him. Not only would it be difficult to do so, she figured it would be too dangerous to leave the rest alone. She turned around to the young man and asked, “Are you okay?”

“Don’t mind me!” he yelled, ignoring Adelheid’s worry, and started running towards the mountain of rubble that Subaru was still buried in after getting knocked away by Eins. “What was she thinking being so reckless?!” He quickly began removing the debris and excavated her. “Are you okay? Are you alive?”

Subaru groaned. “Y-Yeah. See? I managed to stop his attack. Besides, who else was supposed to protect you at that moment. Although, my head is spinning.”

“Your head is… Adelheid!” the young man called.

“Seems like she hit her head hard,” she responded. “We must quickly take her to the hospital.”

“W-Wait, wait, stop, stop!” Subaru exclaimed at the two worrying faces. “It’s not that big a deal. I’m fine!”

She stood up and started performing moves from radio calisthenics to show them that she was fine. The two stared at her movements as though they were witnessing a rare creature.

“I don’t know what that move is supposed to be,” the young man began, “but I’m glad you seem okay.”

“I agree,” Adelheid said. “Subaru, you really saved the day. I’m really sorry I let such a thing happen. If you hadn’t been there…”

“Stop that too!” Subaru yelled, stopping Adelheid from apologizing and praising her any further. “Stop that, Adelheid! You did more than enough. If you say anything more, I won’t be able to live with myself.”

She then turned her attention to the silver-haired young man. He looked confused by her intent look, but straightened his posture nonetheless. He was ready to listen to whatever Subaru had to say. Now that I think about it, I went through so much trouble to save him. Although I didn’t tell anyone about all the trouble I went through, it’s all in my memory.

She pointed at the sky and rested her other hand on her hip, showing her signature pose. “My name is Natsuki Subaru! There are tons of things I want to say and ask, but just one will do for now!"

"Wh-What is it?"

"I'm your savior who just saved your life from a madman, amirite?!"

"Am a what?"

"Means, are you on the same page?" Subaru explained, bending her body to make an OK sign.

"Y-Yeah." The young man nodded hesitantly.

Subaru paid no heed to his hesitation and continued. "I am a lifesaver and an angel. And you, the prince, are the one who was just saved. Don't you think I deserve a great reward from you? Right?!"

"Of course. If there's anything I can do, just name it."

"Great! Well, I only have one wish. Just one!" she said, pointing her finger at him insistently. She was somewhat worried if he was starting to get annoyed, but she couldn't stop. "And that wish is…" She flashed a smile at the nervous looking young man.

"Yeah?"

Subaru snapped her fingers and smiled to show her shining teeth. "Please tell me your name."

The young man's eyes widened in disbelief. Silence enveloped the two of them. Subaru's lips started hurting, trying to maintain her million dollar smile.

Did I blow it? Did I just make the greatest blunder of my life? Should I have remained in that mountain of rubble and stayed there for the rest of my life? She started panicking because of the young man's silence.

Then, the young man started laughing, easing Subaru's mental state. He laughed hysterically with his hand on his mouth, his silver hair shaking and his cheeks reddening. It wasn't a laughter out of desperation or from depression. It was a laughter of pure joy. He was truly having fun.

"Emilio," the young man said, pausing from laughing.

"Huh?" Subaru said in a way as if air just left her body.

Seeing her reaction, the young man straightened his posture again and pointed at himself. "My name is Emilio. Just Emilio. Thank you, Subaru."

"…"

Emilio offered a handshake. "Thank you for saving me."

Subaru gulped as she looked down at his pale white hand.

No, you're the one who saved me first. All I did was repay my debt. But I finally made it after dying a total of three times. I went through so much pain, despair, and countless life threatening situations. Just so that I could learn his name. This is so… Subaru laughed joyfully. "This is so not worth it," she said as she accepted Emilio's hand.

15

And how great would it have been if the story ended here.

“But Subaru, I’m really surprised you’re fine,” Adelheid interjected after Subaru and Emilio finished their formal introduction. She looked genuinely shocked that Subaru managed to survive Eins’s last attack. His swing was that deadly.

Well, I couldn’t have protected myself if I didn’t know where he was going to aim either.

“If you hadn’t used this club, you would’ve been sliced in two,” Adelheid commented, picking up the club Subaru used.

Subaru nodded. “Yeah, if it weren’t for that I wouldn’t have been able to…” avoid BAD END 4: Split in Two.

Before she could finish her sentence, however, the club broke in half in Adelheid’s hand.

“Ah,” Adelheid let out, with half of the club still in hand.

She then turned her blue eyes to look at Subaru’s stomach. Subaru also turned her attention to where she was staring at, lifting her jacket, feeling uneasy. She had a well trained abdomen, but it was all so bruised up that she wanted to turn away. However, that was when a horizontal red line surfaced on it.

“Oh, crap,” Subaru remarked. “I did not see this coming.”

As she looked up, blood burst from the horizontal line on her stomach.

“S-Subaru?!” Emilio screamed.

I can hear him screaming. Ahh, this sucks. Why do I have to die right when I got to learn his name? But even if I do, I’m sure I’ll come here again.

Subaru collapsed, turning her field of view sideways, unable to move a finger. She saw Adelheid's panicking face and Emilio's handsome face twisted in agony. It might be insensitive to think this right now, but man, he looks so good even when he's distraught—wouldn't expect anything less from a parallel world fantasy.

She started to lose consciousness from the pain and shock.

And so, the alternate story of Natsuki Subaru's life in another world continues.

1

Subaru: “The pillow feels different…”

While checking the soft, fluffy sensation behind her head, Subaru muttered.

The sensation that was different from her usual wake-ups wasn’t limited to just the pillow. Subaru’s body, just a little taller than the average Japanese woman, the bed that was supporting it, and even the sheets with their smooth feel against her skin—everything, every last thing, was far too different from usual.

Subaru: “Basically, my life in another world is still going on…”

She shot up, her body quick to wake, and, finding the feel of the hair spreading over the nape of her neck annoying, Subaru confirmed that fact.

What Subaru had woken up in was a gigantic bed, far removed from someone like her, born into an ordinary middle-class family, and a large room that still had plenty of space even with that bed in it.

Given that this was a room allotted to Subaru, an uninvited foreigner, it was probably a guest room, and she guessed that rooms of this size here weren’t limited to just one or two.

Subaru: “No wound on my stomach. I don’t see any stitches either—the doctors in this other world sure are talented. If they’d turned me into damaged goods, I’d never be able to get married.”

While cracking such a light joke as she got down from the bed and checked the white skin of her stomach by flipping up her clothes, Subaru, tasting the inconvenience of not having a hair tie to gather her hair with, bent her neck and nodded.

This meant, in other words—

Subaru: "—This time, it looks like I managed to avoid "Return by Death"."

With that, she accepted, with relief, the fact that, at the end of the battle at the loot house, she had apparently narrowly escaped death from that outrageous blood loss.

2

Natsuki Subaru, a blooming high school girl, was suddenly summoned to another world.

Thrown into another world without any particular special skills to speak of, Subaru nonetheless possessed a special power granted to her, one long promised since ancient times in countless stories about other worlds.

Its name was "Return by Death"—an ultra super power that, by losing her life, let her turn back time and, through trial and error, avoid the tragedies that had befallen her and reel in the future she wished for.

Subaru: "Well, since I suffer like crazy whenever it activates, it's a cheat ability I'd really rather never use again if I can help it, though…"

Victor: "…Muttering and talking to yourself in someone else's stronghold—you've got some nerve, little girl."

Subaru: "Whoops, the first villager started talking to me."

If you could pick your ability when you were summoned to another world, surely there weren't many draws as bad as this one—so lamented Subaru, when a voice called out from behind her.

As Subaru turned around, right in front of her eyes, in the middle of the wide library, a stepladder had been set up, and on top of it sat a small figure, glaring at her with a dull, heavy stare.

—He was a shota boy of around ten years old, with short, bouncy cream-colored curls, clad in a tailcoat done overall in shades of reddish-purple.

In his bluish round eyes floated a distinctive pattern, and a slightly cheeky expression was plastered over his adorably well-shaped features. On his knees, pressed together under his short pants, lay a big book spread open, and he seemed deeply displeased at having his reading interrupted.

That said—

Subaru: "Even if you try to intimidate me with that cute little face, that doesn't work on a high school girl who basically sums up almost every mammal smaller than her with a "Kyaa, so cuuute~"."

Victor: "…Not only did you ruin the labyrinth Vicha put so much thought into, you pile incomprehensible remarks on top of that as well. You're terribly lacking in anything resembling respect, you know."

Subaru: "By "labyrinth", you mean that hallway that looked like it was going to loop on forever? Sorry, sorry, I pulled the right answer on my first try. That's just how I am—when it comes to me, not just what I say, even my intuition has this knack for not reading the room. Sorry 'bout that."

Raising one hand and winking, Subaru brought up the hallway outside the library—the one she had gone into after leaving the room where she had first woken up, and where she had gotten caught up in that bizarre phenomenon.

From the decorated paintings and vases, to the carpet that never seemed to end, to the doors with the same plaques hanging from them that she passed by again and again, Subaru judged that it was a corridor that repeated without end. And what Subaru chose in that situation, without the slightest hesitation, was the door to the very first bedroom she had come out of.

When she opened it, sure enough, what it connected to wasn't the first room, but the curly-haired shota boy who had likely created that hallway.

Subaru: “So, what do you want to do? Should I go back outside and act all shocked and over the top again? If that’ll satisfy your pride, I can go put on the performance of a lifetime for you, y’know.”

Victor: “…Good grief. Vicha’s patience has its limits, you know.”

Subaru: “Oh?”

Saying that, the child closed his book, climbed down from the stepladder, and walked toward Subaru.

Something about his presence carried a vague sense of intimidation, and Subaru’s feet wouldn’t move to step back; she was left standing stock-still as he closed the distance. Then his reaching hand gently touched Subaru’s stomach.

Subaru: “Eek.”

Victor: “If that’s all you have left to say, you’re a hopelessly frivolous little girl.”

Subaru: “Gyaaah—?!”

In that instant, Subaru’s entire body was pierced by a shock, originating from the child’s palm pressed against her stomach.

Without even being able to think about bracing herself, Subaru collapsed on the spot, helpless to do anything. Despite being the culprit, the child didn’t even bother to catch her body.

Thanks to that, she banged her head on the floor. The carpet was fluffy, so it didn’t hurt, though.

Subaru: “But you’re not very gentlemanly, boy… in two different ways, in this case.”

Victor: “I’m surprised you can still talk. That assessment isn’t wrong, either. —Don’t go measuring a noble being like Vicha by your own yardstick, human.”

With that very cold, dry pronouncement as the last thing she heard, Subaru’s consciousness receded.

At this point, she was losing consciousness way too often since being summoned to another world, and even though she was a young maiden in her prime, she was sleeping on the bare ground way too much and might end up chilling her body—she worried about herself over that, and then her consciousness cut out.

3

Reu: “Oh my, she’s woken up, Nii-sama.”

Rau: “Indeed, she has awakened, Reu.”

Once again, there was that fluffy, out-of-place sensation at the back of her head, same as before.

What dragged the disgracefully blacked-out Subaru back to reality were the voices of two young men, coming from beyond her closed eyelids, from the tomorrow that had arrived.

Subaru: “Not only did they see me right when I woke up, they saw my sleeping face too, and my maiden score is plummeting with an audible crash…”

It wasn’t like she had that spectacular a face, but even a face that wasn’t anything that spectacular ought to have its minimum rights guaranteed; that was the wonderful thing about the constitution.

The constitution was about as far removed as you could get from what was trendy among high school girls, but even so, it surely had a clause in there saying that a maiden’s sleeping face and the moment she woke up must not be casually ogled.

Otherwise, something was wrong. If that wasn’t protected by the constitution, how were all the other bashful maidens, lovelier than flowers, supposed to endure this shame and humiliation?

Subaru: “I will, with the constitution at my side, continue to fight to the bitter end…! Until we’ve wiped from this world every man who needlessly peers at maidens when they wake up, gets disappointed on his own, and then spouts unnecessary comments…!”

Reu: “My, I can’t help but sense a tremendous amount of pointless fighting spirit there, Nii-sama.”

Rau: “Yeah, a woman whose life has been wasted on idle talk and useless thoughts, Reu.”

Subaru: “Hey, you’re just saying whatever you want because you think I’m too flustered to move right now! That’s it, both of you, outside! I’m gonna fix those attitudes of yours—!”

Pelted with such scathing words, Subaru finally sprang up, shattering the shame of her rude awakening.

With that same momentum she flung off the sheets, and right in front of her eyes, at the foot of the bed she’d been sleeping in, stood two figures with slender, willowy silhouettes, looking her way.

Pink and blue—their hair colors differed, but their facial features, the look in their eyes, and even the impression given by the neatly worn butler uniforms were identical, like they’d been made from the same mold.

Confronted with the sight of the two of them, Subaru’s springing-up momentum came to a halt—or rather, it swung hard off in an entirely different direction.

Subaru: “H-H-H-Hot ikemen twin butlers…!!”

The twins, with hair cut in something like bob cuts and slightly long bangs that each hid one eye, were symmetrical in every respect except hair color, and the sight of them set Subaru’s heart ablaze.

However, in contrast to Subaru’s sky-high evaluation, the reaction she got from the two of them was far from favorable.

The blue-haired young man knit his brows ever so slightly, while the pink-haired young man openly directed a look of contempt at her.

Subaru: “Ugh… get a grip, me…! Honestly, the moment I realized I was sleeping in a mansion this fancy, I should have at least considered the possibility that hot butlers might show up. If it’d been hot old guys instead, I’d have lost my sanity.”

Reu: “Nii-sama, she is a guest, but is she perhaps ill somewhere?”

Rau: “Reu, it goes without saying: what’s wrong is her head, and it’s already too late.”

Subaru: “If anything, the way you’re putting it is way crueler on your side, Nii-sama!”

Even as Subaru snapped back at the rather strong barbs, the twin butlers’ attitude remained cool and composed.

If they were going to treat her as a guest at all, she would very much have preferred to be fawned over and treated like a princess, with all the butterflies and blossoms.

Subaru: “On that note, I’m sure Emilio-kyun would be much kinder to me…”

Emilio: “—This “Emilio-kyun”, that’s supposed to be me, right?”

Subaru: “Oh.”

Pouting her lips at the twins’ cold attitude, Subaru suddenly heard a third voice cut in, almost like an ambush—a voice that gently caressed her eardrums and made her chest sweetly tremble.

She turned to look and saw, in the doorway of the room, opened about halfway, a figure peeking his face in—with amethyst eyes and silver hair, a stunning beauty who, at a glance, enthralled Subaru’s very soul, standing there.

Emilio: “I’m glad, Subaru. You woke up safe and sound.”

Subaru: “Emilio-kyun, you’re heeere!!”

At the appearance of Emilio—the young man who was smiling softly and honestly rejoicing in Subaru’s safety—Subaru’s eyes, which had been derided over and over as having a bad look in them, flew wide open as she shouted that.

Emilio was startled by Subaru’s outburst of emotion, then his lips softened into a faint smile, and he asked:

Emilio: “What’s with that “kyun”? Where did that come from?”

With that, he tossed her a question that was both simple and, at the same time, oddly hard to answer.

4

Roswaal: “Nice to meet you, Natsuki Subaru-kun. I’m the owner of this mansion, Roswaal L. Mathers~”

After one thing and another, Subaru, who had been invited to the breakfast table, was introduced to the indigo-haired, presumably beautiful woman calling herself the mistress of this mansion, Roswaal L. Mathers.

The reason she was being called a “presumed beauty” was because —

Subaru: “Why the mask…?”

Roswaal: “But of course, it’s just part of my hobbies~. Isn’t it more intriguing when someone’s shrouded in mystery?”

Roswaal shrugged without the slightest sign of remorse, and the left half of her face was covered by a white mask. The mask looked like a clown’s mask that had been split in half, and its main feature was the jester’s grin it wore. The visible right half of her face, helped along by her yellow eyes, looked beautiful enough that the mask might well have been there to hide some scar on her face or the like, but—

Subaru: “Going by my read, I’m betting there isn’t any tragic backstory like that behind it.”

Victor: “It’s irritating to agree with you, but that assessment isn’t a bad one. It’s far more foolish to try and look for a reason behind every little thing Roswaal does, you know.”

Subaru: “And there you have it, a seal of approval from a cheeky shota.”

When she snapped her fingers and pointed that way, the child seated at the end of the long table draped in a white cloth pulled a sour face.

The child Subaru had run into when she'd first woken up in the mansion apparently wasn't just some being from inside a dream she'd had, but a shota who existed in reality.

At Subaru and the child's exchange, Roswaal raised her brows with a "Heeh," and said:

Roswaal: "So you're already getting along with Victor, then. Lately I'd been thinking he hardly spoke to me at all anymore, but has he gotten over his shyness~?"

Victor: "That's an unnecessary and mistaken interpretation, Roswaal."

Roswaal: "See, as you can tell, he's so cold to me~"

Showing both raised hands, Roswaal displayed the current state of her relationship with the aloof child—Victor.

Subaru still didn't really understand what Victor's position in the mansion was. From the looks of it, he didn't seem to be Roswaal's son, but perhaps she ought to suspect some complicated family situation.

Even in another world, a noble house probably had noble-house ties and troubles sleeping within it.

Because—

Subaru: "I mean, who'd have thought Emilio-kyun turned out to be a candidate-sama for king… which basically makes you a prince."

Emilio: "I'm not a prince. It's not like I have any deep connection with the royal castle or the royal capital. I was just added as one of the Royal Candidates for the next royal selection, in accordance with the Divine Dragon's Covenant, that's all."

Subaru: "I don't really get this Divine Dragon or Covenant stuff, but that proof that you're a candidate is…"

Tink: “That would be the insignia Subaru was trying to get back for him in the royal capital~”

Cutting in with a sidelong glance, the one who snatched away the end of Subaru and Emilio’s topic was Tink, for whom they had properly prepared a small set of tableware at the breakfast table.

The spirit contracted to Emilio, who called herself his stand-in mother, was holding the insignia in her short little hands as if cradling it, showing it off.

That was the very insignia Subaru had fought so hard to retrieve, and the very MacGuffin that had caused her to lose her life three times over in the royal capital—

Subaru: “But here I am, standing here like this. With the wound on my stomach all gone, too! Oh, right, thanks for healing that for me, Emilio-kyun.”

Emilio: “Ah, I wasn’t the one who healed that. Victor did. Victor’s reeeally well-versed in all sorts of magic.”

Subaru: “Wait, this cheeky short-pants was?!”

Victor: “I’m in the middle of regretting having healed you, you know. If I’d known you were such a rude and noisy girl, I wouldn’t have lent you a hand.”

Subaru: “No, sorry, sorry, that was just me trying to hide how embarrassed I am. Thanks for helping me out, Victa. I’ll definitely pay this debt back to you someday, in one way or another.”

Victor: “Before that, what did you just call Vicha?!”

At Victor, eyes round and yelling at her in his cute voice, Subaru blew him a kiss.

Then she looked once more at Emilio, and at Tink, who was lying on her back in front of him together with the insignia.

Subaru: “Getting back on topic, if I hadn’t helped out, that insignia would’ve been stolen and Emilio-kyun would’ve been in serious trouble, right? Like, “out of the Royal Selection!” or something.”

Emilio: “—Yeah. That’s right. That’s why I owe Subaru a reeeally big debt. It’s not the kind of debt I can ever repay just by healing the wound on your stomach.”

Roswaal: “As for this house as well, if the Emilio we’ve put forward had dropped out of the Royal Selection before it even began, it would have been impossible for us to avoid a major blow~. That being prevented beforehand by you, Subaru-kun, is something for which I believe we must repay you, in some form or another~”

Subaru: “Yep, yep, just the kind of turn in the conversation I was hoping for. In that case, my wish is an only one! Just a single thing!”

Pointing the fingers of both hands sharply at Emilio and Roswaal, the two who were probably the highest authorities present here, Subaru boldly slammed down her demand.

Subaru’s wish was simple.

Subaru: “Hire me to work here in this mansion!”

—It was the cunning, devilish scheme of plotting an old-fashioned cohabitation development under one roof with the guy she liked, so she could launch a full frontal offensive.

5

Emilio: “You really don’t want much at all, Subaru. For the reward you ask for to be my name and a job here at the mansion… it makes me worry about you.”

That was Emilio’s reaction to Subaru’s request for an employment opportunity.

Faced with the attitude of the handsome young man, brows drooping as he worried about her from the bottom of his heart, Subaru’s chest felt like it had been turned into a pincushion, riddled with heart-shaped arrows—but that was that.

Fortunately, Subaru's request to be hired went through without a hitch, and with Roswaal's permission, Natsuki Subaru was safely welcomed as one of the members of House Roswaal.

To build a solid base for her life in another world where she had no one to rely on.

She hadn't really given much deep thought to just how big an advantage that was, but Subaru still felt relieved to have secured it.

On the other hand, if there was anything she thought she might have rushed into a little, it would be—

Subaru: "This maid outfit is way too risqué! Isn't this way too much for someone like me to be wearing?!"

Pulling on the sleeves of the official uniform of a Roswaal manor maid, Subaru, half in tears, complained about the shortness of the skirt and the drafty sensation on her bare back.

Of course, since she'd become an employee, she intended to follow the rules of the mansion. But this otherworldly baptism, which completely disregarded functional beauty, was mercilessly trying to shatter Subaru's self-esteem.

Subaru: "Outfits like this only work because a real beauty is wearing them! When a sharp-eyed, bony woman like me puts it on, my inner self pelts me with "Know your place!" and other insults…!"

Reu: "Nii-sama, it seems Subaru-san is dealing with some kind of inner conflict."

Rau: "Reu, if you fuss over Barusu too much, she'll just get carried away."

Subaru: "You twins, as twins, ought to have a little more of a reaction to a young maiden, shouldn't you! I'm baring like ten times more skin than usual here and enduring the shame, you know?! "It suits you," or "Clothes really do make the girl," or "It doesn't fit your station," or something—use those kinds of comments to cancel out my embarrassment!"

As Subaru howled at them like that, the twins—whose names were Rau and Reu—remained curt.

It seemed they were the type of twins who didn't show much emotion on their faces, but if a lady changed her outfit, wasn't it a point of universal etiquette to provide a comment that matched?

Subaru: "Thinking about it that way, doesn't that mean Ros-chi's doing a bad job raising you guys?"

Rau: "Don't you dare criticize Lady Roswaal so lightly. Do you not value your life, Barusu?"

Subaru: "Quit glaring at me in serious mode all of a sudden! And my name's been turned into some kind of eye-gouging incantation this whole time! It's gonna monopolize the trending charts!"

Reu: "Nii-sama, Reu thinks taking her too seriously will only leave you exhausted."

Rau: "…You're right. Hey, don't trouble these hands of Rau's any more than necessary, Barusu."

Subaru: "Sob sob, my coworkers are cold, and the winds of the world are harsh…"

Rau and Reu were twins with an air that didn't easily let outsiders in, but even so, Subaru could clearly see the depth of their loyalty to their mistress, Roswaal.

Her impression was that they were about the same in that regard, but in terms of talking about work matters or private things, Reu seemed like he'd be easier to talk to than Rau.

Subaru: "Rau's the type who gives you the cold shoulder until he actually opens up to you, I bet."

Rau: "What is that unpleasant appraisal supposed to be? Were you not listening when Rau was talking?"

Reu: "Nii-sama, please leave this to Reu. Rather than guiding the newcomer, there should be more important duties that fall to you,

Nii-sama.”

Rau: “…You’re right. I’m counting on you.”

Annoyed by Subaru’s personal opinion, Rau tilted his chin in answer to Reu’s proposal.

However, before he actually left the spot, he shot Subaru one last glance and said:

Rau: “Let me just say this: don’t go running Rau’s earnest little brother ragged. If you get in the way of Reu’s work, then even if you are Lord Emilio’s benefactor, I’ll personally throw you out of this mansion.”

Subaru: “Wow, that’s some pretty intense intimidation. But I’m not backing down. I’ve got my own ambition I absolutely have to see through…!”

Rau: “Hah.”

With a huge, loud snort through his nose, Rau walked off, leaving Subaru pouting behind him.

As she watched his back go, Reu quietly stepped up to stand beside Subaru.

Reu: “Please don’t take it too much to heart. Nii-sama simply always bears the gallant quality of being honest with himself and never disguising his words.”

Subaru: “That’s one way to put it! From the sound of it, you’re pretty head-over-heels for your big brother.”

Reu: “Nii-sama is simply amazing enough to leave you spellbound, that’s all.”

Subaru: “I see. By the way, what kind of work did Rau go off to do?”

Reu: “Most likely, he went to take a short nap to prepare for lunch…”

Subaru: “How are we defining important work here!!”

In an instant, all of Rau’s earlier, self-important behavior was reinterpreted as stuff he’d said just so he could sneak off and nap on the job, and Subaru’s impression of him was rewritten accordingly.

With an attitude that arrogant and haughty, he at least needed to be really good at his job.

Subaru: “Or maybe he’s actually amazing when he works? Like an expert in cleaning, laundry, and cooking?”

Reu: “Nii-sama is good at cleaning. Reu is better at it, though. As for asking him to handle the laundry or the cooking, that would be somewhat difficult.”

Subaru: “That just erased his reason for existing!”

Whether it was that Reu wasn’t doing a good enough job of covering for him, or that it was simply Rau’s lack of ability, in either case, you could say his only reason for existing was being a looker, and any excuse he’d had for acting all high and mighty had just vanished.

Or rather, thinking about it that way, why did Subaru have to be treated like that?

Subaru: “Ugh, what is with that guy…!”

She’d ended up saying something that sounded like a line from a heroine who’d be blushing over a man who lived freely outside her sense of normal, but Subaru’s heart was devoted solely to Emilio.

She wanted to be kind to the people who were kind to her—that was Subaru’s honest maiden’s heart.

Reu: “Now then, I’ll teach you your tasks. Please come with me.”

Subaru: “Uu… Reu-ppe’s kindness really hits me right in the heart. I like people who are nice to me.”

Reu: “This is because it is Lady Roswaal’s directive, and because it would be troublesome if Nii-sama’s or Reu’s workload were increased without reason. Reu has no particular feelings about you, Subaru-san. Please don’t misunderstand.”

Subaru: “Damn it! Both brothers are cold as ice! Fine, I’m not losing to this!”

The older brother was straightforwardly blunt, the younger brother politely distant. Even so, despite receiving such chilly treatment from both sides, Subaru swore up to the sky that she wouldn’t be discouraged and would bravely face it all.

If she worked earnestly and did her best here, then surely Emilio would someday come to get her, riding on a white horse.

Subaru: “Wait, we’re already under one roof, so that stage is already cleared. Huh? But how am I supposed to move things forward from here? My otome-game knowledge basically ends at the point where the relationship starts…”

Reu: “I’ll be leaving you behind.”

Subaru: “Ah, I’m coming, I’m coming… Whoa, you walk fast! Show a little mercy!”

Reu: “So as not to bring shame upon Lady Roswaal, please also try to be a bit more mindful of your word choice, Subaru-san.”

Receiving such precious nagging from her senior, Subaru hurried along, fretting over the length of her skirt, and boldly dove into her gainful-employment experience in another world.

6

A few days passed after that, and Subaru’s very first “maid days” were one hardship after another.

What surprised her, honestly, was how Rau and Reu both, fairly earnestly, looked after Subaru. Of course, whenever Subaru messed something up, the extra burden landed on the two of them, so you could say their attitude was only natural.

However, with Rau's cold, razor-sharp tongue, and Reu's heavy strikes like a soft club, both of them played their part in helping Subaru improve.

Subaru: "Well, Rau seriously just mouths off, though."

Emilio: "Is that so? Sorry, I haven't really seen the detailed side of Rau and Reu's work. I just thought, "They're always working so hard," that's all."

Subaru: "It's fine, it's fine, Emilio-kyun, you're busy with your studies. Just don't push yourself too hard, okay? There's this theory that human concentration doesn't last all that long—or maybe it doesn't exist, or maybe I just made it up myself, you know, there's talk like that."

Emilio: "Oh, really, that's… Huh? So it's just something Subaru made up on her own?"

What the truth actually was, she wasn't sure; academic theories got flipped on their heads pretty often, so the facts were hazy.

For example, even on when you should salt and pepper meat—before grilling, while it's grilling, or at what stage exactly you're supposed to season it—opinions were all over the place.

Humanity had probably been grilling meat ever since it started using fire, and yet even this basic, entry-level topic still hadn't reached a final answer—that was what "academic theory" was like.

Subaru: "And that's what you get when someone like me, who doesn't even know that much, starts yammering on."

Wrapping things up in a pretty sloppy way, Subaru sat cross-legged on the lawn and yawned.

No need to worry—she wasn't currently in the short-skirt maid outfit. She'd already finished her daytime work, and was now in "just need to go to sleep" mode, so she was in her loungewear tracksuit.

When she'd run into that assassin in the royal capital, the terrifying

Eins, his final strike had slashed her stomach, and it had seemed like her tracksuit had gone to tracksuit heaven along with her. But fortunately, someone had kept the tracksuit, which had been barely a step away from a rag, and thanks to that, she'd been able to stitch it back together and put it on again.

Subaru: "Thank goodness for sewing skills. Having this or not makes a world of difference in how long your stuff lasts."

Emilio: "Now that you mention it, Reu also praised you. He said your mending skills are like those of a professional."

Subaru: "My Skill Tree's growth path is super warped, and I tend to pick my abilities based on feel. I'm the type who forgets to pick the passives that give you buffs."

Emilio: "Sorry, I don't really get what you're saying."

Maybe she'd used too much gamer jargon; Emilio just gave a wry smile, letting her "growth plan" comment slide right past.

That said, Subaru was the one at fault for not putting it in terms he could understand, and it wasn't like he had to understand anyway. Just being able to talk with him like this was fun for her.

It was night at the Roswaal manor, and Emilio was going through his daily routine of communing with the lesser spirits in the courtyard.

Ever since she'd heard he spent his time like this, Subaru, feeling like she might be intruding but wanting to be closer to him even more, had ended up sitting down at the edge of his field of vision like this.

Of course, if he rejected her, the damage would probably be so bad she'd never recover, but for now Emilio hadn't ordered her to clear out, so she judged it as a "safe".

Lesser spirits floated about in the night sky, flitting through the air while giving off a soft, faint light.

Surrounded by those lesser spirits, Emilio, brushing back his mysterious silver hair, looked so fragile, there was something so fantastical about him that if she tried to touch him with a finger, he looked like he might just crumble to pieces.

The unreally beautiful sight, as Subaru gazed at it up close, gradually heated her heart.

Subaru: “The moon is… beautiful tonight.”

Emilio: “Yeah. It’s something that’s always out of reach.”

Subaru: “Guhah!”

Emilio: “What’s wrong?!”

A bucket of cold water got dumped on the heat that had been building up, and Subaru’s budding love all but went into cardiac arrest.

Worried, and with no ill intent at all, Emilio rushed over to her, and Subaru raised a hand with a “I’m fine, I’m fine,” bravely answering his concern.

Then Emilio, seeing Subaru’s outstretched palm, let out a small “Ah…”

Wondering what was up, Subaru looked up as well, and understood what he was murmuring about.

Because the fingers of the hand she’d thrust out were covered in bandages.

Subaru: “Yikes, how embarrassing. Hands all covered in cuts aren’t very girly, huh.”

Emilio: “That’s not true at all. —Should I use healing magic on them? I’m not very good at it, but for wounds like those…”

Subaru: “Mmm, I really appreciate the thought, Emilio-kyun, but I think I’ll pass for now.”

Emilio: “Why?”

Having his offer turned down made Emilio lower his brows anxiously.

Sensing the hint of hurt that he might’ve been rejected by Subaru, she hastily shook her head with a “No, no,” and said:

Subaru: “It’s not about Emilio-kyun or anything, this is my thing. … These wounds on my hands are proof that I’m working hard here. So I kinda wanna leave them, at least for now.”

Emilio: “Proof you’re working hard…”

Subaru: “This one’s from when I was cooking, this one’s from messing up how to use a cleaning tool I’m not used to, and this one’s from looking away while I was cleaning the windows and jabbing my hand. Each one is proof I’m leveling up.”

After all, since Subaru had never even had a part-time job before, her maid days at this mansion were her first and only work experience.

She’d been pretty confident that she was on the dexterous side, but all that baseless confidence had been shattered one after another before her first job, and this wrecked state of her hands and fingers was the result.

But that wasn’t actually a bad thing.

Subaru: “When the proof that I’m trying my best is left behind in a way I can actually see, it’s like… I can trust my own footprints, or something. Sorry, I might be saying something weird.”

Emilio: “—No. Not at all. I reaaally understand.”

Subaru: “Emilio-kyun…”

With a serious expression, Emilio didn’t laugh at Subaru’s silly little hang-up.

Struck in the chest by his words, Subaru felt her heart pound not with some frivolous flutter, but with a real warmth being poured into it.

Overwhelmed by that feeling, she decided to take a little gamble.

Subaru: “Um, Emilio-kyun… If it’s okay, tomorrow I’m supposed to go shopping in the village and, um, would you maybe want to go on a date… g-go out with me?”

Emilio: “To the village…”

Subaru: “W-Was that no good?! Did I totally misread the distance between us?! Was I a sow?!”

Emilio: “I’m not thinking anything that awful at all!”

Subaru saw a vision of her head getting lopped off on the backswing of the blade after she’d stepped in too deep. Flustered by her intensity, Emilio waved his hands, and this time he was the one saying, “That’s not it,” as he scrambled for words.

Even while unsure how he should put it, Emilio went on:

Emilio: “This isn’t about you, Subaru, it’s my own issue. It’s about the village… If you go there with me, you might end up having an unpleasant time.”

Subaru: “No way! If I’m with Emilio-kyun, anywhere we go is gonna be sprinkled with rosy special effects!”

Emilio: “It’s just… the people around us might not look very kindly on it…”

Subaru: “It’s fine! No matter what kind of faces everyone around us is making, I’ll be right beside you with the best smile of the century, clinging to you nonstop until my annoyingness becomes addictive!”

Emilio: “…Fufu.”

Bow-and-weave forgotten, Subaru went pure infighting with her invitation, and Emilio finally let out a laugh, looking like he’d been worn down.

At that reaction, Subaru held her breath, waiting for his next words—

Emilio: “All right, you win. I’ll go to the village with you, Subaru.”

And at Emilio’s sheepish smile as he said that, Subaru was already wearing the most self-satisfied grin of the century, ready to break into a triple round of banzai.

Subaru: “So yeah, tomorrow’s a date with Emilio-kyun! Uhehehehe, I am forced to conclude that progress in our relationship is just around the corner! Isn’t that amazing? Isn’t that amazing?”

Victor: “Why are you going out of your way to report this to Vicha…?”

Subaru: “Well, Rau and Reu have work tomorrow and have to be up early, and it’s not like there’s anyone else to talk to besides Victa, who’s just wandering around the mansion doing nothing, right?”

Victor: “What I’m saying is that I don’t understand how, at this rate, you can just casually break through “Door Crossing” like it’s nothing!”

Victor shouted, face flushed, banging the table.

It was already late at night, and making a racket would bother the people around them, but Subaru didn’t scold him. Partly because she was in a great mood, but also because of this library—or rather, the forbidden library’s special properties.

Apparently, this child called Victor was an incredibly powerful being, and he was skilled in magic that twisted and grafted space together.

The “Door Crossing” magic he handled was an amazing technique that could link the door of this forbidden library to any door in the mansion.

It was just that “Door Crossing” was supposed to be highly random, making it hard to reach this place, yet Subaru could break through it on “just a hunch,” and that was all there was to it.

Subaru: “Haa, this must all be my reward for working hard every day… S-S-So, then, if that’s the case, would it be okay to get a little greedier? What do you think?”

Victor: “Vicha thinks nothing of it.”

Subaru: “Like, our hands! If I… if I tried to hold his hand, do you think he wouldn’t think I’m being shameless?”

Victor: “Listen, would you at least listen when you’re talking to someone?!”

Subaru: “Bombardieh!”

It was questionable enough to be asking a little kid for romance advice, but answering an older girl’s earnest worries with some kind of incomprehensible invisible shockwave was pretty questionable too.

In the end, without getting any decent answer, Subaru was blown away by a fierce wind, tossed out of the forbidden library, and her rendezvous with Victor came to an end.

Subaru: “For someone with such a cute face, you sure don’t have enough cuteness in your attitude. Someday I’m gonna spoil you rotten like a cat.”

Muttering her grudge over having been sent rolling down the hallway, Subaru slapped the dust off herself, then pulled herself together and skipped off toward her room with a spring in her step.

After shoving Subaru out, on the other side of the closed door, in the forbidden library, Victor—

Victor: “—This has nothing to do with Vicha, you know.”

—murmured that, though Subaru remained unaware of it.

Subaru: “Behold! A new day, and a day of dazzling progress! Natsuki Subaru, as of today, is graduating from being a girl who just sits around and waits!”

The instant she paid hush money to her drowsiness and bought herself fully awakened consciousness, Subaru sprang up.

Subaru’s brain, blessed with ridiculously good wake-up skills, had been constructing, from the very moment she opened her eyes, the optimal route toward fulfilling last night’s promise—namely, her first date with Emilio.

First, she would cleverly talk Reu into it so that he would assign her the simplest jobs possible. Then she would brush off Rau’s snide remarks with a mature, composed smile, take on the shopping trip to the village, and down the line, walk down the aisle with Emilio.

Subaru: “All right, so there’s no time to dawdle if I want that. Gotta transform into my Victory Form right now and—uwaa?!”

Reu: “…”

Rau: “…”

As she finished drafting her plan while wiggling her hips on the bed and turned around, a decidedly un-cute scream tore its way out of Subaru’s throat.

The reason was brutally simple: there were people standing in her room besides Subaru herself. Two of them, in fact.

And in the Roswaal mansion, if you saw two silhouettes standing next to each other as a set, there was only one possible identity they could have.

Subaru: “Hey, hey! Other than the first day, you’ve been relatively considerate, so barging into a maiden’s room first thing in the morning is suddenly off-limits, you know! You’ve seen my just-woke-up face again! Don’t look!”

Covering her face with both hands, Subaru tried to joke away the shame welling up inside her.

If anyone saw her when she was seriously blushing, she'd want to die, and when she covered her face she could feel the drying drool at the corner of her mouth and wanted to die even more.

Even if it wasn't Emilio, she was not such a tough boy that she could take a guy seeing her horrible sleeping face and come away with no damage. Not that she was a boy to begin with.

However, the attitudes of the two in response to Subaru's reaction were baffling.

Reu: "Nii-sama, our guest has just addressed us in a rather familiar way."

Rau: "Reu, it seems our guest has greeted us with a badly misjudged sense of distance."

While Subaru was going kyaakyaa and generously trying to gloss over the situation for them, Rau and Reu's reactions were curt, completely failing to read the room.

No matter the reason, no matter how well you knew each other, there was such a thing as proper decorum even between close acquaintances.

Subaru: "Or… don't tell me I overslept? And you two came as my senpai to wake me up…"

Reu: "Senpai? What are you talking about, guest?"

Rau: "Senpai? Being addressed that way is a repulsive notion, guest."

Subaru: "Huh…?"

Brow furrowing, both of them looked genuinely suspicious of her. That was not something she could just laugh off anymore, and Subaru lowered the hands she'd been holding over her face, her teeth chattering.

Honestly, she'd started to get the idea that Rau's harsh way of speaking was just how he was, but Reu joining in and riding that wave like this was going too far no matter how she looked at it.

As fellow servants, to keep their interpersonal relationships running smoothly, she really needed to teach them exactly how far they could push before she got mad—that was what Subaru thought she had to do.

She wanted to believe that was all it would take to solve the problem.

But—

Subaru: "—h?"

Before she could properly scold the two of them, her lowered hands came into her field of vision.

The hands she'd held out to Emilio last night, the hands so shamefully covered in wounds that he'd offered to cast healing magic on them.

Hands that had been battered by unfamiliar cooking and water work, and by using cleaning tools she wasn't used to—those hands now looked like the pretty hands of someone who'd never known the hardship of working at all.

Subaru: "N-No way."

Her fingers trembling, she flipped her hands over and over, palms and backs, but the wounds that ought to be there were nowhere to be found.

She couldn't believe that just seeing her own fingers in a pristine state could flip her mind over this much. No, what she couldn't believe was the situation in front of her.

Reu: "Guest?"

Rau: "Guest?"

Tilting their heads in unison, Rau and Reu, moving in perfect sync, looked in concern at the "first-time" Natsuki Subaru before them.

Seeing the innocent eyes of the twins, Subaru was certain.

And along with that certainty came despair.

Subaru: “Why… why did it go back?!”

She had learned her job, learned how to get along with them, and they’d gradually come to understand each other’s personalities.

She’d greeted this day with her heart pounding, imagining a fun future where surely everything would work out between them—only to find herself in a dead end.

As if to declare that unreasonable fate would never allow Natsuki Subaru any peace.

—The second first day began.

8

To be honest, that second “nice to meet you” hit Subaru’s heart horribly hard.

Even the first time she experienced “Return by Death,” when the impact of the onrushing “death” shot through her, she’d suffered a pain that was anything but ordinary.

Even so, that had only been something that happened over the span of a few hours.

In a time not even half a day long, the bonds she’d piled up, while big, couldn’t really be called deep. So when she was treated like a stranger, she’d been able to rethink it as “that’s just how it is.”

But this time was different.

This time, she’d spent several days together with them; they weren’t just people whose faces and names she knew. She’d had the chance to learn who they were as people, and the chance to let them learn who she was.

Having all of that overturned, as if every piece on the game board had been swept away and declared never to have existed, left her not just with a sense of futility and loss, but with the feeling that everything had been trampled underfoot.

It hurt. It really did.

It had taken her so much effort just to fire herself up and say she'd take that time back all over again.

The feelings of Subaru, who had overcome that anguish and tried to move forward, deserved to be commended. She ought to have been given a "you were so brave, you did so well" prize.

By no twist of fate should she have been made to go through something even worse, something truly gruesome.

By no twist of fate—

Reu: "—Are you a Witch Cultist?"

—should she have to be tortured in some dim forest at dusk by Reu, brimming with anger and hostility, with an iron ball in his hand.

Subaru: "U… ahh…"

Letting a ragged sound rattle from her throat, Subaru reached with a trembling hand toward her right leg.

Everything below the knee had been severed by something sharp, and she'd lost a great deal of blood. The bleeding, at least, had already been staunched. Reu, who had chased her down, had done that much.

Not to save her, but because it would be troublesome if she died before he could get anything out of her.

—This was Subaru's third attempt since waking up at the Roswaal manor.

After being sent back to the first day last time, Subaru had steeled herself to get through this, and tried to retrace those first few days as closely as possible, to recreate the same situation.

Whether that attempt had gone well was doubtful, but the ending was the same. —No, it was even worse.

The first time, Subaru hadn't known why she'd been sent back to the first day, but the second time she'd clearly been forced to "Return by Death" when something smashed her head in.

As a result, she'd judged it highly likely that someone was targeting Subaru—and the people in the mansion—and she'd gone into her third run with the goal of uncovering who they were.

And she had succeeded in luring out the culprit who had crushed her skull—

Subaru: "…Reu…"

Reu: "Do not address me so familiarly. When you're giving off the stench of miasma from your whole body like that, even if you say you have nothing to do with the Witch Cult, those words are not worth trusting."

Subaru: "Wh… what the hell is that supposed to mean…?"

A term she'd never heard before, something she knew nothing about—when he asked her about it, she had no answer to give.

The cold, rejecting tone in Reu's voice was different even from the politely rude one Subaru knew; it was dyed through with a much, much deeper, pitch-black hatred.

She'd thought they'd become friends.

That this boy, so devoted to his brother and so capable despite his lack of self-confidence, was, through their work and their idle chats, gradually meeting her halfway, that the distance between their hearts was shrinking.

She'd been wrong.

All along, he'd been watching like a predator for the chance to kill Subaru, and then he'd carried it out. No—that wasn't right. He'd already carried it out many times. Each time, Subaru had been flung back to the first day.

And this time as well—

Subaru: “Why do I have to be killed?! What did I do?! What did I ever do to you, Reu, why…!”

Reu: “You are—”

Subaru: “I, about you guys, all of you, I l—”

A sharp gust of wind stole her final words away.

Instead, a hot sensation passed out through her throat, and Natsuki Subaru collapsed on the spot and stopped moving. Her hands and feet twitched, and from beyond the edges of her whitening vision, she heard a voice.

Reu: “Nii-sama is too kind.”

And Subaru couldn’t understand the meaning of those words at all.

9

Subaru: “—I can, “Return by Death”.”

The instant she tried to say that, time for Emilio in front of her stopped, and Natsuki Subaru realized that sound, color, and the very passage of time had vanished from the world.

She couldn’t even move her own body. Faced with the arrival of a world frozen still, her consciousness was seized by terror.

If she were left behind in a world where nothing moved like this, then even though time itself had stopped, her mind would be eaten away in a matter of minutes.

Scary, scary, scary—her fear of that outcome tried to fill the one thing still working inside her unmoving body, her brain, but that fear never came to pass.

—Because a greater, immovable terror was slowly drawing near.

???: “—I love you.”

An unfamiliar voice whispered right by her ear, and in this world where nothing should move, the one thing exempt from that law drew closer to Subaru.

It was grotesque, and though it said nothing, it pressed in on Subaru eloquently, sliding into place right in front of her.

What came was a black shadow, a pure black silhouette through which nothing could be seen, a darkness her instincts told her no light could ever dispel.

From that jet-black shadow, a slender arm slid out, slick and smooth.

It was thin, but there was a sense of some firm core of strength running through it, and that arm slipped, slowly, slowly, toward Subaru’s chest.

And then—

???: “—I love you.”

As it sang of love, an unbelievable pain painted over Natsuki Subaru’s consciousness, and with agony beyond imagination, forced her to understand.

No one could share in the despair Subaru felt. She must never tell anyone.

Natsuki Subaru had no choice but to go on resisting, all alone.

—Or so she’d thought.

Victor: “It’s a provisional contract with Vicha, little girl.”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

She had even brushed aside the hand of salvation Emilio had held out to her, and yet the one who extended a helping hand to that Subaru was, of all people, the child she'd thought was off the list of romance targets: Victor.

Seeing how exhausted Subaru was, and hearing her, half out of desperation, ask him for help, Victor looked terribly annoyed, and yet, unable to hide his inherently caring nature beneath his brash attitude, he took Subaru's self-harmed hand and promised he would stay by her side.

Just that single promise was enough to save her heart, and Subaru laughed at how cheap she was.

But it had been such a very, very long time since she'd been able to laugh like that, and Subaru wept. Victor never laughed at those cheap tears spilling from Subaru's eyes.

That blunt kindness, she felt, was what would save Natsuki Subaru —.

10

Victor: "I'll take you outside. If I send you somewhere out of both Roswaal's reach and the elder twin's, you won't have to die."

Subaru: "…"

On the cliff edge with sunset closing in, Victor, who had come all the way here searching for Subaru after she ran away, offered a lifeline to Subaru, who no longer had anywhere she belonged.

It was only half a day ago that she forged a provisional Contract with Victor and, in his Forbidden Library, reached the time limit—the fifth morning she had never once managed to make it to before.

After struggling and struggling, only to finally reach that moment so anticlimactically and rejoice even while feeling oddly let down, Subaru's joy lasted only an instant; cruel fate had no intention of letting her off the hook.

—Rau wailing in anguish over Reu's death—that sight shattered Subaru's joy in an instant.

Subaru had always assumed that Reu was the trigger for the tragedy that unfolded in the mansion, and she was left stupefied at the sight of him lying cold in bed, never to wake again.

With every premise she'd had up to now collapsing and everything she'd painstakingly pieced together suddenly feeling pointless, it was like she'd been hurled into the middle of the sea without even a compass.

No matter where she turned, she couldn't see land anywhere.

The wind, blowing against her like a storm, wouldn't let Subaru advance in the direction she wanted to go.

On top of that, the towering waves, heedless of her feelings, raged on mercilessly, trying to drag Subaru's flimsy raft, tossed about as it was, down to the bottom of the sea.

Subaru: "Rau..."

Victor: "Regardless of how involved you were, the elder of the twins will never forgive you. Those two could never be without each other. Now that one of them is gone, there's nothing that can be done anymore."

Subaru: "…"

With his emotions laid bare, Rau turned the point of his anger toward Subaru.

He was seeking an answer: why his precious younger brother, his other half Reu, had had to die.

If Subaru had that answer, she would have liked to answer Rau's question for him.

But she couldn't. Subaru did not have that answer.

On the contrary, Subaru had been repeating this world over and over while carrying that same question herself.

All while having her life targeted by Reu, and surely by Rau as well.

For those two and their selfish bond, for Subaru to do anything for them—

Subaru: "—Why can't I bring myself to say there's nothing I can do, I wonder."

She clenched the hand she'd had pressed against the ground, lifted it up, and mocked herself.

As she brushed the sand from her hand, Subaru suddenly recalled the sensation of someone holding her hand while she was unconscious—no, not just a sensation, but a memory of a time in the past when someone really had held it.

Subaru could instinctively believe that that had truly happened.

Subaru woke up easily. Her brain came fully awake quickly, and she noticed even little things. Most things faded away while she drifted in the hazy gap between sleep and wakefulness, though.

Subaru: "I can't just write this off as if it never happened… I need it so I can keep facing forward."

A desperate voice, a voice asking why, had been chasing after Natsuki Subaru.

Running and running and running, on Subaru's fleeing back pressed the wail of someone who'd had something precious stolen from them, a sorrowful scream that made her chest tighten just to hear it.

Rau: "Lord Victor, please step aside."

Victor: "I will not allow that. This girl is Vicha's contractor. Even if it's only a provisional Contract, a Contract is a Contract, and I won't let anyone call Vicha unfaithful."

In front of Subaru, who was slowly piecing her resolve together, Rau, having reached the cliff, and Victor, shielding Subaru behind him, stood facing each other.

The two of them were getting worked up on their own, ignoring Subaru, who was at the center of the whole issue, and the guest of honor, Subaru, being left out in the cold did not sit well with her.

So—

Subaru: “Knee-tap!”

Victor: “Wah?!”

She mercilessly sprang a knee-tap on the child in short pants right in front of her.

Suddenly thrown off balance and nearly falling, Victor’s eyes went round, then immediately turned angry, his brows knitting at Subaru’s outrageous attack from behind.

Victor: “Wh-What do you think you’re doing all of a sudden?! Do you even know what Vicha was trying to...”

Subaru: “That was a dangerous stunt. I get that you want to put your body on the line for your older big sis, but sadly I’m not that cheap a woman. I mean, honestly, I was really wavering there, though.”

Victor’s face flushed red, and it was true that his thoughtfulness had struck Subaru straight in the heart.

Honestly, if Victor hadn’t stayed by her side, Subaru might never have broken out of the vicious spiral she’d created herself and might have made an even more foolish choice.

But Victor’s kindness had just barely kept Subaru from going that far.

And so, like this, Subaru’s resolve was set and her guts were steeled.

Subaru: “Rau, I can’t tell you why things ended up like this either. If I knew the answer, I’d tell you, but I can’t. —So I’ll go and find it.”

Rau: “—What good would that do?! Reu is already dead! He’s gone, he’s nowhere anymore... this Rau has already been left behind!”

Subaru: “I won’t let you be all alone. I won’t ever let you feel left behind again. I swear it, not to anyone else, but to myself."

Staring straight at Rau's contorted face, his features twisted and his teeth grinding, Subaru found herself thinking something entirely out of place.

He looked so much like Reu had back in that forest at dusk, when he'd glared at Subaru in anger. They really were twins. But if possible, she wanted to confirm that fact with a different expression on their faces, not one twisted by anger.

With the two of them standing side by side, smiles on their faces, facing Natsuki Subaru.

Rau: "What could you possibly know about Rau and Reu?!"

Subaru: "Nothing. But you don't know either, do you?"

Rau: "Know what..."

Subaru: "—That I! Love you two! A whole lot!!"

Natsuki Subaru's confession of love wiped Rau's thoughts blank for an instant.

Cracking a pointless little joke to herself like, Maybe I actually had more of a chance than I thought, Subaru turned her back on the frozen Rau and wide-eyed Victor and headed for the cliff.

Victor: "Wait—"

The little child's outstretched hand couldn't catch up to Subaru, who had stepped forward without hesitation.

She did feel guilty about shaking off that hand, the one that had once held hers to protect her, and then taking off running. But that wasn't a reason to stop her feet.

She would move forward. —Toward the tomorrow that lay ahead.

To reach, in the truest sense, that moment, that morning she wanted to arrive at.

She'd been told, I'll definitely kill you.

That was why Subaru—

Subaru: "—I'll definitely save you."

Just after her lips formed those words, a tremendous impact shattered her entire body.

It would have been nice if that had cleanly cut off Subaru's consciousness and sent her straight into the fresh attempt she was supposed to leap toward—

—but the fact that she hit the wrong way and didn't quite achieve an instantaneous "death" only spoke to the lousy luck of the woman called Natsuki Subaru.

11

Emilio: "You did really well, Subaru."

With those words, and with the feel of thighs that were soft for a boy beneath the back of her head, Natsuki Subaru was overwhelmed by the sensation of her emotions bursting, overflowing without end.

Even when she tried to stop them, her tears would not, spilling one after another from the corners of her eyes and streaming down.

Subaru: "W-Wait, no, this is, this is all weird…!"

Emilio: "Is it strange to just relax and bawl your eyes out? If it is, then that would mean it's strange for babies to cry a lot too, you know."

Subaru: "That's… not what I mean… and you know that…!"

The voice that came down from right above was Emilio's, gentle and full of concern for her.

With that voice, the warmth of the palm stroking her head, and the feel of his lap supporting it, Natsuki Subaru could feel herself being soothed down to her very soul.

For Rau and Reu, and, in a broader sense, everyone in the mansion, for everything Natsuki Subaru had wanted to become able to love, she had prayed, wished, and resolved to save it all, then jumped off the cliff.

Determined that she would never again let a single thing slip through her fingers, she had stretched her awareness and nerves out to touch every little corner, ready to protect everything—and yet.

Subaru: “And now I fall apart this fast… I’m so pathetic…”

Emilio: “Really? I don’t think so.”

The resolve and determination Subaru had taken on, and the forced smile that had become unnatural because she was too set on pulling everything off without a single failure, had been easily seen through by Emilio’s clear gaze.

Without even giving her time to put up a front, Emilio had forcibly pulled Subaru into an empty room, offered her his lap, and smashed down the crumbling walls around her heart.

Those battered walls had been barely holding something back.

His forceful kindness pried them open, and all of it came pouring out.

As it was, thanks to her, the average looks in the Roswaal mansion had already dropped dramatically, and if she went and showed them her crying face on top of that, it would be the end of the world.

Emilio: “Nothing’s ending. You’re not strange at all, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Stop… saying stuff like that…”

Emilio: “I won’t. Not if you don’t truly believe that yourself, Subaru.”

He sounded as if he knew every last thing about Natsuki Subaru.

Give her a break. Unlike Subaru, who had lived through these past few days over and over, how much could Emilio really know about her?

The only chances Emilio had had to get to know Subaru were that brief time in the loot house in the royal capital and these few days in this loop, barely four days in all.

To then talk like he could see right through all of Subaru, even if she was a shut-in truant with not much life experience under her belt, was still something she did not want him thinking he could pull off.

—Ah, but.

Subaru: "…"

Emilio, stroking Subaru's black hair, stayed right by her as she sobbed.

He had had almost no chances to get to know Subaru.

But that, turned around, meant that Subaru had had as many chances to get to know Emilio as the number of days she had repeated, and that was exactly why she understood the weight of his words.

Emilio was kind, considerate, always thinking hard so as not to hurt anyone.

The reason he could no longer just stand by and watch Subaru like this was, again, that kindness of his.

There was not a trace of falsehood or calculation in this gentle, soft way he had of loosening up Subaru's feelings, either.

Emilio: "It must have been really tough."

There was no need anywhere to doubt the feelings behind those words.

—And Natsuki Subaru, from the bottom of her heart, could now strongly wish to live for this love.

Emilio: “…”

Subaru slept soundly, breathing softly in her sleep like a child.

Looking at the relieved profile of the girl resting on his lap, Emilio let the ends of his eyebrows droop and gently brushed the bangs from her forehead.

Just then—

Reu: “It seems Subaru-san won’t be of any use today.”

Emilio: “Yeah, that’s true. She’s only been a maid for a little while, and she’s already slacking off like this. What a little lazybones. Make sure to scold her properly later.”

Reu: “—Looking at this sleeping face, that mood kind of goes away.”

Reu, who had surely noticed how Subaru had been overdoing it, looked at her sleeping face as she lay on Emilio’s lap and let that sort of comment slip.

Getting chided from inside the magic crystal that he shouldn’t be staring so much at a sleeping girl, Emilio apologized to Tink in his heart.

But if Tink hadn’t seen how close to the edge Subaru was and pushed him forward, Emilio could never have stepped in this far.

Now he was glad he’d properly spoken up to Subaru and let her get it all out.

Reu: “I will go speak with Nii-sama. I have to take over Subaru-san’s work, after all.”

Without saying anything harsh, Reu left those words behind and turned his back on Emilio and Subaru.

To Reu's back, Emilio, who had felt that Reu had been oddly distant toward Subaru ever since she began working at the mansion, called out.

Emilio: "Reu."

Reu: "…"

Emilio: "Subaru is a good girl."

He was appealing to him that there was no need to doubt that.

Reu gave no answer to that; only the sound of the door closing served as his reply.

Emilio: "Hang in there, hang in there…"

As he stroked the head of the sleeping Subaru, Emilio spoke those words of encouragement over her.

Over and over, he repeated them as if in prayer, wishing that everything, all of it, would work out in the end, and that the feelings of Subaru, who wanted things to turn out that way, would be granted.

12

—Among the children of Arlam Village, Pietro had the firm belief that he was the smartest and the best-looking of them all.

It was what you'd call an unadorable kind of self-awareness, but he could still play things well enough that the people around him, the adults included, never caught on.

Someone who had strengths of their own yet still provoked resentment because of them was just bad at handling themselves.

If you noticed early on that what mattered was how you firmed up the ground under your own feet, then you had all the ability you needed to bend the people around you to your will.

That was Pietro's philosophy, and the sense of omnipotence that came from his youth.

However—

Pietro: “Su…baru… that kid, Maorooo, he… deeper in…”

With his fever-addled head, he desperately tried to tell them that Maoro had been taken away.

Peering down at Pietro’s face where he lay collapsed on the low grassy hill was a maid from the mansion, with black hair tied back behind her head and a sharp gaze that didn’t really suit the maid uniform she wore.

She’d become the talk of the village as the girl who’d been newly hired to work at the lord’s mansion, and Pietro couldn’t help but have rather complicated feelings about her.

First of all, adults, every last one of them, doted on Pietro.

As the most handsome boy in the village and someone expected to one day have scores of women falling for him, Pietro, even this young, ruled those around him with hints of that promise and with the charm that came from knowing his own talents.

But Pietro’s ultimate survival tactic didn’t work on the maid—Subaru.

It wasn’t that she already had someone she loved or that their tastes were incompatible.

Truly beautiful things captivated others beyond such individual preferences. Pietro had that. That was the source of his self-esteem.

And yet, it didn’t work on Subaru.

Of course, she did toss him words like “You’ve got a bright future” and “You’re cute, you’re cool,” but there wasn’t the slightest trace of that awe you felt toward someone on a whole other level.

She treated Pietro at his true size and saw him just like the other children around him.

For Pietro, that was a fresh feeling and, at the same time, a frustrating one.

It was just that, unlike the adults Pietro could bend to his will, Subaru, who had a firm sense of self, seemed to him like someone who wasn't being moved by anything else.

And so—

Subaru: "It'll be fine, Pietro. Me and this big bro over here will go and find them, okay!"

To the words he managed to force out through the tightness in his chest, Subaru took his hand and answered him in all seriousness.

The strength of her grip felt to Pietro like proof of just how earnestly she'd accepted his words, and he felt relieved.

Reu: "Subaru-san, if it was Witchbeasts that carried the child off, then they…"

Subaru: "Hold it, Reu. Pietro did his best to tell us his friend got taken away. Even though he's having a hard time himself, he's worrying about his friend. I wanna honor those feelings."

Reu: "…"

Subaru: "If you won't, then I'll go by myself. Reu, you take these kids back to the village…"

Reu: "Please don't say such foolish things. —I will be going with you as well. Nii-sama told me to look after you, Subaru-san."

In response to Subaru's desperate plea, the blue-haired butler beside her nodded.

He worked at the mansion and often came to the village on shopping trips. He looked far more reliable than Subaru, but with him there, would Subaru really be all right?

Villager: “—! Perfect timing! Over here! Can I leave the children with you?!”

Through Pietro’s hazy consciousness, he could see Subaru waving to someone beyond.

The sound of hurried footsteps coming their way told him that adults from the village were running up to them. Leaving Pietro and the others to those adults, Subaru headed into the depths of the forest together with the butler.

To rescue Maoro, who had vanished into the depths of the forest along with the Witchbeasts.

Pietro: “Be careful, Subaru…”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know. Pinky swear.”

Being held in an adult’s arms, Pietro hooked his little finger around Subaru’s little finger as she said something he didn’t really understand and waggled their joined hands.

When at last their pinkies came apart, he felt a pang of loneliness, and at the same time, a strange sense of reassurance welled up in his chest, telling him that it was all right to believe.

Subaru: “Let’s go, Reu! I’m counting on you!”

Reu: “You needn’t say it. Please don’t move in front, Subaru-san. You will only get in the way.”

Subaru: “Don’t go killing my motivation like that!”

Seeing Subaru and the butler off as the two of them vanished into the gloom, Pietro felt his own consciousness growing distant.

As he felt himself slipping away, Pietro prayed with all his might.

If the world really would turn out the way he wished it to.

Pietro: “Please… don’t let anything bad happen.”

And so, for the first time in his life, Pietro prayed with all his heart, desperately, for the sake of someone else.

13

Victor: “At this rate, you will be dead in less than half a day, you know.”

Hearing that said to her straight on by Victor, Subaru was surprised at how not-shocked she actually felt.

Of course, it was not as if she could stay completely calm when she had just had a death sentence handed to her to her face.

Victor: “It seems you took it more calmly than I thought, you know.”

Subaru: “Dunno. With all this heavy info just piling on and on, there’s a chance my brain’s gone full circle and I’m just kind of dazed right now. For reference, can I at least ask why I’m gonna die?”

Victor: “—A curse.”

Subaru: “…Knew it’d be that.”

At Victor’s narrowed-eye reply, Subaru scratched at her head with her hair let down.

Setting aside Reu’s direct, beat-you-to-death approach, the factor that brought Subaru to “death” was Curse Arts, and the culprit was the Witchbeasts living around the village of Arlam.

Every time she used Return by Death and went on a shopping trip to the village, Subaru would always get her hand bitten by the puppy that played with the village children, but the reveal was that that dog itself had been the Witchbeast in question—an Wolgarm, the so-called Silent Killer.

In the loop where Reu lost his life, it had been Reu who was cursed by the Witchbeast in Subaru’s place.

That said, unlike the careless Subaru, it was hard to imagine Reu just letting a Witchbeast bite his hand so easily, and she wanted to suspect some sort of deliberate intent at work.

Subaru: “I mean, when neither me nor Reu got bitten by the dog in the village, that time it was the kids who got dragged off into the forest instead, right? …And when we went in to rescue them—”

Victor: “You got yourself bitten by Wolgarm an awful lot, you know. That is what will be the cause of your death.”

Subaru: “…Not even you can fix that, Victa?”

Victor: “If it were an ordinary curse, Vicha could dispel it without any trouble, you know. But the curses placed on you by multiple Witchbeasts are tangled together and are eating away at you.”

Subaru: “Aaah, so like when the controller cord on a game’s gotten super tangled up? Yeah, okay, I can see how you wouldn’t be able to undo that.”

At this latest extra helping of malice dumped onto her own head, Subaru shook it side to side with a “good grief.”

Frowning at her attitude, Victor went on.

Victor: “Are you saying you are not afraid of dying, you know?”

Subaru: “Of course not, don’t be stupid. Dying’s super scary. My knees are shaking. I feel like I’m gonna wet myself even now, but I’m desperately holding it in. Try to understand, okay? A maiden’s heart and all that.”

Victor: “…”

Subaru: “But I’m breaking up with that bad habit of mine where I give up and throw everything away right away. I finally managed to keep things from going sour between us this time, so there’s no way I’m giving up here—”

She had just answered Victor’s question like that when—

Subaru: "—Giving up is out of the question. Please tell me what I should do, Lord Victor."

Victor: "…"

A plea Subaru did not know beat against her eardrums.

This was not the first time something like this had happened to her—having memories of a conversation she should not know, as if she had been there to hear it.

It was the same as the warmth of the twins' hands that had given her the push to jump off the cliff herself to get everything back.

Subaru's abnormally sharp-waking brain, even while she was asleep, retained things that happened at her bedside in a shallow but wide way; this was proof she had remembered it.

Subaru: "—Victor, where did Reu go?"

Victor: "…"

Subaru: "Answer me! What happened to Reu, where did he go?!"

Clutching at that memory of Reu's voice, floating at the shallow edge of her recollection and ready to vanish at any moment, Subaru questioned Victor.

At her question, Victor hesitated for a while before—

Victor: "—He went into the forest to hunt down the Witchbeasts that are eating away at your life, you know."

Subaru: "Wha…"

Victor: "It is the simplest method of undoing a curse, you see. Kill the caster and you eliminate the chance of the curse's effect activating. That rule does not change even when the caster is a Witchbeast, you know."

Subaru: "But! The Witchbeasts that cursed me, there are tons of them in that forest…!"

The idea of defeating every last one of them and saving Subaru was a pipe dream.

They could not let even a single one escape. With no way of checking, Reu would not be able to stop until he had hunted down every Witchbeast that could possibly be a candidate.

But that was not realistic.

Rau: “—What exactly do you mean by that, Lord Victor?”

Victor: “—Rau.”

Subaru and Victor had chosen an out-of-the-way corner of the village where no one came to talk.

There, stepping in as an uninvited third party, was Rau.

In his pale-crimson eyes swirled a complex mix of colors as he stared fixedly at Victor.

They did not know how much of the conversation he had overheard.

However, whatever you said about his abilities as a servant, Rau’s wits were above average, and from Victor’s slight averted glance, he immediately grasped the situation.

That something had happened to his younger brother—to Reu.

Subaru: “Wait! Don’t do anything rash!”

Rau: “Let go! Reu is in danger. Even if you stop me, Rau is going.”

Subaru: “I get it, okay! I won’t stop you! Just listen to me for one second!”

She grabbed Rau bodily to stop him from just turning around and bolting straight into the forest.

If she did not do at least that much, the difference in strength between a man and a woman would let him shake her off easily.

But Subaru practically went at the hem of Rau's butler uniform with her teeth, trying to wear down his reckless momentum.

Thanks to that woman-thrown-aside tactic, Rau did stop his feet.

Subaru: "First off, I'm completely against just blindly running around looking for Reu. All I can see in that future is secondary victims—in other words, "the mummy-hunter turns into a mummy." So we need a different approach!"

Victor: "Rau has Clairvoyance. If he uses that, he can take his time and search for where Reu is. There, I have refuted you. Move aside now."

Subaru: "Hold up, hold up—if he's got such a handy power, that's all the more reason to take me along, okay?! That way no one has to end up missing!"

Rau: "What?"

Rau's hand, which had been trying to push Subaru aside, stopped, and his pale-crimson eyes narrowed in suspicion.

At Rau's reaction, Subaru rubbed her nose with her thumb.

Subaru: "If we can help it, I wanna have all of us together to see the fifth morning. I'm greedy, and I've got a stingy side, so I'm done tossing out all the hard work we put in this time."

Rau: "…What do you mean?"

Subaru: "I've got a body that Witchbeasts just love to flock to. Reu's trying to wipe out the Witchbeasts in the forest—the Wolgarm. If I go into the forest, I'll naturally close the distance between me and Reu. Well?"

Rau: "…"

Subaru: "And just so you know, I'm not the type to tell some stupid lie that doesn't even make sense. If you think I'm lying, you can leave me behind in the forest without mercy."

Rau: “There’s no way I could report something like that to Lord Roswaal or Lord Emilio. —First and foremost, if Barusu dies for nothing, all of Reu’s efforts will be wasted.”

With a hand to his mouth, Rau thought it over for a while.

But it seemed no clever plan came to mind that could shut up Subaru, eyes full of resolve, and make her back down. Or perhaps he had decided there was some merit in what she was saying.

Rau: “If you become a burden, I’ll break your knees and dump you back in the village.”

Subaru: “Is that really something you say to a girl?!”

Rau: “Hah!”

He let out a snort of laughter like he had won, but Subaru felt as if Rau’s usual tone had come back.

Then she turned to Victor, who had been watching the situation play out.

Subaru: “So yeah, me and Rau are heading into the forest to look for Reu. When Emilio-kyun wakes up from crashing after treating everyone, smooth things over for us, okay?”

Victor: “…You truly mean to go through with this, you know?”

Subaru: “Of course. Turning everything up to this point into some big joke would be way tackier, don’t you think?”

To worry over Reu’s safety and bring him back meant leaving the bomb called a curse inside Subaru’s body.

If that bomb went off, she would die—that was something she had already had seared into her body over and over—no, into her very soul, and it was no exaggeration to put it that way.

But she would never let things play out the way Victor feared.

Subaru was not going off to die; she was going off to live.

Subaru: “All right then, time for greedy old me to go grab every last thing I want! —Bring it on, oh inevitable fate!”

The grand adventure of Natsuki Subaru, summoned to another world.

Stage 2: Roswaal Mansion—Day Four, her fifth attempt was about to begin—.

14

To be perfectly honest, Reu himself didn’t understand why he was going this far, putting his body on the line and staking his life like this.

Focusing his awareness on his forehead, feeling the heat building there, he ground his skull as the oni horn stored inside his head slowly pushed outward.

The horn, wreathed in light, the instant it was exposed to the open air, greedily devoured mana in its hunger for power, and the heat it gave off flooded Reu’s entire body with a strength unimaginable under normal circumstances.

This was the source of the Oni Clan’s power—the power of the oni, said to be the strongest among the demihuman races.

That said, among those oni who were treated that way, Reu was a failure. Though he was supposed to be an oni who originally should have had two horns, he only had one.

However, the number of horns had nothing to do with why Reu was a failure.

Because Rau, who just like him had only a single horn, possessed enough power to be called the second coming of the legendary “Oni God,” a being whose name was passed down endlessly among the Oni Clan.

From a young age, Rau had been blessed with such talent that it made comparing him with those around him feel ridiculous.

And Reu, though he had been born as Rau's twin at the same time, was markedly inferior to him in ability, and only ever piled up more and more self-loathing at being a disgrace to the Oni Clan.

When their village was attacked by the Witch Cult, and their parents and kin were being killed, even when his brother, fighting to protect useless him, had his horn broken in the instant he stretched a hand out toward Reu—

Reu: "Ah… it finally broke."

Before worrying about his brother's life, he'd first felt the satisfaction of seeing his own sense of inferiority fulfilled. He was the lowest of the low.

Reu: "A-Aaaargh—!!"

Oni power surging through his entire body, Reu slammed sheer violence into the four-legged Witchbeasts that had him surrounded and were springing at him.

He shattered the head of a Witchbeast that opened its jaws wide to bite him with a punch, then swung the morningstar in his other hand in a great arc, slicing clean across the torsos of the ones foolish enough to leap into the air.

Blood and entrails sprayed everywhere as the Witchbeasts scattered their lives.

He wasn't counting, but he must have already killed thirty, forty of them. Even so, no matter how many of their fellows were taken out, the Witchbeasts never lowered the spearpoint of their killing intent directed at humans.

There was nothing they prioritized above slaughtering every last different life-form.

That was the twisted instinct of the Witchbeasts, a warped way of being that took precedence even over their own survival.

Reu: “Die! Die! Just die already—!!”

He crushed those creatures with their horribly warped existence one after another.

Over and over he swung the iron ball, mixing rage and hatred together with a bit of pity and sympathy.

Witchbeasts were a mistaken existence.

And in that sense, Reu was no different from a Witchbeast.

He had gone wrong. Perhaps his choices, no—perhaps things had already gone wrong from the very first moment.

From the instant he was born after stealing his brother Rau’s horn, things had gone wrong.

The Witchbeasts, born as Witchbeasts, and Reu, born as a dropout—

How much difference was there really between them?

If there was no difference great enough to be found there, then the iron ball he swung was both mercy and, at the same time, a tantrum of misdirected anger.

At the very least—

Reu: “Aaaargh—!!”

If all of this rage painting everything in front of his eyes bright red could at least be of use to someone’s future—if it could at least help save that sharp-eyed girl who had tried to help miserable him—

Then beyond that, there was surely nothing more Reu ought to wish for—.

Reu: “…”

Drunk on blood, before he knew it Reu’s world had been dyed entirely red, and his thoughts dulled to the very limit.

In a situation where his own life was on the line, the explosion of survival instinct that occurred in the body of an oni—that tremendous surge wiped away every factor that might slow his movements: cool-headed assessment of the battle, fear, anxiety, all of it, and poured Reu's physical function wholly into the single purpose of surviving.

Nothing—yes, nothing—was distinguished.

Everything that moved around him was, to Reu, something that had to be smashed.

And so—

Subaru: "Heeaaave-ho!!"

Reu: "Huh?"

The thing hurled in along with that stupidly off-key battle shout should, originally, have been nothing more than one more obstacle for Reu to intercept.

Without any distinction whatsoever, that is.

If there was anything, across this wide world, that could have awakened in Reu—now ruled entirely by the instincts of an oni—any possibility besides destruction and killing, there was only one such thing.

—And what had been thrown in was, miraculously, that one thing.

Reu: "…"

On reflex, Reu stretched out his hands and caught the body flying toward him on a low trajectory—not even enough to call a parabola.

He firmly received that slender body in his arms and saw from up close what it was.

It was, unmistakably, the figure of the brother more precious to him than his own life.

Subaru: “Geh! Didn’t manage to throw you as high as I thought I would!”

Right after Rau ended up tightly hugged in Reu’s arms, a figure leaped in toward them.

He was within reach if Reu only stretched out a hand, but the arms he needed for that were missing. Both arms were cradling his brother’s body, which he could not bear to let go of, and so he could not extend them.

However—

Subaru: “Oof.”

The sword swung by that figure who had jumped in—broken halfway along its length—had been aimed at Reu’s horn, but it fell just a few centimeters short and sliced through empty air.

Just like that, the person who had swung the sword dashed right past Reu’s side and on behind him.

Subaru: “I totally blew it! Just one more step, if I’d had a bit more guts—Gyaaaah?!”

Reu: “—?!”

In the next instant, the ground beneath the feet of the black-haired person who had run past erupted as if it had exploded, sending that slender body flying high, high up into the sky.

The one who had done that was one of the Witchbeasts that had been carefully watching the ebb and flow of the battle from above, lying in wait for the moment to take Reu’s life—the magic unleashed by that small-looking one had launched the girl’s body upward.

And then—

Subaru: “Laugh it up, Reu. —’Cause today, I’m more oni than any oni out there!”

Spinning and spinning as she fell, the figure unleashed a full-strength strike.

This time, there was no way for Reu—clutching his brother’s body tight against him—to defend against it.

Reu: “…”

A perfectly placed impact slammed into Reu’s forehead horn, sending a numbing shock through it.

15

Roswaal: “The Wolgarm in the forest have been wiped out. So neither you nor Subaru-kun need worry anyyy more~. While I was away, you even handled the whole Arlam Village situation. You did very good wooork~.”

With overwhelming magical firepower, Roswaal had swept away the packs of Wolgarm infesting the forest.

Though she was his master, with her out-of-scale strength and decisiveness, all Reu could do in response to her actions was bow his head deeply and show both gratitude and appreciation.

—The conclusion to the uproar caused by the Witchbeasts living around the village and the curses they had brought.

The pack of Wolgarm that cursed people and hunted them to steal their life force had, thanks to Reu’s reckless rampage, Rau and Subaru’s struggle to bring that reckless Reu back, and finally the overwhelming flames of the returning Roswaal, been burned away to the last beast.

If you broke down the overall extermination rate of the pack, Reu alone had handled about thirty percent, Rau and Subaru together about ten percent, and Roswaal had single-handedly taken care of the remaining sixty.

Looking at it that way, it was clear just how reckless and, at the same time, how pointless Reu’s actions had been.

Even if Reu hadn't pulled that foolish stunt without regard for anything around him, Roswaal, upon returning, would have made it in time to wipe out the pack, and Subaru's curse would never have been triggered.

Or perhaps Roswaal might have known some method of breaking the curse that even Victor did not.

Roswaal: "That would be overestimating me waaay too much, you knooow~. There isn't any great difference between Victor and me when it comes to magical knowledge. If Victor says he cannot do something, then you can say that I cannot either. —Much to my chagrin~."

The last few words she added sounded lonely, without a hint of falsehood.

Precisely because of that, even though he resisted the idea, Reu could believe that the words before that weren't just some excuse meant to comfort him.

Still—

Subaru: "—Reu?"

Reu: "Ah…"

As he kept watch over the peacefully sleeping face on the bed, her eyelids suddenly trembled, and the consciousness of the sleeping girl surfaced.

From the tiny initial reaction to her awakening, the whole process happened so quickly that Reu's reflexes were a step behind. She had claimed she woke up easily, but this was too easily.

Because of that—

Subaru: "You were holding my hand?"

Reu: "—My apologies. I… could not think of anything else I could do."

Subaru: “…”

Reu: “When something painful happened, having someone hold Reu’s hand always put Reu at ease. So when I remembered how that felt… I must have started acting like a child.”

Even though his height and his limbs had grown, Reu himself hadn’t changed at all from how he’d been when he was little.

He felt as if his own actions had just gone and proved that. It left him feeling awkward.

Back when he was small and too anxious or ashamed to sleep, the one who had protected Reu was his brother Rau, whose warm palm would hold his hand as they lay under the same covers.

Always walking out in front and telling him that as long as they were together there was nothing to worry about, everything about his brother had been Reu’s guiding signpost—and that hadn’t changed even after they lost their home and were taken in by Roswaal.

Reu: “Subaru-san, the curse that was eating away at your body will no longer trigger. Please rest easy.”

Subaru: “Well, that’s a relief… Wait, what’s with all this scribbling on my nightclothes?!”

Reu: “The children from the village. While you were sleeping, they came to visit and wrote those. Everyone was worried about you.”

Subaru: “Every last one of them… don’t just casually come stare at a maiden’s sleeping face…”

Covering her face with both hands, Subaru muttered that with her cheeks faintly flushed.

But the way she gazed down at the sleeve of her nightclothes—where the children had written so many messages of encouragement—and softened her eyes fondly, the corners of them drooping, told a different story.

Seeing that, Reu felt as if his chest were being tightly squeezed.

For some reason, having himself be the one here felt horribly out of place, and wanting to run away from that lingering atmosphere, he forced himself to continue with, “And so.”

Reu: “Reu must apologize to you, Subaru-san. —Even if the curse is no longer a concern, the wounds on your body will remain. And on your heart as well.”

Subaru: “Ahh, well, yeah, I guess I’m not gonna be able to look at a dog’s face for a while. As for the scars… um, are there any on my face or anything?”

Reu: “No. I made certain there would be no scars on your face, your neck, or any other plainly visible place.”

Subaru: “Then I’m basically fine. Anyone who sees more than that is either me, or, you know, someone I’m okay with showing that much to.”

Reu: “But…”

Subaru: “More importantly, are you okay, Reu? That’s what matters most to me here.”

At that kind of consideration, Reu felt his breath catch.

Subaru might say she didn’t mind, but that couldn’t be true. The wounds she had no need to bear had been borne because of him; it was unmistakably Reu’s fault.

Reu: “Reu is unharmed. There is nothing wrong. But that is… what hurts.”

Subaru: “Hurts?”

Reu: “Everything that happened this time is Reu’s fault. If Reu had done his job properly, there would have been no need to fear for Subaru-san’s safety, nor for Nii-sama to be placed in danger, nor for the villagers to suffer any harm.”

Officially, one could say all of that fell under the responsibility of the lord, Roswaal. But in Roswaal's absence, it had been the house steward, Reu, who had been entrusted with the running of the mansion.

He had had the role of managing everything properly and keeping it all running as it should.

Because he had failed to fulfill it, things had ended up like this—

Reu: "So the responsibility for everything this time lies with Reu—"

Subaru: "So you're saying you'll take responsibility and take damaged-goods me in?"

Reu: "—If that is what is necessary."

Subaru: "Ahahaha, I was joking. Don't go saying stupid stuff like that. For starters, if you say it's all your fault, then that means I've got responsibility here too."

Speaking as if it were a joke, Subaru shrugged her shoulders.

For a moment, Reu didn't understand what she meant. She'd only just been hired and didn't know left from right about the Mathers domain. There was no way she could have any responsibility.

But contrary to Reu's thoughts, Subaru gave a wry smile.

Subaru: "I do. I've got that responsibility."

Reu: "…"

Subaru: "And I took responsibility for what was within my reach. That's how I ended up arriving at this sunrise, so don't tell me I was wrong."

Subaru stared off into the distance, and Reu still didn't understand what she meant.

Even so, for some reason, he felt like he was about to cry. In those rare black eyes of hers, deep within, he caught a glimpse of struggles and anguish he couldn't even imagine—and of the brightness of having overcome them.

Compared to what Subaru had gone through, his own worries felt tiny—

Subaru: "Besides, I wouldn't have gotten here if you hadn't been around, Reu. So instead of cursing the day I finally managed to reach, I wanna celebrate it."

Reu: "…Huh?"

Subaru: "What, what? Don't tell me you're actually thinking everything would've worked out somehow even without you? Sorry to say, but even if we never got to test it, I'm gonna say loud and clear that's not how it would've gone."

Arms folded, Subaru said that in a way that shattered Reu's hesitation.

As Reu found himself taken aback, Subaru raised a finger.

Subaru: "For whatever reason, you've convinced yourself that everything you do backfires, that all the bad stuff is your fault, and all the good stuff is someone else's doing, but that's just not true."

Reu: "B-But in reality, Reu really did…"

Subaru: "Nope. Like, seriously, when we were being chased by Witchbeasts in the forest, how long do you think I was running around with your brother on my back? That guy dropped out suuuper early on."

Reu: "…"

Subaru: "Which means in that situation, Rau was out of the fight right off the bat! So does that mean the rest of the results are all thanks to me? No waaay. I don't have that kind of powerrr! So that leaves…"

There she paused and looked straight at Reu.

Under the gaze shining in those black eyes, Reu wanted to avert his own, but couldn't.

It was as if her eyes were burning away every path of retreat, leaving him nowhere to run.

Subaru: "Saying you couldn't do anything is a huge mistake. The reason I'm able to sit here like this is mostly thanks to you, Reu! So hold your head up already."

Reu: "…If Nii-sama were at full strength, then that wouldn't…"

Subaru: "Maybe I couldn't say it then. But I heard it from Rau. That "perfect Rau" you're picturing? He doesn't exist anywhere. Or what, are you saying a Rau without a horn isn't worth anything to you?"

Reu: "—That is not true! Nii-sama has always been Reu's…!"

Subaru: "See? You know it yourself."

Reu: "Ah—"

Stunned, Reu let himself be led inward by Subaru's words.

Born as twins, as the one who had stolen Rau's horn, Reu had gone on and on tormenting himself. At every turn he found himself thinking, If only Brother were here…

And yet Subaru, who should only have known them for a few short days, saw right through him with ease.

Was it because his worries were shallow, fragile, and meaningless?

Subaru: "It's because I was watching you and Rau with everything I had."

Reu: "…"

Subaru: "Reu, I don't think you can just flip a switch and change how you think right away. It's not as easy as it sounds, and being "reborn" might take something on the level of dying once. But I really don't recommend dying. It's honestly, seriously awful."

Reu: "…You say that like you've actually died before."

The way she said it, with such real weight behind it, made Reu almost believe Subaru really had died once.

In fact, back in the capital, when she saved Emilio, Subaru had nearly died in her place, so in terms of a near-death experience, she might have tasted something close to death.

But even before that, she had been able to stake her life for Emilio's sake, and in that, Reu couldn't help but feel she was fundamentally different from him.

Even so—

Subaru: "If you ever feel like you want to change from who you are now, or you wanna meet tomorrow in a better mood, I'll help you. As long as I'm not in the way."

Reu: "Reu… change?"

Subaru: "Where I'm from, there's this saying: "If you talk about next year, the oni will laugh." So, you know—"

As Reu sat there dumbfounded, Subaru's lips curled into a crooked grin.

For someone who joked about her scary-looking face, that smile, in that moment, seemed more dazzling to Reu than anything, anything else.

Subaru: "So let's laugh, Reu. A gloomy face doesn't suit anyone. Let's laugh and talk about the future. You've spent all this time looking back, so from here on out, let's face forward! For starters, we can talk about tomorrow."

Reu: "Tomorrow…"

Subaru: "Yeah, anything's fine. Like, "What should we make for tomorrow's menu?" or "Maybe I'll splurge on some fancy bath salts," or "I'll show off a different bowtie than usual," dumb little stuff like that. Let's talk about that kind of everyday nothing together, okay?”

To Reu, Subaru’s suggestion was so small that no one could possibly say what, if anything, it would change about the tomorrow that came.

He let out a breath.

And in that instant, the lump lodged in his chest, the haze clouding his head, cleared just a little.

When it cleared even that little bit, it felt like his field of view had opened up.

Reu: “Reu is much more clumsy than you think, Subaru-san. So I might lean on you so much that you end up regretting saying all that.”

Subaru: “Mmm, well, I’ll manage. I’m the one who said it, after all. And it’s not like I’m some superwoman who can do everything by herself either. Let’s just lean on each other as we go. Don’t worry, Emilio-kyun and Tink, and Victa and Ros-chi, and of course Rau too, none of them are gonna complain about that.”

Smiling without a hint of guilt, Subaru gave him a thumbs-up and flashed her teeth.

Keeping that gesture going, she added:

Subaru: “We’re gonna laugh and mess around and talk about the future that is tomorrow. It’s been my dream to talk about next year while laughing together with an oni.”

Reu: “…You really are oni-like.”

Subaru: “Right?”

Drawn in by Subaru’s way of speaking that never tried too hard, Reu found himself saying that, and before he realized it, heat welled up and spilled from the corners of his eyes, running down his cheeks.

Come to think of it, how long had it been since he last let himself cry so openly like this?

Reu: “…”

Back then, whenever Reu cried like this, the one who had always been beside him was his brother.

For a long, long time, Rau had stayed at his side as the signpost for a little brother who didn’t know how to live in this wide world and was frightened by his own uncertainty, serving as his example.

That was why this was a first.

For the first time, Rau was not at Reu’s side while he cried—and instead, his hand was being held by someone else.

A soft, small hand, different from his brother’s.

Feeling the hand of someone who wished for a future together with him, Reu kept on leaning on it.

He kept on leaning on it.

16

—All told, after four rounds of Return by Death, Natsuki Subaru had broken out of the dead end.

She only had that single day in the royal capital to compare it to, but these several-day challenges using Return by Death had worn down her nerves, battered her spirit, and come close to clouding her very soul.

Even so, Subaru had overcome all those obstacles and finally made it to the fifth day.

Granted, though—

Emilio: “—I’m mad at you, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Emilio-kyun…”

Emilio: “Don’t give me those eyes! Honestly, that was reaaally dangerous, you know. When I heard what happened afterward, you have no idea how much the blood drained from my face…”

Hands on his hips, Emilio fumed, his white cheeks flushed red.

As you’d expect from a once-in-a-century pretty boy, even that angry display made Subaru’s brain go numb, but she understood perfectly well why he was so furious, so she couldn’t drop her contrite attitude.

The children of Arlam Village had been targeted by Witchbeasts, and on top of that, Subaru and Reu had nearly lost their lives.

As a result, after pouring himself into healing magic for them, Emilio had been left completely exhausted and had fallen asleep.

It had been while Emilio slept that Subaru had gone into the forest with Rau, both to save Reu and to strike back at the Witchbeasts.

To then be told that everyone at the mansion but him had been fighting for their lives while he was out… no wonder Emilio’s feelings had taken the form of that beautiful angry face.

Subaru: “Uuugh, I do feel bad for you, Emilio-kyun, but what a feast for the eyes…”

Emilio: “See! That’s exactly how you try to joke your way out of it again. If Roswaal hadn’t made it back, what do you think would’ve happened? And Tink, Tink’s just as bad.”

Subaru: “Sorry, sorry, don’t be mad at Tink. I’m the one who asked him to stay with you, Emilio-kyun.”

Considering there was always the chance someone had sicced those Witchbeasts on them, there had been a real risk that a follow-up attack on Arlam Village might come while Subaru and the others were away.

Fortunately, their precautions had turned out to be unnecessary, but it hadn’t been something they could afford not to prepare for.

For all she knew, the reason no second attack had come was precisely because Tink and Emilio had stayed in the village.

At any rate—

Emilio: “Defending Tink is fine, but how are you going to explain yourself, Subaru? Subaru who tied me to a chair so I couldn’t follow after you.”

Subaru: “Ugh…”

Emilio: ““Ugh” isn’t going to cut it. …I was really, reaaally worried, you know.”

With Emilio’s eyes drooping like that as he said it, Subaru’s guilt hit max.

No excuse she came up with would make up for what she’d done to Emilio.

It was true that she’d left him in the village as backup, but it was equally true that a big part of it had been a maiden’s wish not to expose him to danger.

Emilio: “Victor went out of his way to come to the village too, so I bet he was worried as well.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’ll make sure to properly thank Victa too. That little shota has done nothing but take care of me from start to finish…”

It had been all thanks to Victor that they’d realized her repeated cause of death had been the Witchbeasts’ curse, that they’d understood leaving her alone after she came back from the forest would have been fatal, and that—reckless as it was—he’d pointed out the path she had needed to take to survive.

Even before that, it had been thanks to him that Subaru had been able to believe in Rau and Reu again and steel herself to face the future together with everyone at the mansion, so she honestly couldn’t hold her head up around him.

Subaru: “Next time, I’ll give him a nice, gentle ear cleaning.”

Emilio: “Is that something Victor would actually be happy about?”

Subaru: “Huh? He wouldn’t? Isn’t having a girl clean your ears every guy’s dream?”

Emilio: “I… wouldn’t know…”

Emilio’s underwhelmed reaction genuinely surprised Subaru.

Maybe it was Subaru’s values that were off, or maybe it was just some cultural difference in this other world.

Subaru: “In that case, I’m out of moves…”

Emilio: “How about you just thank him honestly?”

Subaru: “But that alone doesn’t feel like enough for me… What about ten ear cleanings?”

Emilio: “If you don’t have any other ideas, I think starting with a thank you is best.”

Faced with such an unoriginal suggestion, Subaru agonized over whether that really was enough.

If possible, Subaru was the type who wanted to go overboard with the wrapping on anniversaries and special events; if she couldn’t give them her all, she honestly felt it was better not to celebrate at all.

Subaru: “So if it’s just gonna be a compromise, I’ll put the thank you on hold until I come up with something.”

Emilio: “Try to come up with it sooner rather than later, okay? I’ll think with you.”

Subaru: “Wow, that’s reassuring. It’s like, you know, the two of us working on a project together! A first bite!”

Emilio: “Sorry, I have no idea what you’re talking about.”

At Subaru’s excited nonsense, Emilio replied with a troubled look.

Then silence fell for a while between the two of them, standing in the mansion's courtyard, feeling the breeze.

Even sharing such a small moment was a delightful reward for Subaru.

Normally, Subaru wasn't good with quiet stretches, but if it was with Emilio, they didn't bother her.

At any rate—

Emilio: “Once again, you ended up saving me, Subaru. I should be the one thanking you.”

Subaru: “Eh! Emilio-kyun, you're gonna give me a reward?!”

Emilio: “Not a reward, a thank you. Would an ear cleaning be good?”

Subaru: “An ear cleaning doesn't count as a reward! Ah! You're right! When I imagine it happening to me, it's not a reward at all!”

Cut by the sharp edge of the boomerang she'd thrown herself, Subaru's eyes went wide.

Chuckling wryly at her reaction, Emilio asked:

Emilio: “Then what do you want?”

Subaru: “…”

At that utterly defenseless attitude, dark thoughts started to bubble up inside Subaru.

This Emilio, despite having such perfect looks, had shockingly low defenses when it came to dealing with people.

That was great for Subaru—but it was just as great for anyone else.

In other words, if she dawdled, someone might just snatch him away in no time.

Subaru: “This is the time to make full use of my advantage…!”

Emilio: “Subaru?”

Subaru: “A-Anything is fine, right? You’re grateful to me, aren’t you, Emilio-kyun?”

Emilio: “Well, yes, but the way you’re confirming it makes it kind of hard to just nod along…”

Her voice unintentionally went shrill, making her sound like some kind of creep, and Emilio looked worried, but Subaru took a deep breath and successfully sealed away the rising evil thoughts with a Demon-Sealing Wave.

Sitting down on the rice cooker of her closed-off heart, Subaru cleared her throat, and then—

Subaru: “Then… will you go on a date with me?”

Emilio: “A date?”

Subaru: “It’s when the two of us go out together, see the same things, eat the same things, do the same things, and share the same memories.”

Emilio: “…You’re okay with just that?”

Subaru: “That’s exactly what I want.”

That was the promise that had already vanished, the shining future Subaru had wished for at the end of these grueling five days she’d gone through over and over again.

At Subaru’s proposal, Emilio brought a hand to his mouth and thought for a while.

To Subaru, even that pensive pose looked like something out of a painting, and then Emilio smiled with a “Mm” and said:

Emilio: “Got it. Then let’s go on a “date”, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Yes! Emilio-kyun, Maji Tenshi!”

Emilio: “What’s that?”

Subaru: “Shortened, E.M.T.!”

Emilio: “And I still don’t know what that means.”

At Subaru’s bubbly excitement, Emilio couldn’t help bursting into laughter.

Because Emilio laughed like that for her, Subaru only got more carried away, hamming it up even more in hopes of drawing out more of his smiles.

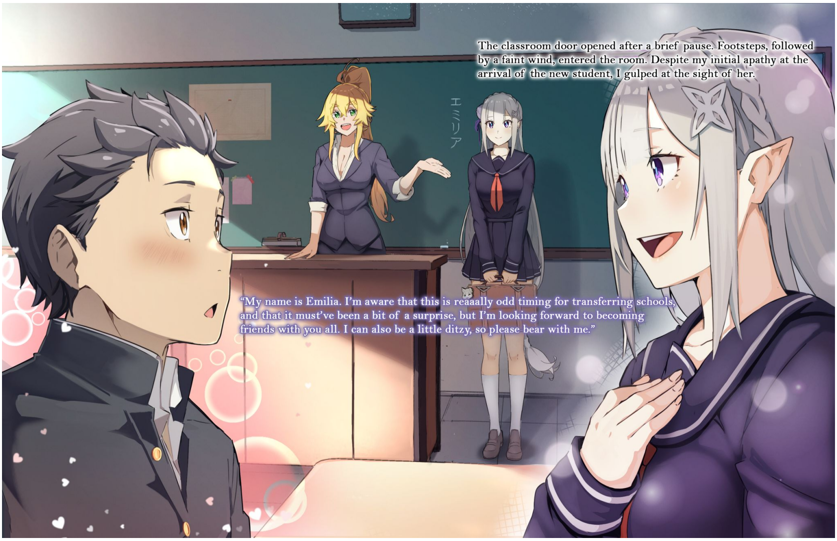
At long last, she had reached a brand-new day.

As if blessing that beginning and the road that lay ahead, the sun climbing high in the sky watched over Subaru and Emilio with a gentle smile.

Shining down, it proclaimed that Natsuki Subaru’s life in another world was still far from over.

“The End?”

Re:Zero Academy



The classroom door opened after a brief pause. Footsteps, followed by a faint wind, entered the room. Despite my initial apathy at the arrival of the new student, I gulped at the sight of her.

“My name is Emilia. I’m aware that this is reaaally odd timing for transferring schools, and that it must’ve been a bit of a surprise, but I’m looking forward to becoming friends with you all. I can also be a little ditzy, so please bear with me.”

First Period

1

It was just like any other day. And like always, my morning call came without warning and with an impact.

“Cooome on! Wake up. It’s morning!”

“Buegh!” Awakened from my sleep with an impact to my stomach, a belch escaped my mouth. No, actually, it’d be more accurate to say that I was forcefully woken up.

Having had air pushed out of my lungs, I opened my eyes in agony. A cute, adorable face I knew very well was in front of me.

“Good morning, my foolish sister,” I said.

“Good morning indeed, I suppose, foolish brother,” she responded. Unsure of whether it was because she sensed the irritation in my voice, she climbed off my stomach as she spoke. “It’s time for you to wake up. If you don’t, you’ll be late for school, I suppose, and mom and dad will get mad at you, in fact.”

She was a young girl with a doll-like face and hair the color of pale cream made into vertical drills. I always imagined she would make for a great decorative doll if she didn't speak. However, at the same time, she was also very adorable whenever she interacted with others, charming them with her tact.

"As unbelievable as it may be, she is my younger sister, Natsuki Beatrice, but word on the street is that she looks nothing like her older brother."

"Who are you introducing Betty to?" Beatrice asked. "You are weird as usual, big br… Subaru."

"You were so close. You should've just finished your thought," I said. "I'm really sad that you don't call me big brother these days."

"S-Stop speaking nonsense and get up! If you don't, we'll keep those twins waiting!"

"That's not good. Alright, I'll get changed. Beako, help me take my clothes off, would ya?"

"Do it yourself!" she exclaimed, throwing a pillow at my face before leaving the room.

The way she was acting out, despite interacting with her older brother, an event that should be heartwarming, made me wonder if she was going through her rebellious phase. She had even stopped taking baths with me. But the worst part of it all is the way she addresses me. It was hard to believe allowing her to call her own older brother by name was good for her upbringing. I just wished our parents would've done something, but they were rather liberal. No, actually, they're just indifferent about such things. So it was up to me, as her older brother, to set a good example.

"And so I got changed and made my way downstairs," I said as I walked down the stairs after having finished changing into my uniform, an empty school bag in hand. The faint aroma of toast hanging in the air indicated that breakfast was ready and set on the table.

"Mornin'!" a middle-aged man greeted me as soon as I opened the door.

"Yeah, yeah, mornin', mornin'," I said dismissively.

The middle-aged man pouted at my response in dissatisfaction. "Hey now, son, what's with that cold response? You should be a little more like my beloved daughter."

"What the?" I replied. "You played along with this old man's enthusiastic 'mornin', Beako?"

"B-Because, if Betty doesn't, Papa gets really sad," she explained. "Betty doesn't want to see this family fall apart because of Betty, I suppose."

She seemed to have faced a terrible dilemma despite her young age. But then again, Beako's classmate, Petra, also uses difficult words. I guess elementary school kids tend to be precocious these days. Kinda scary how quickly Japan is advancing.

"So," I said, stretching my neck as I sat down, "what's for breakfast today?"

"It's obvious, isn't it?" Mom replied while bringing the toast to the table. "Mayonnaise toast, mayonnaise soup, salad with mayonnaise, and fish stewed in mayonnaise."

Our family's breakfast had a fixed menu. And even though each dish could be categorized as Japanese-style or Western-style, they all had one ingredient in common: mayonnaise.

"If you want to use your own mayonnaise, get it from the fridge yourself," Mom said. "Add more mayonnaise if it isn't enough."

"Yes ma'am," I responded. "But this is really bizarre when you think about it. Are there even any other households where each family member has their own mayonnaise?"

"Back when Betty used to think this was normal, Petra laughed at her when she told her about it… Betty is still traumatized by that experience, I suppose."

While sympathizing with my gloomy little sister, I proceeded to take out more mayonnaise from the fridge. My family consisted of mayonnaise fanatics who even had their own personal mayonnaise. This included me, of course. Beako was no exception, either.

That was how Natsuki family mornings always began. We were a family of four. Even though there was a problem with my little sister going through her rebellious phase, it was safe to say we were living peacefully in our happy, mundane life.

As I was enjoying my mayonnaise toast, which was just regular bread that was toasted after spreading some mayo across it, there was a ring at the door.

“Hm?” I said, before turning my attention to the clock. It was already time for me to get going. “Crap, I took too much time this morning.”

I shoved the rest of the mayonnaise toast in my mouth and washed it down with some mayonnaise soup. As I stood up, carrying my bag over my shoulder, Beako also got up from her seat with her randoseru bag on.

“…Why are you staring at Betty like that, I suppose?” asked Beatrice, noticing my gaze.

“No, it’s just that you look really good in a randoseru bag as always,” I replied. “If there was an award for the best randoseru bag wearer, you’d win it.”

“Th-That’s not a compliment!”

As I patted the blushing Beako’s head, we headed to the door. Noticing that mom and dad had begun flirting behind us, we said our goodbyes in hushed voices and hurriedly left the room.

“Good morning, Subaru,” a young girl with blue hair down to her neck greeted me after I put my shoes on and exited the front door. It was Rem.

As usual, Rem’s smile was like a flower in full bloom, and her voice was full of liveliness. In fact, she’s so beautiful that even though we're just childhood friends, I'm afraid someone might stab me for having her meet with me every morning before school. Despite my fear, however, I had no intention of giving up this routine.

"Is there something wrong?" asked Rem. "Why are you staring at Rem's face like that?"

"Nah, it's nothing," I said, unable to confess that I was captivated by her beauty. "Good mornin'."

"Yes, good morning!" she responded without minding my strange behavior.

Ever since we were little kids, she was never the intrusive type. This was one of the qualities I liked about her.

"Good morning to you too, Beatrice," Rem said, turning her attention to her.

"Good morning, in fact," she responded. "You're a really devoted one, I suppose, coming all the way here just for Subaru every morning. I swear, you have really strange tastes compared to your older sister."

"Wouldn't that mean you also have strange tastes, Beatrice?" Rem asked.

"Why would that mean that Betty has strange tastes?!"

I watched Rem tease Beako from the sidelines. Just as she was my childhood friend, Rem was a long-time friend of Beako. She was like her older sister. And she adored Beako like a real sister, but Beako refused to accept this. Maybe this also has something to do with her rebellious phase. Jeez, I just wish she would grow up already.

"Speaking of younger sisters," I said. "Where is your older sister today?"

"She's at Roswaal's place this morning," answered Rem. "He's going out for an interview today, so he asked her to clean his house while he's away."

“She’s as diligent as ever,” I said. “Though I have mixed feelings about the whole ordeal as Ram’s close friend.”

The girl we were talking about, Ram, was Rem’s older twin sister. Unlike Rem, who was gentle and gracious, Ram was rather strict and harsh to others. Even though they are identical in appearance, their personalities couldn’t be more different.

Apparently, Ram had been charmed by a famous writer, and had been aggressively making a move on him. From Rem’s story, it sounded like she already had a key to his house. Although, this really isn’t the kinda stuff I wanna know about my classmate. Rem stared at me with her head tilted. I was unsure whether she was indifferent about the situation or simply oblivious about it, but I decided to drop the topic nonetheless.

“Hey, what are you two doing chatting in front of the house, in fact,” Beako said. “We better get going, I suppose.”

“Oh, roger that,” I responded. “C’mon, let’s go.”

“Yes,” Rem said. “Let’s depart.”

Throwing my bag over my shoulder, we began walking. Beatrice was in the middle, with me walking along the road and Rem on the other side. This was how we walked to school whenever Ram wasn’t with us.

“By the way,” Rem started, “your horoscope had the best luck today, Subaru.”

“Seriously?” I said. “So something good might happen today, huh? I didn’t know at all since we don’t watch TV in the morning at our place.”

“It said you’ll meet someone great today,” continued Rem. “It said the first girl you meet today is your soulmate.”

“Betty is the first girl Subaru met today, in fact.”

“Rem’s mistake. The third girl you meet today is your soulmate.”

“The horoscope was that specific?!” I exclaimed.

Who was the third girl, again? Does my mom count? If not, then Rem would be the third girl I met today. But wouldn’t it be weird to say I ‘met’ Rem today when I’ve known her for a long time? I’m also still skeptical if I should add my own sister and mother into this.

As I tilted my head in contemplation, a girl’s voice stopped us in our tracks. “Oh, what perfect timing to run into you here.”

She was a beautiful woman with pale skin and white hair, dressed completely in black as if she was on her way to a funeral.

Noticing it was a girl I knew well, I greeted her. “Hey, good morning, Echidna.”

Echidna was a university student and the eldest… Or was it the third? Daughter of the suspicious family who owns the mansion we pass by everyday on our way to school.

“What do you mean by perfect timing?” I asked. “Did something happen?”

“Yes, something did happen,” responded Echidna. “Or shall I say, there was a disappearance? You three remember my depraved sister, right? Well, she seemed to have vanished somewhere. I’m worried that she collapsed in the middle of the road somewhere while taking a stroll, so I’m out here looking for her. You haven’t seen her by any chance, have you?”

“You mean Sekhmet?” Rem asked rhetorically. “No, Rem hasn’t seen her. You haven’t either, right, Subaru?”

“I haven’t seen her today, either,” I responded. “If I remember correctly, last time she went missing, she went to take out the garbage and fell asleep next to the dumpster, right? The garbage collector guy said it was a feast for the eyes.”

Echidna’s older sister, Sekmet, was also beautiful but infamous for her slothfulness. She was often seen walking around in clothes that were as exposing as underwear, which was something I was always thankful for as a member of the opposite sex in the same age range.

At the same time, however, she seemed more like a person who needed help and care than just a simple sexy lady, which was a great disappointment.

“Well, that aside,” I said as I put my hand on my jaw and stared at Echidna intently.

“Hm? What is it? Why are you looking at me like that?” Echidna reacted to my gaze.

She was beautiful. If I’m not counting mom in the equation, that would mean Echidna is the third girl I’ve met today. Could she be my soulmate?

“You’re going to make me blush if you keep staring at me like that,” she said. “I am still a girl, after all. Besides, I only left the house to look for my sister, so I didn’t put any makeup on.”

“She’s right, it’s not very gentlemanly, Subaru,” Rem agreed, grabbing my arm. “You’re troubling Echidna. You must calm down and reconsider who the third girl was. It was Rem.”

“Your desires are spilling out, I suppose,” Beatrice said, grabbing my other arm. “But Betty agrees that this woman is no good, in fact.”

“What’s gotten into you two?!”

Despite Echidna’s apparent joke, the two girls grabbing my arms from both sides looked deadly serious. I swear, girls sure love these stupid fortune tellings.

“Echidna!” came another voice. “Big sister wasn’t at the dumpster!” A blonde loli girl with blue eyes and giant boobs came running towards us, screaming. She was the second oldest among Echidna’s siblings.

“Hey, Minerva,” I said, calling her name.

“Hm?! Oh, if it isn’t Rem, Beatrice, and Natsuki!” Minerva replied, halting and flashing a bright smile. “What are you three doing here?”

She was beautiful as ever. Instinctively, I took her hands and said, “Not counting my mother and sister, you are the third. Meaning, you’re my soulmate, Minerva!”

“Wha—?!”

As I grabbed onto her soft hands, Minerva looked back and forth between her hands and my face. Her face rapidly began blushing, until it was completely red.

“B-But, I can only do house chores,” she said, trembling.

“I’ll provide for you,” I responded.

“I-I’m also really clumsy!”

“I love that part of you, too.”

“I-I also have to fight for world peace!”

“You are my whole world.”

With her face as red as a boiled octopus, Minerva shrieked and stomped in place. Damn, she’s really cute. I might’ve teased her too much. The fact that it seemed possible to make her my wife right then and there was rather frightening. I wonder if anyone’s ever tried to seduce her, considering how cute she is.

“Calm down Minerva,” said Echidna. “It’s just one of Natsuki’s usual shenanigans.”

“Huh? Really?”

“Well,” I began, “I can’t admit that I was messing with you, since that’ll make me scummy, so the answer is no, I’m dead seri…ow, ow, ow, Rem, your heel is sinking into my toes.” Rem was stepping on my toes with a smile on her face. I had no choice but to concede.

Minerva placed her hands on her giant bosom, and let out a big sigh. “O-Of course. Oh, you scared me there. I was so surprised, my breasts might’ve shrunk a little.”

"That would be a loss to humanity!" I exclaimed, trembling, to which Minerva punched me.

"Shut up! You idiot!"

Despite being hit quite hard, it felt good. So strange.

"Whatever, we didn't see your sister, I suppose. That's the end of the story, in fact."

"Oh, you sound bitter," Echidna said. "Are you upset we're getting all your brother's attention?"

"It's not like that!" Beatrice exclaimed, puffing up her cheeks. "Betty really hates this, in fact!"

She looks really mad. She must really hate that we're wasting our time on our way to school. However, as she pointed out, it was evident that we would be of no help to Echidna and Minerva. And school was starting soon, so it was about time we took our leave.

"Sorry we couldn't be of any help to you two," I said, before leaving.

"No, you kids need to prioritize your studies," Echidna responded. "Besides, this is our family's problem."

"You sound like an old lady, I suppose," Beatrice jabbed.

"Of course I'd sound old to you, considering I'm a college student with a lot of time on her hands, whereas you're only a child."

"I'm helping out with the household right now, so I have a lot of time on my hands too!" Minerva exclaimed.

"You rarely help out, though?" Echidna jabbed.

"Same goes for Rem's sister," Rem added.

"I think her unhelpfulness is incomparable," I commented.

It was an awkward way to end our interaction, but we parted ways after promising them we would call them if we saw Sekhmet. Watching Minerva run off into the distance, and Echidna slowly walk off, made me truly wonder if they were really related. Well, I guess one similarity would be that they're both really pretty.

"Subaru, Subaru," Rem called me.

"Yes, Rem, what is it?"

"Rem just remembered. The horoscope this morning said your soulmate's name starts with R and ends with M, and is three letters in total."

"It was that exclusive?!"

2

As we were leisurely walking after parting ways with Echidna and Minerva, we arrived at a fork in the road, separating our school and Beatrice's elementary school. This is where Rem and I are gonna say goodbye to Beako.

"Ah, Beatrice!" a girl with maroonish-red hair and cutesy wide eyes, who was waiting for us at the fork in the road, called Beatrice's name.

"If it isn't Petra, I suppose," Beatrice said, responding to her classmate.

"Good morning, Subaru, Rem," Petra greeted, bowing to us. What a well mannered young lady.

In terms of attractiveness, my little sister was on equal footing, but Petra was more charming. Well, Beako could be charming too, once you got to know her.

"What?" she asked. "If there's something you want to say, come out and say it, I suppose."

"I'm the only one who knows your good qualities," I said.

"What do you mean by 'only'?!" she exclaimed. "Betty isn't hiding them! In fact, she has so many that she has lost count!”

I patted her head, saying, “I get it, I get it,” as she continued yelling, waving her vertically curled hair. For some reason, though, this made her even madder. I swear, girls her age are so hard to understand.

“Don’t worry Subaru,” Petra interjected. “I know a lot of Beatrice’s good qualities too.”

“I see, that’s reassuring,” I said. “Take good care of Beako at school too, okay?”

“Yes, of course! And… What about my good qualities? Do you recognize them too?”

“An obvious one would be that you’re an exceptionally kind girl, Petra,” I responded. “You’re also respectful, gentle, friends with Beako, and above all else, a pretty young girl who’ll surely grow up to be a beautiful lady someday.”

Petra smirked and offered her head to be patted, which I then did. I shouldn’t be patting someone else’s daughter in this day and age, but she has this powerrr that doesn’t let me say no. Now that I think about it, doesn’t she make me pat her every time we meet? Nah, I must be overthinking it.

“Mmmm,” Rem groaned.

“Boo, I suppose,” Beatrice booed.

“And what are you two pouting about?” I asked.

“Nothing,” said Rem, turning her face away.

“You don’t need to know,” answered Beatrice, looking the other way.

There was nothing more I could do. I understood that whenever a girl said there was nothing wrong, there was absolutely something wrong. However, in this instance, I couldn’t put a finger on what it was.

"Petra, do you think you know what they're pouting about?" I asked.

"I don't know," she said. "I'm only a child."

That's true.

She then slipped out from beneath my hand, and, taking the still-pouting Beako's hand, bowed to me and Rem. "We'll be going now. Typhon is the class leader today. If we don't hurry and go, the classroom is going to be a mess."

"Are you implying that she's gonna mess up the classroom?!" I exclaimed.

"That's Typhon's quirk, I suppose. We're leaving now, in fact!" Beatrice said, as Petra pulled her away.

Rem and I waved at the two elementary schoolers as they ran off.

"Well then, let's get going as well," I said.

"Do you also recognize Rem's good qualities, Subaru?"

"You're cute."

"Don't think saying that'll let you off the hook every time," she replied somewhat cheerfully.

Guess I'm off the hook then. Maybe I should've given more thought to my answer, but I'd become completely dependent on this answer since it's always worked ever since we were little.

As I pulled Rem, who was looking downwards, another voice spoke to us.

"Are ya spoilin' Rem again, Cap'n?"

"Ahh, didn't I say to hang back and watch, Gaf-Gaf?"

When I turned around to see who they were, two figures were poking their heads out from behind the utility pole in the middle of the fork in the road. One of them was wearing a gakuran, while the other was wearing a sailor outfit. I instantly recognized them as they were both close acquaintances.

“Garfiel and Daphne, what’re you two middle schoolers doing here?”

“Who cares what we’re doin’ or where we’re at,” Garfiel answered, condescendingly. “Bringin’ the topic back to you, Cap’n, you’re breakin’ too many hearts out here, as usual. Right, Daphne?”

“Gaf-Gaf was waiting for Ram-Ram here as usual,” said Daphne, selling him out. “Daphne didn’t want to go search for Met-Met, so she decided to play with Gaf-Gaf.”

“Daphne, you!” Garfiel cried indignantly.

Seeing his condescending smile subside, it was now my turn to laugh at him mockingly. “Heh, I see, so that’s how it is,” I said. “So you’re the one doing his usual thing, huh? I gotta ask, are you ever gonna give up? Ram is head over heels for a novelist.”

“Th-That’s my amazing self’s business!” Garfiel exclaimed. “Besides, if I become a novelist, my amazin’ self’ll be on equal footing!”

“I admire your conviction to determine your future for the girl you love, but…”

I was hesitant to continue my thought. Firstly, it was hard to imagine that Garfiel would be able to become a novelist with his level of intelligence. And secondly, Ram wasn’t the type of girl to fall in love with someone based on their occupation.

“Well, first of all, with your level of intelligence, Gaf-Gaf, you’ll never be able to become a novelist. Besides, Ram-Ram isn’t in love with every novelist in the world.”

“Thank you for bluntly telling him what I was too hesitant to say.”

As dumbfounded as I was for Daphne to come out and say everything I decided to refrain from saying out of consideration, it was much better than how Garfiel, who was collapsed on his knees, must've been feeling. However, Garfiel was a man of great dignity. Despite his pummeled spirit, he wasn't ready to throw in the towel.

"Are you okay, Garfiel?" I asked. "Your wounds aren't that deep."

"Heh, thanks Cap'n," he replied. "But I won't lose to something like this… Speakin' of which, ain't Ram with ya today?"

"She's at Roswaal's place this morning," answered Rem. "She was asked to look after his house while he's away, and went to pick up a spare key."

"Guhah!" exasperated Garfiel, collapsing on the spot after hearing Rem's non-ill-intended words.

"G-Garfiel!" I exclaimed.

Even I was uncomfortable hearing how deep Ram's infatuation went. It must've been a great blow for Garfiel, who had feelings for her, to hear that she was getting a spare key to another man's house. I couldn't come up with anything to say that would make him feel better.

"Well, including all his shortcomings, this is what makes Gaf-Gaf who he is," Daphne said, flashing an alluring smile that was unnatural for a middle schooler, as she grabbed onto Garfiel's feet. "You two can go on your way. Daphne will take care of the rest from here."

Worried that she was going to start dragging Garfiel by his feet, I extended my hand to stop her. However…

"Not to worry," she said, "Gaf-Gaf is a softie, so being gentle with him will only make him weaker. Besiiides, once we get to school, there'll be people like Mimi, who'll give him attention. It's better to put him in his place when we can."

"I-Is that so?" I asked hesitantly.

"Yes, it is," she replied, faintly smiling as she tilted her head. "Well then, see you around."

And so she proceeded to drag Garfiel away. At that point, stopping her would've been out of bounds. Middle schoolers have their own way of dealing with things, and it isn't our place to interfere. "At least that's what I'll tell myself. I don't wanna know more about their affairs."

"To even make such an innocent young middle schooler go head over heels for her… Sister is truly amazing!"

"I can't agree with that comment!"

Oh, forgot to mention this, but Daphne is the fifth daughter of the sisters, where Sekhmet is the eldest. Just so you know. This morning sure has been lively though, huh.

After parting ways with the middle school duo, Rem and I arrived at our school, Lugunica Academy.

Lugunica Academy was a school that kept its antiquated traditions. However, in recent years, it had put in an effort to modernize it, and as a result, became a diverse place home to a variety of differing values. Although I chose this place simply because it was close to my home, I was decently enjoying its rather liberal style.

"Ah, Subaru, they're conducting a bag inspection," Rem informed me, noticing the inspection that was going on at the school gate before I could with her superior eyesight.

"That must be the student council. They sure put in a lot of hard work from the wee hours of the morning."

As we got closer to the gate, I finally saw the inspection as well. Lugunica Academy conducts events such as bag inspections or morning assembly every now and then. This all started when the current student council was established. And at the center of this student council was the elite woman president who was overseeing this morning's bag inspection.

"Good morning, Natsuki Subaru and Rem," said the student council president.

“Mornin’ Ms. Student Council President.”

“Good morning, Crusch,” Rem greeted.

The student council president Crusch Karsten stood tall with her shoulders square, wearing a crisply maintained navy blue blazer. Her distinctive long green hair and dignified look gave off an air of manliness despite her sex. However, her curves made her femininity apparent, so it would be more accurate to say she gave off a warrior-like aura.

“As you can see, we’re conducting a bag inspection this morning,” Crusch said. “We’d appreciate it if you two could cooperate.”

“Yeah, feel free to look all you want,” I responded, handing her my bag. “It’s empty, anyways.”

“Although you shouldn’t be proud of that, it would seem you outplayed me this time,” she replied, shaking her head as she confirmed that my bag was empty. “How interesting,” she continued, smirking like a hero from a Hollywood movie.

“I wasn’t trying to challenge you.”

“Alrighty then,” another person who suddenly appeared from the side said cheerfully. “I, Ferris, will check Rem’s bag!”

The person was Ferris, Crusch’s right-hand man.

Adorning a cat-ear headband as usual, Ferris began inspecting Rem’s bag as his audaciously short skirt flapped in the wind. The idea that a girl should inspect another girl’s belongings sure becomes pointless with Ferris, I thought, as he was in fact a man.

“I get that he looks good in girl’s clothes, but don’t you get complaints about a guy inspecting girls’ stuff?” I asked.

“That does not pose an issue,” Crusch answered. “Everyone is aware of Ferris’s above average femininity. In fact, the number of men asking to have their bags inspected by me and girls asking Ferris is about the same.”

“Girls might be different, but some guys get off from that… Wait, I’m different, though! Don’t put me in the same category as those kinda guys!” Suddenly, I became worried about how people perceived me for naturally handing my bag to Crusch for inspection. Meanwhile, Ferris continued inspecting Rem’s belongings.

“Huh? Why do you have a pencil box for boys?” he asked.

“That’s for Subaru in case he forgot his,” responded Rem.

“Then how about this plain old notebook without any cute features?”

“Hmm, then how about this lunch box?”

“Rem prepared that for Subaru in case he’s unable to buy anything at the food shop.”

“Alright, let’s punish Subaru,” concluded Ferris.

“What the hell?!” I exclaimed

I mean, I get it. I do. But still!

Following Ferris’s condemnation, I leaned towards Rem. “Rem, don’t I always tell you that you don’t have to do so much for me?”

“Sorry,” she said. “Rem is painfully aware of that. But whenever she imagines you crying about something, she just can’t help it. She starts preparing for every possible scenario.”

“I appreciate that, but I won’t cry just because I forget my pencil lead, or not do my homework, or fail to eat lunch!”

Even though I’d never cried for such trivial reasons before, Rem still seemed to have seen me as a child. At one point, there was a rumor in our class that Rem was my caretaker, but it was beginning to become true.

“Talk about young love,” Ferris commented. “Am I right or am I right, Lady Crusch?”

“Agreed,” Crusch concurred. “Ferris and I make lunch for each other as well. There is nothing to be embarrassed about, but if you do not want to be the only one taken care of, you should express your gratitude every once in a while.”

“I made your favorite omelet today, Lady Crusch,” said Ferris. “The sweet kind.”

“I also made your favorite omelet today,” responded Crusch. “The salty kind.”

Ignoring the lovey-dovey student council president and her vice president, I picked up the lunch box Rem prepared for me. Wrapped in a blue cloth, it was twice the size of Rem’s own lunch box and quite heavy.

“Jeez, what were you gonna do with this if I didn’t eat this?”

“Rem thought she and her sister could have it for dinner.”

“That’s so sad, don’t do that. Just tell me next time. I’ll be having this for lunch today, thanks. Could you also show me the answers to the homework?”

“Yes, Rem will be looking forward to lunch.”

Cramming the lunch box in my bag that had just been handed back to me, we started walking towards the school building. That was when we noticed a ruckus from the side, where they were also conducting a bag inspection.

“Like I said! Why are you like that?! Could ya not make me repeat myself? I ain’t sayin’ anythin’ difficult, am I?”

“I do not believe I am saying anything difficult to grasp, either. It is you who is refusing to listen to my sound advice and causing a scene. You are the prime example of an ignoramus.”

“Do ya think usin’ big words makes ya sound respectable? That’s just embarrasin'. You're in high school already, why don't ya grow up? It's cringe."

"Don't you dare criticize the way I talk when you cannot even hide the vulgarity in your speech. I may be forgiving, but I also have my limits."

The atmosphere around the front gate was turning tense due to the heated argument between the two female students with distinctive appearances.

One of the girls was a beautiful young girl with purple hair and a prepubescent physique that could be mistaken for a middle school student. The girl she was arguing with, on the other hand, was also a beautiful young girl, who had the body of a fully matured woman and orange hair that exuded an alluring charm.

The girl who spoke with an accent was Anastasia of the student council, and the girl who spoke with sophisticated vernacular was Priscilla, the troublemaker of the school. They often butted heads as the student council accountant and the granddaughter of the chairman of the school board.

"They're at it again," said Rem, sighing at the usual sight.

Their antagonizing relationship was famous all around the school. The relationship between Priscilla, who bowed to no one, and Anastasia, who never backed down from a fight, was like oil and fire. From what I saw, I suspected they were fighting about the uniform Priscilla was wearing, which she had obviously customized to her own preferences. Well, Priscilla isn't willing to follow any school rules, including its rules on uniforms. One could say it's a win that she's even wearing the uniform despite it being changed in every way.

"But I bet she's the only one who could get that money-mongering accountant so worked up," I commented as I watched the commotion from a distance.

Then a voice suddenly came raining down on me from behind. "I would appreciate it if you would refrain from referring to Ana with such a slanderous nickname.”

“Geh,” I exasperated, feeling goosebumps appearing because of the condescending voice.

When I turned around, there was a good-looking, gentlemanly bastard towering over me. He was also a member of the student council.

“Sup Julius, my senior,” I greeted the man.

“I do not know why you call me that when we are in the same grade,” replied Julius, as he pushed back his bangs. “But that aside, please rescind the earlier remark you made about Ana. She is only a little bit obsessed with monetary affairs, and loves her job too much.”

“I think that opinion is a little more than biased.”

Julius was something called a student council secretary. As indicated by his rhetoric, he was a loyal follower of Anastasia, and they were often seen together.

“Don’t you have a job to do? I’ll tell on you to Crusch that you’re slacking off.”

“As a matter of fact, I am done with my job,” said Julius, flashing his pearly whites. “Although it was quite a workload with so many girls wanting to have their bags inspected by me, they were very cooperative, so it made my job a lot easier.”

“Yeah, yeah, whatever man,” I said, scouring.

Why can’t girls see through this guy’s phoniness? I thought, before remembering that it wasn’t only girls who were in love with Julius. Men also speak highly of him too. Which means I must be the only one who can see through his act. I clicked my tongue. Truth makes a man lonely, doesn’t it?

“Rem wonders what they’re arguing about today.”

“Obviously, they were arguing about her outfit too, but the biggest problem was the way Priscilla was handling her bag," Julius explained. "She was making Al carry it for her instead of holding it herself."

"Al is that guy wearing a mask, right?" I confirmed.

There was a man next to Anastasia and Priscilla, standing anxiously as the two girls continued their heated argument. He wasn't particularly tall, but was well built. He looked about the same age as my dad, but it was impossible to say for sure due to the mask he was wearing.

There were several rumors circulating about this mask. Some say he's hiding a horrible burn mark, while others suggest that his face is covered in stitches. Personally, I'd like to think Priscilla was making him wear it on a whim. I mean, not only does he change his mask everyday, he doesn't strike me as a guy with a dark past at all.

To add on to his distinctive characteristics, Al had a prosthetic left arm. From what I've heard, it was high quality and acquired through Priscilla's family connections. One time, he'd opened a can of peaches for me with a can opener equipped to his arm. His arm was like a swiss army knife.

"How many times do I gotta tell ya?!" Anastasia's voice echoed. "An outsider can't enter the school buildin'. You know how stressin' it is to hafta kick out a grown ass man I find wanderin' around the buildin'?"

"That is none of my business," Priscilla retorted. "No one is asking you to kick him out. Ignore him. He is only ever there to tend to me anyways. Additionally, if he is not around, who then will carry my bag? I refuse to hold anything heavier than a pair of chopsticks."

"It's empty! It's practically the same weight as a pair of chopsticks!"

Anastasia was evidently getting irritated every time Priscilla talked back. The intensity of the situation kept escalating to the point I feared a catfight might break out if it continued any further. In which case, Anastasia would've been the one to get hurt. Though she may not look it, Priscilla was unexpectedly athletic. In fact, it was even possible that she was provoking Anastasia to get her to throw the first punch. No, no, I'm overthinking it. She's just naturally defiant.

"Things are not looking good for Ana," Julius commented. "I guess I have no choice but to go and stop them."

"Yeah, yeah, go do that," I agreed. "Before they get into a catfight and things get really messy with Nurse Elsa hearing about it."

Nurse Elsa was the school nurse known for her sexually provocative appearance and speech quirk. She was always quick to hear about any conflict that happened in the school and often appeared to neutralize the situation, claiming she couldn't help her old habits. Every student who was taken to the infirmary by her always came back completely obedient. Nobody knew what was done to them there, as she refused to answer. Consequently, the general consensus was that she conducts a horrific operation on her patient's digestive system to make them docile.

"Class is about to start, anywho," said Crusch, who was now by our side. "Go on ahead to your classroom, Natsuki Subaru. We will take care of the rest."

"Oh no, we drew the short meowraw," added Ferris.

"Voluntarily drawing the short straw to improve the school is part of the student council's job."

With that, the three student council members walked off toward the scene of the commotion. I'm sure even Priscilla will back off once she's facing those three.

"We've been here too long," I said. "Let's get to our classroom. I'm tired."

"There's so much going on this morning," commented Rem.

"Seriously. Although, I'm sure there won't be any more problems."

There was a good possibility that I had jinxed myself by saying such a thing. Even though I truly wished to not encounter any more problems when I had said it, it seemed as though God had other plans for me. The next problem appeared after I changed into my school shoes and started walking towards my classroom.

“Hey, Subaru! Think fast, receive!”

“Huh?”

Startled by the sudden voice and a girl running towards me, I instinctively lowered my hips and went into a receiving position for volleyball as instructed. Then, a small foot landed on my hands.

“Blue Mountain Receive!” yelled the figure.

Reacting to what seemed to be the name of a technique, I swung my arms upward with the person on my hands, letting out a great “Hmph!” Though I wouldn’t say the girl was as light as a volleyball, she successfully flew over my head and landed on top of the shoe rack behind me.

I turned around to see what the fuss was all about. However, the girl just put her index finger on her lips, indicating to me to keep quiet, with a shushing sound. Rem and I looked at each other, confused by the whole situation. Then, from the same direction the girl came, an insanely handsome man flashing a million dollar smile came running.

“Perfect timing. Rem, Subaru,” the man said.

He had distinctive red hair, eyes blue as a clear sky, and a physical appearance that screamed perfection. He was Reinhard, the school stud beloved by every girl in school and even the ladies in the shopping district, who was now approaching me with a rather distressed expression.

“Yo, wussup?” I said.

“It’s nothing dire,” he said. “But have you two seen Felt by any chance?”

“Felt?” Rem responded. “Well, she’s uhh…”

Rem turned to me with a troubled look. However, I quickly grasped the situation. What now? I wondered for a second before letting out a sigh of exasperation. Guess I have no choice.

“Nah, haven’t seen her yet,” I lied. “Why? Is something the matter?”

“No,” answered Reinhard. “I just ran into her earlier, so I wanted to invite her out to lunch… But before I could, she suddenly started running as soon as our eyes met.”

“Sounds like Felt,” I commented. “And you don’t give up easily either, do ya?”

As a fellow man, I admired his tenacity, but also wondered why he was so obsessed with Felt. “I mean, I’m not saying you could just snag any girl you want, but with your looks, you shouldn’t have any problem finding a girlfriend.”

“It’s hard to explain,” Reinhard replied. “Isn’t that how these things work? Don’t you think so, Subaru? Rem?”

“I don’t know, man.”

“Rem thinks so too!” Rem responded enthusiastically. “So Rem will be rooting for you!”

Looking happy at Rem’s words, Reinhard straightened his collar. “Well then, I’ll go look for her.”

“Why don’t you just wait for her in the classroom?” I suggested. “Class is about to start anyways.”

“Giving up on what I haven’t finished isn’t my style. I want to at least greet her properly.” Then he raised his hand and said, “See you two, then,” and walked off.

Even though he was only walking, Reinhard was gone from our sight in the blink of an eye. Confirming that he was completely gone, I sighed and tapped on the shoe rack behind me. “Yo, he’s gone. You can come down now.”

“‘Kay! Thanks,” the girl said in a nonchalant voice. I heard her landing on the floor behind me.

She was a short girl with gold hair, crimson eyes, and a distinctive fang. Her name was Felt. She was the luckiest girl in school who captured the attention of Reinhard. Although, she'd always emphasize 'reluctantly' whenever she was told this.

"You shouldn't be so cold to him," I said. "I feel bad for him."

"I'm the one you should feel bad for," said Felt. "Who the hell asked him to pursue me? I'm the real victim here."

"Reinhard is so passionate about you though," Rem said. "Do you not like him, Felt?"

"'Course I don't. And don't go gettin' the wrong idea. He only likes me cuz I'm different. It's like when a person gets excited by findin' a rare species. Gimme a break."

Felt didn't have anything good to say about Reinhard as usual. Even though she was living a life more romantic than your average Shoujo manga and as romantic as Cinderella, her attitude remained indifferent. As much as I sympathized with Reinhard as his friend, I also understood where Felt was coming from.

"You kinda do have a point," I said. "These things are tricky, huh?"

Reinhard was so used to being approached, he was quite inept at being the approacher. It was natural for Felt to be suspicious of his intentions with how awkward he acted. But as a bystander, I knew it was only a problem of miscommunication, which made them frustrating to watch.

"Well, I guess it's hard to objectively assess our own actions," I said.

"Yes, Rem agrees," Rem responded. "She absolutely agrees. You are right. Absolutely right."

"Rem? What's with the aggression? Did I say something weird?"

"Who knows," Rem said, turning her face away.

As I contemplated Rem’s strange behavior, Felt dusted her skirt and stretched her upper body. “Welp, I’m gonna keep runnin’ til class starts. Even he won’t come after me once the bell rings.”

“That’s until the seat-change,” I said. “With his tenacity, I have a feeling that he’ll manage to get a seat somewhere near yours.”

“Don’t say things like that man. You’re gonna jinx my peaceful school life.”

Turning pale at my words, she went running off in the opposite direction Reinhard went. The fact that Reinhard would find her two minutes later and get into a wild chase was a story for another time.

“Surely there won’t be any more problems,” I said, feeling like I was submitting my request to God. “Or else I’m gonna use up my energy for the day.”

“Rem is sure there won’t be any more,” Rem said, reassuring me.

I was certain a quiet, peaceful day was finally starting. However, as soon as I opened the classroom door, I was greeted by a yelling figure.

“Have you heard, Mr. Natsuki?!” the figure said, screaming. “A transfer student is apparently coming today!”

“Can’t you read my mood?! You freakin’ idiot!” I yelled back at them.

“Why am I getting scolded?!”

The screaming figure was Otto, the guy who sat behind me. He’d always seemed like an unlucky kinda guy, which was just proven by him making me even more irritated than I already was.

Placing my bag on my desk, I slouched in my chair. “Look, man. Forget about all this transfer student stuff. I’m already tired from all the things that happened this morning. You get it, don’t ya? So, postpone it.”

“We can’t send the transfer student home just because you’re tired, Mr. Natsuki," Otto responded. "By the way, why are you so tired? Did you do something you can't speak of early this morning?"

"There were too many characters, I don't even know where to begin. So much so that I'm sure nobody even remembers my sister's name."

"You'll make Beatrice cry!"

Actually, Beako isn't the sensitive type, so she won't cry because of something like that… Actually, now that I think about it, she acts tough, but she can be pretty soft. She might actually cry. That won't be good. Seeing little kids cry breaks my heart—and I definitely can't stand to see Beako cry.

"Fine, I'll forgive you for Beako's sake."

"Thank you… Wait, how does that make any sense?"

"So, what business does the confused Otto have?" Rem asked, jumping into the conversation from her seat, which was to my right.

"I don't think I'm the one who's confused… No, nevermind," Otto replied, scratching his head as he gave up on retorting, and continued whispering. "Like I said, there's a transfer student. I heard the teachers talking about it when I went to the faculty room. Apparently, they're transferring to our class."

"I've been meaning to say this, but you've really assumed the role of the best friend in dating sims, you know?" I said. "What do the girls in this class think of me by the way?"

"Other than Rem, everyone thinks you have mean-looking eyes."

"Are you serious? Like, really? You're not joking, are you? Please say that you are. Hey, come on, are you really serious?"

Otto's evaluation erased the possibility of there being any girl who was too shy to make a move on me because my childhood friend Rem was always by my side.

"Transfer student though, huh?" Rem said. "How rare. Is it a boy or girl?”

“Unfortunately, I don’t know the details.”

Rem sighed loudly. “I see.”

“You know, sighing like that hurts more than being insulted right to my face!”

Otto was the class clown everyone picked on. His yelling was on point as usual, and Rem nodded in satisfaction upon hearing it.

The bell rang and the students who were outside started entering the classroom. Among them were the student council members, Crusch, Ferris, Julius, and Anastasia, who were on bag inspection duty. Following them was the ever-so-prideful Priscilla, trailed by Al carrying her bag. He quickly left the room as soon as he placed her bag on her desk.

When I turned my attention away from them, I saw Ram, who had entered the classroom without my realizing, taking her seat in front of her sister. Seeing as how she flashed a peace sign at Rem, it seemed as though her meeting with Roswaal went well.

Right before the bell stopped ringing, Reinhard came into the classroom, followed by Felt, who hurriedly came in just as the bell stopped. Reinhard flashed a faint smile at her from his seat, to which she stuck her tongue out.

And so, everyone in the class was present. There was only one seat left empty in the corner of the last row. I assumed that was where the transfer student Otto was talking about was going to sit.

“I was skeptical at first, but seeing that seat makes his story seem more believable,” I muttered to myself.

“Mr. Natsuki, do you have something against…” began Otto before being interrupted by Rem.

“Oh, Miss Frederica is here.”

I could sense Otto sulk behind me, but I obviously chose to ignore him. The classroom went completely silent.

The door opened, and a tall woman with good posture walked in. She had long blonde hair and emerald eyes. Dressed in a tight-fitting suit, she exuded youthful energy. The only distinctive flaw was her ferocious-looking mouth, but said imperfection was what made her easy to get along with. She was Miss Frederica, our teacher. She was also the older sister of Garfiel, who we encountered on our way to school.

“Stand up,” Crusch commanded in a clear voice from the front row.

Everyone stood up in unison. Even the rebellious Priscilla followed suit. This shows that this command is ingrained in our DNA.

“Greet,” Crusch commanded again.

“Good morning,” overlapping voices resonated.

Everyone’s voice varied slightly. I said it in an earnest voice, whereas Rem sounded much more disciplined.

“Take your seats,” Crusch commanded one last time.

Everyone took a seat, making louder noises than when they stood up. As the creaking sounds of the seats subsided, it was finally Miss Frederica’s moment to start talking.

“Well, good morning everyone,” she said. “I’m sure many of you aren’t enthusiastic about the weekend ending, but that goes the same for us teachers, so bear with it, okay?”

Her unexpected joke softened the somewhat tense mood filling the classroom due to it being Monday. She then pointed at the empty seat in the back.

“I’m sure many of you who have noticed that seat, or have heard from Otto who was eavesdropping, know by now, but we have a transfer student today.”

“She knows you were eavesdropping,” I said.

"Huh? That's strange," Otto said, tilting his head. "I was being extra careful, though…"

"Principal Wilhelm noticed you," Miss Frederica explained, to which he nodded in understanding.

Principal Wilhelm was an elderly man who was not to be underestimated. No matter how much he tried to hide his nature with his soft persona, he was unable to conceal his exuding air of competency. He would often appear out of nowhere, and either lend a helping hand in solving a problem or brag about his family. No one could escape Principal Wilhelm's eyes. This was common knowledge shared by everyone in Lugunica Academy.

"Leaving aside Otto Suwen's carelessness," Crusch said, "a transfer student is rare."

"True," Ferris added. "It's not even the beginning of the school year or semester. Now that I think about it, a transfer student in high school is quite uncommon. Although, it is a common occurrence in manga…"

"And just as you would commonly see in a manga," Miss Frederica began, "the transfer student is a girl."

Some of the boys in the class got a little too excited at Miss Frederica's last remark. The Ton-Chin-Kan trio were particularly loud. Jeez, don't they realize we already have more than enough pretty girls in our class, and adding one more would just add one more girl we can't do anything about? I pitied them, even though I was the loudest one there.

"So you're happy that the transfer student is a girl too, huh, Subaru?" Rem asked.

"I thought I should at least act like I was happy," I responded. "I'd obviously welcome anyone even if they're a boy. It's hard to imagine any greater tragedy than having guys like Reinhard and Julius in the same class."

By having the two most popular guys in the same class, all the other men had given up on attracting female attention. In a way, this helped unify the boys in the class into one. So even if we had a male transfer student, we were all ready to accept the new victim with open arms.

“This class already has too many good looking guys and girls,” I said. “It’s honestly overkill with girls like Crusch, Anastasia, Felt, Priscilla, Ram, and you. I suppose I can add Ferris to the list as well.”

“You’re also included in the list of good looking people,” Rem said.

“Yeah, I’m sure I’m super popular with a niche group of people who love sanpaku eyes!”

I knew Rem was only trying to make me feel better, but my life experiences made me too cynical to be happy by simply knowing there was a small minority of people who loved my appearance.

Whether it’s a boy or a girl, I’ll accept any newcomer.

“So, Miss Frederica,” I said, giving her a thumbs up. “We’re ready when you are.”

“Alright, now that I’ve gotten permission from Natsuki, who’s calling the shots for some reason, please welcome your new classmate,” she said, smiling bitterly as she called in the student from the hallway. “Come on in.”

The classroom door opened after a brief pause. Footsteps, followed by a faint wind, entered the room. Despite my initial apathy at the arrival of the new student, I gulped at the sight of her.

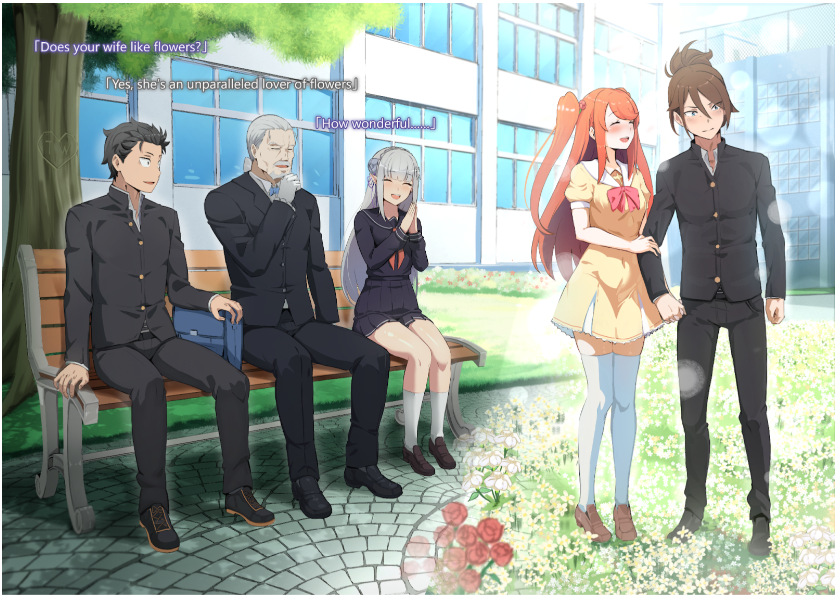
She had long silver hair that fluttered in the wind, and was gazing straight ahead at us with amethyst eyes. She was wearing a black uniform—which might’ve come from her previous school—that nicely contrasted with her pale white skin. The combination of the two seemed to represent her ephemeral air and innate extravagance—complete perfection. Her beauty took my breath away even though I was used to seeing beautiful girls.

Miss Frederica wrote her name on the chalkboard behind her. She glanced at the board, then turned around and bowed to us. “My name is Emilia. I’m aware that this is reaaally odd timing for transferring schools, and that it must’ve been a bit of a surprise, but I’m looking forward to becoming friends with you all.” She looked around the classroom somewhat nervously. “I can also be a little ditzy, so please bear with me.”

“Nobody uses ‘ditzy’ in this day and age…” I blurted unintentionally.

I quickly covered my mouth with my hand, but Emilia was already looking straight at me. My eyes must’ve been wide open. Unperturbed, she smiled at me alluringly. I was entranced.

It wasn’t the beginning of the school year or semester. It was just a regular Monday. Although it began a little more noisily than usual, it was supposed to be a normal day. However, at this moment, I had a feeling my peaceful days were about to come to an end. With the arrival of the new student—Emilia—my life would never be the same again.



「Does your wife like flowers?」
「Yes, she's an unparalleled lover of flowers」
「How wonderful……」

Second Period

1

—I suppose this may have been the point where there'd be this huge monologue-like thing if this were a game and the opening would get inserted right about here.

Whatever the case, looking at things realistically, regardless of the shock I was in, time continued to move on solemnly. Time stopped as I was love-struck by the transfer student's smile, such an illusion seemed to have been exclusive to me.

"Now then, I believe Emilia-san also has plenty of questions, but I must ask you to leave those for lunch time… For now, I need you to take your seat. Emilia-san."

"Ah, yes."

"The window-side seat at the back, that empty seat there will be your seat. For the moment, would you please sit there?"

Frederica-sensei said so to the transfer student—Emilia—and pointed to the Best Place at the very back of the classroom next to the window. Naturally, as one would expect from exactly the spot one would assume a transfer student would sit in, certainly there must be some kind of predetermination to it,

“Understood. Then, I’ll-…”

“—OBJECTION!!”

“Eh?!”

As she began to move to follow Frederica-sensei’s words, that one comment stopped Emilia in her tracks

The one who sharply stuck their hand out and yelled out was the number one “KY”, the class ignoramus incapable of ever reading the room—In other words, me.

I glared at the transfer student who made a stupefied face, and my ears started to feel a little hot, so I turned my face away, then shook a finger at the shocked Frederica-sensei with a”Tsk, tsk tsk.”

“I think that’s quite an unacceptable attitude for Freddy-sensei to have there. You can’t just coddle the transfer student from the beginning!”

“I will not simply overlook you saying I am coddling her, Natsuki-kun. Just what led you to make a conclusion that led to that assessment? “

“Can’t you tell? It was the, erm, that thing! The last row window-side! Giving that away so easily to the transfer student, did she give you some kind of bribe?! It’s so out of character for you to yield to under-the-table deals “

“There goes Barusu again with his nonsense.”

Diagonally to my right, my childhood friend is spitting some kind of venom at me, but to me right now it means Nothing.

I have a good rhythm going on so far, so I intend to press my current momentum.

I stuck my finger towards both Frederica-sensei, who had a dumbfounded face, and Emilia whose eyes looked shocked, while looking around to everyone in the whole classroom

“The seat at the back next to the window is the Positioning any student would want! To so easily give that up, would leave all of us who have been Frederica-sensei’s earnest students in disquiet! Isn’t that right?”

“I guess…?”

No good, there were way fewer voices of agreement to my callout than I expected. My lack of preparation perhaps came back to bite me, as the majority of the students were tilting their heads in confusion.

Crap, if this keeps going, I’ll be written off as just a cringelord, which would just leave me torn to shreds in more ways than one.

“—Hmph, The words of this loud-mouthed fool hold some logic yet.”

“Ooh?”

“It may be in a trivial matter, but if a mere commoner is being favored over mineself, then it is not out of the question that it must be shown to be reasonable. Were it to not be, then a jest such as a deal under the table could prove to be realistic.”

“No way, there ain’t nothing realistic about under-the-table deals here, what are you freakin’ talking about…?”

Unexpected covering fire comes in, and its contents that which I, who should have been gaining assistance from, am instantly put off by. At those words of mine, the one with the greatest power level in the classroom, Priscilla, glared at me with a glance. By the way, not battle power or physical power or whatever, just looks alone, like—to put it bluntly, I mean a very particular feminine kind of power level. Don’t question it!

By the way, I've determined that the one who is pretty much number two in the class when it comes to power level is Crusch!

"Natsuki Subaru and Priscilla Barielle, I wouldn't go so far as to say your points are reasonable, but it may be hard for me to say that I would deem a completely opposite opinion to yours to reflect the opinion of all here."

"Oh gosh, Crusch-sama, your brooding side profile is so wonderful… But but, I do nyat think those two are actually thinking that deeply about it."

"No, there must be some conclusive factor for why they brought it up. Some kind of reason, unlike me, who just disorderly slid into the flow of things."

And then the Crusch-san in question threw an oddly expectant gaze at me, but being completely honest, I am almost purely going off vibes here! The thing is, I can't deny the feeling that due to Priscilla's uncalled-for support now it's starting to needlessly feel that way!

"Then erm…. Subaru-kun, was it? What do you want to do?"

"…"

However, the one who extended a hand towards me, who was feeling completely cornered, was, out of all unexpected things, the one who had been put on the spot of all things. The transfer student.

Being suddenly called my given name by a girl I just met, I get hit with a refreshing sense of surprise, and as she fixes her eyes on me, Emilia's amethyst eyes strengthen in color as she says-

"If what you want is that seat, then you wanna change seats with me? But, if we do that, then we'd be completely ignoring what Priscilla-san was talking about…"

"Y-Yeah, we would. It's not such an easy problem to solve. What's more, my own words apply to myself as well of course. The honor of obtaining that seat should not be bestowed or given to someone so easily.”

“Then…?”

“Isn’t it obvious?”

When she asked me in return, I did my best to somehow guide her to bringing everything to a conclusion as I talked.

Then, I stuck my finger towards the gasping, beautiful girl and declared.

“Chiki Chiki[24]. With our whole heart and soul ‘The great seat change tournament’ will now be held—!!”

“—?!”

When I thrust my fist up and announced that, everyone who heard me gasped.

A few seconds of silence are created, but the stiffness soon is dispelled—

“Wooooooh! Seat chaaaaange!!”

Such is the mysterious enthusiasm that envelops it and blots it out

That’s right, a seat change. Within school life, it is something completely decoupled from the usual schedule, a mid-scale event that one may even call unexpected!

Unlike the sports or school festival, different from the large-scale events that are incorporated in advance into the regular schedule, the frequency of mid-scale events is greatly dependent on the whims of the teacher in charge.

Despite sometimes being the main factor affecting how your school life will develop from then on, it is an event that occurs at a teacher's whim, treated much like a natural disaster in a “Town building-type Simulation Game”.

However, while being a complete gamble that may bring either heaven or hell, it was also the perfect detonator for the students who are fed up with their everyday lives without any change for the better.

And for even this class that is filled with festival lovers and event planners by nature, that will be thoroughly displayed—!

“Including the transfer student, it’s an all-out bet for who will see the heaven of the last row! And who will see the hell of the front row! A battle where no takesies backsies or trades will be allowed. That is the true nature of the ‘Seat Change’!”

“Woooooh! Seat change! Seat change! Seat change!”

“Your classmates that you form bonds of solidarity over a shared external enemy during the sports festival and school festivals, will now, in this moment, turn into your enemies who will try to steal each other’s places in this death game that will now unfold!”

“Window-side! Window-side! Window-side!”

The class's frenzy does not cool down. Geez, I’m always saved by these guys.

If it weren’t for this specific class then it wouldn’t be strange for me to have ended up in a timeline where I get hated by everyone, and end up truant and all!

And so, having seen the class’s misconduct and frenzy, the transfer student must have been quite perturbed, or so I thought.

“Seat change…That seems suuuper fun.”

She put her hands together in front of her chest and stood with eyes sparkling.

Seeing that she surprisingly didn’t regard me poorly after that, I was instead the one who ended up surprised, yep.

And so, seeing that the class is now completely controlled by the Mood of the seat change, the one in charge of first period English, responsible for the class, Frederica-sensei commented.

“How many times has it been now that first period ends up taken over by the seat changing I wonder.”

—I’m sorry. It’s already the third time in total that the class has ended up like this.

2

To sum it all up, if I had to say what I was trying to do by making such a huge mess, I simply wanted to create the opportunity to talk with the transfer student, and get a little closer. Such was the ulterior motive I held.

In all honesty, being in this class filled with beauties, if you were to ask me how much my heart trembled from a new one being added in, even I’d find it hard to Comment.

Well, obviously I can’t help what trembles or doesn’t.

Now of course, if you asked me if this was a one-hit K.O. love at first sight then, I would say not quite. I’ve already said this many times before, but I am fairly used to beauties by this point.

Included there, of course, are my childhood friends, the twin sister beauties, my little sister who wakes me up every morning, a beautiful little girl future candidate for being a super beauty to look forward to, and of course, I know the beautiful little girl who is friends with that beautiful little girl. I’m also on friendly terms with the six beautiful sisters in my neighborhood, and a lotta my classmates are beautiful girls too you know?

What’s going on here? There are so many beauties I’m practically drowning in them. Whatever the case, when it comes to feeling that blissful, wonderful sight for sore eyes, I’ve more than had my fill.

But she is special, I’m not sure if something about her resonated with me or something.

I may not be sure, but in the end, the result of my actions to learn what I am not sure of was, well, my head can’t quite connect the dots of how that connects to my seat change announcement just now either.

Whatever the case, after a long complicated process of this and that, the result brought about by the seat change, if I had to say, was—

"I got some bottom-tier damn power of fate to be pulling the stupid freaking front row like this!!"

The only thing I could do at this point was hold my head and scream at this result.

Lo and behold I got myself the front row and the Positioning exactly front and center of the teacher's desk to top it all off. Can you believe it?! They say a schemer drowns in their scheme, but right now, I have no words for this feeling like I'm drowning in some bizarro scheme.

"And last seat change, even if it were a hall-side one, I'd finally managed to secure myself a back row seat, I can't believe things would turn out like this…"

"Before that, do you not have anything to say to us after we were dragged into this and ended up in the front row as well?!"

While I was sulking in my melancholy, Otto, who had managed to secure the front row seat to my left, yelled at me.

Look at this guy. Just how unlucky can he get? And also, to put all the blame on others, just how wretched can he get?

"Face it. This is the result of your actions. The gods observed your daily activities, and so this is the result. Repent."

"You could not be projecting more if you were a projector! For starters, we'd just done it, but because Natsuki-san went ahead and mentioned a seat change once again this-……The others also made a mess of things, which led to this. Get me out of this class!"

Otto's face looks like the end of the world, but the other fatalities of the front row seat who had the honor of drawing this spot are Tonchinkan, a group whose daily activities are truly easy to understand.

And so of the six seats in the front row, five are filled by boys, however the remaining final spot, the seat to my right, is—

“Well then, I hope we can get along for some more time, Subaru-kun.”

“Now your power of fate is so incredible, I got nothing to say, Rem. This is your third time in a row seated to my right, what do you even do to get these results to happen?”

“If I were to borrow your words, Subaru-kun, then I suppose it would be due to the gods seeing my daily activities so… that would mean the gods are rooting for me right? I will have to put more and more effort into things then.”

Rem clenching her fist against her chest and huffing as she pumps herself up is really cute.

No, she might be cute, but that tenacity of hers is damn impressive. The moment she drew out the paper slip for sitting next to me in the lot, that sound she let out while fist pumping was something I would have wanted to record for myself.

“It does seem that for Rem, even if she has to end up at the front row, being next to Natsuki-san is an unshakeable special privilege… But I am just so done.”

“The important thing here is that Otto-kun also seems very glad to be on Subaru’s left side. By all rights, I would even want to switch places with you.”

“What’s the point in encircling Natsuki-san by switching the left and right seats here?”

“I have grown used to seeing Subaru-kun’s right side every day, so I thought maybe seeing him from his left side every once in a while would be refreshing.”

“This person’s thought process is the real deal!”

Just like always with Rem, she drives Otto into a corner, but to my expertly trained ear, it actually seems like Rem is holding back quite a bit. The usual Rem’s brute force approach is way beyond this. She'd be way more assertive to the point that I don't know what's driving her to do that.

Whatever the case, my sides being reinforced with well-known faces is a good lineup for me. My condolences to Tonchinkan, but I am not particularly pained by being on the front since I don't sleep during class or anything. In fact, I feel bad for all the teachers of each subject who will have to deal with me.

"But yeah, my original objective with this seat change…"

The backrest creaks as I turn around, then I look to the seat behind me—or so I'd like to say, but really it's about two seats back, dead in the middle of the classroom, that the one I see sitting there is that silver-haired girl.

Once again, unsure of whether it'd be good or bad luck, the one who drew the lot for the seat right in the middle of the classroom was the transfer student in question, Emilia. While Positioning-wise it was, for better or worse, quite iffy and all, being positioned in the middle while around her she hadn't a single acquaintance must be pretty uncomfortable.

It was a little late for this, but I broke out into a cold sweat as I felt like I was starting to see Frederica-sensei's thoughtfulness in having considered all that and trying to put her in the back corner. Though it seemed that the girl still had some luck.

Since those faces around her were some faces.

"Hey, transfer student…Emilia-chan, was it?"

"Wahya!"

At the voice behind her, Emilia lets out a yelp, uncharacteristic of an ethereal beauty such as her.

When I think about how on board she was with the seat change, then perhaps she might have an unexpectedly active personality?

When the surprised Emilia turned around, what she was met with was a smile wearing a cat-eared headband. The one known as being number one in the class, perhaps in the whole school year for his girl power, Ferris scoops up Emilia's silver hair from behind, and enjoys the touch and feel with his slender fingers.

"Nyo need to be so nervous, I'm nyot gonna pounce on you and eat you, so relax. I'm Ferris, feel free to call me Ferri-chan."

"Ah, thank you. Alright, pleasure to meet you, Ferri-chan."

"Waos, it's kinda refreshing being accepted so easily. This seems like it'll be interesting… Isn't that right, Crusch-sama?"

"Yes, indeed."

Hearing Ferris' words, this time on Emilia's right, Crusch-san nodded.

The belle with arms crossed, gave a side eye to Emilia, with an attitude that made you feel her noble presence. Then, for a moment, she loosened her lips into a gallant smile.

"Name's Crusch. I was appointed president of the student council. Just like Ferris, if there's something you need, don't be shy and feel free to rely on us. "

"Miss president of the student council! That's suuuper surprising. It's a co-ed school and yet the president of the student council is a girl…"

"Hmph, if you judge a book by its cover, then you might get a rug pulled from underfoot. There are many mysteries in this world after all. There is not a small number of people who may look one way, but in truth hide a secret."

"…Is that so?"

Crusch-san took an unusually teasing tone with her, but her huge, hidden breasts were resting on top of her crossed arms, so she ended up being not at all convincing.

It's likely that to her, this was meant to be a very intelligent conversation with deep meaning hinting at Ferris' gender, but due to her being unaware of her own objective charms, it brought out this feeling that she fumbled it completely. She's quite perfect but specifically that part of her is no good.

"And that's Crusch-sama's most cutest point!"

"I didn't say anything, so stop reading my mind alright?!"

Ferris snapped at me, which freaked me out, just how much of my inner mind has he seen through.

However, Around Emilia was the Top Two of the Student council, so there should be zero problem. They're a people-pleasing bunch after all, she's not gonna end up getting lonely or anything.

"Well, at least that's some good news."

"Awfully condescending of you, Barusu. —Even when you've brought about so many victims who've been dealt emotional injuries from this seat change."

The one to raise the corners of her eyes after hearing my muttering was the one who had plainly secured the seat behind Rem, Ram. She's not wrong there, but no one had particularly suffered too much other than tonchinkan—

"Take a look at that."

"Well that was a given."

What Ram pointed out with her line of sight was the back row hallway-side seat. There was Felt face down, sinking into her desk.

As the top batter of the lottery, getting a backrow seat was quite the favorable start for Felt, however, she could only celebrate for merely a moment. Why, you ask?

"Hey there, Felt. I'm so happy to sit next to you again."

"God stands dead before me."

And just like feared at the shoe rack, Reinhard had perfectly managed to draw the seat next to Felt.

It happened with Rem as well, but I get the feeling that there's quite a number of cases where the result of the lottery gets influenced by a person's fixation. I can't really say whether I'm on Felt's side or Reinhard's side, but well, my opinion is that I want to pleasantly watch over their little game of chase.

By the way, just completely incidentally.

About that window-side back seat that was the source of this time's seat change. Everything sorted itself out so that the person who should've had it ended up getting it, or like, at least that's how it feels.

"This world is, after all, made to be for mineself's utter convenience."

So said, puffing her chest out in haughty delight at the very back seat, as you all know, her Lady Priscilla-sama.

She drew it just as expected, or rather, you can't even call that crazy statement of hers an exaggeration just by the mere fact that she drew it after it got left all the way to pretty much the end,

"Which'd mean, gettin' me right next to ya's also a convenience?"

Next to Priscilla, giving that statement as if quibbling at her, was Anastasia. Both of them are known to get along like cats and dogs. Before the seat change, they were in front of and behind each other, but now that they ended up sitting next to each other, things seem more and more like they're about to overheat from the sparks flying.

"Hmph… This vixen is awfully irksome. I did not think of thee as the kind to be so fixated on fouling mineself's mood."

"Could'ja do me the favor of not sayin' it like I was trynna aim for this seat? In the first place, you were the one to draw the lot for that seat there after me, weren't'cha? If you're so displeased with me then that's just karma right there."

“What an insolent thing, pure idiocy.”

And so Priscilla pushes back with a terse retort against Anastasia, but I guess in the end it all amounts to a tie this time around.

And Julius, who should be there to put a damper on those pointless arguments, finds himself with no means to put a stop to that due to being unfortunately separated from those two. Let’s hope those two have enough sense.

“And with all that out of the way, we’ve safely completed the seat change. Things turned out just a little off from what I’d had in mind, but judgment was delivered in quite the fashion as always, Freddy-sensei.”

“Stop twisting things to make it seem as if I had been leading the seat change this time. More importantly, it appears you have eaten up all our time until the end of the class again.”

“Chill out. Even if our class fell behind, our class is filled with top-of-the-line self-studiers who possess the greatest time-eater qualities around. Also, Freddy-sensei’s supplementary lessons are superduper easy to understand!”

“It would be best not to have supplementary lessons. The fact you do not even think of it like that is quite troubling.”

Frederica-sensei rubbed between her eyebrows with a troubled face. She’s still at such a young age, and yet I fear she’s become an expert at that gesture.

“You think so too, don’t you Rem?”

“Yes, Indeed. Even if Subaru-kun falls asleep mid-class, I am placed in just the perfect spot to wipe away his drool.”

“You’re most definitely not on the same wavelength with each other then?!”

How to put it, summing everything up like that was our regular custom.

Otto is just a little too convenient, it's like that y’know.

3

And as class time ended with this and that, lunch time was the well-established questioning Time.

When it comes to transfer students, them being bombarded with questions during lunch time is of course a rite of passage. Whether or not they have a boyfriend, what’s their history with men and the like, it wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say being dug through is practically a cliche!

“Hooh, So you were transferred from that Priestella All-Girls Academy, Emilia?”

“Yes, that’s right. Due to some family matters I had to move here and…Since my uniform still hasn’t been made, these clothes are the uniform from that other school. I thought it’d stand out in a bad way, so I was suuuper worried.”

“Hmmm, Nyo need to worry. It looks great on you, cute, cute. But, these clothes are nyot bad at all… they’d look nice on Crusch-sama.”

“I agree on Crusch-san, but wouldn’t they also look good on you, Ferri-chan?”

“Eh, really? Then, wanna try swapping for a bit later?”

And so, I wanted to press her with questions, but there stood the impregnable student council combo. While picking up on the vibes of what the other classmates wanted to ask, they kept their Q&A going without a hitch. It was going so Smoothly, in fact, that I forgot to interject on the topic of Ferris and Emilia’s little uniform swap.

Of course, I’d already understood that Ferris didn’t have any underhanded intentions. Ferris using his appearance for misdeeds and looking towards the girls disrespectfully is something that could never happen. Ferris’ gaze is always affixed to Crusch-san at his side, but whether his real intentions for maintaining that relationship with her are one thing or another is something I'm not sure about. I seriously am just not sure.

"However, being a transfer student from an all-girls academy… Would that mean this is your first co-ed school? Are you at all perplexed by this being any different than what you're used to?"

"Maybe a little bit? Errm…?"

"Reinhard Van Astrea. Just Reinhard's fine."

Saying so by jumping in right at that moment without a shred of hesitation was our dear Reinhard-san.

With a freshness that would shock a gentle breeze, into the girl's talk—though Ferris was in it so by nature it's not really a girl's talk, but he smoothly integrated into the girl's talk.

"Alright, Reinhard. But, I'm impressed you figured out this was my first co-ed school."

"Because the Priestella all-girl's academy is an integrated school system with elementary, middle and high school all in one building. Which would mean, you likely had never even been in the same classroom as a boy until now. That was my thought process."

"That's right, but you're quite well informed."

"It's a school in the same prefecture as us and all, so sometimes I am approached by the female students from there."

He's getting reverse hit on by girls from an all-girls academy who are supposed to have no resistance to men. Reinhard-san is incredible, damn.

Emilia is also surprised, so it seems those female student's assertiveness is not something that is commonly displayed after all. Hmmm, ikemen are to be feared.

"I understand your feelings but don't press her too much with that question. On the contrary, if Emilia herself has any worries she should be asking us, is there anything?"

"Ermm, in that case, I might want to ask about club activities. In my previous school, I used to go to the handicrafts club, and I was thinking I'd like to continue to do so in this school as well."

"—The handicrafts club, huh?"

Unexpectedly, Crusch-san narrowed her eyes at Emilia's question.

Seeing her reaction Emilia let out an anxious "Huh?", noticing that, Crusch-san shakes her head while saying "Apologies."

"I thought it quite unfortunate to hear the name handicrafts club here of all places. Though, I suppose it is somewhat better than you saying the home economics club."

"Ah, a home economics club would be fine as well. I just wanted to be involved in something of the like…"

"Woah, why hold on there, good lady. —I can't just have you lumping together the handicrafts club and the home economics club."

Clapping his hands to make a loud noise, he drew attention to himself and gallantly intruded.

Who did? I did.

Emilia's shoulders jolted, Crusch-san and Ferris looked at each other. In the middle of all of them, Reinhard with his usual attitude raised his hand.

"Certainly, if you have any questions about those two clubs then talking to Subaru would be appropriate."

"Yes, for in the long historied discord between those two clubs, the being known as me is a very crucial Factor…"

"Crucial facturr…"

Emilia's pronunciation was strange like it was the first time she'd heard a foreign word, yet I nonetheless barged into the conversation. The heavens must be my ally for the topic of the handicrafts club to come out.

For you see I, am a member of the handicrafts club!

“So the thing about our school’s handicrafts club, is that our homeroom teach Freddy-sensei is the one in charge of it. That means the teacher just now with the scary face and kind eyes.”

“That’s a rude way to put it…But if that’s the case then it’ll be easy to bring up, might be helpful.”

“However! Our handicrafts club led by Frederica-sensei has an overwhelmingly antagonistic relationship with none other than the home economics club led by the math teacher Clind-sensei! Those two well known for getting along like cats and dogs have a long and deep history together, and that continues fiercely enough to affect the power structure of the school’s culture clubs!”

“I-I see… But, why is that a problem? I guess it’s a bit of a problem that the clubs don’t get along but if I make sure to just choose one then-……”

“That’s because, depending on which one you chose, their blatant personal bias will affect how they treat you “

“They judge from their personal bias?!”

Emilia opened her eyes in shock at the unbelievably childish arbitrage.

That’s right. Frederica-sensei and Clind-sensei are usually teachers overflowing with kindness, and of good character, however, when it comes to one another that takes a complete turn.

If someone who would support one over the other were to appear, they would use the full extent of the authority they hold to crush them.

“Isn’t that a problem?”

“Of course it’s a massive problem. But, they have more than enough power as teaching faculty to compensate. So it’s… not quite tolerated but, they have workarounds.”

“Why are you so hush about it? You Natsuki Subaru are also one of those putting those to work after all.”

The golden tiger Frederica and Nighthawk Clind and their Tiger-Hawk Problem are an unavoidable problem to all who attend Lugunica Academy. Therefore, coping methods have been established.

Those methods are simple. For you see, I am also a member of the home economics club!

“Errrm, so basically, what do you mean?”

“No matter which you support, the other’s mood will foul, so just go with both to muddy the waters.”

“…Is that alright?”

“If you just give it your best on the club activities, then you’ll have no problem. Of course, they won’t complain at you to focus on the exhibition items for the handicraft club, and a girl with a wide breadth of daily life skills is much easier to employ than one who is just focused on crafting.”

“What do you judge to be a daily life skill nya.”

I suppose those would be sewing, cooking, and cleaning.

Either way, having the exchange take place in that idle vibe was a smart move. Without that, you’d meet a pitiful fate, and with a new student who is a part of it, one would need to be particularly careful.

“But well, it would be Best for you to prepare two copies of your club entry papers. As a member of the Handicraft-economics club I welcome your entry with open arms.”

“Ah, Subaru-kun is also in both clubs. That's… erm, surprising no?”

“You can keenly feel the vibe that she chose her words carefully.

Subaru-kyun, don't feel too down."

"You shush it."

Ferris poked at my shoulders while grinning so I pushed that forehead of his away.

I am quite self-aware that my hobbies don't match my looks, so it's not something that will bother me at this point. For real. But more importantly, the pretty girl transfer student entering the same club as me is huge for me.

"I mean, in this class the only one in the same club as me is Rem and all."

"Though in Rem's case, it seems she has mastered so much that there is no need for her to go out of her way to enter a school club."

"That's…your conjecture, so don't say that."

Saying the unnecessary, Reinhard announced that then shrugged his shoulders like he's in an American movie. It looked so ridiculously accurate that I could do nothing but just accept it.

Behind him, Ferris and Crusch-san moved their faces close together.

"There's nyo going against this guy. He should get some hurt for a change."

"Don't say that, Ferris. As the student council that protects the daily lives of all students, that would bespoil us of our essence. Let's have Ram act out as our proxy."

"I see, as expected of Crusch-sama, such a tactician…!"

God damn, keep it quiet you two.

The school council pair showing off how well they get along, and me with a sour face. Whereupon, strangely having been forsaken by the expected class cliche, Emilia put on a troubled face.

While reflecting on my rather unkind attitude towards the transfer student, I suddenly had an idea.

“That’s right, there’s club activities but also… Might be too much but, would you like a school tour? I mean, like, you wanna?”

Guiding the transfer student on a school tour! That’s right, this would also be another of the so called cliches!

The transfer student getting bombarded with questions during lunch break, and the transfer student getting a school tour after class. Who the hell even needs a tour. The school ain’t that big! She might even feel that way, but I’ll let all that be.

“You’ll give me a school tour?”

“Yeah, totally! Actually, I hope you’ll let me! To the point I’m the one who’d beg you to! I want to give you a tour around the school! That’s the whole reason I’m here today!”

“Sorry. You lost me a little there.”

I saw her get into it a little, so I thought I could be more forceful, but I got carried away.

But no, I won’t give up. I’ll do something about this, get it back into a good spot.

“Hold on there, Subaru. In these cases, you can’t just force things.”

“Oh, you’re butting in? Reinhard. You’re not about to say you’ll do it instead of me are you? Because if you do, honestly, I’d have no argument and would just have to throw my hands up.”

“I’m not really opposed to escorting her. Unfortunately, I have some business to attend to after class today. Now, wouldn’t it be better for it to be a light-hearted thing between girls? “

“Well, you have a point there…”

At Reinhard’s proposal, I dejectedly backed down. Fundamentally, Reinhard only acts in good will, and he is very assertive with his arguments, so it is hard to argue back.

A girl should give the tour, there was no way I could give any complaint to that course of events.

Seeing me back down, Reinhard winked at me with a “Right?” then said,

“Well then, Felt. I have a request for you, what do you think?”

“Like I care—!!”

He had the nerve to call on Felt, who so far had not entered the conversation at all, and was even trying to lie down on her desk to sleep away the time until the next period.

Although she looked to me like she was sleeping soundly, it seems she didn’t actually catch any sleep because of a bad feeling she was getting. Felt glared at Reinhard with a displeased face.

“I don’t care! This has nothing to do with me! I had a bad feeling already, and now this! You’re always up to no good!”

“I wish you wouldn’t say something so heartless like this has nothing to do with you. This is a girl who will become a friend you’ll learn along with in the same class. Besides, Felt, did you forget the fact that you are the class head monitor?”

“You also decided that by yourself when I missed a class to go help old man Rom!”

Felt’s rage towards the composed and logical Reinhard did not wane.

By the way, Felt being class head is literally true. We have the acting student council president, Crusch-san, but in terms of title, both in name and fact, she was at the Top of the class hierarchy.

“Moreover that role, I heard you obstinately forced it upon me! What’s wrong with you dammit!”

“I thought it was for the best. Certainly you shirk many things, but if given the appropriate station you’ll improve… or so I believe.”

“Nobody asked you to do that! You think you’re my parent or something?!”

“If you so wish, I would not begrudge deepening our bonds beyond that of parent and child.”

“Fuck off!”

Let alone within the school, she has the number one ikemen in the prefecture propositioning her this strongly, and yet she’s like this. Felt’s iron will is surprising, but Reinhard is not discouraged at all despite all she says to him which is quite, well, y’know.

“Unfortunately, Felt has declined. However, I hope you will not misunderstand her. She is actually a girl overflowing with compassion. She just seems to be in a bit of a bad mood today.”

“I-Is that the case…? Ok, I understand. Thank you.”

At the very least, I have no recollection of ever witnessing an event where Felt regarded Reinhard with warm compassion. Still, even Emilia had a face saying she’s given up on probing at that.

And keeping that troubled face, she turns to Crusch-san and Ferris.

“Well, you heard it, how are you two after school looking? Do you have any plans?”

“We would love to hang out, but we are packed with student council work. If you’re willing to wait a bit, then it’s possible but you may end up going home quite late.”

“And three girls alone in the dark on their way home might be pretty scary n’yeah?”

Three girls, Ferris shamelessly snuck in, but the flow was perfectly going my way. Then, when Emilia slumped her shoulders in disappointment, saying “Well then, it can’t be helped.”

“Then, let’s give up on this school tour-…”

“Wait wait wait wait! Me! You have me! I said I’d do it!”

Why did I get excluded from the candidates?!

As I placed myself among the candidates while still being shocked at the state of my being unexpectedly ignored, even Emilia made a puzzled face, so I was surprised.

“Eh, Subaru-kun, you’ll give me a tour?”

“That’s what I’ve been saying! Huh, am I that forgettable? Did I have so little impact that I’d be forgotten about in the middle of that back and forth there?”

That assessment is quite a shock. It’s a little weird, I’d be the one saying it but, here I thought I was the type to regularly leave quite the impression in people’s minds in a bad way!

“Hmmm, not quite…”

Seeing me panicked and making a commotion, Emilia was the one to furrow her brow in thought.

Beauties really do look picturesque even when looking a little troubled huh, or so I thought to myself, I am also quite used to beauties, so just this much won’t make me flustered. Rem sometimes has her even more defenseless and even more incredible moments.

“—Ok. Well then, if you could, Subaru-kun. After school, please give me a tour.”

And with a vibe befitting its own big bow SFX, Emilia lowered her head to me in very formal fashion. Of course, I gladly received that.

“…”

Why does Emilia’s gaze feel kinda, strangely, oddly, tragically heroic?

4

“I have a date with Nee-sama so I cannot… I just cannot go with you but, you absolutely must not be rude to Emilia-san, Subaru-kun.

Even if you interact with her with your usual behavior, Rem and Otto-kun can't be with you. So please, please…!"

"You don't need to worry about me like I'm some kind of dog off its leash I'll be fine!"

After school, the moment I spoke of the school tour I have with Emilia, Rem came protesting like a madwoman so the only thing I could do was give a dry laugh.

From what I hear, Rem is going to help Ram after school, help the novelist Roswaal by cleaning his house. By the way it came up a bit in conversation already, but in all aspects of housework skill, like cooking, sewing, cleaning, and laundry, Rem already holds more than enough expertise to make her a complete housemaker.

In the home economics club, the only one to have earned a license of total transmission[25] in all fields from the strict Clind-sensei is likely only Rem. She might not qualify as a specialist, but her skill as an all-rounder is known throughout the school.

And that's how it was. To Ram, her older sister who has no qualms about borrowing her younger sister's help, requesting her cooperation to show off her good parts to the one in her heart was an extremely natural course of events.

"I don't really care about Barusu being in heat at this point, but I will absolutely not forgive any acts that would make Rem sad."

"Stop treating me like I'm some dog released from the chains of reason!"

"You're being loud for Barusu."

"Ack!"

I take an insanely powerful low kick and collapse, and Ram leaves as she takes Rem away.

All the way to the end, Rem was worried about me, but once I saw her off, sweating bullets while waving at her, she very begrudgingly managed to leave.

“Woaah, Ram’s got a mean low…! She kicked right into the back of my knees with precision. Is her lower half just built different…?!”

With relatively healthy preferences, Ram may look like that, but she’s surprisingly good at moving her body. Her girl power barometer doesn’t hit levels even close to Rem’s, so trying to excel in a different area may have been the direction she chose as a result.

Despite appearances, she boasts the highest athletic ability among girls in multiple prefectures. She’s a female athlete who has served as a backer for several clubs. Even with all that, the force of the kicks from her well-trained lower body is abnormal.

“If we seriously got into an all-out brawl, I can see myself losing… Well, from the point that I got into a brawl with a girl, I feel like I’d already lost as a man.”

“Who’d get in a brawl with whom?”

“No, I just meant girls and boys are direct opposites so uwaaaoh?!”

When I was in grumbling and talking to myself Mode, I was surprised by a beautiful girl coming from behind. Once I turned around in a hurry, there was the figure of Emilia, surprised by my reaction.

She widened her big eyes and, while placing a hand on her chest, said

“Oh dear. You got quite flabbergasted didn’t you.”

“You don’t hear flabbergasted nowadays…”

Now and then, this girl sneaks in those dated terms.

Whether she understood the tepidness of my gaze or not, Emilia put her hands on her hips and cutely puffed up her cheeks.

“I only called out to you, don’t get so surprised.”

“Weeell, I was just in thought by coincidence, sorry.”

"In thought… were you thinking about something dangerous?"

"Not at all! Nothing dangerous at all. Just about Ram's bottom half."

"…I see."

I kinda get the feeling I phrased that wrong.

The source of my feeling is Emilia taking one step back, and the drop in temperature in her gaze.

I'm digressing here, but with the seat change and everything, everyone in the class did something like an introduction, so depending on Emilia's memory, she might have perfectly grasped everyone in the class's names and faces, so she may be completely aware that Ram is the name of that girl.

"However, what that would later mean, the two who had just met had no way of knowing…"

"Sorry. I kinda don't know what you're talking about."

Now that it's come to this point, Emilia unexpectedly breathed out an exasperated sigh.

What is it with everyone I talk to doing that all the time?

"Are you always like this, Subaru-kun?"

"I wonder? I believe today's me is for today, yesterday's me is for yesterday, and tomorrow's me has his own goodness for tomorrow. Every day brings a different me, and I wish to continue always bringing a fresh image for everyone."

"Well then, since we're here, would you mind showing me to the handicrafts club's room?"

"This feeling of being completely ignored, it's not bad."

Rem, who reacts sincerely, and Otto, who overreacts to everything, both have their beautiful reactions, but I feel this is not bad in and of itself.

That said, I am being asked something, so let's answer.

"Right, let's hurry on, to the handicrafts club… Let's head to the clothing room where they have activities."

—With that, by my guidance, Emilia's school exploration began.

That said, it's not like there'll be some event or happenstance, or even a very convenient clash between Frederica-sensei and Clind-sensei, the beginning of a Tiger-Hawk War.

Fundamentally and earnestly, I give her a tour through a number of the special classrooms, the cafeteria, the gymnasium, the old school building, and the like, completing the mission without delay.

"So, from this point on, it's the old school building. The new building is built with stone, but the old one is still partly built from wood, so it has this Showa vibe that I really recommend as a refreshing getaway "

"Refreshing getaway? As in for scary stories?"

"It's kinda cliche, but we do actually have our seven mysteries in Lugunica Academy. The old school building has its age and the fact that it creaks from being made of wood, so when staying over during a study session or sports club sleepover you'll get constant talk of ghost encounters, it's pretty entertaining."

"Hmmm, I see. Ghosts huh?"

"I'm surprised, thought you'd be more scared."

So far the Escorting hasn't taken more than a bit under an hour, but from the conversations I had in the meantime, Emilia had a bit of a childish side to her.

Despite the fact that appearance-wise she has a pretty pure-ish, or rather, older sister-ish side to her, maybe due to her childish inner self she has this sinful charm to her. Good Job.

So, the fact that precisely Emilia doesn't seem to be scared by the topic of ghosts was surprising. That she'd plug her ears, saying she didn't want to hear it and run to the new school building, I wouldn't go so far as to say that though.

"…Is it a problem if I don't get scared?"

"Nah, it's not like you need to get scared. But if this were a ghost house and I was an employee playing a ghost and you were a customer, then I would want you to be scared."

Actually, I tried saying ghost encounter and all, but my entire circle of female acquaintances has such a strong resistance to this topic that it's a complete non-starter.

The only one who honestly gets scared by ghost stories around me is Beako.

"Also, Ram actually."

"Eh?"

"No, just talking to myself. If she knew I was talking about her, she'd get pissed to all hell."

The most surprising thing of all, the one who is no good with the supernatural is Ram, the person who you'd expect to have a heart that would not be shaken by that. On the other hand, Rem is completely fine with anything ghost-related, whether it be a splatter movie or whatever she could watch while eating a burger.

That time I went to watch a movie with the twins, revered for its romance, and Ram spent two whole hours clinging to me due to me being in between the two, it must be a humiliating memory for her.

"At any rate, she beat the crap out of me while telling me to forget about it…"

I pretended to have forgotten, but if she knew that I remembered, she'd make an attempt on my life.

Spreading Ram's weak points to other people would be bad as a childhood friend and all.

“Well, you’ll rarely ever have to go to the old school building I think. After school, you’ll probably find the entrance closed after all.”

“Ah, you’re right. It’s already closed.”

There’s only a single path from the new school building to the old one which is a hallway.

While being bathed in the spring’s end wind, Emilia’s silver hair, as she tries to open the sliding door, flutters, and I gaze at it absentmindedly.

“Ah! This is bad.”

“—?”

When I was absentmindedly gazing at her, Emilia suddenly turns around and surprises me.

Emilia turned her back to the doors, just slightly turned a suspicious eye towards me. But, I’m the confused one here, so I could only tilt my head quizzically.

“What’s wrong?”

“…Ah, Nothing. Nothing right?”

“Well, I’m the one who wants to ask. —Oh.”

While I couldn’t help feeling like something stuck to me from that reaction, I suddenly raised my face

As it slid into my ears, what I heard was a chain of sounds as if it came from a floor above the new building—Ok well to put it plainly, it was a melody.

“Woah, whose performance is that?”

Noticing the melody just like me, Emilia raises her face to look up defenselessly. Her figure as she pushes away her hair flowing in the wind, to entrust her ears to the music was truly picturesque.

I sneakily peeked at her.

“What we’re hearing right now is the performance of our music teacher Liliana-chan. After school, she goes around to mess about in the light music club and band club that she’s in charge of.”

“Heeh, the music teacher…Liliana-chan?”

“Her appearance and regular behavior are not too dignified, so every student usually just looks over her with a smile like she’s some kind of lovable animal.”

As people have put it, “A genius that if had this world not had music would be doomed to be just an idiot.”

In speech, in actions, in lifestyle, in absolutely everything, she shows extremely unusual levels of carelessness, she’s an adult who, without that outstanding music talent she would no doubt have died by the roadside.

“She extorts students for their lunch. She’s late for her own classes. She fishes the principal’s koi fish. She wears the same exact jersey to school all 5 days of the week… that’s the kinda person she is.”

“B-But she plays so well?”

“That’s right. That’s why her existence is even allowed.”

“Allowed to even exist?!”

To Emilia, who had yet to witness it directly, she may not understand the sheer threat of her existence.

I am absolutely serious here, she’s merely a small creature that’s got a nice face, can sing, and play music. If she didn’t have those talents then she may as well have been treated like some field-devastating vermin.

“She kept being told she’d likely never find anyone to take her in, but apparently recently after she made a mess in some kind of music festival, she drew the attention of the son of a distinguished family… Everyone thinks this must be how it'd feel to be able to eat with just your single talent."

"I-Isn't that wonderful? See, she's erm… finally grasped happiness after being able to continue doing what she likes! Right?"

"Is it now?"

Honestly, I don't really understand if she did either. Every time I try to question Liliana-chan about it, she runs away, and if I blunder I'll end up made into a song.

It'd also be an absurdly good song, so if it turns out that a song using my name ends up being sung throughout the entire town I would die from shame.

"The pointless Liliana-chan talk aside….Think we've gone around and seen every point of interest already."

"…Yeah."

While lending her ears to the still audible performance, Emilia mutters back with a vague loneliness.

The mood of her voice throws me more and more for a loop.

I mean, she was giving this vibe of being so wary of me and all just a moment ago, then the moment I go "Oh we're about to end the tour" she gets lonely.

A woman's heart is not as clear as the autumn sky, I guess, it's too complex.

It's weird, I thought I had a decent amount of experience with pretty girls, but maybe I just had a lot of exposure and my amount of Data was actually small.

"Nii-cha stop treating me like a child, in fact!"

"As expected, Rem is truly impressed. Subaru-kun is wonderful."

“Barusu, I give you three minutes.”

I had a match in my brain against a fighting dummy of pretty girls, and the result was a very strange feeling.

While still not understanding the source of Emilia’s expression of Ennui, I racked my brains over what I could possibly do, then I arrived at my Eureka moment.

“There’s still one place I haven’t given you a tour of.”

That’s right, to the place that was treated as a kind of Sanctuary of this school.

That place was—

5

“Woah, ah.”

When I showed that place off to her, Emilia’s expression brightened with a smile.

Those somehow faint, downcast eyes that had been dragging a feeling of Ennui until now, their shine changed, and her gaze was stolen by the view before her.

Behind a school building encroached by the twilight, what unfurled there was a big flower bed of sizable scale.

To be honest, it was of such a scale that it makes me think it may be more accurate to call it a flower field rather than a flower bed. It’s a little different from a genuine one with a vinyl greenhouse and everything, but putting this big a plot towards a flower bed was quite the luxurious thing.

And also, the whole surface of this flower bed is, currently, covered in vivid flowers that are in full bloom.

The warm spring weather of the past few days has been calm, and the warmth has borne fruit. The flowers, now in bloom, welcomed us as they swayed gently in the wind.

“With the vermillion sunset colors pouring in, this is delivered to you in a slightly romantic fashion.”

Standing next to a lost-for-words Emilia, I give her a pompous bow.

By the way, those mannerisms just now were me doing an impression of the mannerisms of the most pompous man I know. I feel like it was quite a good copy if I do say so myself.

“…”

Still not saying anything, Emilia slowly turns towards me.

With my head down from my bowing, I open one eye and peek at her. Actually, if I don’t get a tsukkomi-like reaction here, my pompousness circuits will reach criticality and burn out.

The fierce inner battle between my sense of shame and myself prolongs and finally explo—

“—Thank you, Subaru-kun.”

“Oh.”

Smiling, Emilia said that to me.

Her silver hair glistens in the twilight, and I am captivated by the glimmering shine of it.

A beautiful girl smiling in the twilight covered flower field.

That had enough of an effect to make my chest thump with a mysterious impetus

And then…

“Well, let’s get on with it.”

“Whuh?”

In front of my stiffened self, Emilia’s expression suddenly turned serious.

Then, slowly, she raised both of the hands that she had tucked behind herself, and assumed what anybody could tell at a glance was a fighting pose.

Then she faced the astonished me, with a face like a tragic hero.

“L-Let’s go, come at me! I won’t lose!”

She said this, inviting me into a real fight for some reason.

“…”

That reaction was surprising, or rather, it’s not even at the level of surprising anymore. You can’t even call this unexpected, just where was the foreshadowing for this?

Is she a grappler?

“Wait no, how and why and when, who even wanted this course of events?!”

I think there’s some kind of misunderstanding, but I am completely stumped as to how this came to be so I simply threw my anger single-mindedly at an unseen something and could do naught but stomp at the ground in place.

In the faraway sky, Liliana-chan’s performance can still be faintly heard—.

6

While she refused to leave her fighting stance, once I’d heard Emilia's side of the story, it seems this is what happened.

“We had that thing at HR time right? When you mentioned the seat change at the beginning and got in the way of me taking my seat and the like, then afterwards you tried to scare me off from club activities and stuff so… I really thought you just didn’t like me, Subaru-kun.”

“You mean I called you out here in such a roundabout way to beat you into submission?! That’s how my goodwill was being interpreted?!”

“I kinda sorta did think it was strange you know? Like wow Subaru-kun is doing such a proper job of giving me a tour despite being so angry, or like wow his conversations are kinda fun, too bad we’re gonna have to wrap it all up with a fight…”

“That’s why you kept making such a tragic hero face?! There’s so many points in that conversation leaving me shocked my heart can’t take much more!”

We could just chalk it up to her being a pure and wholesome ojou-sama from an all-girls’ school and leave it at that right?

On the contrary, that a girl from an all-girls school would have the resolve to fight a guy after getting called out to the back garden is conceptually way darker! What made her turn out like this?

“You were muttering to yourself about how you had a fist fight with some girl called Ram too…”

“Right! I did! That’s completely on me! Dammit me! Dammit!”

I smacked the area on my leg where I got kicked by Ram and regretted my own careless comment.

I see, looking back, there were probably a ton of places that could’ve helped prolong the misunderstanding. What were they now?

“Just wondering but, did that moment with the seven mysteries of Lugunica Academy apply too?”

“…I thought you were trying to scare me to establish dominance.”

“My mental image of the law at all-girls’ schools is being corrupted. What, were there actually any Ojou-samas in that kind of environment that required that kind of battle-ready mentality to survive?”

If that’s the case, then I'd better watch out for what kind of school Beatrice ends up enrolling in the future. I want Beatrice to grow nice and healthy without worries. If she becomes a little girl who holds that kind samurai soul then things at home are going to get real difficult.

“Anyway! That was not at all what I intended. For real, it was just a tour.”

“…But, why did you get so insistent about giving me a tour?”

“Argh, it’s that you know? What they call uhhh Under Mind.”

“—?”

Which if you translated literally to Japanese it would mean “Ulterior move[26]”, but how much of that was actually my real feelings was kind of hard for even me to tell. Though, of course, there’s no lie in saying that what I felt involved wanting to get closer to a cute girl.

More directly, I just wanted to try to confirm the truth behind how my heart reacted when I first saw Emilia.

And if I had to say whether or not I actually did confirm anything with this escorting, it’d be a little tricky to say.

“To summarize, I wanted to get along with you more. Get along with you and get to know what kind of girl you were, and also, have you get to know me. That’s all.”

“…”

“Did I do a bad job at summarizing?”

I didn’t get any response, so I got anxious and tried asking her. I’ve always been bad at summarizing things. I have a habit of always trying to summarize a conversation while yapping all the while. Though whether I'm actually summarizing is a little iffy.

“…Ok, I understand.”

“Really, you understand?”

“That I am suuuper dumb and Subaru-kun is also pretty dumb.”

“If you wanna talk about my dumb points, then I have quite a few points I’m reflecting on.”

Trying to discuss what my biggest demerit was here would likely turn into an argument in and of itself.

While I was scratching my head about that, Emilia finally couldn’t hold back and broke into a laugh. Her smile, being so natural, was different from all the vaguely strained expressions she’d made so far.

Well, I suppose she was coming in expecting things to end with a brawl after all, hard to tell how often a natural smile would come out like that.

“Oh well, there was a lot here and there, but if you are satisfied, then ultimately that would be best.”

“Yes, I am very satisfied. Thank you for everything, really. Subaru-kun.”

“It’s all good…. More importantly, if we’re all done here, we should leave fast.”

“Eh?”

I got a smile from Emilia and all, so I proposed we scatter if she’s all satisfied. Then, Emilia reacted with surprise to those words. Her hair, pulled back faintly, looks towards the flower bed to her side.

“Erm, I’d like to look at them a bit longer, can’t I?”

“I would absolutely love to concede to that request right now, but there’s an alarm bell inside me saying, “It won’t be that easy, Baby”. Of course, I’m not being a meanie here alright? There’s a proper reason for that. The reason is that this place is a “Secret Attraction”“

"Ah, it's not a public attraction, it's a secret one."

Exactly, things can be either public or secret, compared to public, what is secret should carry the impression of having many shady aspects about it.

And so, this applies to this "Lugunica Academy Secret Attraction" much the same.

"Could it be, is there a kind of scary story to this flower field…?"

"Well no, this is completely unrelated to the seven mysteries of Lugunica Academy. Wait no, I suppose it might be horrifying in its own way. But, before talking about that, we gotta get-"

Out of here, before I could say that and drag Emilia away.

That voice abruptly appeared behind us.

"—Oh my, students after school at this time is quite rare."

"…"

When I heard that low tone of voice accompanied by a refined elegance, a cold sweat trickled down my back.

Once that voice behind my back reached me, I was unable to move. From behind my back would mean that it was basically to the front of Emilia, who was facing me.

She can see the face of the person who called out to us. Emilia has already been apprehended by that person. And she, of all things, turned a smile towards them

"Ah, Mr. Principal. Did you also come to see the flower bed? "

And greeted him with that.

She said that to this school's principal, Principal Wilhelm Van Astrea!

"I believe you are… Oh, right, the transfer student Emilia-san. This should be your first day after transferring. How has the school been treating you?”

“Yes, it is so full of interesting things. And besides that, I’ve been having Subaru-kun over here giving me a tour of the school.”

“Hoho, Well, well.”

From Emilia’s amicable mouth, my name spilled out.

As I remained unable to move, a tough, thick palm gently clapped onto my shoulders from behind me. Then, to my immediate side, a face I’m well acquainted with, that of an old man—Nay, that of the school principal

“Being kind to the fairer gender is a good thing. That is what makes one a man.”

“Ha, haha. It’s no biggie. No, really. Well now, looks like it’s about time to go, so I’ll be-…”

“Mr. Principal, do you know who’s been looking after this flower bed? I am just so suuuper moved by it that I wish to know.”

“Emilia-san?!”

That is such a worst-case-scenario choice that I unconsciously added San to her name.

Emilia gets surprised by my shriek, but the Principal laughs bashfully, saying “No, no.”

“It is nothing that outrageous. It is no more than a flower bed I began with my amateur knowledge. Just to kill some time. But it is an honor to hear you say that.”

“You’ve been taking care of it, Mr. Principal?! Wow, that’s amazing!”

Seeing the impressed Emilia's face, the principal grew increasingly bashful. That appearance of his was quite heartwarming. That’s right, it was certainly heartwarming.

However, the problem starts here.

“In the first place, gardening is more my wife’s hobby rather than mine.”

“Does your wife like flowers?”

“Yes, she’s an unparalleled lover of flowers. On the other hand, I hardly have anything I could call a hobby. Unable to overlook that my wife said this to me. “How about you try raising some flowers?”, and this is the result “

“How wonderful…”

Ecstatically, Emilia listened in on the principal’s “Secrets behind the origin of the rear garden flower bed.”

I’ve prepared myself for the worst already.

To be trapped here, that is.

“At first, I believed it would be simple, but surprisingly, there is quite a depth to gardening. Even the health of a flower varies depending not only on the type of flower, but on the individual flower. To the point my wife told me I should try to be as careful with it as I am trying to keep her in good spirits.”

“You have such a wonderful wife.”

“Indeed, she is such a great wife that I even think her to be wasted on me. When I bring her here during our free days, it is quite the sight seeing her frolic about, almost like she had gone back to her young days…”

Perhaps due to Emilia being an excellent listener, the Principal’s passionate conversation did not let up.

Rather than his passion not letting up, to put it bluntly it’s more like his passion for his wife is not letting up.

“Right right, now that I think back—”

“At that time my wife-…”

“We were still so young so-…”

“But that part of her is so charming that-…”

7

“Looks like the sun’s long since set on us…”

“Yeah…just as expected.”

Completely past sundown, on our night walk back from school, Emilia and I walked side by side.

About three hours must have passed since our encounter with the principal at the backyard flower bed. I, with an exhausted face, notice Emilia in my periphery with an apologetic expression.

“Erm, I’m sorry ok? This is all because I talked a ton with Mr. Principal.”

“No, it’s fine. From the moment we encountered the principal there, that fate became unavoidable. The principal’s unending boasting about his wife is the biggest reason that such a wonderful flower bed is kept a “Secret Specialty” not open to the public.”

Unending, meandering, endless, continuously surging topics about his beloved wife.

People call it Golden Time Lover Requiem. I’m people.

In short, Principal Wilhelm is a massive wife guy, and that garden is a flower bed he diligently put together for his wife.

If you pop into school on the weekend, like during club activities, you can occasionally encounter the principal bringing his wife there, happily spending his time hanging about.

“However, his wife is the more fearsome opponent so be careful. She’s twice-…… No, thrice as smitten as the principal.”

“And you’d have to take on both…”

“Yes, that’s exactly it.”

Emilia nodded with a serious face that said she finally understood the threat of it

Principal Wilhelm and his wife are by no means bad people, but that feeling that they can no longer see anything but each other just gives you horrible heartburn.

In the end, we were trapped until after the groups doing club activities had left, and were stuck having to walk back late at night together like this.

“Escorting the fairer gender home is a man’s role, is what he’d said to me here.”

“Can you escort me properly?”

“If you’ll allow the risk of me knowing where your house is.”

“That’s fine. I mean, Subaru-kun won’t come trying to beat me up or the like right?”

“I might have to tsukkomi somewhere, so I can’t guarantee anything. After so many hours after school with you, I’ve at least grasped that much of your airheadedness.”

Let's chalk it up to her having enough of a unique personality to have been enrolled in the Frederica class. Now just put her in the thick of it, and if she doesn’t dim, she’ll be a bona fide Lugunica Academy student.

“But…Fufu, Aah, I had fun.”

And so, when I nodded in a very educatorish manner, Emilia beside me laughed splendidly and said that.

She swung her bag up, then when she looked up at the sky dotted here and there by the stars said, “I’d never walked around this late at night, there’s been so much that I didn’t know, so many things that have been suuuper fresh to me.”

“Novel and fresh are two very different things after all, not the best thing to mistake the two for one another.”

“Don’t they mean the same thing?”

“Freshness is Fresh, but novelty can become Pressing at times.”

There’s no guarantee one won’t be overwhelmed by novelty and fall behind as a result. If Emilia can avoid that, I’d also be quite glad, after having gotten along with her.

“Whatever the case, if you can give me a smile and tell me let’s get along tomorrow and on as well, then I guess that’s all I’d need. As a plus you could also be a little specially friendlier with me.”

“What do you mean by specially friendlier?”

“Right…Like, I guess the typical thing to deepen a relationship in one swoop is how we call each other.”

Human relations are a strange thing, when a relationship changes things like the way people call each other also change.

If you become closer, so-called etiquette begins to fade little by little. It’s a little different from disrespect. The relationship evolves into one where you don’t need manners.

“…”

Emilia started pondering the meaning of my words just for a little.

After that, she must have quickly understood what I wanted to say.

“Th-Then.”

She, slightly hesitatingly, stopped on the other side of the road and looked at me.

I slowly stopped my feet as well, and turned towards Emilia.

And then Emilia, as if having made up her mind,

“—Let’s get along in the future as well, Natsuki.”

“HUH?! Isn’t switching out my first name for my last name widening the gap in our relationship a bit?!”

“Eh?”

We had such a good atmosphere there, and yet, I was shocked by how that was thrown away.

Just then, Emilia also made a surprised face.

We looked at each other and tilted our necks with an “Eh?”.

“I-I mean, as proof of us getting closer, I should change how I call you…That’s what you said, right?”

“Which is why, having already taken the stance of adding kun to my first name, here I was hoping that you’d go through with calling me by just my first name.”

“But I did call you by your—!”

While comparing our intentions, Emilia suddenly got something stuck in her throat.

Her eyes opened wide, and while pointing at me with her finger

“By chance is the Subaru in Natsuki Subaru your first name?!”

“Yeah?! Did I forget to mention that?!”

“I-I mean there are people with no last name like me! And other people’s first names generally go first too, so I just thought…!”

Thanks to the astonished Emilia’s statement, I finally understood the situation

I see, so basically, Emilia thought that my first name was Natsuki.

And therefore, her attempt to finally come out and call me by my actual first name, failed.

“So that means this whole time you were meaning to call me Natsuki-kun? That does change the vibe of everything that happened today a little.”

“I-I mean I thought…hk.”

Suddenly being called by my surname by a girl I just met, now that I know that feeling of superiority was a misunderstanding, I feel just a little dejected.

However, Emilia’s mood gets really foul towards the dejected me. Emilia’s face becomes red, and while looking at me with slightly moist eyes says,

“S-Suddenly calling a boy I just met by his first name is just …. S-So embarrassing.”

“…”

“S-Stop that! Don’t look at me. My face is bright red right now…!”

Emilia put both hands over her cheeks and attempted to hide that seemingly blushing face.

I couldn't take my eyes off her as it happened.

That dejected feeling from a moment ago left to who knows where, now overwritten by a new surprise and admiration, I completely lost sight of it.

Because I mean—

“You’re so cute, Emilia-tan.”

“That’s…. Eh?! What?! Where did the Tan come from?!”

“It’s a change in how I call you. Y’know, a nickname makes you cuter right?”

“That’s what you call a cute nickname?! Liar, you’re just teasing me!”

Still with a blushing face, Emilia began to hit me with a pat pat.

Light, way too light. It doesn’t hurt at all compared to Ram’s. She likely isn’t even really trying to hurt me but it got kinda funny.

“Uhahahaha—!”

“Aw geez, Subaru you dummy! Who cares about you!”

On the night road on the way back from school, Emilia and I go back home while raising a sulky voice and a dumb laugh.

At some point, she changed how she called me, but I did not point that out.

But it seems like school life will feel different from tomorrow on.

While I still did not understand the identity of what I felt for this girl who was walking beside me, I simply let the impetus of this laugh carry me, and was satisfied with today’s conclusion.

Re:Zero Academy! Continues in third period!

Third Period
(LQ AI Translation)

1

—Mornings usually began with a sudden jolt.

Beatrice: “Come ooon, time to get up already, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Honjuras?!”

A peppy voice rang out, immediately followed by an un-peppy impact straight to the stomach. Letting out a shriek, I jolted awake—and right there, just in front of me, was my ever-adorable little sister’s face.

Subaru: “…Yo, Beako. You’re lookin’ pretty, cutesy, and lovely again today.”

Beatrice: “But of course, in fact. Betty is pretty today as well, I suppose. Now then, it’s a beautiful morning, so get up already and let’s eat breakfast together, in fact.”

Sitting triumphantly atop my gut with that smug grin, Beatrice beamed at me. While her light little body still weighed down on me, I gave in with a “yeah yeah” and curled up right there.

Beatrice: “Ah! You’re not getting it at all, I suppose! That’s a second nap! A second nap posture, in fact!”

Subaru: “Ughh, c’mon, Beako. I get that time spent eating with you is precious in this short life of mine… But just as much, I wanna savor this decadent morning vibe…”

Beatrice: “Nghh! Betty won’t allow that, I suppose! Nii-cha—no, Subaru! Which is more important, I ask you: Betty or your second nap, in fact?!”

Subaru: “That sounds like something outta a daytime soap… Wait, hold on, maybe that’s it!”

Beatrice: “—? What’re you suddenly scheming… kyaah?!”

I reached for the little girl swaying on my belly, and dragged her into the futon.

Her head snug in my arms, I gently stroked her hair, roping Beatrice into my toasty, decadent second nap. —Truly, the best of both worlds: dozing off with your little sister!

Subaru: “Now you get to enjoy a second nap too, Beako. And the joy of this is double that of a normal nap—no, it wouldn’t be exaggerating to call it exponentially better!”

Beatrice: “You’re rambling nonsense again, I suppose! L-Let go, in fact! Betty is no longer a child who would sleep with Subaru, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Aww, but lately, Beako hasn’t been sleeping with me and it’s been sooo looonely… So I’m gonna soak in as much Beatrieze as I can. sniff sniff”

Beatrice: “Stop sniffing me, in fact!”

Beako flailed adorably in my arms.

By the way, “Beatrieze” is a special brain chemical I invented that’s produced by petting, cuddling, or otherwise appreciating Beatrice. Without regular doses, the men of the Natsuki household wither and die. Case study: myself and Dad.

Just like that, while horsing around with my sister, a cruel twist of fate occurred—I started waking up.

Subaru: “Guh, damn it… Was this your plan all along, Beako? Using your adorable self as bait to distract me and sever my bond with sleep—I've been played…!”

Beatrice: “I-I don’t even know what you’re on about anymore, but let go already, I suppose. Ughh, my hair and clothes got all messed up, in fact.”

Subaru: “Don’t worry. Even messed up, your charm doesn’t fade.

There's a certain appeal in the messiness too. Mega messy Beako."

Beatrice: "You're being mega annoying, I suppose!!"

Pouting, Beatrice hopped off the bed and stuck her tongue out at me cutely. I scratched my head at her tantrum and sat up, tilting my head with a confused "huh?"

The reason? The clock—or rather, the time it was pointing to.

Which was—

Subaru: "Oi oi, Beako. You woke me up a whole hour earlier than usual. That's some top-tier oopsie behavior right there. C'mon, let's go back to sleep."

Beatrice: "Don't hold your arms out like that, in fact! You're making me wanna dive back in, I suppose! But no, I have a reason for waking you early today, in fact. And that reason is sound, I suppose."

Subaru: ""That reason is sound," huh…"

Beatrice: "Starting this morning, Betty has a meeting with the school's field trip planning committee, in fact. So I have to eat breakfast early and head off sharp, I suppose."

Subaru: "I see. And I'm being dragged into that because… why the hell?!"

Chest puffed out, Beatrice explained herself, while I, denied my sweet nap time, voiced my rebellion.

Even if she's the cutest little sister ever, there are lines that shouldn't be crossed. I was firmly of the mindset to stand against such selfishness.

Subaru: "The grudge of a man robbed of his second nap runs deep. What logic could possibly justify waking me up?! Go on, say it, Beako! Why did you wake your dear brother?!"

Beatrice: "Because if Betty woke up alone, she couldn't say good morning to Subaru, or eat breakfast with him, and that would be too sad, in fact…"

Subaru: "Damn it! That's too cute!"

In the end, a siscon has no power to reject his little sister's adorable wishes!

To answer Beatrice's honest feelings, I leapt out of bed in one smooth motion. I was wide awake now anyway, and trying to nap again felt pointless.

If that's the case, then it's a brother's duty to answer his darling little sister's plea—

Subaru: "Alright, now that it's settled, help me change, Beako."

Beatrice: "Do it yourself, in fact!"

—She didn't go quite that far for me.

Still, there'd been a weird dead period recently, so tossing in that classic gag felt like the right move.

2

Petra: "Then I'll be taking Beatrice-chan with me, okay~!"

Beatrice: "I'm the one being taken, in fact."

Even though it was early morning, Petra had shown up at the door with a dazzling smile to pick up Beatrice and head to school.

The two of them did everything together, and apparently, they were also on the excursion planning committee together. That seemed to add a whole new level of excitement to their morning, given their departure was at a different time than usual.

As her brother, I couldn't help but worry about my sister—who, despite her all-rounder stats, still managed to be clumsy here and there—but with Petra filling in the gaps so smoothly, I could rest easy. As a unit, those two could probably take over the world.

Subaru: "Kinda lonely for me, but… seeing my little sister off on her path to glory with a smile, that's a brother's job… "If my oshi makes it to Budokan, I can die happy…"“

Father: "Oi oi, getting ahead of yourself again, son. Sure, my daughter could totally be center stage at Budokan, she's that lovely a girl… but Papa's not signing off on that for at least another five years."

As I stood at the front door tearfully watching my sister off, Dad chimed in. He had a tendency to be half-naked most of the time, but at least on days when someone else's kid like Petra was visiting, he'd make sure to wear clothes.

His T-shirt had Beatrice's smiling face printed on it—an item that let him keep her adorableness close even on days she left for school early.

Father: "Don't worry. The back's got a print of you smiling when you were little."

Subaru: "I'm not worried about that! And would you please keep some distance from your teenage son? With Beako it's fine, but with guys my age, you never know what might trigger a total family meltdown."

Father: "That's terrifying… True, the one on the back is your elementary school grin, but even now that you're in high school, I love you just the same. You know that, right?"

Subaru: "Yeah, you tell me at least once a day."

In our family, saying "I love you" at least once a day and openly expressing your feelings to those you care about was a household rule.

I really respected Dad for valuing that so much—but as a teen boy, it could be kinda rough to uphold.

Subaru: "That said, I don't feel shy saying it to Beako or Mom, so maybe it depends on how you usually act?"

Father: “Tch, not cute at all! So, Beatrice left early, but what about you? Still got plenty of time. Wanna wrestle with your old man till Rem-chan shows up?”

Subaru: “Waking up early just to wrestle my dad? What am I, Hinomaru? But yeah… just zoning out is lame too, so… Alright.”

It bugged me to go along with one of Dad’s suggestions, but I wasn’t about to waste time on something as fruitless as wrestling him either. So I slipped on my shoes at the entrance.

Might as well take advantage of this rare early morning to go for a stroll.

Subaru: “They say “The early bird gets the worm”… maybe something good will come out of it.”

Father: “Ah, going for a walk, huh? Hold on, lemme go change.”

Subaru: “You’re not coming! I’m going alone! Go flirt with Mom or something!”

Father: “Oof, my bad. Guess you’re being considerate, huh?”

Subaru: “Don’t call it being considerate! It’s not like I’m helping a shy classmate get a date or something!”

After that uneasy back-and-forth, I quietly left the house.

It just felt… wrong to head back inside right after that. Even after twenty years of marriage, my parents were still as lovey-dovey as newlyweds. As their son, that could be hard to handle. Still, I was grateful they got along so well.

Subaru: “A peaceful home, free from arguments… Some say conflict builds stronger bonds, but smooth sailing’s always better in my book.”

That was my stance—less worries, less misfortune, fewer obstacles? All the better.

The Natsuki household was about as average middle-class as they came. And yet, with a happy family and an adorable little sister, I was more than blessed.

Subaru: “Thank you for the miracle of being born in this era. Thumbs-up with all I am. Sunshine lighting the future above. I’m the runaway train—get outta my way.”

Whoops. Guess my mood got the best of me, and I started mumble-rapping.

Early mornings really did clear the mind. Taking in the crisp morning air and strolling through a quieter-than-usual neighborhood… there was a certain poetic charm to it—

???: “—Oh, good morning, Subaru. What a coincidence running into you here.”

Subaru: “Hghyee?!”

Just as I’d started to skip along, a voice startled me into a panic.

And no wonder—I might’ve just been caught rapping. Worse yet, the voice that reached my ears was as delicate and melodious as a silver bell.

There was only one person in my entire life who that voice could belong to.

Subaru: “E-Emilia-tan?! What are you doing existing at this hour?!”

Emilia: “Hehe. I get that you’re surprised, but “existing” is a bit much, don’t you think? Even when you’re not watching, I’m still very much alive and well.”

Subaru: “R-Right… Of course. Haha, hehe… You just caught me off guard, fufufu…”

Crap. I laughed like a total weirdo from the surprise encounter.

Still, while I was mentally kicking myself, the girl standing in front of me—Emilia, the new transfer student—smiled at me like an angel, her amethyst eyes full of gentleness.

Her long silver hair shimmered like moonlight, and her slender limbs made her look graceful and statuesque.

She hadn't gotten her school uniform yet, so she normally wore her old academy's one—but not right now.

She wore a light blouse and a soft, fluffy skirt that spread gently at the hem—in other words, casual clothes.

Subaru: "Damn… casual looks so cute…"

Emilia: "Eh? You think so? Thanks. Subaru, your outfit is… um."

Subaru: "Ah, this? This is my sweet lovely little sister, Beatrice. Cute, right? This was taken when she was fresh outta bed with messy hair…"

I proudly showed off my T-shirt to Emilia, who tilted her head in question.

Unlike Dad's shirt, mine had Beatrice's face printed on both the front and back. While I appreciated Dad's sentiment, it felt wrong to sully the pure act of adoring Beatrice by inserting myself into the mix.

Emilia: "Wow, that's your sister? She's reeaaally cute!"

Subaru: "Right? You get it! She's super cute. She's been kinda rebellious lately, but she used to be all, "Nii-cha, Nii-cha," tagging along everywhere… Not to brag, but I basically raised her."

Emilia: "Whaaat?! What happened to your parents?!"

Subaru: "Oh, they helped too. But, well, even between the two of them, I'd say it was seventy-thirty in my favor."

Emilia: "I see. You're reeaaally hardworking, huh, Subaru…"

It was my usual banter, but Emilia took it all in without questioning it, which only encouraged me to keep going. Thanks to that, the initial shock wore off a little, and I could finally start appreciating the miracle of running into a beautiful transfer student out of nowhere.

Subaru: “Anyway, what were you up to, Emilia-tan? It’s pretty early, huh?”

Emilia: “Hm? I was just out for a walk. See, I just moved here for the transfer, so I don’t really know the area yet. And I’ve gotta study it for Puck’s sake too.”

Subaru: “Wow, you’re dedicated… Wait, Puck?”

Emilia: “Yup, Puck. My cat. He’s over there.”

She pointed toward a nearby brick wall. On top of it, curled up with a long tail swishing gently, was a fuzzy, gray furball.

Peering closely, I could tell it was indeed a cat.

The cat noticed me watching, and then—with those big round eyes turned my way—

Puck: “Hey.”

Subaru: “What the—?!”

Emilia: “Wh-What’s wrong?! Why’d you yell like that…?”

Startled, I whipped around, and Emilia looked equally surprised at my reaction.

But like, come on! Don’t act like that’s normal! That cat just—

Subaru: “It talked, right? It looked right at me and waved and said, “Hey”…”

Emilia: “Huh? No way. Don’t be silly. If you’re trying to mess with me, it’s not gonna work.”

But Emilia didn’t believe me one bit. Which, yeah, was the normal reaction. Honestly, if she had said, “Oh yeah, Puck talks. Isn’t that neat?” I wouldn’t have known how to handle it.

Subaru: “Must’ve just been a mishearing… or some kind of hallucination. Geez, that scared me.”

Puck: “Exactly. Let’s go with that. You don’t wanna freak Lia out or get labeled the weird kid, right?”

Subaru: “You're talking to me so naturally!”

The cat—Puck—leapt down from the wall and curled up by my feet, talking casually like that was the most normal thing in the world. Completely floored, I picked him up.

His paw pads pressed against my cheek. So soft. So fluffy.

Subaru: “Just for the record, I don’t have any special power that lets me talk to animals. Which means the weird one here isn’t me—it’s you.”

Puck: “Well, if that’s how you wanna frame it, I won’t stop you. But saying stuff like that’ll only make you look like the weird one. Here, look.”

At that, I glanced at Emilia. Her amethyst eyes widened as she looked between me and Puck, who were locked in an intense staring contest.

Emilia: “It almost looked like you and Puck were actually talking. It’s super rare for Puck to let someone new pick him up like that and not squirm.”

Subaru: “Really? So, uh, what did it look like from your perspective?”

Emilia: “Huh? Puck was just going “meow meow,” and Subaru had this mean look on his face saying something back…”

Subaru: “You’re painting me as the bad guy?! And wait, seriously—this is really happening?!”

Going by Emilia’s reaction, it seemed only I could hear Puck’s voice. Stunned, I loosened my grip, and Puck slipped from my hands to land gracefully on the ground.

Then, as he casually washed his face—

Puck: “No need to worry. This isn’t the start of some strange story. I’m not gonna turn you into a magical girl or grant you wishes or talk about the entropy of the universe or anything. So go ahead and sign the Contract.”

Subaru: “I’m not signing anything! There’s nothing comforting about the word “Contract” in that context!”

Puck: “Kidding, kidding.”

He chuckled, then leapt into Emilia’s arms. She caught him gently and began to stroke his back.

Emilia: “Still, I’m glad you and Puck are getting along. I was a little worried.”

Subaru: “Worried? How come?”

Emilia: “Puck usually doesn’t get along well with my friends… Oh, wait. Subaru, are you okay with being called my friend? Is that too forward of me?”

Subaru: “N-No no no, not at all! If anything, I’m honored to be your very first friend. I’d even hope to one day… level up from that position.”

Emilia: “Sorry, I’ve got no idea what you’re talking about.”

My tongue just kept running, saying things I really didn’t need to say. A bad habit of mine.

But still, meeting Emilia like this felt like fate—

Subaru: “Since we were both out for a walk, mind if I tag along? We’re headed to school in the end anyway, so why not turn this into a little date?”

Emilia: “A date… That’s when you go out with a boy! It is a date!”

Subaru: “Whoa, was this your first time?!”

Seeing her eyes sparkle, I suddenly remembered she'd come from an all-girls school.

If she'd been that sheltered, she probably hadn't gone out with boys much, if at all. In that case—

Emilia: "This is my first date… What do we do?"

Subaru: "Wait! If it's your first date, I wanna do it right! At the very least, not in a T-shirt with my sister's face plastered across the front, back, and underarms!"

Emilia: "There's a secret Beatrice-chan under your arm…!"

I was the type who wanted to take dates seriously, if I was going to go on one.

If it was a moment we'd remember forever, I wanted the perfect setup.

Subaru: "Now that I think about it, I've never been on a real date either…"

Emilia: "Really? But you seem super close with everyone in class, Subaru…"

Subaru: "Well, I've gone out with girls before, sure. I go shopping with my childhood friend Rem all the time, and her sister Ram often drags me along too."

But if I counted those as dates, that just felt… depressing.

I'd also helped Crusch, Ferris, and Anastasia with student council errands, and got dragged around by a grumpy Priscilla when her attendant Al was unavailable. I'd even hung out with the six beautiful sisters next door once—

Subaru: "Come to think of it, from the outside I must look super experienced…"

Puck: "Your looks and your actual self just don't line up, huh? Yup yup, makes total sense. That's exactly the kind of vibe you give off."

Subaru: “You’re a cat! Stop psychoanalyzing me!”

I yelled at Puck, who purred contentedly in Emilia’s arms. But he just played dumb, and Emilia tilted her head at me in confusion. Dammit.

Subaru: “Alright! Anyway, today’s walk isn’t a date. It’s a walk-date. Totally separate thing. Let’s go with that.”

Emilia: “I don’t get it, but if that’s what you want, sure. So, where to?”

Subaru: “Hmm… So, you’re trying to get familiar with the area and also figure out good walking routes for Puck, right?”

Cats didn’t usually go on walks with their owners like dogs did, but since nobody was questioning it, I let it slide.

The question now was what route to take—

Puck: “I’d be happy with somewhere with a nice view and a pleasant breeze. I’m not in the mood for exercise, so let’s skip steep hills… Also, I haven’t introduced myself to the local strays yet, so if we could avoid the turf of the boss cats around here, that’d be great.”

Subaru: “You’re really picky… though I guess that helps narrow it down.”

Puck: “Right? It’s like when someone says, “Anywhere’s fine” on a date—it’s the worst.”

Despite scrunching my face at Puck’s smug tone, I appreciated the specifics. It made picking a spot much easier.

So, the route I decided on for our walk-date was—

Subaru: “Alright. Let’s go with the levee path. There’s a huge river running alongside it, so it’s got a great view and feels nice and open.”

And so, with that kind of invitation, we arrived at the riverbank in our town.

This embankment, with a large, famous river flowing right beside it, was a popular spot for watching the first sunrise of the year on New Year’s Day. On weekdays, it was also known as a jogging course used by both fitness-minded youths and the elderly.

Of course, many people came to the embankment with the same purpose as us, and here and there, dog owners could be seen cheerfully chatting with one another.

They could be seen—

Subaru: “Still, I don’t see any cat owners around…”

Emilia: “Cats hate having collars and leashes on, so maybe that’s why… But Puck always wakes me up saying he wants to go on walks.”

Subaru: “Huh, is that so.”

Puck: “Mhm. I just can’t feel like it’s a new day without being with Lia.”

Even if the purpose was pet walking, the details made each owner stand out, and Emilia, still holding Puck, had furrowed brows in concern.

Though her words sounded like a pet-loving owner making selfish claims, judging by Puck’s actual reaction, it didn’t seem like a one-sided love. My prejudice that most cats in the world saw their owners as servants appeared to be mistaken.

Subaru: “That said, it’s a walk, but you’ve been holding him the whole time.”

Emilia: “—? Oh, Puck doesn’t like walking, so I always carry him like this. But when he gets really, really pudgy, I make sure he gets exercise.”

Subaru: “Is that so. I kinda had this preconception that once an animal's body shape goes out of whack, it can't really return to normal, but I guess you can do that kind of Rizap thing, huh."

Emilia: "Well, it's the fruit of hard work."

Subaru: "But the weight gain was the fruit of laziness…"

Seeing Puck's smug face, I slumped my shoulders in dismay.

Well, since he's skinny now, it didn't seem like he planned to leave Emilia's arms. If she wasn't complaining about the weight, I had nothing to say.

Subaru: "But isn't carrying an adult cat around all the time a bit tough? Puck's on the smaller side, but still."

Emilia: "It's fine. I may not look it, but I'm pretty strong, you know. Back at my previous school, whenever there was anything physical to do, people always relied on me."

Subaru: "Even if you say that by the standards of a girls' academy…"

Even if she flaunted her strength with those thin, white arms, they looked soft around the upper arms, so it wasn't very convincing. For the record, I also had a fair amount of confidence in how I looked once undressed.

In this sort of situation, most of the time, people just couldn't see themselves objectively. So, I suppose Emilia and I were about even in terms of self-awareness.

And, while we were talking like that—

???: "—Huh? Subaru-kun, what are you doing here?"

Called out by an incredibly familiar voice, I was taken aback.

There was no need to turn around to check who it was. After all, it was a voice I was more familiar with than family.

Subaru: "Eh? Rem? What about you, why are you here?"

Rem: “This morning, I came with Nee-sama. But I never imagined I’d run into you, Subaru-kun… As expected of Nee-sama’s divine favor.”

Subaru: “Even if you treat her like a shrine’s deity, Ram is still just your sister.”

As always, Rem said something totally outrageous, and I replied with a wry smile.

Standing there on the embankment, dressed in cute casual clothes, was Rem. It wasn’t unusual for her to visit on her days off, but seeing her like this on a weekday morning gave it a sudden charm. The weekday effect, huh.

Emilia: “Hey hey, Subaru. That girl’s in our class, right?”

Subaru: “Hm? Ahh, yeah, yeah. This is Rem. My childhood friend who’s perfect at housework.”

Getting poked in the back by Emilia, I reflected on leaving her out of the loop. Then I took a step to the side and introduced Rem to Emilia.

And then—

Subaru: “Rem, as you know, this is Emilia-tan. We bumped into each other while she was walking her cat, so we’re checking out some suitable routes for a lazy cat’s stroll.”

Rem: “I see. That’s what this was about. —Once again, I’m Rem. I’ve known Subaru-kun since we shared our first bath as babies.”

Subaru: “Don’t lie. The one who shared a bath with you was your Nee-sama.”

Rem: “Ah, right. I meant to say we were wrapped in the same swaddling cloth.”

Subaru: “That was your Nee-sama too.”

Well, I wasn’t conscious back then, so I couldn’t say for sure, but Rem and I had birthdays about two months apart, so that kind of situation was unlikely.

Emilia: “Oh, thank you for the polite introduction. I’m Emilia. And this is the gray kitty, Puck.”

Subaru: “Sounds like a courier company intro…”

Rem: “Wow, what an adorable cat. May I pet him?”

Emilia: “Of course. Here, Puck, show your belly.”

Puck: “Guess I have no choice, nyaa~”

With Puck rolling onto his back in apparent contentment, Emilia and Rem giggled as they played with him. Watching them while crossing my arms, I tilted my head.

Subaru: “Rem, you said you were accompanying Nee-sama, but why the embankment? What’s that got to do with Ram?”

Rem: “Well, Nee-sama is training.”

Subaru: “Training?”

Rem: “Yes.”

Tickling Puck’s tummy with her finger, Rem beamed proudly.

Whenever Rem got this proud look, it was always about either Ram or me. With Ram, fair enough, but being bragged about to others made me feel ticklish inside. Then again, I always boasted when I talked about Rem too, so I guess it was mutual.

Emilia: “Rem-san’s older sister is Ram-san, right? From our class?”

Rem: “Yes, that’s her. An amazing sister who’s far too good for someone like Rem.”

Subaru: “Just so you know, Rem’s sister bias is practically a chronic condition, so take her words with a grain of salt.”

Rem: “Muu, that’s not true.”

Pouting, Rem turned her face away. Still turned aside, she began talking about Ram.

Rem: “As you know, Subaru-kun, Nee-sama has incredible athletic ability and often gets asked to help with various clubs…”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’ve seen her doing flashy stuff in lots of clubs. Even when surrounded by guys, she handles it without issue. She’s just naturally gifted…”

No matter what you had her do, Ram would quickly master it. Especially in things that required instinct, she was outstandingly good.

So Rem’s over-the-top praise wasn’t exactly wrong in that regard.

Emilia: “So, what happened with this amazing Ram-san?”

Rem: “Yes. Because she’s so dependable, she was asked to help with a certain club again… and she wanted to take it seriously, so she started early morning training.”

Subaru: “Ram did?! That’s surprisingly earnest?!”

It was pretty shocking, almost like getting hit with unexpected news while half-asleep.

Ram had always coasted on her natural talents. She was fundamentally arrogant, overconfident, and always delivered results to match.

So I’d assumed she had no connection with actual effort.

Subaru: “And isn’t she supposed to be all over that novelist Roswaal guy right now? I thought she was dragging you along to fuss over him.”

Rem: “That’s true, but this is something separate she’s working hard on. So, I wanted to support those feelings of hers and help with preparations.”

Emilia: “Wow, that’s amazing. So that’s why it turned into this picnic-looking setup."

Behind Rem were picnic baskets and thermoses laid out on a leisure sheet, along with an emergency first-aid kit and towel set—clearly prepared for every contingency.

Rem's virtue was never slacking in preparation, though she did have a flaw of sometimes overdoing it.

Subaru: "Well, if she's got this much done for her, I'm sure Ram's satisfied… But what kind of helper gig is she doing that she's got to go this far?"

Rem: "The girls' judo club."

Subaru: "Girls' judo club…? I didn't even know we had one at our school."

Even after hearing it, I couldn't picture what the girls' judo club looked like.

Our Lugunica Academy had a fair number of active clubs, and many did reasonably well in prefectural competitions.

So if it were a famous club, you'd at least hear about it in passing.

Subaru: "Well, our Handicraft and Home Economics clubs are national regulars too."

Emilia: "Whaaat? Even though it's the Handicraft and Home Economics clubs clubs, they make it to nationals?!"

Subaru: "Surprised? But honestly, they're kinda sports-like clubs in disguise… They compete in things like straight-stitch speed, threading needles under time limits, or accurate sewing machine setup…"

Once you dig into it, even handicrafts can become pretty competitive.

Incidentally, our school regularly sent both the Handicraft and Home Economics clubs clubs to nationals, but they usually ended up canceling each other out.

The faculty advisors, Frederica and Clind-sensei, treated it like a proxy war.

Subaru: “Though the most famous at our school is still the light music club led by Liliana-chan. She even does national tours—it’s a big deal in indie circles.”

Emilia: “That doesn’t sound like a club anymore!”

Rem: “Lugunica Academy is a bit lenient with that kind of thing. Apparently, Liliana-sensei’s passion reached Principal Wilhelm.”

Subaru: “Ah, the legendary direct appeal—her guitar solo pierced the principal’s heart… I wish I’d seen that while still in school.”

Despite their contrasting appearances, Liliana-chan and the principal shared a common trait: passionate love for what they adored. So they surprisingly got along well.

The principal was so touched by the story that Liliana’s song “Sword Devil’s Love Song” became one of the band’s most beloved hits. The album cover even featured the principal and his wife.

—Setting aside the tangent about Liliana-chan…

Subaru: “So I get the helper thing for the girls’ judo club. But why’s Ram training for it?”

Rem: “That’s because…”

Ram: “—What kind of pervert wants to know every little detail of Ram’s actions?”

Subaru: “Uhyowai?!”

A cold voice suddenly struck from behind, making me jump in surprise.

Cutting off Rem’s answer and jabbing directly into my eardrums was none other than my other childhood friend, Ram. Dressed in a hoodie and jogging shoes, she was slightly out of breath, her light-crimson eyes fixed sharply on me.

Ram: “So, what’s Barusu doing here? Don’t tell me you heard about Ram’s training and came all this way just to mock her.”

Subaru: “Why would I waste my time like that? You know me, Nee-sama—I’m the type who tries to squeeze in every last second of sleep. That’s why I chose the school closest to home.”

Ram: “Because Barusu made such a selfish decision, Ram had no choice but to go to that school too… Haa. How inconsiderate.”

Ram let out a sigh, wiping away beads of sweat from her brow with her fingers.

Behind that exchange, I could hear Emilia whispering to Rem.

Emilia: “Hey, why did Ram have to go to the same school Subaru chose?”

Rem: “That’s simple. Rem decided to go wherever Subaru-kun went. And since Rem wanted to go to the same school as Nee-sama, she asked her to come too.”

Emilia: “Oh, I see… Wait, then, that means it was your selfishness?”

Rem: “Yes. Nee-sama is far too kind for indulging Rem’s selfishness.”

With a gentle blush, Rem basked in the warmth of her sister’s affection.

As their exchange revealed, while Ram looked like the domineering one, in reality, Rem held the reins in their relationship. The power dynamic between these sisters was overwhelmingly in Rem’s favor.

That said, Rem’s respect for Ram was genuine, so she never used her influence for selfish gains. She just leaned into it… strongly.

Subaru: “Well, that’s a good example of what makes Rem who she is… But still, it’s rare to see Ram sweating from actual exercise. Is Roswaal doing a story on the girls' judo club or something?"

Ram: "Stop connecting everything to romance, you horn-brained fool."

Subaru: "Horn-brained?! That's harsh!"

I retorted to Ram's toxic jab, only to be met with her usual dismissive "Hmph" through the nose. Still, if this wasn't about Roswaal, then it left me clueless.

For Ram to be putting in genuine effort… the only ones I could think of motivating that were Roswaal or Rem.

Rem: "The girls' judo club has very few members, and with the seniors retiring after the upcoming tournament, it might be disbanded. That's why Nee-sama wants to help produce real results."

Emilia: "That's… really kind of her."

Ram: "…"

Rem's explanation resolved my lingering questions. Emilia clasped her hands at her chest, and even Puck, sprawled on the ground, nodded in admiration.

I, too, was convinced. Despite her icy demeanor and general bluntness, Ram had a surprisingly deep sense of compassion.

Ram: "…What's with that look."

Subaru: "Oh, nothing? Just thinking Nee-sama's actually kinda nice, you kno—ow!"

Without mercy, a low kick slammed into the back of my knee!

Crashing to the ground, I looked up to see Ram retracting her leg after a clean strike.

Ram: "That was foot sweep practice. Seems like it's paying off."

Subaru: “If you pulled that move in an actual match, the judo club would be banned on the spot!”

Ram: “No need to worry. The club will be disbanded after this tournament anyway. No loose ends.”

Subaru: “That’s a terrible thing to say even as a cover for your embarrassment!”

Rubbing my aching leg, I stood back up. Thankfully, I could still move.

Once, I’d run my mouth too much and taken too many of Ram’s low kicks. My legs swelled so badly I couldn’t stand, and I’d claimed it was due to an anaconda attack in the garden.

Puck: “Anaconda? That’s pushing it. Not the kind of thing you’d run into in a garden.”

Subaru: “Like I could say I was kicked into submission by my childhood friend.”

It said a lot that a cat was lecturing me on common sense.

After that incident, Rem had desperately argued, “It was the anaconda! It wasn’t Nee-sama!” the entire time, but it was all in vain.

Ram: “So? Never mind Ram and Rem, what about you, Barusu? You’re notorious for sleeping in—what wind blew you here? And with the cute transfer student, no less… how indecent.”

Subaru: “Don’t go jumping to conclusions! I only got up early because I was tagging along with Beako. Running into Emilia-tan was pure coincidence! Stop assuming things!”

Ram: “Noisy.”

Subaru: “Snake Fist?!”

What Ram unleashed was a Snake Fist strike—a type of Chinese martial art mimicking a snake’s movement. Why she’d learned it remained a mystery.

Emilia: “It’s true. I just happened to bump into Subaru while walking around the neighborhood. It was pure coincidence.”

Ram: “This is just a warning, but… are you sure it was coincidence?”

Emilia: “Huh, no way… You mean, a duel of fate…?”

Rem: “Nee-sama, please stop saying unnecessary things! And you’re still bringing up yesterday’s misunderstanding!”

Regardless of Ram’s suspicions, Emilia’s notion was pure misunderstanding.

For the misunderstanding about her thinking I’d challenged her to a fight during our school tour yesterday, refer to “Re:Zero School Life! Second Period!” Anyway—

Subaru: “We got caught up talking, but long story short, I’m showing Emilia-tan around town. You guys seem busy, so we’ll get going.”

Emilia: “Right. It’s a shame to part ways, but…”

Rem: “Oh, I see… I’m sad to say goodbye to Puck-chan too.”

With her brows gently lowered, Rem looked disappointed as we turned to leave.

Even Ram would bend a little when Rem made that face. Before I could come up with a backup plan, Ram sighed and dropped her shoulders.

Ram: “Rem, go with Barusu and the others. Ram will be fine on her own.”

Rem: “But Nee-sama, that’s not fair. You have all this stuff…”

Ram: “Rem prepared all this for Ram’s sake. I won’t waste a thing, and I don’t consider it a burden. —I’ll have Otto carry it.”

Otto: “Uweh?!”

Ram gently caressed Rem’s cheek as she spoke, then pointed toward the path. Jogging toward us in a tracksuit was Otto, his eyes wide in shock.

He must’ve been on a morning run too, and now, having been suddenly dragged into this, he looked completely lost.

Otto: “Um, what exactly have I been roped into? And also, why is everyone who’s not in a sports club out jogging this early in the morning?”

Subaru: “Don’t sweat the small stuff, Otto. We’re counting on you with the baggage.”

Otto: “Whaaat?!”

Rem: “Thank you, Otto-kun. Please make sure Nee-sama drinks warm tea regularly so she doesn’t get cold. I’m counting on you.”

Otto: “Hold on a second?!”

Emilia: “I don’t really get it, but Otto-kun, you’re being relied on a looot. That’s a wonderful thing, so good luck!”

Otto: “Even the transfer student?!”

We left the flustered Otto behind without explaining a thing.

Sorry, Otto. You were just born under that kind of star. Dealing with Nee-sama won’t be easy, but that’s on you for walking by.

Otto: “This is just too unreasonable, don’t you think?!”

Ram: “Stop whining and get moving. A man fussing like that… how pitiful.”

Otto: “And yet you’re making me help?!”

Behind us, the stark difference in power between the oppressed and the oppressor was on full display.

Resistance was futile, and Otto needed to accept his fate already. Still—

Subaru: “Even though he’s the ace of the soccer team, I doubt there’s anyone else treated this badly…”

By the way, Otto wasn’t a helper or anything—he was genuinely the ace striker of the soccer club. Not that you’d ever guess.

4

Subaru: “Even so, kinda surprising how many people you run into early in the morning like this…”

Emilia: “Thinking about it that way, time in the morning—when we’re usually not up—feels like a treasure chest, doesn’t it? It makes me glad I woke up, and it’s reaaally fun.”

Rem: “Emilia-san is quite the optimist. Rem thinks that’s a wonderful thing too.”

Puck: “Nyaa~n”

Leaving Ram in Otto’s care, the three of us—and one cat—resumed our walk.

Every now and then, we exchanged greetings or nods with people we passed, enjoying that shared serenity only morning could bring.

Thankfully, Emilia didn’t seem like the shy type, and surprisingly enough, she was getting along well with the strongly flavored character that was Rem. The one playing the biggest role in connecting them, of course, was Puck, who was getting lovingly squished between them.

Rem: “So cute… About how old is Puck-chan, if I may ask?”

Emilia: “Hmm… that’s actually something I don’t really know. By the time I noticed, Puck was already by my side… It’s been over ten years, I think.”

Subaru: “For a cat, ten years is getting up there, isn’t it?”

Puck: “Well, I get the urge to compare ages with humans, but just treat me like some kind of bakeneko and don’t pry into my age.”

Subaru: “That just makes it worse!”

I mean, you can’t just casually drop the bakeneko bomb like that.

Although, since I’m the only one who can actually hear Puck talk, there really might be some truth to that whole bakeneko suspicion… Or maybe I’m the weird one.

Subaru: “Maybe getting hip-checked by Beako every morning triggered a latent awakening…? These days, instead of dying by getting hit by a truck and gaining powers, maybe I unlocked mine by taking my little sister’s ass attacks to the face every morning. Not so much a new trend as a rejected one.”

The tragic story of humanity devolving into civil war over Beako’s butt begins now, in a blood-soaked frenzy called “The Beako Booty War.”

Subaru: “No… Beako’s poor butt… It’s gonna get split in two…!”

Emilia: “Umm, Subaru’s saying weird stuff again…”

Rem: “Please don’t worry. When it comes to his little sister Beatrice-chan, Subaru-kun tends to overthink things. But Rem finds that another charming part of him—it just means he treasures his sister.”

Subaru: “Hey now, don’t go making it sound like I unleash brotherly instincts on every girl with a sibling. I care about you for reasons totally unrelated to that.”

Rem: “Saying you’ll treasure Rem forever like that… it’s embarrassing…”

Subaru: “I didn’t say that! At all!”

Rem blushed furiously and started spiraling, so I waved my hand in the usual flustered fashion.

While doing that, we were just about to bow in greeting to another dog owner walking by when— I suddenly recognized the face.

Subaru: “Wait, isn’t that Felt and Reinhard? What the heck are you two doing here?”

Felt: “…Tch, busted.”

Now, “Tch” was one hell of a greeting, but the one who looked totally displeased upon hearing my voice was Felt—the Cinderella girl of our class.

And no, I don’t mean she was an idol or aspiring to be one. She got the Cinderella label (according to me) because she was being chased by a prince.

Said prince, standing beside the fuming Felt, was the strikingly handsome Reinhard van Astrea.

Reinhard, famous not just in our school, but city- and even prefecture-wide for his godlike looks and skills in everything from academics to sports, was completely smitten with Felt. Felt, however, was consistently, visibly annoyed by his affections.

Subaru: “So, a rendezvous in the wee hours, huh. Maybe that whole school persona was just a smokescreen all along…”

Felt: “B-Baka! No way! I knew you’d say that! That’s why I didn’t wanna tell anyone! I’m only here ‘cause of Romy, okay?!”

Subaru: “Romy?”

Glancing down, I noticed a red leash in Felt’s hand—connected to a big dog that barked loudly.

It was a pretty large dog, and given Felt’s petite build, she looked like she’d be dragged around. But Reinhard seemed to be keeping it in check smoothly.

Wait, what was the deal with this dog and Reinhard anyway?

Emilia: “Good morning. You two are our classmates, right? Reinhard, and Felt-chan, who’s close to him…”

Felt: “We ain’t close! What, even the transfer student’s looking at me like that?! Tch, dammit, this is ridiculous.”

Growling and clawing at her hair, Felt snapped at Emilia’s innocent comment.

Startled by Felt’s reaction, Emilia flinched, while Reinhard chuckled softly.

Reinhard: “Sorry for surprising you. Felt’s a little on edge this morning. Though, to be honest, she’s always like this around me. But she’s really a kind girl underneath, so I’d appreciate it if you didn’t misunderstand.”

Felt: “Are you my mom or something?! What kinda angle are you coming from with that crap?!”

Emilia: “I get it, no worries. I can see that, because look how much Romy adores you.”

Ignoring Felt’s protest entirely, Emilia smiled as she pointed to Romy, who was snuggling up against Felt’s leg.

Felt might have a sharp tongue, but she was caring, and her gutsy, straightforward personality made her surprisingly popular with the boys. Of course, most guys backed off immediately once they realized Reinhard was in the picture.

Challenging that guy would be like trying to play rock-paper-scissors against a nuclear bomb. Pointless.

Rem: “Still, what exactly is Romy’s connection to the two of you?”

Reinhard: “Romy was actually a stray dog we found. It happened when Felt and I were walking home together one day… We didn’t know what to do, and at that time…”

Felt: “…My place didn’t have the room to take Romy in. Then this guy says he’ll take responsibility and raise him. But just leaving it all to him didn’t sit right.”

Reinhard: “So we’ve been sharing responsibilities—Felt takes Romy for morning walks, and plays with him on weekends. It's a way for her to understand what it means to care for someone."

Emilia: "Ohhh…"

So, Reinhard adopted a stray they found together, and now Felt helped look after him—that explained how we'd run into them during a walk.

Just hearing that made it sound like a heartwarming story, but—

Subaru: "Felt, you realize your defenses are crumbling hard, right?"

Felt: "Shut up. Don't say it. I already know…"

Felt was doing her best to keep Reinhard at arm's length, but thanks to the mere-exposure effect, even she was starting to cave. Honestly, it was pretty clear from the outside.

At this rate, it felt like a countdown to her inevitable fall.

Reinhard: "Felt's been coming over to my house more recently, too. The housekeeper really enjoys making snacks for her. She says Felt's reactions are honest and refreshing."

Felt: "I just say it like it is. If something's gross, I'll call it gross. But the old lady only gets compliments 'cause her stuff is always tasty. …Man, if your house didn't have you in it, I'd practically live there."

Reinhard: "That's… a difficult response to process."

Felt murmured with genuine feeling, and even Reinhard could only laugh awkwardly at that.

That was pretty harsh, coming from my perspective, but Reinhard didn't seem bothered by it. The man had nerves of steel. Someone like him probably wasn't used to rejection, and yet here he was, handling it like a champ.

Reinhard: "Even if it's harsh, hearing anything from Felt makes me happy. I didn't realize this side of myself existed—it's been a surprise.”

Subaru: “They say love is blind. Maybe when you walk the same path with your eyes closed, the world looks different.”

Reinhard: “—Hm. That’s an interesting way to put it. I’ll take that one.”

It was just some nonsense I blurted out, but getting praised for it gave me this weird sense of accomplishment.

Felt: “Anyway! I’m only with this guy ‘cause of Romy! So don’t go getting any weird ideas! And don’t you dare spread this around school, either!”

Subaru: “Got it, got it. Lips sealed.”

Felt: “That includes texts and LINE messages, too!”

Subaru: “Tch, sharp.”

Forced to swear secrecy, I reluctantly pulled out my phone, which I’d been sneakily hiding behind my back. I had planned to spill it to the whole class, but alas.

Reinhard: “See you at school.”

Felt: “Not a word!”

Waving goodbye to the ever-smiling Reinhard and the endlessly suspicious Felt, we went on our way.

At this rate, it really didn’t seem like it’d be long before Reinhard’s efforts paid off.

Subaru: “I dunno why, but part of me feels kinda sad about it…”

Emilia: “Is it like watching a friend get stolen away by a girl?”

Rem: “Or maybe it’s because Subaru-kun bet on how long Felt-san could dodge Reinhard-san’s advances, and now he’s losing.”

Subaru: “Five points to Rem.”

Rem: “Yay. I’ll make a note of it.”

Emilia: “Whaaat, what’s this? No fair!”

Seeing Rem eagerly jotting something in her notebook, Emilia looked bewildered, but the truth was, those points didn’t actually mean anything. It was just a silly thing we did sometimes.

Rem: “With this, Subaru-kun’s total points exceed two hundred thousand. It’s quite the milestone.”

Subaru: “Wait, what?! That many?!”

Emilia: “Wow, that’s a super old notebook… What happens when the points max out?”

Rem: “I don’t know. But Rem hopes that, someday, Subaru-kun will reward her with something wonderful for all the points she’s saved. Her heart pounds just thinking about it.”

Subaru: “The pressure’s insane! You should’ve brought that up when we were at, like, a hundred points!”

Two hundred thousand points?! Even if I gave out five points each time, that’d mean I’d done it forty thousand times! Just how far back has she been keeping track?!

And what kind of act could possibly be worth that many points…?

Subaru: “How about… spending ten points to get a head pat?”

Rem: “Then that means I can get patted twenty thousand times.”

Subaru: “My arm would fall off!!”

Since I couldn’t keep making careless comments, I promised Rem that I’d come up with a proper point redemption chart later. But the real problem was… What would count as high-value actions in my point system?

Subaru: “Say, Emilia-tan. Just hypothetically, what would you be happiest for me to do for you?”

Emilia: “Me? Hmm… Oh! Something like today, taking a walk together. That’d make me reaaally happy. It’d make waking up early feel totally fine.”

Subaru: “E. M. T…”

Emilia: “Huh? What was that just now?”

Subaru: “Dunno. Something warm just overflowed from my lips.”

Probably my heart trying to say “Emilia-tan’s seriously an angel” or something like that.

Not that it was helpful data for the point system, but as a guy of a certain age, that kind of comment still made me super happy.

Subaru: “How about you, Rem? Morning walks yay or nay?”

Rem: “They’re lovely. But watching the sleeping face of Subaru-kun in the morning is also part of my exclusive childhood friend privileges, so it’s hard to compare.”

Subaru: “Who gave you those privileges?! God?!”

Rem: “God did.”

Subaru: “…Well, can’t argue with God.”

I had no choice but to bow before divine authority.

And with that kind of light banter, we walked until the grand sight of a row of cherry blossom trees lining the embankment came into view.

The timing was perfect—just as they were beginning to bloom, the entire path was bathed in vibrant pink.

Emilia: “Waaah…”

Subaru: “Well? Not bad, right? This area’s actually kinda known for its cherry blossoms. It’s a major hanami hotspot, and people come in droves.”

Rem: “There’s even a cherry blossom festival this weekend. If you’d like, would you join us?”

Emilia: “Really?”

As we admired the festival booths being set up in advance, Rem invited Emilia. Her surprised reaction made her look even more adorable.

Rem and I exchanged a glance, nodded, and said in unison:

Rem & Subaru: “Of course!”

Emilia: “Wait, is that really okay? I mean… Did I do something wrong? Or maybe you already had plans with someone else…”

Emilia’s voice wavered with uncertainty, her face a bit flustered.

Hearing that, I found myself confused. I didn’t feel like we’d done anything particularly kind or worthy of gratitude. This was just normal classmate behavior, wasn’t it?

Especially for someone as pretty as her.

Subaru: “I mean… isn’t this just basic stuff? Right, Rem?”

Rem: “And the fact that Subaru-kun does such basic things without hesitation is what makes him amazing. Rem is deeply impressed.”

Subaru: “It’s just basic stuff!!”

Emilia: “Pfft.”

Hearing Rem’s classic one-liner, Emilia suddenly burst into laughter. Her shoulders shook with the force of it, and as if she couldn’t hold it back, she mumbled through giggles:

Emilia: “Heehee… Okay. I’ll take you up on that kindness. I’ll go to the festival with you two.”

Subaru: “That’s what I’m talking about!”

I snapped my fingers and whooped.

Early birds get the worm. And with perks like these, I'd say waking up early was well worth it.

5

Thanks to getting up early, I was able to make a promise to go to the festival with Emilia.

And so, today's morning roundup concludes with the thought that waking up early every once in a while ain't so bad.

That said—

Al: "I mean, there's practically no one in this class who's not gonna hit up the festival this weekend, right?"

Priscilla: "Naturally, for the class is made up of festival-lovers. There is no one who shall not make an appearance. Of course, I intend to conquer every booth."

Al: "That's what the Princess says, but think about the poor guy stuck tagging along with her. I'm tellin' ya, an old man's gut like mine doesn't wanna be compared with you youngsters' iron stomachs."

So saying, Al clinked his high-performance prosthetic left hand.

Priscilla, who was also the granddaughter of the chairman of Lugunica Academy, often brought Al with her to school like this. By the way, Al was not only missing an arm, but also hid everything above his neck with some kind of headgear every day. A man shrouded in mystery.

Well, once you talked to him, he was just a tired middle-aged dude, so that gap in impressions was one of the entertaining aspects about him.

Al: "Still, you two're bursting with youth from the early morn. A cute childhood friend, and a beautiful transfer student… If I'd been in a class this full of beauties back in my school days, maybe I'd've chased a few more dreams."

Subaru: “I get what you mean. When I first transferred in, I felt like I was gonna crumble into dust from the sheer beauty concentration in this class.”

Priscilla: “What foolish nonsense. My radiance alone is enough to reduce the likes of you to ash. I care not if you become ash this instant. Well?”

Subaru: “Care not or not, I do care, okay?!”

I stuck out my tongue at Priscilla, who waved a ridiculously fancy fan while saying such grandiose things.

Incidentally, one of the biggest contributors to the class’s high beauty quotient was Priscilla herself, which made it hard to refute her claims.

But I wasn’t such a sore loser that I’d go around calling a beautiful girl “not beautiful.”

—Morning walk complete, I returned home, changed into my uniform, and headed to school.

Just recounting that makes it sound like a simple morning scene, but getting to school a bit earlier than usual, like with the walk, came with its own share of new discoveries.

For example, chatting with Priscilla and Al like this was one such discovery.

Subaru: “Still, didn’t expect Priscilla to be at school this early.”

Al: “Surprisingly, the Princess is a morning person. In fact, I’ve been force-converted into one just from tagging along with her. Makes it hell to catch late-night anime.”

Subaru: “But there’s a ton of streaming options nowadays. I’ve been watching “Another World Wanted” too.”

“Another World Wanted” was a crossover anime that mashed together a bunch of different isekai shows. Since the original creators weren’t the same, I figured the director in charge was constantly teetering on the brink of death. I'd like to take this moment to commend their efforts.

Anyway—

Subaru: "The cherry blossom festival this weekend… could this be, like, an actual date with Emilia-tan?!"

Priscilla: "A date, you say."

Subaru: "When a guy and a girl agree to go to an event together… if that's not a date, then what is?! Even if it's just a group thing, considering what happened this morning, there's no doubt—it's a date! I'm fired up now…!"

Priscilla: "What a pitiable sight. Firstly, have you not gone out countless times with that younger of the twin sisters? With such experience, why get cold feet now?"

It was kinda funny, really, how this ended up being a conversation where I was asking Priscilla for dating advice, but her "standards" were completely unrelatable.

Subaru: "Just so you know, Rem and I've been childhood friends since kindergarten. We've gone out tons of times, so those outings don't help here at all."

Al: "Sounds hella painful when you put it like that. So this is the first time you're seriously sittin' down and thinking about what a date really means, huh? Ain't that adorable."

Subaru: "Right? I'm so nervous it's like my stomach's turning sour already."

Priscilla: "Whatever you do, do not let it overflow before me."

Snapping her fan shut with a flourish, Priscilla tapped my chin with its tip, lifting it slightly. That classic chin-lift move everyone talked about—yet when she did it, it looked absurdly natural.

Priscilla: "Do your best. In any era, women find delight in the flailing efforts of men trying to entertain them. Unless something truly horrid happens, the girl is unlikely to take it badly.”

Subaru: “That sounds like some femme fatale logic, but… was that just now… encouragement?”

If so, that’d be an absurdly rare occurrence, and I was honestly a little shaken.

But the moment I said that, the warmth in Priscilla’s crimson eyes vanished. Crap, I was about to apologize for opening my big mouth when—

???: “Hmm? Weren’t y’all just talkin’ ‘bout the festival?”

Priscilla: “…The she-fox.”

Bursting into the conversation came Anastasia, a spirited beauty whose lively Kansai dialect always hit just right.

Priscilla scowled at Anastasia’s sudden intrusion, clearly displeased.

These two were infamous for being like oil and water in school, and were generally kept apart to avoid disaster. Honestly though, maybe the real issue was whoever in the faculty thought it was a good idea to stick them in the same class.

Subaru: “Well, guess now’s not the time for escapism. What’s up, Anastasia? You don’t usually cut into conversations when I’m talking with Priscilla.”

Anastasia: “Well yeah, I usually wouldn’t, y’know? But when it’s about the festival, I just couldn’t let it slide. Our chamber of commerce’s gonna be settin’ up booths left and right, and gettin’ some advance info from our customers is useful for marketin’ purposes.”

Anastasia winked as she spoke—the “chamber of commerce” she referred to being a collective of local privately owned shops in the area.

Anastasia, who adored commerce and was absolutely nuts for money-countin’, frequented the chamber and worked day and night with the adults to help revitalize the region. Apparently, her business sense was no joke either, and it was said that the recent successes of the chamber had all come courtesy of the victory road she'd paved behind the scenes with her shrewdness.

Though, honestly—

Subaru: "Just how much of that's true is up for debate…"

Julius: "…What kind of look is that? Have you something to say to me?"

That remark about Anastasia had come from none other than Julius, who stood gracefully beside her and narrowed one eye at my gaze. The prior info dump about Anastasia had come from Julius, and who knew how much flowery praise he'd tacked on to that adorable money-devourer.

Anastasia: "Lately, we ain't been seein' as many young folks comin' to the festivals. So for us on the organizin' side, it's been pretty tough. That's why we welcome all ideas. Even the Princess's weird ones might end up bein' useful, ya hear?"

Priscilla: "As uncouth and ill-mannered as ever, she-fox. Is that the way one requests something of another? If thou truly wish to hear mine thoughts, begin by politely begging for it. Only then shall mineslef consider whether to grant thee thy desire."

Anastasia: "Oh, no worries. If ya don't wanna share, that's fine. I'm really here for Natsuki-kun anyway. The Princess's ideas are too out-there for us common folk to make use of."

Priscilla: "To blame thy own lack of understanding while belittling the noble… how brazen. One must squint hard to even notice such a small mind, lest it go unseen."

Exchanging barbs that left scorch marks, the two inevitably descended into full-blown war.

And here I thought today had started off on a good note—how did we get here again?

Subaru: “Man, it’s a mystery. Speaking of mysteries, you not stopping them even though you know they’ll fight is a mystery too.”

Julius: “Hmm, that is true. My personal view is that Ana does not actually despise Priscilla-san. They simply do not get along. I believe she acknowledges her abilities. Just as I, in a sense, acknowledge you.”

Subaru: “What’s that supposed to mean? What kind of “sense,” huh?”

There was no way to interpret that nicely, so I instinctively raised my fists. At the end of the day, Julius and I were like parallel lines—never to intersect.

I was a fool for even trying to have a proper conversation.

Julius: “Alas, perhaps I am in no place to mock Ana.”

Subaru: “What the hell are you suddenly so satisfied about…? Oh, hey, student council’s top duo. You two got plans for the weekend festival?”

Ignoring the pretty boy with the smug grin, I turned toward Crusch and Ferris, who were chatting at the desks in front and behind each other.

Responding to my question, Crusch placed a finger to her chin.

Crusch: “Us, you ask? Naturally, we will attend the festival. However, as student council president, I must also monitor our students to ensure they do not go overboard. So I do not intend to treat it as mere play.”

Ferris: “Eeh~ that’s kinda sad~! It’s a festival, ya know? Even if a yukata’s a bit too early, we should still dress up for the occasion~”

Crusch: “Hmm, true enough. Walking under the cherry blossoms in our usual attire does lack novelty. Besides, I would like to see you all dressed up beneath the sakura, Ferris. I concur.”

Ferris: “Ehehe~ Then I’ll prepare an outfit for Crusch-sama too~”

Crusch was spoiling a starry-eyed Ferris, but well, that kind of relationship had always been their weird norm. No surprises there.

In the end, it looked like most of our class would be attending.

Subaru: “In our case, Beako’s probably gonna be… well, Petra-chan or Meili-chan will take care of her. Still, it’s not Beako I’m worried about—it’s Dad.”

Emilia: “—? Not your little sister, but your dad?”

Just as I was letting my thoughts spill out, Emilia came back from her errand to the staffroom. Tilting her head at my comment, I nodded.

Subaru: “Yeah, see, my dad… he really hasn’t managed to let Beako go. He always tries to tie her down one way or another, so I hardly ever get to have her all to myself. It’s rough.”

Emilia: “I see… Wait, did you just say you want to monopolize her too?”

Subaru: “—? Well yeah, Beako is my Beako, after all…”

If possible, I’d keep her by my side at all times, carrying her in my bag. But Beatrice had grown too big to fit in a bag lately, and she was also forming her own relationships, so I couldn’t really smother her anymore. Still, I wanted to monopolize her once in a while.

Emilia: “That’s… a very doting big brother feeling.”

Subaru: “Exactly. …Though I guess, you kinda get it too, huh?”

Emilia: “Eh! Are you saying I want to eat Beako too?!”

Subaru: “Eat her?!”

When she shot back head-on like that, I seriously didn’t know what my feelings for Beako even were.

I’d heard that cat owners sometimes get so overwhelmed with love they express it in strange ways—this might be something like that.

Subaru: “So, what did you mean by saying you get it?”

Emilia: “Oh, I meant the part about not being able to let go. My parents also reaaally doted on me… and that caused a lot of trouble.”

Subaru: “Wow, that must’ve been rough.”

Emilia: “Even just this morning, after I got home from walking with you guys, they got super worked up when I told them. They were like, “Next time, you must bring that Subaru boy over too!”“

Subaru: “They said it like that?!”

Apparently her folks had a lot of energy in their speech, but the smile on Emilia’s face showed that they got along well.

Same as my family—annoying sometimes, but that bond was precious. Even when I wished they’d knock before barging into my room.

Subaru: “Basically, all my complaints about home boil down to Dad…”

Emilia: “Oh yeah! By the way, when I went to the staffroom earlier, Frederica-sensei looked super busy. Something must’ve happened.”

Subaru: “Huh, wonder what. But well, she’s always kinda in a rush.”

That was mostly because she was in charge of our class full of troublemakers. Still, hardworking and diligent Frederica-sensei kept charging through our school drama like something out of an old-school TV show.

And just like clockwork, she’d often end up getting scolded by Clind-sensei.

Subaru: “Still, between Emilia-tan transferring yesterday and now this, the events just keep comin’, huh.”

Emilia: “But that’s reaaally luxurious, isn’t it? Having so many fun things happening every day.”

Subaru: “You’re a master at finding happiness, Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “Really? Ehehe, thank you.”

And just like that, our chat was cut off by the bell signaling homeroom.

Everyone in the classroom rushed back to their seats, as did the ones who had just arrived from other classes or were running late.

As usual, full attendance—our class, always on point.

Subaru: “Huh? Looks like there’s one extra seat by the window…”

Frederica: “—Now then, is everyone present?”

Before I could finish voicing my suspicion, the door opened and Frederica-sensei appeared.

Back straight, dignified, and beautiful as ever—but this time, I thought I detected a faint note of exhaustion in her voice.

Subaru: “Derica-sensei, something wrong? You seem kinda tired today.”

Frederica: “…You’re quite perceptive, Natsuki-kun. I actually tried very hard to hide it, you know?”

Subaru: “Well, your desk’s right in front of mine, and Derica-sensei is gorgeous, so I’m always looking at your face anyway. Maybe that’s why?”

Frederica: “…”

When I answered seriously, Frederica-sensei narrowed her emerald eyes and went silent. Not sure what that meant, I leaned toward the right and whispered to Rem.

Subaru: “Rem, Rem, did I say something weird just now?”

Rem: “No, I don’t think so. That was just normal, lovely Subaru-kun.”

Otto: “The fact that that’s considered “normal” might be the real issue.”

Even though I didn’t ask, the guy on my left butted in with a snide remark.

Anyway—

Frederica: “Ahem. Moving on, I’ll continue. As you all know, Emilia-san transferred into this class yesterday, but in fact, I have something else to announce to everyone today.”

Subaru: “Whoa, what’s that setup? Don’t tell me—we’re getting another new character?!”

Okay, that would be a bit too random, like shameless meddling from the writing team, but I couldn’t help blurting it out.

However, hearing that, Frederica-sensei let out a deep sigh.

???: “—Unbelievably enough, that’s exactly right, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “Eh? That voice just now…”

As I reacted to the familiar voice, the front door of the classroom opened—and there she was.

A woman slowly stepped inside, and her presence left me speechless.

From head to toe, she was dressed in black, like mourning attire, her whole look imbued with a strange, decadent allure. Her long hair was snow-white, stripped of pigment, and the butterfly-shaped hair ornament she wore drew the eye irresistibly.

Another ridiculously beautiful woman had appeared—

Subaru: “Echidna-san? The third daughter of the six sisters living next door?! It’s Echidna-san!”

Echidna: “Thanks for the exposition. As Natsuki-kun just introduced me, my name is Echidna. Starting today, I’ll be doing my student teacher practicum here.”

Subaru: “S-Student teacher…?!”

As Echidna-san gave a graceful smile and bowed from the podium, we all stirred.

Student teacher—a unique role, somewhere between classmate and full teacher. A rare position that always added a little color to school life.

They were students, technically, undergoing training to become licensed teachers. The appearance of someone from a different age group—especially an older woman—was more than enough to set high school boys off-balance.

Subaru: “N-No way she kept something like this under wraps… Last time we had tea together, she didn’t say a word about it!”

Echidna: “I wanted to surprise you, Natsuki-kun. And if I had told you, there was a chance the other students would’ve found out too. Of course, the biggest reason was that I just wanted to see your reaction… So? Surprised?”

Subaru: “Well yeah, I’m suuuper surprised…”

I scratched my cheek, a bit embarrassed by her mischievous grin.

It hadn’t even been a full year since Echidna-san and her five sisters had moved in next door. But this particular older sister loved nothing more than to toy with younger people in creative ways—and I was her current favorite victim.

Still, I didn’t expect her to go this far. Her thoroughness was impressive.

Subaru: “Between Emilia-tan’s transfer yesterday and now Echidna-san’s sudden appearance… you sure know how to spice things up, Frederica-sensei! You’re a real entertainer!”

Frederica: “Please don’t speak as if I orchestrated all of this. Besides, the announcements aren’t over yet.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Frederica put a hand to her head as if she had a headache, and I blinked in confusion.

But the answer didn’t come from her—it came from the door.

With a loud bang, the same door Echidna-san had entered through burst open again. Another figure stepped inside—taller than Echidna-san, with long brown skin and a single ponytail down her back. She wore an unfamiliar uniform, walking past the podium and standing tall.

For some reason, right in front of me.

Subaru: “U-Um? May I ask who you are?”

She had green eyes, with a rare red pattern in her irises, and a powerful gaze. Only the top button of her uniform was fastened, boldly showcasing a knockout figure that naturally drew the eyes.

Her modified uniform easily matched Priscilla’s in extravagance. Her body too was no less exceptional, and that should give you an idea of how insane her presence was.

Still, more troubling than her explosive figure was the piercing glare she gave me, unprompted.

Was she about to pick a fight? I had just seen a pretty transfer student challenge me to a duel after school yesterday, so who knew what bizarre twist would hit next?

Also, my knee still hurt from that low kick Ram gave me yesterday. Not reassuring.

And then, right in front of me, the beauty’s lips moved.

???: “—Found you.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

???: “Master!!”

Subaru: “Buwah?!”

Her stern expression melted in an instant. Beaming from ear to ear, the stunning woman lunged forward and wrapped her arms around me.

She pressed my face straight into her chest, hugging me tightly with unrelenting force.

???: “I’ve waited sooooo long for this reunion! Even though you look different, I knew it was you the moment I saw you, Master! My Master~!”

Subaru: “Mffghh!”

???: “Huh? I can’t hear ya. But no worries, no need to explain a thing. No matter how much you’ve changed, I’ll still love you just the same, Master!”

Drowning in a suffocating wave of boobs, I flailed helplessly as the beautiful woman refused to let go. Her grip was unreal—seriously locked in. I couldn’t escape. At this rate, I’d die. Cause of death: boobs.

Rem: “—Please stop! Who are you? Let go of Subaru-kun this instant! He’s going to die!”

???: “Mgh…”
